This faithful servant of God recently entered into rest in his eighty-ninth year. He retained his loving interest in all the Lord's people, and from those that he knew, if they were workers in any mission field, he never withheld advice, sympathy, or money, if he could help them. He often gave Gospel addresses of a very cheerful and pointed character, in his own quaint and winning style, which will never be forgotten. The numbers that were attracted to his meetings were the chief cause leading Mr. Westlake to build the Victoria Rooms at Fordingbridge, Salisbury. There was an awakening in connection with these meetings which made Mr. Westlake see the need of an unsectarian place, where Gospel addresses could be given. Col. Rowlandson's little books, too, "A Basket of Fragments and Crumbs" (Nisbet & Co.), "What if it be True?" and many leaflets, were most useful. The former is full of charming illustrations of truth, many of them taken from his experience of life in India, and written to cheer the faint-hearted, who might from one cause or another be "discouraged because of the way," and who in India had perhaps an isolated or difficult path as Christians. In the preface he says: "Because there are some who still persist in confounding and identifying all that belongs to vital religion with melancholy and gloom, I have sought sometimes to provoke an innocent smile or even a hearty laugh, for this is a faculty only given to man, and is often highly restorative in cases of depression and shattered nerves." As a specimen of one of the "crumbs," this is one, "'I say unto you that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth'" (Luke xv. 7). Whilst astronomers will run to the ends of the earth to observe the transit of Venus over the sun's disc, the translation of one sinner from darkness to light alone fixes the gaze, and fills all heaven with shouts of joy and plaudits of praise."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Archdeacon Sinclair is spending the months of August and September in Scotland.

Rev. R. E. Taylor, Vicar of Cresswell, Northumberland, was drowned in the bay there on Monday week while bathing.

The Rev. Earl of Devon, who celebrated on July 13 his eighty-third birthday, is still able to take part in the services of his church at Powderham.

The Bishop of Ripon has instituted to the charge of Lightcliffe, Halifax, Rev. N. L. Parkyn, formerly minister of George-street Congregational Church, Croydon.

Rev. Trevor Fielder, Vicar of Great Clapton, Colchester, has accepted the Vicarage of St. Stephen's, Walthamstow, vacant by the removal of Mr. Baskerville to Tonbridge.

From the Niger we hear that Mr. T. Jays and Mr. J. McKay took up their residences at Ogbomosho in April. Rev. H. H. Dobinson visited Lokoja in March, and spent four weeks there.

An important paper read by Canon Christopher at the Annual Conference of the Western Clerical and Lay Association, on "The Evangelical Teaching of To-day," has been published in pamphlet form by Messrs. W. Hunt and Co.

The valedictory dismissal of the missionaries of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society will take place on Wednesday, Oct. 10, in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, at 2.30 p.m. The valedictory address will be given by Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

At the twenty-ninth anniversary of the English Church Union (Salisbury branch), Rev. D. Ware, New Swindon, advocated cricket and football on Sundays as a means of keeping young people together. Strong protests are being made against such a dangerous innovation.

In the parish of St. Mark, Barrow-in-Furness, there has lately been started an effort which deserves special notice. At a meeting of young men it was proposed, and carried by acclamation, to institute a collection of weekly subscriptions in aid of the C.M.S., and thus to support their "own missionary." The first month's work produced 190 subscribers of one to five farthings per week, the total reaching £19 annually, being an average of two shillings per head. Might not this scheme—evidencing the vast power of littles—be widely imitated? That is a question which the C.M.S. Gleaner fairly asks.

Special sermons were preached in St. Dunstan-in-the-West on Sunday week, on behalf of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. Rev. W. Hugh Wood, M.A., preached from Acts xx. 35, "I have showed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, it is more blessed to give than to receive." He asked his hearers to think of the little ones whom they were constantly meeting in the streets—those who had such pinched and hungry-looking faces, and whose rags scarcely covered them. It was for such that Dr. Barnardo lived and laboured.

Archdeacon Sinclair, presiding on Tuesday at the first annual meeting of the Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals, said that it was necessary for the Christian Church to bring forth the subject of kindness to animals and the reverse, because without moral and religious feeling there was no ground at all on which to appeal to the human conscience on behalf of dumb creatures. Cruelty came from two sources—ignorance and hardness of heart. The Scriptures had not left man in darkness as to his duty to the less perfect forms of creation; man was the head, but was not to use the gift of sovereignty as an animal. The duty of the Christian Church was to persuade men to recognise the greatness of their responsibilities, and to teach them to behave like an elder brother at the head of God's family of animals.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. J. Butler, of Peterborough, has been ordered two months' complete rest.

Mr. W. L. Lee, of Plymouth, has been ordained pastor of the new church, Kettering.

Rev. C. J. Clarke, late of Steeple Bumsted, has been recognised as pastor at Wolverton.

Crown-street Church, Ipswich, has resolved to enlarge the Sunday-schools and provide accommodation for auxiliary classes and societies.

Wanstead Church was entered during Friday evening and the collection boxes and cupboards were broken open, some tablecloths and towels being stolen.

The foundation-stones of a new church have been laid at Caerphilly. The building will stand on a site given by Mr. Anthony, and will accommodate 520 worshippers.

Memorial-stones of a mission-room at Drub, in connection with Providence-place Church, Cleckheaton, have been laid by Mrs. Arthur Anderton and Mr. Wm. Anderton.

Under the pastorate of Rev. H. F. Walker, High-street Church, Burton-on-Trent, has substituted voluntary offerings for pew rents, and has established a Christian Endeavour Society.

We are glad to hear that the London Missionary Society's new mission steamer John Williams arrived safely at Freemantle, Western Australia, on Sunday week. Captain Turpie has telegraphed that all on board are well. She left London on May 18.

Rev. D. Henry Rees, of Barry, presided on Sunday week at a communion service, at which the new church at Barry Dock was formally constituted, by the transfer of eighteen members from the parent church at Barry, and the reception of twenty-eight new members.

Calls.—Rev. D. G. Evans, of Treforest, to Cleveland, U.S.A.; Rev. A. T. Jenkins, of Ferndale, to Penclawdd; Rev. T. D. Jones, of Booke, to Conway; Rev. J. Evans to Colwyn Bay.

BAPTIST.

A new church is being built at Far Cotton, Northampton.

Rev. G. J. Dann, of Delhi, has returned to India after furlough.

Barn services have been commenced at Wootton, Kent. Funds are being raised for the erection of a mission-hall.

Land has been purchased by North Curry and Stoke St. Gregory Churches for the purpose of erecting a new church.

The memorial-stone for new classrooms for Moss Side Sunday-school, Manchester, has been laid by Mr. E. Davis Pochin.

Rev. C. E. Wilson, of Regent's Park College, has been accepted for mission work for India, and designated for Jessore.

A mission-hall is to be erected at Farnham, where a branch church has been formed by workers from Bishop's Stortford.

Putton Chapel, blown down by a gale in December, has been restored with the assistance of Bank-buildings Church, Weymouth.

For the new tabernacle at Woolwich, to cost about £12,000, and to seat 2000 persons, a site has been obtained in Beresford-street.

Memorial stones have been laid at Saltley, near Birmingham, of a new chapel to accommodate the church which is the outcome of a mission started by Coventry-road in 1832.

Rev. T. J. Malyon, formerly of New-cross, King's Lynn, Stockton, Sunderland, and Vauxhall Chapel, London, has accepted a unanimous call to Albert-street Church, Melbourne, in succession to Rev. Edwin H. Ellis.

According to the annual report of the building and extension fund of the Yorkshire Association, very inadequate support is received from many of the affiliated churches, over 100 congregations contributing a total of only £200.

Calls.—Rev. D. Pryse, of Cardiff, to South Bank; Rev. H. Singleton to Smethwick; Rev. Idwal Jones to Bethel, Llanelly.

Resignations. — Rev. P. Morrison, of Unthanks-road, Norwich; Rev. H. Platten, of Madeley and Shifnal.

METHODIST.

The foundation-stone of a new chapel has been laid at Carthorpe by Lady Milbank.

The John Wesley Mission Car has been travelling through the Peterborough Circuit, and successful services have been held.

Memorial-stones of additional buildings at Asbury Memorial Chapel, Handsworth, have been laid by Mrs. Walford Green.

A promising forward movement is being undertaken at Harwich. A new chapel being greatly needed, a capital site has been secured.

The old chapel at Barnard Castle has been renovated and transformed into a hall, designated Wycliffe Hall, and will be used for mission purposes.

A fine new chapel has been opened at Hull. Rev. A. T. Guttery, of South Shields, preached the dedicatory sermon, and addressed a crowded public meeting in the evening.

Rev. J. Flanagan, of Southwark, has almost recovered from the serious illness from which he suffered during his visit to Switzerland. He has resumed his work at the Trinity Mission in the south-east of London.

The latest statistics of the New Connexion mission in China give 86 chapels, 8 missionaries, 43 native ministers, 14 local preachers, 1542 members, and 562 probationers. The number baptized during the year is 218. There are 34 schools, 14 students, and 377 scholars.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr's first anniversary at Surrey Chapel has been celebrated with large gatherings. A public meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. J. Phillips, who, with others, expressed gratitude for the spiritual work done during the year. Mr. Parr reviewed the year's work. He had not come to London with the idea of setting the Thames on fire, but he had attempted to do as much as his strength and resources warranted. The Visiting Association, by means of which 2000 families had been visited every month, the mothers' meetings, and the open-air services, had combined to make the name of Surrey Chapel a household word amongst the poor of the neighbourhood.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The foundation-stone has been laid of a new place of worship for the use of the Walton Breck-road congregation, Liverpool. The pastor is Rev. T. G. Owen.

Sir George Bruce and Dr. Gibson have been appointed by the Home Mission Committee to represent the Presbyterians at the Congress of Evangelical Churches on the question of overlapping in rural districts.

The Synod evangelists this year will be Revs. Dr. Monro Gibson, S. R. Macphail, James Christie, G. M. Smith, and W. F. Holt. In the early winter they will concentrate their efforts upon the Newcastle-on-Tyne district.

Rev. John More, of Cheltenham, has accepted the call to Woolwich New-road Church. His induction has been fixed for the last week in September. Mr. More commenced his ministerial life at Dudley, and settled in Cheltenham over twenty years ago.

Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson, the ladies who offer a site for the Presbyterian College at Cambridge, and £20,000 should the removal of that institution from London to Cambridge be agreed upon, have now decided to pay the sum charged for the keeping open of the offer of the site for another year.

Calls.—Rev. J. J. Kelly, of Fullerton, to Wishaw; Rev. G. Macleod, of Knock, to Kilmallie; Rev. R. L. Barr, of Dalry, to Bressay, Shetland; Rev. S. Dunlop to Southwick.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

James R. Jones, of North Carolina, has received credentials, and hopes to visit India and the British Isles in Gospel service.

The American Friend is a weekly journal that it would do English Friends good to read. It combines and supersedes The Friends' Review and Christian Worker, and will express the views of the large body of American Friends. Evangelical and liberal, we wish it much success.

At the quarterly meeting of Sussex, Surrey, and Hants report was made that most of the money needed for a new meeting-house at Bletchingly has been collected. Only about £80 remains to be gathered. Local Friends will be much cheered, and the work be helped where such work is much required.

The second Oregon yearly meeting is reported in The American Friend as held at Newberg, and evidently was a time of blessing. The same applies to the recent yearly meeting of Canada. In both cases the need of reaching out the hand of help, and preaching and teaching Jesus was proclaimed. No Church can be stationary, or live at all, unless carrying out the "marching orders" of the King, "Go ye into all the world." Both yearly meetings, besides home work, are sending Gospel messengers abroad—and both grow.

Last week two interesting gatherings were held in course at Devonshire House. The first, "The Morning Meeting," represents the "Meeting on Ministry and Oversight," and is therefore composed largely of officers in the society. At this meeting Hannah F. White, of Waterford, was encouraged in her prospective visit to Philppopolis and Constantinople to meet the Friends in those remote places, and maybe cheer and bless them in their work for God. The other, "The Meeting for Sufferings," represents the yearly meeting at large, and was extremely interesting also. The great anti-slavery question was before it, and the efforts Friends (of Birmingham especially) are making to bring it before churches, conferences, and ministers. The case of Alfred S. Dyer's imprisonment in Bombay claimed much sympathetic attention, and a statement is likely to be published giving full and definite particulars. The spirit of the meeting was in harmony with the traditions of the Society of Friends.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

One hundred and eighteen men have during the week been found work through the Labour Exchange.

On Thursday last General Booth held a private meeting with his principal officers to bid farewell and God-speed to the parties leaving for Australia and South Africa.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth is still seeking for a suitable building and premises for the Women's Shelter in the West-end, and all information on the subject will be appreciated by her.

The Canadian Salvation "Navy" has just received an important addition, in the shape of a steamer of thirty-two tons, to be named the William Booth. She will take a tour of the towns and cities on Lake Ontario.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Silverdale, on 29th ult., Mr. Andrew Edge, aged sixty-nine, while conducting a service in the chapel.—At Derby, Mr. W. Spalton, aged seventy-six, a useful and valued Bible-class leader and Christian worker.—At Titchmarsh, Mr. Abbott, aged eighty-two, a leader at Thrapstone Baptist Chapel.—At Sheffield, on 28th ult., Mr. Frank Burnby, aged forty-eight, superintendent of Sunday-school and earnest worker at Broompark.—At Newcastle-on-Tyne, Mr. C. Rosevear, a well-known Christian citizen.—At Steyning, Mr. H. Slaughter, a leading and active worker.—At Sewstern (Lincs), Mr. Wm. Standard, aged seventy-one, for many years a preacher of the Gospel.—At Bristol, Rev. Richard Morris, aged eighty-two, formerly a very prominent Baptist minister in Clifton.—At Chelsea, on 25th ult., Mrs. T. S. Barrett.—At The Edge, Sheffield, Mrs. Isaac Milner, aged fifty, a member of the Society of Friends. At Newcastle-Emlyn, Mr. Timothy Thomas, senior deacon and chief supporter of the Baptist Church, somewhat suddenly, aged seventy-seven.—At Great Salkfield, aged seventy-two, Rev. S. J. Butler, vicar of the parish.—At Larne, Mr. J. Thompson, a devoted member of the Society of Friends, and an earnest Christian worker.—Rev. A. E. Grieve, who succeeded Rev. Dr. Howat as minister of the Queen's-road Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, a little over four years ago, aged forty-seven years.

THE CLAPTON MISSION.

A meeting was held last week in the Clapton Park Tabernacle to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the opening of the Clapton Primitive Methodist Mission, and of Rev. Thomas Jackson's ministry in connection with it. The annual report stated that the number of church-members was 362, an increase of fifty-seven on the previous year, and that the Sunday-schools and Bands of Hope were flourishing. A seaside Home of Rest had been established at Southend, where 140 visitors have been received. Children's free breakfasts and soup-kitchens were maintained during the winter, and a number both of adults and children have been given a day in the country.

The chair was taken by Mr. George Nokes, who said that the Clapton Mission had started ten years ago with ten people. Christianity held out a helping hand to the poor who could not help themselves. There was too much hair-splitting about sects at the present time; let them do as much good to others as they could. Jesus Christ was the greatest Socialist that ever lived, and if people did what He preached, London would be a very different place from what it was.

Rev. T. Jackson gave an account of the ten years' work of the Mission and its great growth. Unfortunately, through financial difficulties, several branches of the work had to be curtailed.

Mr. Fletcher Moulton, Q.C., M.P., said that he had come to show his deep sympathy with the work, his admiration for the man who did it, and his hearty good wishes for its future. He saw in London a great nation crowded into one spot, with all evils aggravated by being so crowded, but with all the possibilities for good increased by the fact of having so many at hand to influence. The Wesleyans and other Methodists had a firm hold of the hearts of the people. Their great principle was that no one was so poor as not to be able to help someone, and he was sure that one of the best ways of doing this was to give their material support, sympathy, and good wishes to their worthy and devoted pastor, Mr. Jackson. It was announced that £102 had been received towards paying the debt of £400 that had to be cleared off before November.

BAPTISMS AT KRISHNAGAR.—Four persons were recently baptized at Krishnagar, Bengal. One of them was a young Mohammedan named Upsar Sheikh, who had followed Rev. W. Wallace, a few weeks before, from a mela held near Nadiya. The other three were the two brothers and the sister of a convert, named Philip, of two years ago. Revs. E. T. Butler and Daniel Biswas baptized them in the large tank adjoining the church in the presence of a large number of Hindus, Mohammedans, and Christians.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For tent mission conducted by Henry Lakin, from August 12, in connection with Blackthorn-street Chapel, Bow Common, E.—For a case, sad beyond telling, of one dying in bodily anguish, and without Christ or hope. —For blessing on a ten days' mission at Assembly-rooms, Malvern, by Mr. Henry Varley, commencing Lord's day, 12th inst.—For special services for children and young people in Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead, by Mr. H. Murch, August 12 to 19.—For services by Mr. J. Albinson, at Wood Green and Lowestoft.—For the Holy Spirit's blessing in connection with Irish Evangelization Society's Tent Mission at St. Johnston and Convoy, Co. Donegal.—For awakening a deep interest in the salvation of the Jews among Christians in Canada and the United States, leading to the salvation in Israel of many souls. Prayer is desired that this work may advance and deepen. PRAISE.—For blessing on services at Wood Green, Homerton, Dalston, New Brompton.

Notes and Comments.

We have been pained to hear some young pastors, in speaking of their work and its methods, say, in a somewhat supercilious, and, to be candid, in what seemed a pharisaic tone, "We have not even a P.S.A." Let it be remembered that a church may degenerate into a club, as a P.S.A. may degenerate into a smoking concert. It all depends on the men who work them. The P.S.A. as originally conceived, and as carried on in many places, is an unobjectionable and invaluable method of influencing men whom it seems impossible to reach except by some such means.

The Lord Jesus so spake that the people "hung upon Him for to hear Him." There are Bible classes now, and other meetings, which attract men, young and middle-aged, by scores and hundreds. There are others where it is difficult to gather together twenty or even twelve, notwithstanding earnestness, zeal, Scriptural knowledge and spiritual understanding in the leaders. Whence the difference? We have our own idea, but shall be glad, for the sake of those who have not succeeded as to numbers, if those who have succeeded will state what they regard as the secret of their success.

There is good news from the East. Official India is suffering considerable anxiety regarding the prospects of the opium revenue. Forty-six thousand fewer opium cultivators in the year 1892-3 is one disquieting item. Forty-two thousand three hundred chests of opium to be placed this year for sale at Calcutta, instead of the normal 54,000 chests, is also significant. The usual reserve stock in the Government factories is 30,000 chests. It is thought there will not be a single chest in reserve at the close of the year.

To keep words from being degraded in use and meaning is not easy; nevertheless, it is desirable in the interests of right-thinking and pure feeling. The word "vocation," e.g., is a noble word, has a suggestion of Divine impulse and motive, and an outlook towards a judgment to come. Yet how often is it misapplied. A few days ago a bookmaker spoke of his nefarious doings as his "vocation," and you may sometimes even hear of the life of a fallen woman spoken of as her "calling." Who "called" her? The old idea that a man's work in life, which he undertook according to his fitness and his sense of duty, was a calling of God, was sound and healthy. Let us not expel it by a loose use of words.

A prominent Presbyterian minister of New York has resigned his pastorate, and in doing so has made confessions which are painful reading, but perhaps a warning may be found in them by some. After admitting that he had at one time used stimulants, among others cocaine, though happily all this is a thing of the past, he says:—

I should never have gone into the ministry, the strain on me was too great. I am too much of a soldier for that sort of thing. The constant struggle for something new, which is as strong in churches as elsewhere, was what told upon me.

If the churches desire something new, ministers must withstand it as an unholy and profane thing in the house of God, but there are plenty of examples of useful and substantial pastorates built on simple fidelity to the Word of God. In fact, nothing can be useful and enduring which has not God's truth as its substance and adornment. Nothing is so fresh as the Bible.

The thought that often presses upon sensitive minds with almost overwhelming power, that evil appears to be universal, endless, unconquerable, was as common among the Jews as it is amongst Christians. We may be easily touched by the sight of injustice and rampant wickedness, but not more so than were the Psalmists. Quick moral consciousness, tenderness, sympathy, do not spring from fineness of nerves, but from pureness of heart. Three thousand years ago devout men were asking, as they looked upon the disorders and confusion of society, "How long shall the wicked triumph? How long shall they utter and speak hard things, and all the workers of iniquity boast themselves?" The time of the continuance of evil has been enormously extended, and the question will now come with increased force only for one thing, viz., that Christ has been here in the flesh, and is here in the Spirit, and that God will surely make all things new.

The Outlook has some very sensible remarks on the danger of exaggeration in promoting reforms. But we think The Outlook itself hardly keeps within the limits of accuracy when it says:—

It appears to be taken for granted by a great many people that reformers have a right to exaggerate, and that the only way to attract public attention to evils of various kinds is to throw them into very bold relief. This is always what is said in defence of the exaggerated statements sometimes put forth by zealous and earnest men in behalf of the causes for which they are pleading.

Our own experience has been that reformers are nervously anxious to keep rigidly within the limits of fact, because they are men of conscience, and hate anything having the appearance of exaggeration; and also because they know very well that their statements will be critically examined, and mercilessly exposed if untrue, and that such a result would be damaging to the cause they seek to promote.

When The Outlook observes that "wholesale condemnation has been the blunder of many temperance reformers, with the result of alienating, at times, great hosts of people who would naturally be in sympathy with a genuine and rational temperance movement," why should it confound "many temperance reformers" with a whole movement? And again, we should like to know who the men are who exaggerate. If they are men who have been intemperate, who have suffered from all the abuses and tricks of the trade, who have also, through intemperance, lost—if they ever had it—the power of careful discriminating speech, we contend that this should be allowed for. It should also be allowed for if they are men whose drunken fathers or drunken mothers made home resemble hell, and robbed their children of the ordinary necessaries of life, besides every advantage and aid to advancement. Some cool people might, if they had suffered in a similar way, use very strong language, and be justified in doing it. There would be no exaggeration. Let us be just all round.

Lord Salisbury put his finger upon a very weak place in current scientific thought when, in his address as President of the British Association, he said:—

It seems strange that a philosopher of Professor Weissmann's penetration should accept as established, a hypothetical process, the truth of which he admits that he cannot demonstrate in detail, and the operation of which he cannot even imagine. The reason that he gives seems to me instructive of the great danger scientific research is running at the present time—the acceptance of mere conjecture in the name and place of knowledge, in preference to making frankly the admission that no certain knowledge can be attained. "We accept natural selection," he says, "because we must—because it is the only possible explanation that we can conceive." But such a line of reasoning is utterly out of place in science. We are under no obligation to find a theory, if the facts will not provide a sound one. To the riddles which nature propounds to us the confession of ignorance must constantly be our reasonable answer. The cloud of impenetrable mystery hangs over the development and still more over the origin of life. If we strain our eyes to pierce it, with the foregone conclusion that some solution is and must be attainable, we shall only mistake for discoveries the figments of our own imagination.

"The impartiality of the scientific mind," "the delight of science," and much more of the same kind of thing, is here seen to be as partial, as prejudiced, and as bigoted as any professor of religion ever was.

Lord Salisbury quoted with full approval "the judgment of the greatest living master of natural science among us, Lord Kelvin," who, in his address as President of the British Association twenty years ago, said:—

I have always felt that the hypothesis of natural selection does not contain the true theory of evolution, if evolution there has been in biology. . . . I feel profoundly convinced that the argument of design has been greatly too much lost sight of in recent zoological speculations. Overpoweringly strong proofs of intelligent and benevolent design lie around us, and if ever perplexities, whether metaphysical or scientific, turn us away from them for a time, they come back upon us with irresistible force, showing to us through nature the influence of a free will, and teaching us that all living things depend on one everlasting Creator and Ruler.

There seems to be a tendency among some scientists to treat lightly any opinion which is not the opinion of one of their own number, but surely every intelligent person is entitled to say that a theory which rests on no proved foundation of facts is only a guess, and natural selection is only a guess. Such an intelligent person may also form a correct opinion as to the determination of such scientists as will not allow any place for the principle of design in the construction of the universe. He is entitled to think that they are not willing to follow the evidence.

Rev. Hamilton Kingsford writes to The Guardian, saying that a somewhat long and varied experience of country life has led him to the conclusion that the principal cause for the depletion of our villages is not to be sought so much in the depression of the agricultural interest and other things as in "a growing distaste for country life, a distaste not confined to our agricultural labourers, but extending to all classes, clerical and lay." This agrees with what we have heard of feeling in Germany, where, in spite of all that an enlightened employer did to make the country an enjoyable and intellectual home, his employés still gravitated to the town. The worst of it is that "the squire now does not affect the country as he once did; and the country parson is regarded as a fossil, and the country cure, formerly the beau ideal to many, is often hard to fill." If men of means and intelligence turn townwards the case is indeed bad, but perhaps their children are at the bottom of the movement, and they may be made wiser by experience. Is not the root cause of all this change and excitement, however, a heart that wants the peace of God and the contentment of the Holy Spirit?

Rev. T. Hodgson, Chaplain of Shoreditch Workhouse and Infirmary, says in a letter to The Rock, on "Church Attendance in London," that one of the principal reasons for the smallness of church attendance is the custom of reading fiction:—

Faith and fiction have very little in common, and statistics furnished by our public libraries show that the reading of this kind of literature is almost universal, and claims for itself about seventy-five per cent. of the readers and reading of this country. Now, the fiction reader is not required to believe what he reads; hence the faith faculty becomes atrophied, and the religious life, which demands faith, suffers in consequence thereof. The novel is merely pleasure-work. Church attendance requires effort, self-denial—and the religious life means self-control, the subjection of the flesh, lively faith, and stern self-mastery. The sympathy which fiction excites on behalf of the wronged and struggling chief character is nullified by the feeling of hatred and desire for revenge which is evoked against the characters of oppression and wrongful dealing. The novel, I believe, has done more to oust the Bible, and consequently to destroy religious life, than any other thing.

We are disposed to agree with Mr. Hodgson. Fiction absorbs the mind to an abnormal degree, and, eagerly followed, destroys the relish for fact, for life as it is, for truth by which life is to be ennobled and uplifted. To live on novels, as many do, is to live on froth. No moral involved in the tale, no "purpose," no philosophy of life, no religion, can save it from being hurtful, if it is chosen to the neglect of other things—and its tendency is always to oust other things. It is admissible only as a change and a recreation, but how few use it in that way.

The following is from the pages of The Church Times:—

Much interest has been excited in the public press by the inclusion in the Wesleyan Conference proceedings of a memorial service for departed ministers. In the Catholic Church, the faithful departed are always held in remembrance, death creating no insuperable barrier between the living and the dead. . . . . Among ourselves the practice of holding memorial services is a sign that the modern Protestant idea of an absolute separation between those on earth and those in Paradise, is losing its hold upon men's minds. . . . . The memorial service having found its way into Methodism, we may hope that the more timid amongst us will take courage, and rise to the Catholic level of intercession for the dead.

The steps of thought here appear to be—memorial—no insuperable barrier—the Catholic idea of the invisible world—intercession for the dead. And what again would that involve? All the unreality and corruption of Church machinery set in motion to do what it never can do, and the intolerable spiritual despotism of priests who pretend that the fate of the dead is at their disposal.

Has the Roman Church in Père Didon, the Dominican, a son who, having found some of the precious truths of the Gospel, will stay in her fold, or will he find it impossible to endure her bondage? Is he a new power, or only a promise of a power? Is he to go on and develop, or is he to be suppressed as so many have been, and will he endure the suppression? We look with hope and anxiety to this man of genius, who has given such touching and indubitable evidence of his love for Jesus Christ. His "Life of Christ," which had such an earnest reception in France, has already made him famous. Now he has dared to tell his scoffing countrymen from the pulpit of the Madeleine that "belief in the Divinity of Christ" is the thing that they want. He speaks of Jesus as One whom he has found, whom he knows in the experiences of his own heart, and for whose sake he would sacrifice anything.

I have called upon Him as one can call upon One who has long since passed away from earth, but who yet remains engraved ineffaceably on the pages where every candid mind can find Him, and I bear you witness that I saw arise before me a human being whom none can resist. He has inspired me with absolute confidence—a confidence which will lead me, following Him, through fire and water. His moral beauty is dazzling, and his whole teaching instinct with the highest truth. His holiness shines forth in the least of his actions, a virtue goes out from Him, He exercises a magic from which no sincere and simple heart can escape.

In this search after Jesus, Père Didon does not ask his fellow-countrymen to attend to the Church or to fall back upon sacraments, or to do anything but go to the Gospels. He sends them to the history of Christ for Christ Himself. He says:—

Before all things take the eternal Gospel as a book for your bedside and as your travelling book. When you are tired of the business of the day, or the fatigues of life, read and re-read it, not as a poet, not as a critical scholar, nor as a learned professor, not as an interpreter or an historian; read it as a man. There is something grander than imagination, than science, than mind or genius—were it the mind of the whole world and the greatest genius—there is something which I put above all; and you will agree with me; this something, with which you must read the Gospel, is conscience.

There is no wonder that this eloquent preacher has only to appear in the greatest churches, and they are filled, not alone with "the faithful," but also with representatives of the wit and learning and genius of France. This may be a sensation for a time, but if, as we believe, the preacher has the root of the matter in him, it will go on to new developments. The sensation should become a conversion, a revival, a turning unto God; and then, what will follow? However, let the remote effects wait; we only hope and pray that he may have grace to press forward with his watchword—"Faith in the Son of God."

There lies before us a copy of correspondence just published relative to the proposed introduction of C. D. Regulations in Perak or other protected Malay States, also of correspondence relating to similar measures in the Colonies. Our officials abroad seem to be strongly impressed with the plausible but fallacious arguments which are always advanced in every country in favour of this system. At the bottom there is everywhere moral confusion and a distrust of moral influences to keep men right. Thus in a memorandum by the Resident at Perak we find him saying:—

Morality is dependent on the influences of climate, religious belief, education, and the feeling of society. All these conditions differ in different parts of the world. . . . The members of the Perak State Council, who cannot be said to have any personal interest in the matter, and are wholly uninfluenced by any outside opinion, consider that it is their duty to protect the prostitutes irrespective of their religion, nationality, or the nature of their calling, which, indeed, supplies a public want.

With these views the Colonial Office did not agree, and in these places the demoralising system has been abolished. The quotations we have given will show that the authorities at home have their work frequently made more difficult by the representatives of our country abroad.

TEN YEARS IN HEAVEN.

It is difficult to realise, in times of great sorrow and trial, that the hand so heavily laid upon us is bruising us in love, and that the scarring and maiming of our hearts, and sometimes of our bodies, are but steps or stages in the work of the great Master, who would have us to be perfect.

"As many as I love I rebuke and chasten," says the Father. What a picture of the Divine love! What insight it gives us into the ineffable pity of the Divine heart! For, among his creatures, are there many who, loving, crucify themselves by the chastening and purification by pain of their loved ones?

Not many, else should we know less in this age of unchastened, spoiled, neglected, unloved children.

"My children?" said a fashionable mother. "I know very little about them; their governess can tell you more than I. But I know they cost a great deal; one must spoil them in other ways if one cannot devote oneself to them."

How different the care and training of our great All-Father! Rebuke and chastening are for his "special treasure." He falters not, nor fails in a single blow, that He may thereby spare Himself—spare the heart of God one throb of the anguish and pity that rend it when he has to "chasten" his child.

Mourner, did you ever think of this when writhing under the lash of trial or the blow of bereavement? Did it ever come to you, that the one you so rebelliously mourn was not dearer to you than you—shrinking, suffering child—are to your Father? Did you never think, in your agony, that by casting yourself and your sorrow into "the Everlasting Arms," you took from them the power to smite?

"Do you run away when your father flogs you?" asked one child of another.

"No," was the reply, "I run into his arms—he can't flog then." All chastening is to draw us nearer to God; to make us liker to God; to fit and perfect us for the presence of God. That accomplished, the child of God has no need to dread either rebuke or chastening. The closer and harder he leans upon his Father's breast, the less he will feel the rod.

I heard a beautiful story lately—a story to stir the heart, and to stimulate the faith of the most tried of God's people. In a lonely part of Scotland lived a poor man and his wife and daughter. They were all he had, but death came and took them from him. Those who have suffered as he, will understand something of his loss. His health gave way, and soon he became totally blind. I do not know what his attitude in the spiritual life was at this time, but I know what his Father was doing. "I love, I rebuke and chasten." He was drawing him to Himself. In his loneliness and pain he bethought him of the poor, untaught shepherd boys in the mountain, and these he gathered together, and told them of the love of God, of the life of Jesus, of the power of the Gospel of that love and that life. And he did not tell them in vain.

The lonely, fruitful years went by, until one day a man of God visited the blind teacher, and, seeing everything as it was to outside eyes, he told him how he sympathised with him, and how God was touched with the feeling of his infirmities, and how there would one day be an end to it all, and at last he said:—

"You have the great consolation, you will soon be in heaven."

The sightless eyes lifted themselves, the worn hands were clasped, a beautiful smile illumined the scarred face:—

"Soon be in heaven, did you say, sir?" asked the old Christian, "I have been there ten years already!"

Ten years in heaven! And you, mourner, may have been carrying your burdens all that time alone, and you might have been there too!

Step out from among the embers of your grief, and they will soon be ashes. No matter how heavy your cross, how bitter your cup, how deep your chastening, the hand that bruises is the hand that blesses, and, in the house of your mourning, you may, even now, as you arise and seek the arms of your Father, begin the first year of many years in heaven.

MISS KATE MARSDEN.—We are requested to state that the work projected by this lady on behalf of Liberian lepers is definitely terminated, her committee having disbanded.

Spiritual Power and Testimony.

It is well for us whose lot is cast in these latter days, and who are permitted to see so many tokens and evidences of the fulfilment of our Lord's promises, to place ourselves in thought at the time when those promises were first made. It is well for us, especially when our hearts grow faint with doubt and weary with care, when the evil against which we have to contend seems too great for our strength, and the field which lies before us too vast for our enterprise, to go back to these first beginnings in Christian history, that we may encourage ourselves with the thought of that Divine power which, as it wrought at first for the establishment of the Christian Church, so works now for its perpetual growth and development. It is well for us to learn a lesson of faith and courage and hope from that upper room where a few helpless, unlettered, obscure men were gathered together: not knowing what should befall them in a cold, dark, hostile world, but knowing that the Master, whom they had loved and followed, had given them a promise and had bidden them wait for the fulfilment of that promise. The situation is as solemn as the scene is impressive. With a dim presentiment of what is coming, and with hearts that throb and swell with the excitement of expectation, and heaving with wondering thoughts of the grand things about to be revealed, they sit there for ten days, and wait for the promise of the Father. The day-star is about to rise in their hearts after the dreary night of mental perplexity and despairing sorrow through which they had recently passed. They wait for the Spirit of light and power, that would enable them to see things as they lie before the mind of God, and give them power of utterance and of character corresponding to their enlarged comprehension of the words and works of Christ. And we know that their waiting was not in vain, for the Holy Spirit did come upon them in power, and they were witnesses to Christ not only in Judea and Samaria, but beyond the bounds of civilised heathenism.

As it was in the beginning of the Christian society, so it is still. The power which fitted the Apostles for their work is the power which works now for the accomplishment of the same ends. The external phenomena of that day have changed; miracles are no more, because the Church has now become sufficiently visible and sufficiently well understood to need them no more. The gift of tongues is but once or twice alluded to in the second century; and then we hear no more of it. But the Holy Spirit, in the fulness of his power, abideth with us for ever. The works of wonder which Christ did on earth may no more be done, because miracles in themselves do not contain the final purpose for which they are wrought, but the "greater works than these" are still the sign of his presence without whom no spiritual life is possible. Prophecies may fail, tongues cease, and miracles be no more, but the more excellent gifts are poured out as richly as ever. The Giver of all power is with us, and if we are not strong in God and fitted for his work, it is because we are not having fellowship with Him.

This power is to be found in the knowledge and utterance of the truth, no less than in the virtue of a holy life. The Spirit of truth is the Holy Spirit. The fellowship of the Holy Spirit is a sharing in his activity and character. And in his gracious work we may believe that He who enlightens the understanding to know the truth, does also purify the heart and sanctify the whole man. When the Holy Spirit dwells in a man, and he is conscious of that power, there is vigour derived from the central fountain of life. There are men whose zeal for the evangelisation of the world is often very real and very fervent, but who give us no impression of spiritual power. There are others who are often inspired with a passion for Christian perfection, but in them, too, there appears no real vigour. There are others who give us the impression that they are wanting in those elements of life which constitute spiritual energy, though their vision of truth is often very keen and penetrating. But when the Holy Spirit pours life into the centre of a man's being, all his graces ripen. Just as the indwelling of the Holy Spirit is the grand means of educating and purifying the soul, so it is the vital and central power in man. When we feel that we are wanting in spiritual force, it becomes us to press the prayer that we "may be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man." In every emergency, in every Christian work and effort, it is our privilege to pray for the abundant grace of the Spirit, without which we can do nothing, with which we can do all things. And it is not more certain that God gave the Son of his love to live among us and to die for us, than that He will give the Holy Spirit to those who sincerely ask it.

The Apostles received power, and they were witnesses to Christ. We can only witness to a person as far as we know that person; and we can only be witnesses to Christ as far as He is made real and precious to us by the Holy Spirit. In giving evidence in a court of law, we are only required to tell what we personally know, and are not allowed to give hearsay evidence. So, in bearing witness to Christ, our testimony is only valuable as far as it is a thing of personal experience. The Gospel is a message of grace given to us for transmission, but yet a message which we cannot transmit until it has entered into our own experience, and we can give our testimony of its spiritual power in our lives. To exert real power over men's minds and hearts, what we speak must not only be true, but true to us. The magnetic force must saturate our own spirit ere it flows out to others in contact with us.

For what is language but a counterpart of the gift of an immortal soul, an expression of its life, a medium of giving currency to its feelings and its thoughts? When a man speaks we read in his language, in its form, in its tone, in its very accent, the movement of an undying spirit. Language is the living expression of the soul's life; it flows from the soul as the spring of water from the fountain: "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Language is a witness, which drags the human spirit forth from its hiding-place to be judged publicly before the bar of humanity; it is an artist, who traces, without much real exaggeration or disguise, the lines of beauty which grace the inmost features of an invisible spirit.

Language is, however, not the only medium through which moral convictions and impressions are transmitted from speaker to hearer. A man's actions and his countenance, as well as his words, speak to the soul of his brother man; and while the essence of the soul is still necessarily hidden, the outward effects of its action convey a living and accurate impression of its secret life. And if we are to be true witnesses of Christ, and real helpers of men, the life of God in our souls must not be less, but greater, than our expression of it.

If we indulge in talking about experiences that we have not experienced, we become singularly unreal in our life, and weak and ineffectual in our work. If we content ourselves with speaking of the preciousness of Christ in a degree that we have not experienced, there will be an unreality in the very tone and manner of our words. It is just as far as our words are true to our experience of the possession of the Spirit of all grace, that we can witness to Christ, or have any real and abiding influence over our fellows. It is only life that kindles life. It is only as far as our words are the expression of a personality that has been regenerated, and is possessed by the Holy Spirit, that we can witness to Christ. The Gospel must come genuinely through us, if men are to receive it impressed and winged with all the earnestness and reality that there may be in us.

What specially strikes us when we study the lives of great workers in the Kingdom of God is the spiritual power at the back of all their words and actions. It was that which made men take notice of them that they had been with Jesus. It was the power of God in them that made them so powerful with men. They brought their spirits to the fount of inspiration, lived in communion with the Spirit of all grace, and the words they spoke possessed a charm and a power to touch hearts and mould lives, which no words of eloquent conventionality can ever attain.

PRAYER FOR CHINA.

Dear Sir,—Can you kindly let me state a few facts showing the ever-growing need of sympathy with the National Prayer Union in this country, to pray that Chinese apostles may be raised up, and the fulness of the Holy Spirit received.

(1) As the kingdom of Christ is extending, often the solitary native worker cannot be visited frequently, and he must bear physical, mental, and spiritual strain before which even experienced Christians might faint.

(2) The brethren are keenly watched and tested by foes ever ready to take advantage of any mistake, and press it with fearful pertinacity.

(3) The Church in China is in a struggling state financially, and does not yet treat native ministers well.

(4) Many have broken down through overwork and insufficient support.

(5) Opportunities of service are daily increasing through confidence in Christians they are sometimes invited to act as peacemakers and prevent terrible clan fights. Sometimes public money is entrusted to them for public works. Sometimes they are sought as worthy to take positions of trust, and sometimes Christian industries may be attempted with excellent opportunities of doing good. But the need of reliable men, and men of character, thus to act as leaders is great.

(6) There are increasing openings for literature of all kinds. The Shanghai native daily newspapers are favourable to Christianity. Here is a field for the right men, and they might do work which would "tell for centuries."

(7) While foreign missionaries have responsibility and authority they cannot put off, yet the more the best natives are united with them in council, the greater the good. Chinese life is a great deep and full of contrasts. The Chinese are narrow-minded yet they desiderate all breadth in us. They lack personal interest in good work, yet expect us to be all devoted. A good native pastor will sometimes give hints of great value—if he is encouraged.

(8) As these native brethren are raised up and brought forward, suggestions are developed whereby existing agencies are rendered more serviceable and new ones started.

(9) Opportunities for the work of good women are increasing, and prayer for such workers should be equally earnest.

(10) A paper by Rev. C. G. Finney on The Enduement of Power, needs to be more and more weighed by all friends of foreign missions.

Yours sincerely,

Amoy, June 24th. J. Sadler.

Missionary Agencies.

In previous papers we have shown the numerical strength of the great religious systems of the world, and the relative social influence and the vital superiority of Christianity, as a moral and spiritual force, over all non-Christian systems. Let us now survey the avowedly evangelistic efforts of Protestants to obey the Saviour's command, "Go into the world and preach the Gospel to the whole creation." Dean Vahl has published "A Statistical Review" of missions to the heathen, which gives, in the short space of twenty-four pages, a more complete list of the various Protestant Missionary Societies than has ever before been published. It is based on the reports of the various societies for 1890 and 1891; it bears every evidence of thorough and accurate investigation, and the compiler states his intention to prepare similar tables for 1891 and '92. It is to be hoped that he will carry out his most laborious and important design, and thus lay the friends of missions under a yet deeper debt of gratitude to him.

Since the tables are but little known in England, I here give an outline of their main features. According to Dean Vahl, the Missionary societies and agencies in 1892 numbered 304, whilst their resources and agencies were as follows:—

| Aggregate income ..... | £2,749,340 |
| Missionaries ..... | 5,094 |
| Unmarried Lady Missionaries | 2,445 |
| Native Ministers ..... | 3,730 |
| Other Native Helpers ..... | 40,438 |
| Communicants ..... | 1,168,560 |

A comparison of these returns with those for 1890, shows a decided advance all along the line. These various societies belong to the following countries:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| England ..... | 73 | Scotland ..... | 16 |
| Ireland ..... | 2 | Netherlands..... | 17 |
| Germany..... | 18 | Switzerland..... | 3 |
| Denmark ..... | 3 | France ..... | 2 |
| Norway ..... | 6 | Sweden..... | 7 |
| Finland ..... | 2 | U. S. America... | 57 |
| Br. N. America | 16 | West India ..... | 13 |
| Asia ..... | 29 | Africa ..... | 14 |
| Australia ..... | 26 | | |

Of course the societies and agencies vary greatly in the extent of their resources and spheres, and their modes of operation, from eight whose annual incomes exceed £100,000, to the far larger number, which have less than £1000. Some are auxiliary only, or branches of older or stronger societies; others as Bible, Tract, and School Book Societies, aid, and that in a most important manner, rather than employ preaching missionaries; and some few are efforts originating in personal zeal.

It is a good sign of the growing expansiveness and strength of the missionary enterprise, that now every branch of the Church of Christ has one or more missionary organisations; that there is no Protestant country or important colony without them; and that wherever the Church of Christ takes root, either by conversions from the heathen, or colonisation, missionary effort becomes organised.

Whilst the increase of missionary societies and their resources is gratifying, a comparison between their resources and the work they exist to accomplish is less so.

For instance, if the aggregate income of all the societies be supposed to be contributed by Protestant Christendom, it is less than an annual contribution of fourpence per head. Or, supposing the communicants be the sole contributors, and to be one-sixth of the entire number, their contribution to this most divine purpose would be but two shillings each.

So with the workers: 7539 male and female missionaries; this means that scarcely one in twenty thousand of the Protestant world is a missionary; and it further means one witness-bearer to each 188,000 of the non-Christian world; a proportion greatly contrasting with our home supply of Christian workers, and altogether inadequate to meet the vast and varied requirements of the heathen world.

One of the most encouraging features of Dean Vahl's tables is the number of native helpers, and especially of native ministers. Missionaries have hesitated to ordain even their best and well-tried native evangelists; and until half our century had passed native ministers hardly existed as a class. It is an evidence, therefore, of growing Christian stability and intelligence on the part of native evangelists, and of a more wise and generous policy on the part of missionaries, that the number and efficiency of the native leaders has so increased. In the increase, self-support and more full and gracious recognition of native ministers to an equality of rank with other ministers, lie the hope and life of native Christian communities; and the societies at home as well as the missions abroad should press in this direction.

Another unexpected and most encouraging feature is the large number of communicants. The number reported for 1890 was 966,856, and for 1891, 1,168,560. These figures considerably exceed all previous estimates; but since they are based on the most full and accurate returns ever published, they may be accepted as essentially correct. There are few mission fields where the native Christians are not four times the number of the communicants, and therefore the total number of Christian adherents must considerably exceed the 3,000,000 at which they have usually been estimated.

Apparently inadequate as are these agencies to accomplish the immense work for which they have been called into existence, they present certain features of great encouragement. For instance, they show that the Church of Christ was never so alive to the wants of the world, or so generally conscious of its great trust to witness for God, as it is in our age; that it never had equal power or facilities for the discharge of this great duty; that there is a nearer approach to the fulfilment of the Saviour's command than there has ever been;—and that insignificant as the world may regard the resources of the Church, one tithe of them would be more than sufficient to overthrow the stupendous superstitions with which they have to contend, if they were directed by "power from on high."

For the numbers given in all missionary statistics represent far more than themselves. A Divine person and a Divine power surely go along with them. To preach and to teach the Gospel where heathenism has dominated, to make even a few converts, to gather a Christian society, to introduce the names of God and Christ, where hitherto they have been unknown, is a new and glorious thing, resembling the dawn of day, the advent of spring, the sinking of an artesian well. It is the Kingdom of Heaven drawing near to a people.

There are auxiliary agencies in our day, aiding the preaching of the Gospel, demanding recognition, however brief and imperfect. As God placed the Israelites in Palestine, in the centre of all the ancient civilisations, and subsequently scattered them among the nations, as witnesses for Monotheism and a Divine Revelation, so the Providence of God has brought, through conquest, colonisation, commerce and travel, Christian, and especially Protestant, people into connection with non-Christian people all over the world. Ill, alas! as we often bear ourselves in the midst of the heathen, our civilisation, power, wealth, and acknowledged influence, attract attention to the religion which underlies our greatness. This is so especially with the British race, the most influential of all. Great as are our sins, yet wherever we have power—and where is it not felt?—a new sense of truthfulness, justice, righteousness, humanity, and freedom begin to appear. God is surely using us, notwithstanding our many defects, as a missionary nation, and where we are, the avowed personal missionary, with the Bible in his hand, and the name of Christ on his lips, finds a wider sphere and a fairer treatment than anywhere else.

Have Faith in God.

And Elisha said, "Take the arrows." And he took them. And he said unto the King of Israel, "Smite upon the ground." And he smote thrice, and stayed. And the man of God was wroth. (1 Kings xiii. 18-19.)

And the woman said unto her son, "Bring me yet a vessel." And he said unto her, "There is not a vessel more." And the oil stayed. (2 Kings iv. 6.)

Jesus saith unto them, "Fill the waterpots with water." And they filled them up to the brim. (John ii. 7.)

"According to your faith be it unto you" (Matt. ix. 29). But how am I to have a faith that will not only "obtain promises" (Heb. xi. 33), but wait, without wavering, the fulfilment of the promise? Certainly not by looking at my faith; but having the eye and heart fixed on the great God, who has promised, and who, "when He has promised, is able also to perform." "Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord" (Ps. xxv. 15). Then will our faith "grow exceedingly." Many of God's children seem to deal with their faith like the child who pulled up his plant again and again to see if it was growing, thereby hindering growth.

"For every single look at self give ten looks at Christ," someone has said; but might we not safely, profitably, give all the looks to Christ? Like the little flower, "with open faith beholding" the sun, and unconsciously developing, and becoming perfected in beauty.

We have a bright example of faith in that woman of Canaan who came to Jesus (Matt. xv. 22). Her faith was severely tried, but though everything was against her she kept her eye on Christ, and pressed on to his feet. And did she get a glimpse of his glorious fulness at that moment when she said she would be satisfied with "a crumb" from his table? "A crumb to Thee, Lord, in comparison with thine infinite riches; but it will be the supply of all my need; it will make my cup run over! A crumb from thy royal table! I ask no more!" Her faith was great, because she saw Christ to be a great Saviour! How pleasing, how honouring to Him is a faith like this!

In Egypt's land, when the famine was pressing, Pharaoh's command was, "Go unto Joseph." And Joseph opened all the storehouses! Will our heavenly Joseph do less? "All the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen" (2 Cor. i. 20). In God's unspeakable gift is bound up all we need for time or for eternity. "Let us go in and possess the land which the Lord God hath given us." "I am the Lord thy God; open thy mouth wide and I will fill it" (Ps. lxxxi. 10).

O faithless heart, He said that He would hear
And answer thy poor prayer; And He hath heard
And proved his promise: Wherefore didst thou fear?
Why marvel that thy Lord hath kept his word?
More wonderful if He should fail to bless
Expectant faith and prayer with good success.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE INDESTRUCTIBLE WORD.

(Jeremiah xxxvi. 23.)

Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again:
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error, vanquished, writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshippers.

We are admitted to the prophet's private chamber, where he was keeping close that he might not excite the acute animosity and hatred of the people. Baruch, his trusted friend, a man of rank and learning, sits writing with laborious care at the dictation of the prophet, whose soul is borne along by the impulse of the Divine Spirit. "Tell us," the princes said afterwards to Baruch, "how didst thou write all these words at his mouth?" Then Baruch answered them, "He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book."

When the roll was filled, Jeremiah, not venturing to go into places of public concourse, entrusted it to Baruch, and bade him read it to the assembled crowds. Jerusalem just then was unusually full. From all parts of Judah people had come to observe the great fast which had been proclaimed in view of the approach of the Babylonish army. Adopting the cry which Jeremiah had so fervently deprecated, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are these," and imagining that there was a special virtue in the temple precincts, the multitudes had crowded there in an agony of fear; their black vails, and covered lips, and heartrending cries being intended to propitiate the Almighty, and avert the fate that seemed imminent.

Choosing a position in the upper court at the entry of the new gate to the Lord's house, Baruch commenced to read, whilst the people stood densely massed around him. Amid the awestruck crowd was a young man, Micaiah, the grandson of Shaphan, who was so impressed and startled by what he heard that he hastened to acquaint the princes, then sitting in council in the chamber of the chief Secretary of State, in the royal palace. They in turn were so aroused by what he told them that they forthwith sent him back to the temple, and asked Baruch to come without delay and read the prophet's words to them. He came at their request, and sitting among them, commenced to read.

In the group of princes were several notable men: Elishama, the Secretary of State; Elnathan, the father-in-law of the king, who had brought the prophet Urijah back from Egypt to die; and others. A great fear fell upon them as they heard those ominous words, which were probably closely similar to those recorded in the 25th chapter of this book. Though they had joined in the general hatred of the prophet, they were deeply sensible that there was everything to justify him in his prognostications of coming trouble; and it seemed to them that it was a plain matter of duty to acquaint the king with the contents of the roll.

Before doing so, however, they counselled Baruch and Jeremiah to conceal themselves, for they well knew the despotic and passionate temper of Jehoiakim; and they left the roll in the chamber of Elishama. It would appear that in the first instance they thought that a verbal statement of the words they had heard would suffice. This, however, would not satisfy the king, who bade Jehudi fetch the roll itself. It was winter, the month of December; the king was occupying the winter quarters of his palace, and a fire was burning brightly in the brazier. It is a vivid picture—the king sitting before the fire; the princes standing around him; Jehudi reading the contents of the roll; consternation and panic reigning throughout the city and darkening the faces of the prostrate crowds in the temple courts. As Jehudi began to read, the royal brow knit, and the symptoms of a tempest of anger showed themselves. And when Jehudi had read three or four columns, Jehoiakim snatched the roll from his hand and began to cut it up into pieces, which he flung into the fire. The worst have some compunctions, and for the most passionate there are warning voices that remonstrate and plead. So was it with King Jehoiakim. Delaiah, Gemariah, and even Elnathan tried to dissuade him from his purpose; but in vain. Nothing could stop him until the whole roll was cut to pieces, and every fragment consumed. Not content with this flagrant act of defiance, he gave orders for the immediate arrest of Jeremiah and Baruch; an order which his emissaries attempted to execute, but were foiled.

But the destruction of the roll did not cancel the terrible doom to which the ship of State was hurrying, under the orders of its passionate and wicked captain. On another roll all the words of the book which he had burned were written again; and others were added foretelling the indignity and insult to which the dead body of the king would be exposed. "His dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost."

I.—EYES OPENED TO SEE.

There was a vast difference between Baruch, whose heart was in perfect sympathy with Jeremiah, and Jehudi or the princes. But there was almost as much between the faithful scribe and the heaven-illumined prophet. The one could only write as the words streamed from those burning lips; he saw nothing, he realised nothing; to him the walls of the chamber were the utmost bound of vision: whilst the other beheld the whole landscape of truth outspread before him, the rocks and shoals on the margin of the ocean, the inrolling storm billows tipped with angry foam, the gathering clouds, the ship, straining in every timber, and driving sheer on the shore. For Jeremiah the walls of the chamber where they sat together were as though they were not; he looked through and beyond them, and read off his message from what he saw, as a man might read from a book.

This was the work of the Spirit that inspired him, whose special function it was to open the eye of the seers of the old time to the great facts of the unseen and eternal world, which were shortly to be reduplicated in the world of the temporal and visible. They beheld visions of God, the sapphire throne upborne by the strong cherubim; the terrible wheels of providence; the rise and fall of mighty empires; the subdual of sin and pain by the mighty sway of the coming One. To speak what he knew, and to testify what he had seen—such was the mission of the prophet.

In our case there is no likelihood of this. Yet men may be seers still. Two men may sit together side by side. The vail of sense may hang darkly before the one, whilst for the other it is rent in twain from the top to the bottom. There no thought, no ambition, no desire for aught beyond the temporal and seen; but here the vision of the presence and care of God, of the principalities and powers in the heavenlies, of the ministry of angels, and the opposition of fiends, of the chariots and horses of salvation, of the prize and the crown, of the awards of Christ's judgment-seat, and the home beyond the river. Flesh and blood do not reveal such things, but the Spirit of God. They are hidden from the wise and prudent, but revealed to babes who love God; the eyes of whose heart are opened, that they may know what is the hope of his calling, what the riches of his inheritance in the saints, and what the exceeding greatness of his power toward them that believe.

It is very important that all Christians should be alive to and possess this power of vision. It is deeper than the intellectual, since it is spiritual; it is not the result of reasoning or learning, but of intuition; it cannot be acquired in the school of earthly science, but is the gift of Him who alone can open the eyes of the blind, and remove the films of earthliness that shut out the eternal and unseen. If you lack it, reader, seek it at the hands of Jesus; be willing to do his will, and you shall know. It is a thousand pities to be blind, and not able to see afar off, when all around stand the mountains of God in solemn majesty; as the Alps around the Swiss hostelry, where the traveller arrives after nightfall, to eat and drink and sleep, unconscious of the proximity of so much loveliness. It is related of Ampère, the electrician, who was shortsighted, without being aware of it, that when he became conscious of his defective vision through the casual use of the eye-glasses of a friend, he burst into tears as he realised how much he had missed throughout his life of the wonderful beauty and interest of the world around him. With more reason will many of us have to lament our untold loss through that spiritual nearsightedness of which the Holy Ghost speaks (2 Pet. i. 9, R.V.).

If, on the other hand, you have the opened eye, you will not need books of evidences to establish to your satisfaction the truth of our holy religion; the glory of the risen Lord; the world of the unseen. With the woman of Samaria, you will say, "We have seen it for ourselves." No further proof will be needed than your own spiritual senses afford. And though a series of well-ordered arguments should be brought into array to assail your position as a believer, you would be bold to reply, "Whereas I was blind, now I see." The patriarchs of old who reached forth their hands to greet the vision of the City that hath foundations, the New Jerusalem—which all holy souls behold descending out of heaven from God—furnish the model for spiritual men of every age; and they who act thus are indifferent to the privations of the tent-life, or, as in Jeremiah's case, rise superior to the hatred of man and the privations of a siege.

II.—THE USE OF THE PENKNIFE.

Men use the knife to the Bible in varied ways. Among these are Systems of Priestcraft and Error. They have done it. They will do it again. They are wise to do it—I mean, wise in their own interests. For when once the Bible is in the hands of the people, the false teacher, who has deluded them for selfish purposes, must pack. The long reign of the Roman Catholic Church was broken as soon as Tyndale, Erasmus, and Luther opened the Word of God, and the printing-press scattered it over the world. It is not to be wondered at therefore, that, as long as possible, fires were lit for Bible-burning in every chief city of Europe, and the knife was freely used to cut out whatever condemned the office of the Pope, or the system to which he belonged. The Vulgate, with its mutilations and excisions, is a standing evidence that Jehudi's penknife survived his age.

The next that follows Jehoiakim's practice is the Infidel, who uses the keen blade of bitter sarcasm and miscalled reason to destroy the Scriptures. The hostility that manifested itself in the winter-palace among the princes of this world, has wrought in the halls of earthly learning and science, instigating similar acts to theirs. The laboratory of the chemist, the hammer of the mineralogist, the pry of the geologist, the telescope of the astronomer, the calculations of the arithmetician, and the explorations of the discoverer, have all been used in turn as the penknife of destruction. The Bible is cut up regularly once in each generation by men like these.

The next are the Higher Critics of our time, who surely have gone beyond the necessities of the case in their ruthless use of the knife. Some of them seem to delight in making havoc of the sacred writings, hacking at the Old Testament specially, and whittling away from the reputed work of a Moses, an Isaiah, or a Daniel. There is room for the honest examination of the fabric of Sacred Scripture, its language, the evidence furnished in its texture of the successive hands which have re-edited its most ancient documents; but this is altogether different to the ruthless vandalism that wantonly assigns large portions of the Pentateuch to the age of Ezra, and the Book of Daniel to the times of the Maccabees.

We are all tempted to use Jehudi's penknife. It is probable that none of us is free from the almost unconscious habit of evading or toning down certain passages which conflict with the doctrinal or ecclesiastical position in which we are reared, or which we have assumed.

In our private reading of the Scripture, we must beware of using the penknife. Whole books and tracts of truth are practically cut out of the Bible of some earnest Christians—passages referring to the Second Advent, with their summons to awake and gird on the armour of light; those that deal with the undying worm, the unquenched fire, and the inevitable doom of the ungodly; those that describe the types and shadows of the ancient law; or those that build up massive systems of truth and doctrine, as in the epistles. But we can only eliminate these things at our peril. The Bible is like good wheaten bread, which contains all the properties necessary to support life. And we cannot eliminate its starch or sugar, its nitrates or phosphates, without becoming enfeebled and unhealthy. It is a golden rule to read the Bible as a whole. Of course each will have his favourite passages, dark with tears and use: Psalm xxiii.; Isaiah liii.; John xiv.; but, beside these, there should be the loving and devout study of all Scripture, which is given by inspiration of God, and is therefore profitable, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished to every good work.

III.—THE INDESTRUCTIBLE WORD.

Men may destroy the words and the fabric on which they are written, but not the Word itself. It is the incorruptible Word of God which liveth and abideth, though all flesh wither as grass and the glory of man as the flower of the field. It must be sometimes an uncomfortable reflection to those who refuse the testimony of the Word of God, who to all intents and purposes destroy it and despise its remonstrances and warnings, that their attitude towards the message cannot affect the reality to which it bears witness.

Jeremiah wrote another roll. The money spent in buying up copies of the Bible to burn at St. Paul's enabled Tyndale to reissue the Scriptures in a cheaper form and a better type. And perhaps the most remarkable fact in this connexion is that, in spite of all that has been done to stamp out the Bible, it exists in millions of copies, and is circulated among all the nations of the world—not a chapter effaced, not a parable dropped out, not a miracle injured, not a promise scarred. It has been declared over and over again to be a careless, unauthenticated collection of works of different periods, having no unity save that given by the bookbinder; yet it is with us to-day in unimpaired authority.

And the facts to which Jeremiah bore witness all came to pass. Neither knife nor fire could arrest the inevitable doom of king, city, and people. The drunken captain may cut in pieces the chart that tells of the rocks in the vessel's course, and put in irons the sailor who calls his attention to it; but neither will avert the crash that must ensue unless the helm is turned. Let those beware who deny the testimony of Scripture to the retribution of sin and the wrath of God; these things are as true as the throne of God and the reward of the redeemed. You may tamper with and destroy the record, but the facts stubbornly remain.

A MOSLEM CONVERT ARRESTED.

The storm which has been so gradually, but surely, brewing over Sid Ahmed has burst at last, and he was arrested yesterday morning by the Cadi, apparently by means of his father, who has accused him of having threatened his life under the influence of madness and witchcraft, besides having done other things which make him unsafe to be left at large. What probably has urged the father to these measures has been the issuing of an article in the weekly Arab newspaper, plainly exposing the apostasy of his son, whilst drawing the attention of the Government and the Bey's ministry to our work in Tunis, carried on so subtly with political motives, whilst spreading the knowledge of the Christian faith. This paper has greatly agitated the minds of the leaders of the Mohamedan religion in Tunis, who evidently fear others will also join the apostasy, and their faith be in danger of being subverted altogether.

Ahmed was warned by a friend the day previous that danger was impending, that false charges would be brought against him, and was begged to renounce his new faith. Yesterday morning he came early to tell us of the position of affairs. He left the house with Mr. Flad, apprehending no immediate danger to himself, promising to return later, to tell us how matters were; but we feared for him, knowing the feeling against him after the issuing of the paper. Mr. Flad and Dr. Leach went this morning to the Cadi, under whose arrest Ahmed is, to find out the cause of arrest. Mr. Flad and Dr. Leach then went to the Secrétaire-Genéral, who is the medium between the French tribunal and the Bey's ministry, and placed the matter before him. He has promised to investigate the matter at once, and assures us if he has been imprisoned only on religious grounds he can be released at once by his intervention; if on other charges, false or otherwise, there might be complications and delay.

Our hearts are filled with mingled joy and sorrow for Ahmed; that joy, he is standing so firm in Christ, and is counted worthy to suffer shame for "His Name's Sake." He has grown so surely in our Saviour's image, and has become a faithful and bold witness for Him. You will be much in prayer for him, that Christ may be glorified in our tribulation, and his kingdom furthered in Tunis.

REVS. S. M. FIELD AND H. T. STONELAKE have left Antwerp by the African mail steamer for the Congo; the former to take charge—in association with Rev. George Grenfell—of the Mission steamers on the Upper Congo River, and the latter to be associated with Mr. Roger, at Stanley Pool, taking the place of Mr. Gordon, now on his way to England on furlough.

HEAVENLY CHARACTERISTICS.

A BIBLE READING AT KESWICK,

By Rev. C. A. FOX.

In Deuteronomy xi. 21 we have these words:—"That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers to give them, as the days of heaven upon earth." That is the theme I would speak of this morning—"the days of heaven upon earth." Such a thing is possible. Such a thing is before God's very eyes, as the intention and purpose for his children even in the Old Testament Scripture—that the days of his people should be as "the days of heaven upon earth."

Let us, first of all, ascertain what are the days of heaven in heaven. I turn you at once to the closing chapter of Holy Scripture, where we read, "And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." This is the first characteristic of the days of heaven in heaven—abundance of life, life everywhere, life visible, life audible, life to be felt, life to be tasted. "And he showed me"—it is a revelation. May God the Holy Ghost reveal unto us this day the days of heaven as they are in heaven, and as they should be upon earth. "A pure river of water of life, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." What is it? It must be the Holy Ghost—the Pentecostal stream. It is out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

Mark the intense purity of it—"He showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal." Look at the cleansing power of it.

IT PURIFIES EVERYTHING IT TOUCHES.

It touches with new life everything it reaches! "Wherever the stream came there was new life," we read in Ezekiel. And so does the blessed Pentecostal stream of God the Holy Ghost.

Mark also its power. All the attributes of the throne of God are worked into this blessed stream. All the power of the throne of God is in it. We are very weak. We have to lean often very hard upon the breast of our Beloved. We have to lean against the very throne, and fall prostrate there. But it is life, it is power, it is purity, it is the very indwelling of the Holy Ghost of which we take, and partake, and drink and live. We are born from above. We are breathed upon by the Holy Ghost; we are baptized with the Holy Ghost. God has not kept back from us anything.

Mark the productiveness of this wonderful stream: "In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month"—always fresh fruit; always fresh green leaf, where the blessed stream of the Holy Ghost flows; perpetual change, and yet perpetual refreshing and reviving; newness of life. Ye shall walk in "newness of life." Do you know what this marvellous newness of life is? Are we indeed dead with Christ and crucified with Him, with our own full consent? Are we raised from the dead by the Spirit of the living God? Do we now reckon ourselves alive unto God by the power of the Holy Ghost? Then we are indeed

INSTRUMENTS OF LIFE.

We give the cup of cold water of life to dying souls, and we are able through God's grace to cause the dead to live, because of the life-giving stream that is flowing through us by the power of the Holy Ghost, in answer to the great atoning work of Christ on Calvary.

There is a second thing "in the days of heaven in heaven." "There shall be no more curse." The curse is gone at last, thank God! The Lord was made a curse for us, that we might become the righteousness of God in Him. He has Himself lifted the curse off the whole race. Have you observed how, in the Old Testament Scripture, the Book begins with the Fall and the consequences of the Fall—the curse? And in the very closing words of the Old Testament Scripture we read, "Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." From beginning to end the Old Testament is full of the curse of God. Where was the curse in Eden? Adam and Eve were arrested and arraigned by God Himself in the garden, and God pronounced his curse. Did it fall on Adam and Eve? No; it fell on the serpent. "Cursed shalt thou be above all creatures." It fell on the ground. "Cursed shall the ground be for thy sake." But Adam and Eve were never cursed. The curse fell on Christ Jesus, who, before the foundation of the world, was the Lamb of God offered for us, and the substitute to bear the curse which belonged to man. It is this curse which Jesus has removed—the curse of sin. "Sin shall no more have dominion over you." In the crucified and yielded life, in the life where God is Himself permeating our being, the curse of sin is undone. "There shall be no more curse." You shall be triumphant over sin, by the grace of God, as you cling to the Crucified in the power of the Holy Ghost.

What is the curse? It is death. And

CHRIST HATH ABOLISHED DEATH.

It is now, as we say, the gate of life to every believer, so entirely is it abolished. My own persuasion is this, that no believer knows when he passes into eternity; he has already passed through death because Christ has abolished death. What is the curse? It is toil. Yes, but the toil has been transfigured, and now the very curse of toil becomes one of the most glorious things that Christ has given us. He hath transformed it, and it becomes the happy, free service of the child of God.

Oh, blessèd curse, oh sweet but costly oil,
Crowning with consecration every toil.

What is the curse? It is sorrow. But the Lord hath shined through sorrow, and the rainbow of his mercy has been seen. As we read in the very first reference to the cloud in Holy Scripture, in the cloud there was seen a rainbow lodged in it.

"There shall be no more curse." Children of God, do you know what that means? Have you ever read Rom. viii.—"There is now therefore no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus"? And you have read the close of that marvellous chapter—No separation?

"NO CONDEMNATION." "NO SEPARATION."

And in between there is this marvellous truth expounded and unfolded by the Holy Ghost—no defeat to those that walk in the Spirit. "We are more than conquerors through Jesus Christ our Lord." Is that our experience? Do we know what God has prepared for them that love Him, that wait for Him, that ask of Him to fulfil all his purposes in them?

"The throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it." This is the third characteristic of the days of heaven. There is now the enthroned God where all had been disobedience and rebellion and provocation before. Are you willing that the will of God shall be enthroned in your heart, your life, your affections, your faculties? Are you willing to lie down at his feet, and let Him do with you what He will with his own? Are you willing, when you have got some great undertaking to do, that, instead of his helping you, He should strip you and empty you and make you feel a crushed and broken thing; and then say to you, "Go forth in my name. Thou art a worm, but I am the living God, and with the worm I will thresh the mountains. My grace shall be seen and shall prevail." If the children of God would simply come to this great point in their own practical experience, they would save themselves a great deal of trouble and research; if they would see that the whole Christian life really means the will of God enthroned in the heart and life. Take the will of God now, whatever it is, and say, "This is the will of God for me, and by God's grace I will just accept it." "Not my will, but thine be done." This is Gethsemane.

WE EACH HAVE OUR GETHSEMANE.

Christ Himself has passed through Gethsemane. This is the way to the cross and the crown. It is the only way to conquer. There must be an exchange, in the most perfect man, of our will for the will of the Divine Master. And Jesus knows what it costs sometimes to kneel in the garden while the disciples are asleep, and the bitter cup of suffering is pressed upon you, and you say, "Oh, my Father, if it be possible let this cup pass from me." Still, it is pressed by the Father's hand upon his shrinking child, and at last he humbly accepts it, and is able to say, in the triumph of faith, "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" "Not my will, but thine be done."

Now, what is the fourth thing in these wonderful days of heaven in heaven? "His servants shall serve Him." Here we have service, where there had been refusal to serve; as in the case of Jonah, taking a ticket, indeed, to run away from God. Some people, I believe, actually take a ticket to come to Keswick that they may avoid God somehow. They say, "I will go to Keswick; there surely I shall be taught something"; but all the time they are trying to escape from the duty that God has laid upon them.

They paid their fare with all dutiful care, but obedience to God's command they have refused, flatly to his face; flying away from Him they still cry, "Lord, teach me what Thou wouldest have me to do."

We shall not hesitate about the blessed service, when we once realise that the throne of God is established in our hearts and lives; that it is the throne of God and of the Lamb; that the reins of government are in the hands of the Crucified, and that wounded Hand it is that holds the reins, and rules my poor life with all its thorny cares, anxieties, difficulties, and obstacles. Paul was pursuing the will of God with all faithfulness and diligence, yet the thorn in the flesh was permitted by God. He had a special revelation from God, a little Book of Scripture all to himself. Blessed Paul; grand, holy martyr! The Lord said unto him, after his thrice repeated prayer, "My grace is sufficient for thee; My strength is made perfect in weakness." It is the Scripture for all who go forth as ministers and messengers of the Gospel in the Spirit dispensation. "I will not withdraw the thorn," God seems to say, "but I will so that you shall conquer in spite of your wounds." Do you know what it is thus to gain victories for Jesus, even with the thorn in the flesh at the moment piercing you, and debarring you from doing what you would do? And yet God prevails.

What is service for Jesus? There are two kinds of Christian service. There is veiled service, and there is active service. When you go forth on the Master's errands you must be veiled. "With twain wings they covered their face, and with twain they covered their feet, and with twain they did fly." The face must be covered and the feet must be covered, as we minister for the Master. We must be hidden in the cloud; shut into the cleft; covered by the hand of the Almighty God. We are held in the hollow of his hand, that we may be hidden, and only through the wounds of the Crucified can we be seen. Do you know anything of this veiled service? I fear there is great danger in the midst of the great publicity which attends all Christian work today, through everything being reported and printed immediately, lest the idea that we shall be in print, and that what we say or what we have done will be published, should be in any degree the motive or a part of the motive in working for Jesus. O, Lord, hide thy children. Cover thy servants at home; here on the platform, and throughout the tent. These are workers I believe, most of them, Lord. Cover them. Hide thou in the rock, my brother, sheltered in the wounded cleft, while the majesty of the Lord God is revealed. And my brethren from foreign lands, you have no such danger, perhaps, as we have at home. But you have your dangers, and they are many.

OH, TO BE A HIDDEN ONE,

doing the blessed Crucified's work. Oh, to be vessels meet for the Master's use. No servant is to use the vessel of the Master. It is the warm hand of Jesus that clasps every vessel. Shall we see to it that we recognise it is the Master's hand; that we are in the Master's service, and thus be satisfied to please the Master, and to go in when we have done and say, "Master, I have done by thy grace what I could. Cover me with the atoning blood of thy redeeming grace."

But there is unveiled service. It is an important point in these days. May I put special emphasis upon it. Unveiled service means that when we go unto God we must be unveiled. When the servant of God went unto Him he took off the veil. There must be nothing between us and God. The searchlight of God's gaze must be upon us, and we must bear it, covered with the blood of the Crucified. It is an awful thing when God searches us, in the worship of our own chamber, in our own place of retirement; it is a solemn thing when we are unveiled before God, and every motive, all the selfishness and reputation that we have been cherishing, the desire to be first and foremost, is laid bare before the eyes of the Eternal. Unveiled service! No wonder people fly from it. They would go to any meeting rather than go to a meeting with God where the service is unveiled.

"And they shall see his face." You cannot serve Him without seeing Him. This is the acme of all. The seeing of God's face, the beatific vision, cleanses, crushes, and abases a man. It is the pure in heart that see God, and they, having seen Him, can never again forget Him. "My eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."

Then there is a further mark of these wonderful days, "His name shall be in their foreheads." There shall be a manifestation of God. Not our names! We have nothing to do with self any more. Do you remember always to keep it prominent in your service, that HIS name shall be in your foreheads? that God alone shall be seen and manifested?

BRIDE AND BRIDEGROOM ARE ONE,

and we bear one name. We have lost our name of shame, and we now carry his name of glory.

A further characteristic is, "There shall be no night there." The darkness is past and the true light shineth. This is the spirit-life; the resurrection from the dead to every child of God. Even the shadows themselves shall become the means of conveying a greater beauty and light; as you see in the beautiful landscape here. If there be no shadows to a brilliant day half the beauty is lost. The clouds enrich by reason of repression. And shall we not observe this in life? As the shadow falls on our home, and as the blinds are drawn down, and the soul becomes broken, the inner light of God shines out and the eternal is seen. "There shall be no night there." Though the blinds are drawn down as though the dead were there, at the back of the house the windows are open towards eternity, and the stream of the glory of God flows in on the poor bereft and desolate soul.

"And they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light." Do you know what is meant by God giving you light? I think we have all known it. In special times when there was no light, and we struck a promise against some hard piece of the cross, then there was a new light. It was the Lord God gave you light.

This is the final characteristic, "And they shall reign for ever and ever." When once God's throne is established and his will enthroned; when his servants begin to serve Him, seeing Him with open vision, and the saints of God shall reign with Him gloriously. Then it shall be true what we read in Romans, that we shall reign in life now. There shall be victorious power; to the weakest saint of God triumphing grace shall be given. Paul can say, though a thorn in the flesh is worrying him, "I will glory in tribulation, that the power of Christ may tabernacle me and encamp around me." To reign where Christ reigns is sweet. Freedom is blessed victory, blessed dominion. And all this is for us. These are the days of heaven in heaven. They are the days of heaven for the redeemed ones, even upon earth.

THEN MAN SHALL REIGN;

But you will say: "That may be a beautiful picture. It may be, indeed, that it shall stimulate a holy imagination; but it is a dream of the poet." I say it is the dream of God. It is the ideal of God. It is what God Himself promises; what He has put his seal to, and says it shall be done. It is the dream and the imagination of the eternal Lord, who died on the cross that He might bring this blessed ideal into common daily life. Let me show you

AN EXAMPLE OF IT.

Look at the beginning of the Acts of the Apostles, and I think you will find there were days of heaven upon earth in the days of Pentecost: the breaking forth of the streams of God. "Suddenly there came from heaven the sound of a mighty, rushing wind which filled all the house." Supernatural! You are afraid of the supernatural? My brother, you live amongst it all your days; every hour you are in the presence of the supernatural. It is so, whether you know it or not. But the child of God has his eyes opened. It is a revelation; then he sees that there are open heavens, and the Spirit of God comes down, as it were in tongues of fire, and the fire of God consecrates every altar that is cleansed by the blood of Jesus Christ. And with opened heavens there are opened lips. "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak." You want to know how to speak! Be filled with the Holy Ghost, and you cannot help yourself. It is not a cramming with spiritual facts or information, or even doctrinal truths, but it is the laying the soul bare before the great Eternal One, and the Spirit of the Lord taking you up, filling you, and using you.

Not only were there open lips, there were also open conversions immediately when Peter began to speak. He took a very old verse out of the prophet Joel. But it was a new verse to him, because with opened heavens and opened lips the Scriptures are opened. I hear men say who have got a real blessing here that the Scripture becomes a new book. It is illuminated and transfigured. They can see God on every page where it used to be barren and infertile. It was rather a dry sermon that Peter preached them, but it was preached with the unction of the Holy Ghost. That makes the whole difference. Some people say, "I must not preach that because it is an old sermon." But what would God do if He did not preach the truth over and over again, line upon line? We must preach it again and again with the fresh unction of the Holy Ghost, and anointed with fresh oil.

Then there were open baptisms in the Holy Ghost. And there were open homes; happy meals together. "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and in fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayer."

OPEN SACRAMENTAL MEALS.

Not only so, there were open wonders too. "And fear came upon every soul; and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles." This is what the day of heaven upon earth is. "All that believed were together, and had all things in common." That is what God does. He makes universal brotherhood. He breaks down all barriers and separation walls, and we become one. But it must be done by the Holy Ghost. It is the incoming tide that unites the little broken pools on the beach. You cannot do this yourself, but the incoming tide does it, and instinctively the whole becomes one blessed unity. "And they sold their possessions"—purses converted by the Holy Ghost. People did not reckon how much they gave. If it was a question of half-a-crown or two shillings, they let God have the extra sixpence. They gave themselves to Him who had given them everything.

"They continued daily"—it is a thing that abides—"with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favour with all the people." Were they not days of heaven upon earth? And there was a daily bringing-in to the Church of Christ. "The Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved." There are days of heaven upon earth for every believing soul—for the one only recently converted, as well as for the one who has been fifty years a Christian. It is heaven upon earth if we are united one with the other in Christ; it is when the glory of God shines unbroken upon us; when we are covered with the shadow of the Almighty; when we feel we would give ourselves away to any or to all for the glory of the Lord; that the will of the Lord is done in the soul, in the secret of the heart, with willing feet and yielded hands, and busy head; when the will of the Lord is enthroned and the child of God is in the dust. There are such days.

WHEN IT IS A COMMON THING

How can you believe unbelief? Believe those who have gone a little way into this blessed life, and yet can come back like Joshua and Caleb of old, and bring one Eschol bunch of wonderful clusters of grapes—a bunch of the Holy Ghost in his ripe richness. Then you can say:—This is the witness; we have seen it; it is the truth. God can conquer all your sins, and blot them out for ever. God can change your evil habits, and rid you of them for ever. God can renew you. Rest in his hands. Be as clay in the hands of the Potter. Yield to his touch. Return his embrace. Reproduce his image. This shall make your days as days of heaven upon earth, and you shall be obliged to say, "It is the Lord, and the half has not been told me."

A PROPOSED CONFERENCE.

DEAR SIR,—It is proposed to hold a convention in London, God willing, on similar lines to those recently held in England and Scotland, concerning the Second Coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the future of Israel, and the plenary Inspiration of Holy Scripture.

The date of the convention will probably be at the close of February next; but fuller announcement will be made in due time as to the date, place of meeting, and speakers. Meanwhile the prayers of all "who love his appearing" are earnestly desired, for guidance from above.—Yours sincerely,

JAMES E. MATHIESON.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 19.—DANIEL II.

The Failure of the Magicians (1-13).—This was the second year of Nebuchadnezzar's sole reign. At first he was joint governor with his father, Nabopolassar. As the foremost representative of the great world-kingdoms he was warned of their ultimate fall before the kingdom of the Messiah. (4) From this point to the end of chap. vii., the prophet writes in Syriac, the vernacular tongue of the king and his court. We may question whether this may not be an extract from the State documents, which would be open to Daniel. (5) The king's argument throughout this discussion, in which the magicians were pleading for life, was that if they could not recall a thing that was past, there was no guarantee that they could foretell the future. (10, 11) The failure of the wisdom of this world prepared the way for Daniel's greater triumph (1 Cor. i. 20-25).

Daniel's Offer (14-24).—Daniel requested time, that he might summon his friends for prayer. What faith he had in the united supplication of two or three! (19) When we have prayed, we can sleep in complete faith that God has undertaken our cause. (20) When prayer has been remarkably answered, let us not fail to return our grateful thanks. This psalm is very beautiful, and as true as beautiful. The destinies of men are absolutely in the hands of God. Knowledge of revelation is his gift. He opens the eyes of the heart, and reveals to babes things that are hidden from the wise and prudent. To dwell in light is to dwell with God (Jas. i. 17; 1 Jno. i. 5). (23) Mark how Daniel weaves his friends into his thanksgiving. The answer was given to them all, though the revelation was to him alone.

Daniel's Address (25-45).—The chief officer made as though he had but just come across Daniel, else he might have endangered his head, in not having executed immediately the king's behest. (28) The child of God always gives glory to his Father. (30) And carefully disowns any credit as attaching to himself. (32) In this dream of empires, the metal becomes ever commoner, to show that there would be a deterioration of autocratic power, and that rule would increasingly pass into the hands of the people. (44) There is no great world-power possible hereafter, until the Son of Man sets up his kingdom, which shall have no end.

The Effect on the King (46-49).—What a wonderful anticipation of the ultimate issue of the great Gentile monarchies, in the prostration of supreme human power at the feet of a Jew. (47) Daniel evidently refused the royal homage, because the king is said to have "answered" him. (49) It was magnanimous to seek the welfare of those whose prayers had contributed to this result. But how evidently God's hand was in it all.

MONDAY, AUGUST 20.—DANIEL III.

Nebuchadnezzar's Image and the Prostration of the Multitudes (1-7).—The king, at the close of the foregoing chapter, had acknowledged the supremacy of Jehovah, yet here he sets up an image to Bel, though in reality to himself. Nineteen years had elapsed, during which he had been engaged in successful wars. The spoils of these enabled him to erect this immense image. (6) This edict was probably enacted against the Jews, of whom many were jealous because of the favours shown them. The Jews alone acknowledged no Deity but Jehovah. (7) A further object served by this unanimous prostration was the securing of an outward unity for the empire, made up of such different nationalities. There is an anticipation here of the worship of the beast (Rev. xiii. 14).

The Accusation of Daniel's Friends (8-12).—Daniel himself was probably in some distant place on state business, and so escaped the ordeal. The honeyed words of flattery prepared the way for the attack. These men knew well how to play on the royal passion, by suggesting that the Jews had a personal antipathy to what the king wished and commanded. We are reminded how Satan accused the patriarch Job.

The Ordeal of Fire (13-25).—The king was willing to consider that their failure had been unintentional, and to give them another opportunity. But they did not parley with the suggestion, it was needless and useless to argue. (17) They knew that Jehovah was able to deliver; but even if He did not, it would make no difference in their determination to stand firm. Our service to God is altogether irrespective of any deliverance that He may or may not send. Our God whom we serve is able. What an assurance is here! Let us turn from man's furious impotence to God's omnipotence. (25) It is only when we reach the fire that we become aware of the presence of Jesus. And when He comes, we walk the embers as though they were the glade of Paradise. "Loose," i.e., the fire had consumed their bonds and nothing else.

The Royal Decree (26-30).—The hair would soonest catch the flame, but not a hair had perished (Luke xii. 7; xxi. 18). (27) Their deliverance is attributed to their faith (Heb. xi. 34). (28) The yielded body reminds us of Rom. xii. Let us yield our bodies to God, though it involve the fire. (29) The world itself honours consistency, and there is no such way of winning the respect of men as by being steadfast and immovable in our allegiance to God (Prov. xvi. 7).

TUESDAY, AUGUST 21.—DANIEL IV.

The Failure of the Chaldeans (1-9).—Nebuchadnezzar was in the zenith of his fame and power. His wars were over. His prosperity was assured. And he attributed all to his own wisdom and might. There was no thought of God in it; and he had to learn that the Most High ruleth (30 and 32; v. 21). (8) How clearly do men detect the presence of holiness. The king dare not use this epithet of any god but Jehovah. (9) How men also reverence the untroubled heart, one that bears itself calmly and peacefully amid great commotion.

The Royal Dream (10-18).—The greatness of the king of Babylon is set forth under the image of a mighty tree, filling the world and sheltering the nations. (13) There were not two beings, but one, who was holy in character, and watchful to do the bidding of God or to minister to man. The eyes of these loving, watchful spirits are ever upon us. (15) The band of metal was to keep the stump from splitting. (17) The idea is that of a great council summoned under the presidency of the Almighty. It was a form of speech eminently suited to strike the royal mind.

Daniel's Interpretation and Exhortation (19-27).—Daniel was a true and faithful friend. He suffered keenly when the full meaning of the dream was disclosed to him, but he did not hesitate to divulge its significance to the king. (24) Nebuchadnezzar spoke of the decree of the watchers, Daniel shows that it emanated from the Most High Himself. (25, see R.V.) "Thou shalt be driven," etc. (26) Amid all the politics, passions, and unruly wills of men, the heavens do rule. (27) Righteousness and mercy were rare virtues in such quarters. God's servant dealt very faithfully with the great monarch. So the Duke of Argyll dealt with Charles II., but it cost him his head.

The Terrible Fulfilment (28-37).—The standard inscription, deciphered by Rawlinson, corroborates this Scripture narrative. (30) The name of Nebuchadnezzar is found on thousands of bricks, strewn over the site of Babylon. (34) The lifted eyes were the first symptom of returning sanity. (35) What a magnificent description of the omnipotence of our Heavenly Father. Let us rest in Him. (36) To be right with God is to be right with man. A humble heart is the secret of a healthy mind.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 22.—DANIEL V.

The Feast and the Handwriting (1-12).—Belshazzar was joint king with his father, at this time away from the city. Cyrus was at the gates, but in fancied security the king gave himself to revelry. (2) This gratuitous insult had not been possible, unless the banqueters had been mad with wine. (5) The walls of the palaces were covered by cuneiform descriptions of the triumphs of former kings. But these were blotted out by that inscription. (6) Conscience anticipated Daniel, and filled the king's heart with foreboding. (8) The words, though Chaldee, may have been written in Hebrew characters. (10) This may have been the great Nitocris, the wife of Nebuchadnezzar, the ancestor of the present king, and therefore called his "father." God has his own way of bringing his people to the front when He wants them.

Daniel's Interpretation of the Handwriting (13-31).—The deference of the haughty and terror-stricken monarch, and the independence of God's servant, are very marked. (22) Belshazzar had no year of probation (iv. 29), because the dread example of Nebuchadnezzar ought to have warned him. (23) His sin was brought home to the king with unerring precision. But of how many amongst ourselves might the like be said? We have not glorified God. (25) Numbered, weighed, divided. Another form of Upharsin is used in verse 28, which contains an allusion to the Persians. (29) Third ruler, because he and his father filled the first and second places. (31) This verse announces one of the greatest events in the history of the world; but how calmly and quietly.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 23.—DANIEL VI.

An Audacious Plot (1-9).—It is a wonderful testimony to the integrity of Daniel that, though his actions were scrutinised by these jealous eyes, eager to establish a charge against him, they could find none, except as concerned his religion. Such a verdict from men of the world is much to the glory of God. (6) Notice R.V. margin. The whole matter was done hurriedly, and the King had no time for reflection. Darius was uncle to Cyrus. He was a weak, vain man. (7) The monarch was regarded as the son of the gods, hence the proposal did not seem so impious as to us. And it was probably supported by the argument that it would tend greatly to the consolidation and unifying of the realm.

Daniel's Steadfastness and Deliverance (10-24).—Though he was weighted with the affairs of a great empire, he found time for stated prayer three times a day; (Ps. lv. 17). Luther used to say, "I have so much work to do to-day, that I cannot get through without three hours of prayer." He not only prayed, but praised. There was no ostentation in the open windows, it was his way of basing his prayer on the sacrifices once offered on the ruined altar (1 Kings viii. 44). (16) The heathen bear witness that God will deliver those who are true to Him. Let us not doubt it. (22) This deliverance was directly attributable to Daniel's faith (Heb. xi. 33). Doubt not, if thou wilt only trust in God, that He will likewise deliver thee from the mouth of the Lion of Hell (2 Tim. iv. 17; 1 Peter v. 8). Thus God vindicated the character of Daniel, and He will let none of those who entrust their character to Him be ashamed. (24) The eager devouring of these men proved that Daniel had escaped not because the lions were full, but because God interposed.

The Royal Proclamation (25-28).—It was remarkable that a heathen monarch should thus be used to publish the name of God. It reminds us of Voltaire's printing press, now used in publishing the Bible. Never forget, "He delivereth and rescueth."

FRIDAY, AUGUST 24.—DANIEL VII.

The Vision of the Beasts (1-8).—The same procession of empires given in the second chapter is here repeated. To the eye of the prophet, they seem like terrible monsters. Such is the life of the greatest conquerors and rulers, apart from the Spirit of God. They ascend from the sea, the type of restlessness and uncurbed turbulence. (4) Babylon, which soon lost its power of world-wide flight, and became timid and calculative. (5) Persia, with its conquest of Media, Lydia, and Babylon. (6) Greece, under the swift leadership of Alexander. (7) Rome.

The Advent of the Son of Man (9-14).—This is not the last judgment, but that judgment of nations which is always in process, and in virtue of which one great empire after another is set aside. This constant change must continue until the kingdom of Jesus Christ, which is now a spiritual and hidden one, shall be set up before the eyes of men. Our Lord is to receive the kingdom, and his saints shall reign with Him (Rev. i. 6; v. 10).

The Antichrist (15-28).—This persecuting power has been identified with Antiochus and others. But it is better to think of it as that spirit of evil, which is always at war with the people of God, assuming different phases in its manifestation. It may be that as God's people have suffered from Antichrist in the past, so they may expect some last manifestation of its hatred. But they shall overcome by the blood of Jesus, and the word of their testimony, and the Kingdom of Christ shall survive the wreck of all others.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 25.—DANIEL VIII.

The Vision of the Ram and Goat (1-14).—Here the prophet begins to write again in Hebrew, because he deals primarily with the history of the chosen people. This chapter foretells the fall of the Medo-Persian kingdom, set up by Cyrus, before Alexander and Greece. (2) Shushan was "the lily palace" in Persia. (3) This represented the Medo-Persian kingdom, whose king wore a jewelled ram's head as a crown. (5) The goat was the national emblem of Greece. Alexander died at thirty-three, but so rapid had been his progress that the whole known world was at his feet. (8) On his death his kingdom was divided among his four chief generals, in one of which, including Persia and Syria, Antiochus arose. (9) His power specially spread in the direction of Palestine. (11, 12) The explanation of these obscure verses is given in vv. 24, 25. He was specially mad against the spiritual worship of the Jews, and their refusal to admit his image into the Temple. (12) Antiochus stayed the sacrifices; then they were restored for a season, to be finally suspended for the present age. (14) The day for a year system refers this verse to the desolations of the Turkish or Ottoman empire, of which Antiochus was the representative.

The Interpretation (15-27).—Antiochus, in his fury and awful end by ulcers, has been taken by many to represent some great opponent of the kingdom of God, who is yet to arise (Rev. xiii. 2-25). But it is impossible to be sure. In any case, we are not to allow our speculations on such matters to interfere with our daily business. And often the best antidote to fear and anxiety is to take up the common tasks of every day.

MR. MOODY'S NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE opened on August 1 in the new auditorium. The opening address was by Rev. David Gregg, of Brooklyn, on the claims of the Bible. He ably upheld the unique character of the Scriptures as shown alike by internal and external evidence. The confirmation of holy writ that have come from recent explorations and discoveries in the East were referred to. During the Convention some of the leading foundation truths will be expounded.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 26.
First Miracle of Jesus, John ii. 1-11.
Golden Text.—Verse 11.

Speaking of this first miracle as taking place in the family circle, Godet describes it as the "point of union between the obscurity of private life within which Jesus had kept till now, and the public activity which He is about to begin. . . . As He quits this domain He leaves on it the impress of Divinity. It is his royal adieu to the relations He bore as son, brother, kinsman." It suggests also that the highest ideal of Christian living does not require separation from the ordinary engagements of life. Christ sanctifies home life, and transmutes by his presence the water of common-place experience into the wine of heavenly joy.

I. The Occasion (1-4).—A wedding feast usually lasted for several days. Mary is described as the mother of Jesus. John never calls her by name. The omission of all mention of Joseph suggests that he was no longer living. "Jesus was called" (2), a fact which must have surprised his new disciples. Their old master—John the Baptist—would not have been likely to receive such an invitation. His austerity contrasts with the naturalness and humanness of the life of Jesus (see Matt. xi. 18, 19). The disciples may safely follow where Jesus leads. The only thing which the presence of Jesus banishes from a feast is sin. He sanctifies our joys as well as our trials. The wine ran short (3), probably because of the addition of Jesus and his disciples to the number of guests. "None but those who know how sacred in the East is the duty of lavish hospitality, and how passionately the obligation to exercise it to the uttermost is felt, can realise the gloom which this incident would have thrown over the occasion, or the misery and mortification which it would have caused to the wedded pair."—F. W. Farrar. Mary's appeal to Jesus is the outcome of her thirty years' acquaintance with Him. She had learned the value of his sympathy and help in her times of difficulty. Did she expect a miracle? Probably, for she had not forgotten the incidents connected with his birth; she believed Him to be the Messiah; she saw in his disciples the beginning of his kingdom, and perhaps had heard from them John the Baptist's testimony concerning Him; and she knew what prophecy had foretold concerning the Messiah.

The reply of Jesus (4), though less severe than our version suggests, contained a gentle rebuke to Mary. He suggests that she is intruding into a domain into which even her relationship to Him does not admit her. "The period of subjection to her as his earthly mother had ceased."—Schaff. "Mine hour," in this Gospel, invariably refers to his death (xii. 25, 27; xiii. 1). In this story it seems to refer to the time for his manifestation (11); but in his view this involved the rejection of the cross to which it led. The exact time for every act that was to manifest Himself was made known to Him from the Father. His life was one continual waiting upon God.

II. The Miracle (5-10).—Mary does not take the rebuke as a denial. (5) The words are a beautiful testimony to Jesus from his own mother. She had already learned that it was always safe to do what He said. Her faith in his readiness and power to meet this distress is unaltered. The "waterpots" (6) were probably in the court or at the entrance to the house. "Firkin" is about nine gallons. The six would therefore contain about 120 gallons. There is nothing remarkable in this when we remember how necessary was the purification both of persons and vessels before and after meals (Matt. xv. 2; Mark vii. 3). The miracle was wrought in connection with the obedience of the servants (7, 8). Both commands required the obedience of faith. The term governor is applied to the chief of the servants, whose work it was "to taste the meats and drinks before ordering them to be placed on the table."—Godet. The change wrought was real (8, 9), unlike the Romish transubstantiation, which is a change only in pretence. The ruler refers to what was customary (10), without any suggestion that any had been drinking to excess in that feast. It is not wrong to see in his words a contrast between the world and Christ. The world gives the best first, and reserves the worst until last—pleasures of sin now, but bitter remorse at last. Christ calls to self-denial now, and joy hereafter.

III. The Purpose of it (11).—It was the first of his miracles, and was a "sign" intended to signify something. What does it reveal? His glory. (a) As sympathising with a common need, and able to meet it. (b) As contrasting the dispensation which He introduced with that of the Jews. Every detail of the narrative is important as bearing upon this sign. (c) As sanctifying home life—putting honour upon the marriage relationship. To the young this miracle says that Jesus can be with them not only in public worship, in Sunday-school, but at home, and in their festivities; and that wherever He comes He enhances our joys.

AIR AND WATER.—A PARABLE.

It was a very deep well, and as little Archie looked down over the barrier it made him feel quite giddy. "I wonder why father cannot have a pump," said he, as he gazed at the water in the bottom of the well; for little Archie had been looking forward very anxiously to the advent of a new pump; as, like many other little boys, he had quite a liking for pumps and pumping. And this morning all his hopes had been destroyed as he heard his father say at the breakfast-table that the well had to be dug much deeper than he expected, so it would be impossible to have a pump.

So Archie, in a rather disconsolate mood, wandered, after breakfast, to have a look at the well where we found him at the beginning of this tale. How long he would have continued looking down the well I cannot say, but as he examined sides and bottom, as if seeking to find a solution to his question, he was somewhat surprised to hear the water at the bottom of the well speaking to him.

"My little friend," said the water; "I can answer your question about the pump."

"Oh, I wish you would," said Archie, for he wanted very much to know all about it.

"You know," said the water, "that this well is thirty-five feet deep." Archie assented.

"Well, that makes it just five feet too deep for a pump."

"But couldn't the men get a long pipe that would reach all the way down," said Archie.

"Oh, yes, but that's not the difficulty; it would be no use when put down, because no one could pump the water through it."

"I don't see how that can be," said Archie, "but perhaps you can tell me."

"It is like this," said the water. "When a pump is put up, and used for the first time, the man who is pumping first pumps out the air that is in the pipe, and then the pressure of the air on the water in the well forces the water into the empty pipe, and up through the spout into the pail; but if a pump were put up here the water would not reach to the bottom valve of the pump by five feet or more, for the air-pressure can only force water to a height of thirty feet, and no amount of pumping would alter it."

"It sounds very funny," said Archie.

"And I can tell you it feels very funny to go through a pump. I have been a great traveller, and in my time have passed through several pumps, and the sensation is most remarkable; it makes one feel quite helpless to be pushed along by the air in such an unceremonious way up a small pipe, and then, before there is time to think, come splashing out of the pump spout."

"I should push the air; I wouldn't go up the pipe," said Archie.

"All very well to talk, Master Archie, but the air is much too strong. I am obliged to go, I can't help it."

"Please tell me, Water, if the air pushes anywhere else beside the bottom of wells."

"Oh, yes," said the water. "It is pressing everywhere and on everything, and it is just because it presses in every direction, up and down, top, bottom, and sideways too, that it is not noticed until, as in the case of the pump, it is taken away from one place, and then the outside air, in its struggle to get in, pushes the water as I have already told you."

"What's that you are talking about?" said the wind. "I thought I heard you speaking about the air."

"Quite right," said the water. "And now you are here, perhaps you would be good enough to explain some of the things that the air does."

"I shall be very pleased to do so," said the wind, as he kissed Archie's rosy cheek. "So you want to know what the air can do? Well, it works the barometer, regulates the boiling of water, besides managing all the pumps, and does many other things I shall not have time to tell you about."

"Work the barometer," said Archie; "why, that is indoors in the hall; I don't think you can have anything to do with that."

"But I have," said the wind; "the water has been telling you about the air pushing water up a pipe thirty feet high; but it can push something else, and that something else is mercury, which is the silver-looking metal in your barometer which goes up and down in the glass tube."

"Oh, Wind! I wish you would tell me how it is done."

"Yes, certainly; the barometer is constructed by filling a glass tube (closed at one end) with mercury, and then inserting the open end in a glass vessel, containing also mercury, in such a way that none of the mercury escapes from the tube while it is being done. It will then be found that the pressure of the air on the mercury in the glass vessel will sustain a column of mercury in the glass tube thirty inches high."

"This seems as strange as the water in the pump," said Archie.

"Yes," said the wind: "and it serves a very useful purpose, for when bad weather comes the mercury sinks lower in the tube, and people say, 'The glass is going back'; but if the mercury remains high we may, as a rule, expect fine weather."

"I didn't know the air did so much good," replied Archie.

"I dare say not; but the barometer is also useful in telling the height of mountains. You see, my young friend, you live at the bottom of an ocean of air, and, of course, as air, like water, has a height of its own, there is a greater pressure at the bottom of its bulk than at or nearer the top; so if you went with your friends up a very high mountain, and took your barometer, you would perhaps find it go down to 25 inches or less, because the pressure of the air would be less in consequence of your being so much higher up."

"But you haven't told me how the air regulates the boiling of water," said Archie, "and I want very much to hear about that."

"That is a very simple thing," said the wind; "water begins to boil as soon as the force of its vapour is equal to the air pressure, therefore water will boil at a much lower temperature on a high mountain than at the sea level, so that if a person tried to boil an egg on the top of Mont Blanc he would not be able to do it if he boiled it for a week, because the air pressure would be so much reduced that the water would boil at a temperature not high enough to harden the white of an egg."

"Well, you do some very strange things," said Archie.

"I do nothing of myself," replied the wind, "all my movements and powers are under the laws that God has appointed, and it is when these laws are searched out and obeyed that I become very helpful to man."

"But I like to do what I please," replied Archie.

"You see what confusion and disaster there would be if I did so," said the wind. "No one would know for certain what force I exerted on water and mercury, and people would not be able to make pumps or barometers, or if they did they would find that sometimes they would act and sometimes they would not. You see, it is only as all things yield to God's rule and government that the well-being of all can be secured."

"I never thought of this," said Archie.

"I daresay not," replied the wind; "but you will find that resistance to God means pain and sorrow, and that the truest happiness consists in yielding your will to his."

Here the conversation ended, as the wind sank to rest, and his voice was hushed.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending August 25:—Sun., 19, St. John vi. 15-27; Mon., 20, vi. 28-40; Tues., 21, vi. 41-58; Wed., 22, vi. 59-71; Thurs., 23, vii. 1-18; Fri., 24, vii. 19-36; Sat., 25, vii. 37-53.

"The Ascent of Man."

Sir,—I should like, with your permission, to make some observations upon that remarkable book, Professor Drummond's "Ascent of Man." It is destined to make a strong impression upon public opinion, especially on the unformed mind of youth; and I much fear that its tendency will be to reinforce that stream of materialism which is flowing so strongly at present. Let me say at the outset that the argument for Evolution was never stated in a more fascinating manner; seldom has the gift of language been used with greater skill; and the danger is lest the reader, captivated by the charm of the style and the ingenuity of the argument, should fail to see how deep are the wounds inflicted on Revealed Religion.

I propose to criticise the book from the side of Biblical doctrine, and to ask how it stands to those truths which lie at the foundation of the Christian faith.

Professor Drummond professes to give a history of man from the side of science, and to answer the question, Whence and how came he to be here? He sees no evidence of direct creation by God, but holds that man, like everything else in the universe, is the product of gradual development through countless ages. Go far enough back to the rudimentary forms of animal life, and the progenitor of man is discovered among the "ascidians" or "molluscs." From this initial stage an ascending series of animal forms is evolved, ending in the "mammalia;" and out of this latest order is the ancestor of the savage; and, after countless years, the savage is developed into the civilised man. Every stage of this process is the work of a Power which is sometimes called "Nature" and sometimes "Evolution"; its tendency is to develop ever higher and higher forms of life. Man, according to this theory, must be always progressing towards a higher goal; though the book is silent as to whether another stage of life awaits him beyond the grave. This is a very brief abstract of a many-sided argument, which it is impossible to epitomise with absolute accuracy; but it represents, I hope with fairness, the general scope of the book.

Now, the first thing that strikes a Christian believer is the complete contradiction between the scheme of life here set forth and the teaching of Holy Scripture. According to it man is the direct creation of God: "God created man in his own image; in the image of God created He him: male and female created He them" (Gen. i. 27). He falls from his state of innocency, and Sin and Death enter the world, and the whole scheme of Christian doctrine is reared on this foundation. It is not, as some assume it to be, merely the primitive traditions of an unhistorical age, but it is the basis of the teaching of Christ and his Apostles: "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. v. 12). Our blessed Lord himself, in expounding the marriage laws, said: "From the beginning of the creation God made them male and female; for this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and cleave to his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh" (Mark ix. 6-8). The whole scheme of redemption is founded on the fact that man is a fallen and dying creature, but capable of being restored to that image of God from which he fell. "Since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. xv. 22-23). Nothing is more striking in Scripture than the absolute distinction drawn between man and the lower animals; man alone is under law to God; man alone is a sinner and needs a Saviour; man alone is worthy of being redeemed from death and hell, and of enjoying "everlasting life." The Bible has been well said "to breathe the atmosphere of eternity," and man alone is able to inhale that atmosphere; he is the only creature capable of "looking before and after." An impassable gulf separates him from the wisest elephant, or ape, or dog; none of these can be made to "know God"; none of them has a soul in the spiritual sense of the term; of no other creature can it be said, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

We search Professor Drummond's book in vain to find this root principle; at no period in "man's ascent" do we reach the time when he was made in God's image and likeness. We catch sight of man in the transition state between the ape and the savage, and his first moral perceptions spring from the budding of

MATERIAL LOVE IN THE SAVAGE MOTHER.

It is not easy to see where responsibility to God comes in. Apparently, in the earlier stages of man, he murders his rival with as little guilt as a lion seizes his prey; he knows nothing of the primeval law, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made He man" (Gen. ix. 6). We ask, Where was Sin then? We may ask further, Can there be any such thing as "Sin" in the Bible sense under this theory of man's origin?

Again we ask, Is such a theory consistent with the "living God" of the Bible? Is it consistent with the God "who is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Peter iii. 9)? Is it consistent with a God "who is angry with the wicked every day," but "who taketh pleasure in them that fear Him, in those that hope in his mercy"? Does not the teaching of this book, like the writings of Darwin, Huxley, and Tyndall, tend to expel the "supernatural" from the universe? Does it not conceive of God as a remote intelligence, unconcerned with individual man, or, as Matthew Arnold described Him, "a stream of tendency that makes for righteousness"? Can any vital religion be founded on such a basis? Will men love, honour, and obey such a dim, impersonal Being? Will they struggle to overcome the desperate temptations of "the world, the flesh, and the devil," so that they "may give a good account to Him who is ready to judge the quick and the dead"? I wot not. All human history shows that nothing but belief in "the living God" will powerfully affect the heart and conscience of man; it is those who believe that "God hath spoken" who will hearken to his voice. I assert that there never has been, and never will be, a religion which will grapple with man's conscience except one that is founded upon "Thus saith the Lord." Men will not go to the stake for Evolution; men will not "deny themselves, take up their cross and follow Christ," for an Intelligence scarcely separable from Nature. Stephen, when stoned to death, was sustained by the vision of "Jesus standing at the right hand of God." Would he have yielded his life for Evolution? Would the martyrs whom Nero smeared with pitch and lighted as torches in the streets of Rome, have faced death in the hope that a better era would dawn after millenniums had passed, and that some future generation of men would live higher lives on this earth? No; experience has abundantly proved that apostles and prophets, saints and martyrs, cannot be manufactured by fine phrases about the evolution of humanity; but they can be "evolved" through faith in the living God, and the sure and certain hope of

"A BETTER RESURRECTION."

This book is one of a class with which we are very familiar nowadays. It retains Christian phraseology to cover non-Christian thought; it objects to the supernatural on the ground that it reduces the Divine Being to the "God of gaps"; it confines his prerogative to the silent, noiseless evolution of law; everything has to be "evolved" out of the original "fire mist" up to the brain of Plato and Aristotle and the faith of Abraham and Paul. No room is left for the miraculous birth, resurrection, and ascension of the Lord Jesus Christ, or for the Gospel which is founded on those truths, or for the promise of everlasting life in "new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

According to this writer, Christianity and evolution are but two names for the same thing. "Up to this time no word has been spoken to reconcile Christianity with evolution, or evolution with Christianity. And why? Because the two are one. What is evolution? A method of creation. What is its object? To make more perfect living beings. What is Christianity? A method of creation. What is its object? To make more perfect living beings? Through what does evolution work? Through love. Evolution and Christianity have the same author, the same end, the same spirit."

Now, I admit that there is a kind of evolution contained in Christianity, but is it the evolution of Professor Drummond? The Word of God plainly teaches that God has a plan and a purpose which take ages for their fulfilment. The plan is expressed in these words:—"After that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe" (1 Cor. i. 21), "for the preaching of the Cross is to them that perish foolishness, but unto us who are saved it is the power of God" (1 Cor. i. 18). That is

GOD'S "PLAN OF SALVATION."

His purpose is expressed in the following words:—"That in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in Him" (Eph. i. 10).

But this is a very different kind of evolution from that sketched in the "Ascent of Man;" if this Scriptural evolution is shadowed forth in the vague sentences at the end of the book it much needs further elucidation. The Christian world wishes to know whether the "Word of God" or the "wisdom of man" is to decide what God's method of evolution is: whether its final end is a higher animal to walk this earth or a great multitude of redeemed ones "who came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

Is man destined to be a citizen of earth or heaven? Shall "this corruptible put on incorruption, and this mortal put on immortality"? These are the questions that agitate the soul of man; compared with these it is a trifle by what steps he has been brought to this stage of his earthly journey. Professor Drummond's book is silent on this transcendent theme, unless the following enigmatical utterance, which closes the volume, be taken as an answer to it: "Evolution always attains, always rounds off its work. It spent an eternity over the earth, but finished it. It struggled for millenniums to bring the vegetable kingdom up to the flowering plants, and attained. In the animal kingdom it never paused until the possibilities of organisation were exhausted in the mammalia. Kindled by this past, man may surely say, 'I shall arrive.' The succession cannot break. The further evolution must go on, the higher kingdom come—first the blade, where we are to-day; then the ear, where we shall be to-morrow; then the full corn in the ear which awaits our children's children, and which we live to hasten."

Surely one may well ask with surprise, Is this all the light that Professor Drummond can cast on human destiny? Had Christ preached this doctrine, would multitudes of sinners have followed Him, listening to "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God"? Would "the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind" have crowded round the Great Physician? And could He have truly said, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (John viii. 12)?

I reserve some further remarks for a following article.—Yours faithfully, Samuel Smith.

PERFECT REDEMPTION.

When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, He said, "It is finished," and He bowed his head and yielded up his spirit.—John xix. 30.

Now the perfect life is ended,
Now Messiah's work is done;
And with his last breath expended,
Love's great victory is won.
It is finished!
Life eternal is begun.

Now the Christ for sin hath suffered,
And its awful debt is paid;
Now the Lamb of God is offered,
And a full atonement made.
It is finished!
Let redemption make us glad.

Righteousness now reigns in glory;
For the Saviour's death of shame
Crowns his perfect earthly story
With an everlasting fame:
It is finished!
Glory to Emmanuel's Name.

Opened is the gate of heaven,
For the veil is rent in twain,
Now eternal life is given
Through the Friend of sinners slain.
It is finished;
God and man are one again.

MRS. BAEYERTZ,

THE JEWISH LADY EVANGELIST.

From time to time we have recorded the blessing attending the evangelistic labours of this lady, whose work among factory girls in Melbourne was first noticed in these pages in January, 1878. Then, her very name was unknown in this land; now, in many Christian centres it has become a household word. Wherever she has gone, alike in the Colonies, the States and Canada, and in this country, there are numbers who confess that under God she has been the means of their conversion or of leading them to fuller Christian experience. From the outset it has been noted that her testimony has been peculiarly owned of God among professing Christians to whom the Bible had been almost a sealed book.

Mrs. Baeyertz, as all who know her are aware, is a Jewess born and reared in an English town. Her parents brought her up "with all the loyal strictness of pious Jews, to fear the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and to regard the Jewish religion, with all its rites and ceremonies, as the one and only religion for all time."

Emilia was a very delicate child, but on "coming out" she plunged into the gaieties of a fashionable life. Then came a bitter disappointment which entailed mental anguish and physical prostration. This led to her being sent out for a change to a married sister in Australia. Arrived there, she became the leader in a fashionable set: yet in a strange way (through which the overruling hand of God may be clearly seen), this giddy girl was ere long married to a true Christian. Cast off by her friends on account of this marriage, she became formally a Churchwoman, although ignorant of vital Christianity. After six happy years of wedded life, her beloved husband, who had prayed much for her, was cut off suddenly, leaving her with two children. The wail of her sorrowing heart was:—"I have no God! No Christ to comfort me!"

The one dominant idea in her mind became: "How shall I find God? How find my dear dead one's Christ? For unless I do this I can never go to him: I can never see him again." Thus she began to read, for the first time in her life, the New Testament; and God stood waiting to lead her.

"Many a day amid this time of awful sorrow," she writes, "have I lain in the damp upon the grave of my husband, and prayed that God would take me. Very bitter and hard, too, were my thoughts of God, whom I accused of dealing cruelly with me."

One day she was alone, reading the old old story in the Gospel of John, when the truth she searched for, the Person she sought, burst suddenly upon her astonished and delighted gaze. God's Holy Spirit showed her Jesus as the Saviour, as her Saviour. "Christ is God," she cried, "and He died for me.

I HAVE FOUND HIM,

and He is my Saviour." Never from the first moment of joy had she one shadow of doubt as to her acceptance with God.

Some time after she was led to leave her home in "sweet Colac," and go to live at Geelong, where she was constrained to visit the prisoners in the gaol, and the sick and suffering ones languishing in the hospital wards. This humble effort led to further service in various quiet ways, and "from the outset God crowned her labours with success."

About that time Mrs. Baeyertz received a letter from Rev. H. B. Macartney, asking her to come to Melbourne as a missionary to the Jews. She consented, though after-events proved that God had other purposes for her. She went to Melbourne, where she passed through deep waters in the critical illness of her little girl, who was spared, in direct answer, she believed, to prayer. Her own spiritual life was deepened by this experience. The work among the Jews—who looked on her as an "apostate"—proved very uphill; but among the girls in the factories she speedily found remarkable acceptance, and many of them were converted.

The news of God's glorious putting-forth of his power spread far and wide. Scores of ministers heard of the work, and invitations to their churches poured in upon the young evangelist. These she declined, feeling doubtful "as to her right to address mixed meetings." Eventually, after much inward conflict, "Our Coffee Room," by Miss Cotton (now Lady Hope), was the means of leading her to do what she believed to be God's will, regardless of how she might be misunderstood. Accordingly, she accepted an invitation to address a Sunday-school, but on going "found the church packed," and among the audience three ministers, who, as she quaintly says, "with their long black coats, their solemn faces, and their huge white starched ties, appeared like sons of Anak in my path." God, however, gave great power, and at the close two vestries were filled with seekers after salvation. So, as Mr. Sydney Watson remarks, "was she fairly launched on the world as an evangelist for God." Soon after came a call from Sandhurst, and in that city Mrs. Baeyertz held her

"FIRST BIG MISSION."

This led to a mission at Ballarat, described as

> Even more wonderful than at Sandhurst. Over a thousand persons gathered every afternoon at the Bible readings, and many Christians were quickened and refreshed by these meetings. The theatre was crowded night after night. . . . The municipal authorities prohibited vehicular traffic down the street in which the theatre was, as the crowds were so dense that the traffic became dangerous. Here more than ever did Mrs. Baeyertz realise what God could do. The anxious inquirers were so numerous that it was impossible for the workers to deal with all.

From Ballarat she went to Adelaide for three months' service, but "God kept her there, full of constant labour, for three years"—that is in the district; not all the time in the city itself. There she felt herself compelled to begin those "meetings for men," which have ever since been a feature of her missions.

But further service awaited her. At a convention in Melbourne she seemed to hear a voice, "Will you go to New Zealand and America for Me?" She felt she dare not parley, and cried—"I'll go, Lord; I'll go, Lord; I'll go where you want me to go."

Soon she was led to Queensland, then to Tasmania, where Mrs. Henry Reed was of much help to her; and so on to New Zealand, where in many of the towns she had remarkable missions. After nine months' labour in New Zealand, she felt impressed that God would have her go to America, where, however, she knew no one. Landing at San Francisco, she wrote to Mr. McCoy, secretary of the Y.M.C.A. He came in person to see her, and kindly, but candidly, said that "there was no opening for a lady in connection with the Association." A letter from the secretary of the Melbourne Y.M.C.A. led him to reconsideration, and he asked Mrs. Baeyertz to speak to the young men. A week's mission was held, the result being fifty souls. This led to various missions in California, and brought an invitation from Canada. Blessing was granted in Toronto on the first visit, but the showers of refreshing came at a second visit. Meanwhile, Mrs. Baeyertz had been in Boston, and Dr. Gordon gave in The Watchman, a very remarkable account of her mission. The view taken by Dr. Gordon of the exceptional character of her work was confirmed by a letter from the Bishop of Nelson, N.Z., in which he confessed that "notwithstanding all that is said upon the opposite side, I could not, if I had the power, dissuade her from what cordially receives the Divine blessing."

"A HEBREW PROPHETESS,"

On her return to Canada from Boston remarkable missions were held in Quebec, Ottawa, Toronto, London, Montreal, and other cities in the Dominion.

Still believing herself led by God, she sailed in April, 1892, for this land, knowing no one, but realising that the Lord would go before her. The way opened as she went forward, and in Queenstown, Cork, Belfast, and Dublin, great interest was stirred. Then came her mission in West London, which we noticed at the time, and subsequent labours having been reported from time to time in our pages need not now be recapitulated. Suffice it that God seems to be wonderfully owning this lady evangelist in leading souls to Christ—and yet more in reviving Christians.

Mrs. Baeyertz has no new doctrine to declare; she enunciates simply the familiar Gospel truths of redemption through the life, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. Speaking to believers, she insists on full surrender, the abandonment of all known sin, and practical obedience. "Consecrated hands," we have heard her say, "must not touch questionable things; after playing a game of cards once, I was in darkness six weeks." "We get to be like Christ by living with Him." The hope of the Church in the personal return of the Lord is made prominent in her teaching. In some of her addresses, as for example that on "The Passover," she makes very profitable use of her familiarity with Jewish ideas and customs. A sentence from the late Dr. Gordon's pen must close our sketch:—

> "Her presentation of the Gospel made a deep impression upon the unconverted; clear, uncompromising, and most tender in her setting forth of the way of life, she could not fail to rouse the careless and win the unsaved."

These details are largely gleaned from Mr. Sydney Watson's book, From Darkness to Light: The Life and Work of Mrs. Baeyertz, price 1s. 6d., to be had by writing to her to 26, Fore-street, London, E.C.

NEGLECTED BLACKPOOL.

Arriving at Blackpool at noon on Bank Holiday, after a fortnight's stay at Keswick, we were almost bewildered by the teeming thousands of artisans and mill hands which crowded the beach, parade, and piers of this fine watering place. About 6.30 we started out hoping to find an open-air service where we could by our prayers and sympathy aid those who were seeking to proclaim the old, old story of Jesus and his love to these masses. We walked the entire stretch from Claremont Park to the South Shore, but, alas! only crowds gathered round the usual seaside "performances," were to be seen. At last we discovered a small group of Salvationists, who were with much simplicity and earnestness seeking to uplift Jesus.

Surely such a state of things should not be. To those who have leisure and the means we say, "Is Satan to have all his own way?" Will no one come and for Christ's sake seek to lead perishing souls to the Sinner's Friend? The need is all the more urgent as there are a large number of militiamen encamped near by.

Two Visitors.

PRISON MISSION.—Through the kindness of H.M. Commissioners of Prisons, two ladies have been granted permission to visit in H.M. convict prisons for women, in connection with Mrs. Meredith's Work for Discharged Female Prisoners.

HAYTI.—Rev. Lucius Hippolyte, pastor of the Baptist Church, Port-au-Prince, Hayti, sends an earnest plea that more attention should be paid by the Christian Churches to the evangelisation of that island with its million of a population. The language spoken is French. Mr. Hippolyte would be grateful if any one would send him a magic lantern for his missionary work in the mountains.

"NORTHFIELD ECHOES."

The second issue of this most interesting serial (which we noticed some time ago) contains a report of the addresses given at the Young Women's Conference held in Northfield at the end of June. These addresses were expository, hortatory, historical, missionary, informing, and all were deeply earnest and thoroughly practical. Mr. Moody's share in the speaking, as reported here, consisted of two expository addresses on the Gospel of John, taking up and expounding the chief thought in each chapter, and an address on "Some Requisites for Service," such as assurance, faith, courage, hope, and enthusiasm. Excellent talks were given by Mrs. Gordon, of Boston, Miss Whittle, and others. We have only space for one extract.

ISAIAH'S CALL.

An admirable address on this theme was given by Rev. W. H. P. Faunce, of New York City. We select the following portions:—The Bible has very little to say about the ending of its heroes and heroines, but very much about their beginning. The death-bed, the parting scene, the final rapture—these things find small space in the Scriptures; but the call to a Divine mission, the summons to service, is related in the Bible almost everywhere with most minute and definite detail. What was the end of the life of the Apostle Paul? The last sentence you will remember, reads: "Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house." But the conversion of that Apostle, his summons to the Apostolate, is related three times with wonderful and startling vividness. Do you remember the last sentence with regard to Peter? "And Peter departed and went into another place." But the call of Peter—can we ever forget how the Messiah, walking by the Sea of Galilee, summoned the young Apostles to follow Him? Peter could never forget it, and was never weary of telling it.

So of Moses it is said in the Old Testament, "No man knoweth his sepulchre"; but every man knows his call. Did Amos pass away in peace? What were the closing scenes in the life of Ezekiel? What was the end of Jeremiah? We are totally ignorant. But every one of these prophets has related with the utmost detail how at some time in his life a Divine hand was laid upon him, and a Divine voice was heard speaking in his soul. The Bible places tremendous emphasis on the question which I believe is agitating many hearts here:—Does God summon men and women to specific forms of Christian service? If so, how may I recognise that call, and where does He call me?

(1) Notice the time of Isaiah's call—"in the year that King Uzziah died." Some of you remember the story of the wondrous reign of King Uzziah, a sort of Victorian era in Jewish history. For fifty years he sat upon the throne of Solomon. He subdued nations. He undertook great public works, built fortifications, and extended the power and majesty of his kingdom everywhere, until finally he took it upon him to go into the temple of the Lord and assume the High Priest's place and offer incense. Immediately the white spot of leprosy was seen standing out on his angry, reddened forehead. He was banished from his country; he went to a lazar house where he stayed until his death. The young Isaiah, probably eighteen or nineteen years old at that time, never could forget the ending of that splendid reign. So he says that in the very year that this earthly king passed away, in disgrace and shame, he saw the Heavenly King sitting on his throne that shall never pass away.

I am sure it has been so with some of you in your individual life. In the very year that some earthly friend was struck down by your side, you found the Heavenly King nearer than ever before. Some hope, some fortune, some strong support failed you; then you were led in your disappointment to look upward and see that there is one throne which is never shaken, one splendour that never fails, and

ONE KING THAT RULES FOR EVER.

(2) Notice the vision. He saw the Lord in his palace lifted up as the King of the whole earth; and around the throne a choir singing on the one side, "Holy, holy, holy," then answering responsively on the other side, "The whole earth is full of his glory," until the sound moved the very pillars of the palace, and the whole room was filled with the mist which symbolises the confusion of mind that often comes to us at the first revelation of a great truth.

Before any work of God there always comes the vision of God. To behold Him, lifted up above our troubled hearts, above our worries and discords, and to be absolutely sure that we have spoken with God and He has spoken to us—this is the preliminary to doing anything whatsoever in God's service. I have had men say to me, "Did not Paul's Christian life begin with the question, 'What wilt Thou have me to do?'" No; it did not; it began with the question, "Who art Thou, Lord?" When Paul had settled that it was the risen Christ who appeared to him, then came the much easier question, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" We cannot feed the multitude out of an empty basket; we cannot present the Lord till we have seen the Lord. If you and I have no doubt about having seen God, then our Divine service will grow sweeter and clearer and easier every year we live.

(3) Notice the call itself. It was not such a call as to suspend his personal judgment in deciding whether he would go or not. The Lord did not say, "Isaiah thou shalt go." He said, "Who will go?" And Isaiah deliberately and resolutely said, "I will go, send me." The highest call is when God treats us as rational beings, with minds of our own and judgments which we are to form. I believe that in the old idea of a call to the ministry or to missionary service there was a great deal of mental inertia and spiritual laziness. It was thought that if we simply sat still we should be dragged into our work. God will not take that responsibility. Isaiah knew that men were wanted, and he said, "I will offer myself; Lord, take me;" and that was the beginning of his ministry. You do not get missionaries by casting lots or advertising for them in the newspapers. You get them by spreading before the people the call of the Lord, and then saying, "Who will go?" The one who springs to his feet, and says, "I, in my calm judgment, offer myself," is the man whose decision will last the longest and go the deepest. There is a verse that was always very precious to me in my early Christian life, "The meek will He guide in judgment; and the meek will He teach his way." When a man or woman has reached the point of meekness, and absolute desire to know the will of God, then in his judgment

HE WILL CHOOSE THE RIGHT.

This call did not come to the prophet with promises of great and brilliant success. The man who goes just for success is not working for God. Christ came when nobody wanted Him. There was no deputation went to the courts of heaven saying, "Send us such a Deliverer as this." Christ was content to take twelve men and for three years train them, while the nation turned its back on Him. Isaiah went into the work after the heart of the people was waxed gross, and their ears were dull of hearing. The very essence of Christian service is that it will not run away even though the prospect be dark.

I believe that a man to-day who has the spirit and character of Isaiah may be as truly directed to his work as ever was any prophet in the Old Testament. Can it be that we are further from knowing God's will than those who lived in the twilight of the old dispensation, and had no New Testament, and no risen Christ, and no Holy Spirit then given? It cannot be. When you come down to the innermost fact, you find that no miracle or portent can take the place of the inner conviction in a man's soul that a certain thing is the will of God—that is the real call. If the Church of to-day will only consent to relegate all Divine leading, and all providential care, and all Divine help into a little Syrian province in the first century, that is all that evil-minded people want. They are mightily afraid someone will appear with a present message from a present God; and if the Church will only be content to believe in past signs and ancient marvels, and say complacently that the age of miracles is past, wicked men want nothing more. Our God not only was, but is, and is to come. When any heart comes before Him and says, "Send me," there goes forth to-day out of the Divine heart of love a directing voice, and a guiding hand, to lead us in our work.

See how this call of Isaiah gave him a vision of the nation. It is remarkable how often maps have played a great part in the extension of the kingdom of God. Carey's cobbler's shop was not only a place for the making of shoes, and not only a place of prayer: it was a place for the study of the world's map. If your map has less than the world on it, then you cannot truly decide on your field of Christian endeavour. I believe that no one field is better than all other fields, and no one form of Christian service is more acceptable to God than all other forms. Could any of you say which is the highest kind of Christian service? We have got to be content with the song of little Pippa as she passed through the city singing,

> All service ranks the same with God;
> There is no last or first.

Remember that the field is the world, and not simply a little part of it. The field is not the Church. That was the old idea—that the only way for a man to serve God was to enter the ministry; and the only way for women to serve God was to become appointees of the Church. The Church is simply the reapers thrust out into the field, and not the field itself. Until we are willing to go anywhere

WE ARE FIT TO GO NOWHERE.

One other thing about this call is the vanishing of self-consciousness at the touch of the coal from off the altar. Isaiah felt his unfitness to go, and then there came the angel with the live coal touching his lips, and saying, "Thine iniquity is taken away and thy sin purged"—the vanishing of self in the presence of the Divine mission. Is not that what we most need when deciding our life-work? When God comes into our hearts and cleanses them from self, then we begin to understand what He would have us do.

This is the one message I have for you. Be sure that you see God and talk with Him. Be sure you see his world, his field, in all its parts. Be sure you believe in the possibility of the redemption of those to whom you are sent. Be sure you put self out of sight, and only want God's will to be done in your soul as it is done in heaven. Then there shall come to you, if not the vision that came to the ancient prophet, as real an assurance, as holy a summons, and as Divine support.

A general descriptive summary of the Convention thus concludes:—"This annual gathering of young women for the study of the Word of God and the consideration of the methods of Christian work is destined to exert no small influence on the future history of our schools and colleges. The essential feature of the Conference is its spiritual power; by coming in contact with this power the delegate is inspired with new zeal for the Master's work, and is fitted to carry this power into her college and to exert a greater influence for Christ than was before possible. The Conference is in truth a Mount of Transfiguration to many lives, where Christ leads them up to greater heights, and shows glimpses of his love and power never yet dreamed of; and from this mount of privilege young women go down into the paths of everyday life to carry brightness and blessing to all with whom they come in contact."

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOME-CALL.

It matters not—the manner of our going;
Sooner or later comes the Master's call.
In summer's sunshine, or in winter's blowing,
The message comes to all.

Perchance our last farewell we may be taking
In calm communion with a loving heart;
Or in fierce winds and sudden waves high breaking
Our spirits may depart.

It matters not, if only we are ready,
Doing his will, accepted by his grace,
Bearing the banner of our great hope steady,
And standing in our place.

It matters not—the way of life's conclusion,
If by redeeming love we are possessed.
In deepest hush or wildest storm's confusion—
The Father knoweth best.

A HEATHEN FESTIVAL.

By Mr. F. W. Gooch.*

The last time I wrote home, I spoke of the coming big feast of "Nookalama" to be held in Anakapelle. It duly came off. That feast was an "eye-opener" as to what heathenism really is. Standing on a raised ground, we looked at a sea of faces stretching away for a very long distance—but all tending one way, towards the white-washed temple where the goddess reposed in state, filth and paint daub. She boasts so close a relationship to "that old serpent" as to be his incarnation—though why he wanted to come as a woman into a country where that sex is so depreciated I have not yet been able to find out. Suffice it to say that she is the embodiment of all that is fiendish. Her devotees roam about sowing the seeds of cholera, smallpox, and other dreaded outcomes of filths, stinks, and bad living generally.

To propitiate her and keep her is the great end of the feast, and it lasts three days. She is patted on the back, fed with plantains, enough to choke a London sewer; and so vast a quantity of sugar-cane sticks are flung over her high outer wall for her to chaw at, that if it were not for those astute sons of Belial, the priests, who generally bring them out and sell them again in one of the hundreds of booths erected at or near the temple, the goddess would be hopelessly buried out of sight, temple and all; like the old Roman general who was smothered and buried in bouquets of flowers by his fellow citizens, in the days when popular feeling was allowed to demonstrate itself.

But we leave the main part of the town, and go to one of the outside quarters to find the temple. In many places in the world we need guides, but not there. A mile before reaching the spot we have to walk the gauntlet of beggars who line the road each side of you, and you are saluted with (Telegu translated): "O Rama, Rama, Rama, O my Lord, I'm a man without eyes, O tubu, tubu, do alms, etc., etc."

These fellows come long distances to the feast, and get each a nice little pile. Let us look at some! First a man without any face, a horrible sight: how he makes such a noise is a mystery. Then blind, halt, lame, withered, every species of deformation, all waiting for the moving of the waters of compassion on the part of that crowd of senseless devotees who believe Nookalama is present and placing to their credit every dub they give away. Here is a hermit; he is actually lying in a huge bed of thorns with two hands passively held out for dubs. The impostor has the thorns arranged by his pals to the least possible inconvenience, while none go into him as would appear; and yet those poor creatures are made to believe that he has so far renounced the flesh and all fleshly lusts (except possibly the lust of dubs) as to be able to say a good word for givers of alms to the gods with whom he has earned fellowship.

Now let us go to the temple, and make some inquiries. The first thing we learn is that the land and temple belong to some heathen dignitary, and that he leases it for all that can be got out of it to native contractors for so much per annum. Then these contractors keep it in repair, charge every man, woman, and child twopence to get inside and make gifts to the goddess, consisting of plantains, saffron, sugar-cane, coloured paint to put on her body, etc. All day long the stream of people is passing in and out, and the twopenny pieces clatter into the large boxes prepared for them. As a result, a few days later these poor benighted creatures go to their distant villages, get disease (sown in them at the feast), die, and say Nookalama has no favour on them, and so pay Brahmins for nostrums to be said over them, get witches to perform all sorts of tomfoolery, and fail to do any good. Yet they do not see through the fraud.

Who are the gainers? The Brahmins, who can hardly walk for fat; the contractors, who are merchants, the same class who erect the countless booths to sell fruit, &c.; and the beggars, who are probably also engaged by some enterprising caste man by contract. Where does all the money come from? Of course, the rich give liberally, and the merchants and others bear a share. But the masses of ignorant, naked working men are the fleeced ones. The workman takes up every farthing he has coming to him and tries to get "advances" on future work; then he borrows on various securities all he can in order to feed and honour that incarnate fiend called Nookalama. After it is over he has the rest of a year to make it up and feed all the other deities which may possibly have a demand on him.

In all this mass of rioting and demon-worship stand two white men and six black ones to try and throw a ray of light on the darkness. They declare that through the man Jesus Christ is preached the forgiveness of sins, and that salvation is held out as a free gift to all who will receive Christ as their Saviour. They face hundreds, and sing lustily, "What can wash away my sin? Nothing but the blood of Jesus." If the hubbub becomes too great, they strike off into another hymn; and so missionary work goes on. We long and pray that some of the crowd will believe it true.

Who are Israel?—I.

By Mr. H. D. BROWN.

Israel! What a halo of glory surrounds that name, the name of the redeemed of the Lord, the people whom He hath chosen, whom He hath loved with an everlasting love, "to whom pertaineth the adoption and the glory and the covenants and the giving of the law and the service of God and the promises"! How the Old Testament Scriptures glow with the loved name! uttered by Jehovah in tones of infinite tenderness, whether in connection with words of blessing, of rebuke, of bitter complaint, or of terrible judgment. "God the God of Israel" is a name He loves to bear, and every blessing and every precious promise is given to this people, on whom He hath set his love, and in whom is all his delight. Take Israel out of the Old Testament and what remains?

It is a question, therefore, of supreme moment to ask, Who are this highly favoured people to whom such a glorious heritage belongs? Are they still upon the earth, and if so, where in the present day are they to be found?

On such a subject it is useless to theorise; the only way to obtain the true answer is by inquiring, What saith the Scripture? What is the interpretation which the Holy Spirit Himself gives of his own Holy Writings? And if we consult the New Testament we shall find that He has not left us in any uncertainty as to who are the Israel of God, the seed of Abraham, the inheritors of all the promises.

It has long been customary to speak of the Jewish nation—now in unbelief—as "God's ancient people Israel," as if God had two peoples, an ancient and a modern; and to speak of Christians who are not of the Hebrew race as "Gentiles," and belonging to the "Gentile Church," forgetting that it is much the same as if we spoke of converts in China, for instance, as "heathen Christians," and belonging to the "heathen Church." But is this according to the Scriptures?

Let us turn to Rom. ix., a chapter which has often been misunderstood through supposing it to refer to personal salvation, whereas it refers entirely to God's dispensational dealings. Here the inspired Apostle begins by expressing his great sorrow of heart for his "kinsmen according to the flesh: who are Israelites," but who as a nation, because of their rejection of the Messiah, were about to lose their high position; as the Lord Himself had said, "The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Then, in his well-known style, the Apostle imagines an objector, some Jewish scribe or lawyer, who angrily retorts, "Then the Word of God is of none effect, for did He not promise that Israel should be his people for ever?" "Nay," says Paul; "not as though the Word of God hath taken none effect, for they are not all Israel who are of Israel, neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." The Apostle thus vindicates the truth of God's Word by showing who are the real seed; not the children of the flesh, but the children of the promise.

Not lineal descent, but faith, was ever the qualification for being of the seed of Abraham, for from the first he was "the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; . . . . and the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised" (Rom. iv. 11, 12).

John the Baptist, the last and greatest of the prophets, said to the Jews, "Think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." And our Lord told them when they claimed Abraham for their father, "If ye were Abraham's children ye would do the works of Abraham."

Thus prophet, apostle, and our Lord Himself distinctly declared that those who were only "the children of the flesh" were not "counted for the seed," but as Paul, by the Holy Ghost, declares, "unto the churches of Galatia" (Gentile churches as they would now be called), "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."

Returning to Rom. ix., the Apostle follows up the argument vindicating the sovereignty of God in giving to whomsoever He will the high position of the sons of God (Israel), with all their privileges and promises; and in verses 25, 26, he quotes from Hosea two passages which explicitly refer to the future of Israel. Let us turn to one of them (Hosea i. 10), "Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered; and it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God." These and many similar prophecies are commonly supposed to refer to the nation during the millennium after their restoration—and undoubtedly it will be true of them then—but the Holy Ghost distinctly declares their present fulfilment, and applies them (verse 24) to "us, whom He hath called not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles;" and again in 1 Peter ii., the Holy Spirit applies to believers all that is spoken of the position of Israel in the Old Testament.

In Galatians iv. 22-31 (a passage which, in this connection, it is deeply instructive to read and ponder) it is still more emphatically stated that the unbelieving descendants of Abraham "born after the flesh" are regarded, not as Israelites, but as Ishmaelites, the children of Hagar, who "answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children," but of us who believe it is said "we brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise," and in verse 27, a passage from Isaiah concerning Israel is quoted as being spoken of "Jerusalem which is above...she is our mother."

Again, in Rom. ii. 28-29, we are told, "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly, . . . but he is a Jew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter"; and in Phil. iii. 3, it is said, "We are the circumcision, which worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh."

Many more passages might be quoted, showing that the lineal descendants of Abraham "after the flesh" only, were never "counted for the seed," but that all believers—whether of Hebrew or of Gentile origin—out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, are the true "Israel of God," and heirs of all the promises made to "Abraham and his seed"; not merely a kind of spiritual Israel with a separate position, different privileges and distinct promises, but belonging to the one "holy seed," the one "everlasting people," the people ever in the mind and purpose of God throughout all the Old Testament revelation.

REV. W. HOLMAN BENTLEY writes from Wathen Station, on the Congo:—"A few days after my arrival one young man was baptized, and yesterday six others were baptized, while two others are joining the church by transfer. Besides these, some twenty-five others have been coming to me for personal conversation, of whom we can but have the best hopes, although they are in various stages; some are trusting in Jesus, others earnestly seeking, while others are anxious or interested in spiritual things."

CHITTAGONG, INDIA.—Rev. A. J. McLean writes:—"We have had a fortnight of very trying experience during the cholera scourge here, when three of our chapel attendants were swiftly and suddenly called away to their long home. But it is a matter of great joy that not long after we have been able to see two more souls brought out of darkness into light. I have just returned from the district where two more Maghs openly confessed Christ by baptism, making since last February nine additions to the Church of Christ here."

DR. J. G. PATON'S FAREWELL.

After eight months' incessant travelling and speaking on behalf of his beloved New Hebrideans, Dr. Paton has returned to Australia, sailing on Friday last per ss. Oruba. On the eve of his departure a farewell meeting was held in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, which was well filled by friends from all parts of the land, representatives of those who have been stirred and delighted by the fervour of his glowing words. His brother, Rev. James Paton, of Glasgow, opened the proceedings with prayer.

Mr. M. H. Hodder, who presided, very briefly stated the object of this meeting—to bid united farewell to one whom thousands had learned to love for his work and testimony's sake.

Dr. John G. Paton, who spoke with some emotion, recalled how he came here in October last, hoping to awaken interest in the New Hebrides; and now, on the eve of leaving for Australia, he had to acknowledge, with profound thankfulness, that God had been with him, and had opened wonderfully the hearts of his people.

I have tried, he said, to do some work for Jesus, but He has done it all, and to Him alone must be the glory. Since leaving the islands, some four years ago, I have gone through America, Canada, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward's Island, and Great Britain and Ireland, and everywhere I have had shown me the greatest kindness, while money has flowed into the Lord's treasury.

I came with a heavy burden on my heart—that of 40,000 heathen, perishing, no man caring for their souls. I knew these as you cannot know them. I have seen them in their nakedness, ignorance, and misery. I have heard them crying for the light. I know what it means to land for the first time who mistake you for "blackbirders," come to steal their children. Under such circumstances the devoted missionary, who comes with his heart glowing with the love of Christ, is in danger of being murdered, as the noble Bishop Pattison was, not for his own deeds, but for the evil deeds of others. No wonder rude savages make mistakes, for the Kanaka traders have been known to put on white surplices and pose as missionaries in order to be permitted to land on some island in which they hoped to find victims. What is the result? Parents who have lost children, husbands who have lost wives, and wives who have lost husbands, vow vengeance against the missionaries, whom they suppose to have wronged them, and the first comer after such an expedition is in great danger of losing his life for the wickedness of others.

I well remember landing, under such circumstances as these, the first missionary on Ambrim; when as soon as our vessel appeared in the offing the natives hurried to the beach, and the strand was quickly lined by armed men ready to defend their shores against what to them must have seemed pirates. We did not venture at first to land, but at length two lads who had come off, in great fear and trembling, assured themselves as to our identity, and then we had a genuine welcome from the people, who, although savages themselves, understood that missionaries sought their welfare.

Some years after, Dr. Lamb went to that very island, and his first year's report showed four churches built, five being built, and half the island under Christian instruction. Some have called these islanders but the Gospel of Jesus Christ has marvellously proved its power, has saved thousands, and intemperance, immorality, and hideous cruelty have been swept away. Remember we teach these people that the acceptance of the Gospel means that they must deny themselves. They give up dancing, strong drink, and the pipe. Would that God's children at home realised the joy of giving up such self-indulgences for his sake. The money spent in drink and tobacco, even by Christians, would send forth many missionaries to those who are dying without light.

"POOR BRUTES IN HUMAN SHAPE,"

Again, remember you can serve God without fear; but where my son is now labouring it is not so. There are a few young men learning to read the Bible and praying. One of these by a strange native custom, difficult for us to understand, was supposed to have been pledged at his birth to a certain man. This man was furious at his becoming a Christian, and vowed if he went to Sunday-school he would kill him. The lad, however, said "I must go; I love it;" and on his leaving school in the evening, the man shot him dead;

THE BOY'S LAST BREATH BEING A PRAYER.

My son was summoned to avert further bloodshed, and reaching the spot early next morning, found the murderer under arrest, and forty men ready to shoot him. My son spoke with these men of the love of Jesus, pleaded for the life of the murderer, that he too, might learn of Jesus; and thus saved the life of the man. The companions of the murdered lad undertook to teach him; and now he is a follower of Jesus in place of the boy he killed in his ignorance. There have been many such deaths, but God has caused them to work for the furtherance of the Gospel.

You may ask, How does the work stand? and what are your needs? We have now about 15,000 worshippers of God on Aniwa; we have the Holy Bible translated, printed, and read in eighteen languages, paid for largely by the islanders themselves. About 200 of these cannibals are now teachers and preachers. Remember, these have no salary, as we understand it; £6 per annum is allowed them, but this means that while teaching and preaching among the heathen, they have to support themselves on the labour of their own hands. But while we rejoice in all this, we cannot forget that there are 40,000 cannibals still unevangelised, and we want to send them missionaries. I hope to be spared to see these brought to Jesus.

I start to-morrow morning for Australia, and, after a short time there, mean to go back to Aniwa, which I left four years ago. I want a missionary for 6000 people on the west side of Tanna, and if I get none I mean to go myself with some native teachers. Remember—

> The heathen perish day by day,
> Thousands on thousands pass away.
> Oh, Christians, to the rescue fly;
> Preach Jesus to them ere they die.

Then as to money. God's people have sent me funds and gifts, and annual contributions, to the amount of £900, or only £100 per annum short of the £1000 a year I asked for the new vessel, which I trust will be constructed and, ere long, be at work. God has also sent me men. Two young Scotchmen sail on September 21 to join me, and go with me to the islands; two more—a medical and a divinity student—hope to come out next year, and another son of my own has given himself to the work. So there will be five additional labourers, but as two have died this year their places must be filled, and thus only three new stations can be occupied at present. In closing I thank you for all your kindness, and I ask constant and continued prayer and sympathy. I leave you sorrowful, yet rejoicing. If you knew the condition of these perishing heathen you could not stay at home. Will not some young men and young women consecrate themselves this day to this great work? It is a glorious work. Will you come? Let us seek to live to his glory, as we shall wish we had done when we stand in his presence. But whether you are able to come or not, let all your hearts be one with us in this work of winning souls for Jesus. May God bless you all. Farewell.

Mr. A. K. Langridge, hon. sec. for England, explained the objects of the John G. Paton Mission Fund, and reminded the friends that when Dr. Paton has gone these objects, being permanent, remain. All information may be had from Mr. Langridge, Aniwa, Southend, Essex.

The Chairman, in the name of the assembled friends, bade Dr. Paton farewell and God speed, the whole audience joining their voices in the parting greeting. Mr. Badenoch then commended him to God in earnest prayer.

MRS. MACALPINE'S HOMES, MANCHESTER.—Another of the probationers in our Maternity Home (Miss A. Marsden) has been successful in obtaining the diploma of the London Obstetrical Society. Our work amongst the girls in this branch has been greatly blessed, and we have been filled with gratitude as evidences of change of heart and life have been forthcoming. Our chief concern being that our patients should be brought to the Saviour, it is indispensable that those ladies who come to us as probationers should be true servants of Him who "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." We have now a vacancy for another probationer, and should be pleased to hear of such a fellow-worker, to whom the training which we offer would be useful in mission work, either at home or abroad. ## TRAINING WORKERS IN INDIA.

Dear Sirs,—In case it may help to open the eyes and encourage the faith of the Lord's people in Britain, I send you a few lines on the prospects of the work here. Bishop Thoborn is right when he says that it is not in the work of his society alone that the great success is coming. Travancore is well known as one of the earliest places to witness a mass movement among the lower castes. Here we could, had we the means both in suitable men and money, open hundreds of new centres. Groups of families forming small villages are clamouring for teachers, perhaps in the first place largely for secular and temporal reasons, but also because they feel that the missionaries are their best friends.

Whatever the reason, the way is open, and we are only deterred from opening these stations for lack of workers and means to support them. The need of competent workers is the first and most important. Our men are often almost wholly untrained, owing to the pressure compelling us to put men at work before they can be prepared. Then too there is a great lack of the proper means for training workers. If ever the work is to be self-supporting, we must have Bible institutes at work here and there, equipped with all the necessary means for training men. We do not want anything very grand, but still we do want good substantial buildings and a liberal support, for the people are as a whole quite unable to maintain such institutions themselves. We are intending to found one such institute here in conjunction with a hostel for the Christian students who are attending the classes of the Maharajah's College here. It is confidently expected that such an institute will be the means of very quickly making the work in this State independent of the home Churches, except the money needed for the support of such Europeans as are required to work it, and possibly some help now and again in cases of considerable expense, so that it will be the most economical way of doing the work in the long run. Had this been done years ago the Churches here would have been self-supporting long ere this, probably, but so long as the men at work are mostly untrained men they cannot but be reliant on the presence and help of the missionaries, nor can the latter give any large amount of time and work to the special ingathering of those outside the Churches.

There is a glorious future opening up rapidly all through India. But a short time and those who are now in the field will need to be strengthened ten or twelve fold. Will the home Churches be equal to the emergency? If it is not to be expected that the whole work should devolve on Europeans, and it stands to reason that Indians can best be reached by their own people, then let the Lord's people see to it that suitable arrangements are made to prepare men for carrying on the work amongst their own people, by establishing at suitable centres institutes for the training of such men in all that is needed for the work of building up the young Churches and carrying the Gospel to those as yet unreached by the present methods. I am convinced that by so doing we should be laying the foundation of self-supporting missions in this land; whereas, if we go on as we are it will be long before the missionaries can be spared from the work of superintending the Christians to take up the work of reaching the heathen. Some of our missionaries have from 12,000 to 15,000 adherents to look after. They can not, of course, devote any great portion of their time to the heathen. Whereas, let the energies of the Europeans be put into the work of training workers and the Christians may soon be left to the care of their own people.

Now is the time to do this. The later it is left the longer it will be before the missionaries can be freed. There are many wealthy men in our Churches at home who could easily provide the means for the establishment and maintenance of such an institute as I have described. From £1,500 to £2,000 would set it going and provide for, say, twenty students for some years to come. I shall be glad to give further information to any who are interested. My own conviction is that Mr. Moody's work at Chicago should form the basis of such institutions here as far as possible.—Yours very sincerely,

Harold T. Wills, L.M.S.

THE CHARACTER OF CHRIST.

OUTLINE STUDY.

By R. E. SPEER, M.A.

The study, of which an outline is here given, was ne of the features of the Students' Conference at Keswick, and the appreciation which it met with here leads us to afford other Bible students an opportunity of covering the ground for themselves. nly those points dealt with at the Conference are iven here, and for these we are indebted to the uthor. The works referred to are Bushnell's Character of Jesus," Ullmann's "Sinlessness of esus," Young's "Christ of History," Blaikie's Public Ministry of the Lord," Liddon's "Divinity Our Lord," Gore's "Incarnation of the Son of od," Brace's "Gesta Christi," Wendt's "Teaching Jesus," and Channing's Works.

CHRIST'S PLANS AND METHODS OF WORK.

I. He undertakes to organise on earth the King- m of God, or to make men conscious of its istence and character. His message (Mark i. , Luke ix. 10); his purpose indicated (Luke xvii. ). Bushnell ("Character of Jesus," pp. 34-36)

(a) It is the establishment of a new and spiritual lationship, centred in Himself; a brotherhood of vers, each loving as He had loved (John xiii. 34, ).

(b) This new relationship takes precedence over human ties, even the closest (Luke xi. 27, 28, ke ix. 57-62). His statements are unhumanly compromising in this. A human Christ would ve left loopholes for human weakness (Luke xiv. , 27); He Himself met this test (Mark iii. 31-35). declaring such a doctrine a human teacher uld have destroyed the family and all other inely sanctioned human ties. Plato has done so Republic" § 457). Not so Jesus. First miracle a wedding. Last words to John from the cross ated a new home for his mother.

(c) Included all ages and both sexes. His stles were men; women loved and ministered to m (Luke viii. 1-3). Simeon and the widow of rscore years, Anna, first took Him and recog- ed Him (Luke ii.). His followers were chiefly ng and middle-aged men, unless perhaps Peter. was drawn toward the young (Mark x. 13. ndt, "Teaching of Jesus," I., 151).

(e) Included all ages, classes, and conditions. If called rich men like Zaccheus, He also told his ciples when they made a feast to call the poor ke xiv. 13). The old system regarded the de- ned as under a curse (John ix. 2). His invitation ludes the maimed, the lame, the blind (Luke xiv. . Of the self-righteous only He spoke with erness (Matt. xxi. 31). So wide were his sym- hies, that the Pharisees, in the pride of intel- ual caste, were offended (John vii. 47, 48; Mark 16, 17). To this universal adaptiveness He ealed as an evidence of the prophecy fulfilling character of his coming (Luke vii. 22).

He held out no meretricious reward for entering service (Matt. v. 11, 12; Luke vi. 22; xxi. 17).

I. His plans were immense and revolutionary. reedom through the truth; his offer (John viii. 32); no impersonal truth however (John viii. 36). proposed to give men eternal life, and that more ndantly (John x. 10-28). There was no limit to purpose (John xii. 47; vi. 51). He himself the magnetic force in this work, and in accom- hing it earthly governments were as playthings tt. xvii. 24; Luke xiii. 32). He Himself de- ed that his plans were not natural or human n viii. 36).

II. His project covered ages of time. He counted temporary eclipse as the condition of an eternal ing (John xii. 24). He implied and declared his story would be told in strange lands and ues (Mark xiv. 9; Matt. xxiv. 14). In bold rtion he faces the centuries (Matt. xvi. 18). In t. 24 and 25 He looks forward over the ages to days of triumph at the end. He is a divine nist (Matt. xxviii. 18-20).

V. The audacity of his plan. An uneducated ger proposes to readjust the relations between and God. (Bushnell). He launched his whole at the outset with no fear or holding back don, pp. 116, 117). Shown in his choice of tants. Shown in its universal scope (John x. Matt. xviii. 19, 20).

V. He began from and worked with the poor. He was always respected by them, but never became a popular demagogue. Born among them (Luke ii. 7). Grew up among them as a tradesman, and tradesman's son (Matt. xiii. 35; Mark vi. 3). He took delight in the company of the poor (Mark ii. 15). His intimacy was cited as a reproach (Luke v. 30-32; vii. 34). The people drew to Him (Luke xv. 1, 2). In his public work He drew them irresistably (Matt. iv. 25; Matt. xix. 2; Luke v. 29; cf. also Luke iv. 42; v. 1-15; vi. 17, 18; viii. 40; ix. 37; xiv. 25). He had a message they wished to hear (Luke xix. 47, 48; xxi. 38); unto which they answered (Luke xi. 29) with fitful but vigorous outbursts of loyalty to Him and his assertions (Matt. xxi. 45, 46), which He might have used to annihilate the usurpers who sat in Moses' seat (John xii. 12-19; vi. 14, 15), but which, unlike other reformers, He never did so utilise. He cared lovingly for the people (Mark viii. 3). The people did not understand Him, but felt He was something to them, and although one day they joined the shout "Crucify Him," the next they smite their breasts (Luke xxiii. 48). He laid his foundations below all influence, so that now as in his own day, the common people hear Him gladly (Mark xii. 37).

He set for Himself, reached, and placed before others a perfect standard. He knew and touched men's personalities. He was never anxious for his success (Matt. xv. 12-14; John vi. 41-5; Matt. xvi. 18; John xvii. 20, 21; John xii. 32; Luke ix. 13-17; Mark ix. 19; John xix. 10, 12; John xviii. 36, 37; John iv. 34, v. 30, vi. 38; Heb. x. 7). Has no fear of the effect of his words (John vi. 60-66). His confidence enables Him to face his end (Luke ix. 22).

He was superior to human intercessions or judgments. He was never thrown or caught off his guard. The way He handled men. His little, personal ways. The generous freeness and selflessness of his deeds.

AN APPEAL TO THE CHURCHES.

The response which greeted the "Appeal to the Churches" issued by the Grindelwald Conference of 1893 in September last has encouraged the undersigned to issue a second appeal this year:—

In the appeal of 1893 it was suggested that Whit-Sunday should be annually set apart for special services for the promotion of Christian unity, and that this practice should be accompanied by (a) an interchange of pulpits as far as it is practicable; (b) the united attendance of all believers within any given district at holy communion; (c) the delivery on the part of Christian ministers of at least one sermon in the year calling attention to the good works of some branch of the Church other than their own, especially those whose many excellencies are obscured from the observation of their fellow-Christians by the prejudice and suspicion engendered by centuries of strife.

It is with profound satisfaction that the undersigned recognise the fact that the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of Dublin, and other prelates issued special encyclicals to the clergy urging them "to use in church with the collects on Whit-Sunday the prayer for unity from the Accession Service." The suggestion of the Conference was further supported by the Moderator of the Church of Scotland, as well as the president of the Baptist Union, the presidents of the five Methodist Conferences, and other influential Nonconformists.

The undersigned further record with gratitude the many indications on both sides of the Atlantic of the continued progress of the reunion movement. They would especially refer to the rapid growth of social unions and city councils for the purpose of taking concerted and collective action for the promotion of those social, philanthropic, and public objects of Christian endeavour which can be most effectively dealt with by the co-operation of all Christians within a given area.

Amongst other indications of the growing force of the movement represented in the Grindelwald conference they would refer to (a) the remarkable action of the leaders of Congregationalism in New England with reference to the acceptance of the Lambeth proposals. (b) The recent encyclical of Pope Leo XIII., which, whilst full of the haughty assumption of Rome, does nevertheless include Protestants within the great Christian brotherhood in a manner new to such encyclicals. (c) The decision by an overwhelming majority in favour of the organic union of the different bodies of Methodists in Australia at the General Australasian Wesleyan Methodist Conference held recently.

In conclusion, they would respectfully urge upon the Churches of Great Britain and Ireland:—(1) The importance of continued intercession for the outpouring of the spirit of love upon the troubled waters of our religious differences. (2) The further formation of social unions with the object of concerted action on the part of different Christian Churches for the solution of the great problems which confront earnest Christians everywhere, on principles common to the whole brotherhood of believers. (3) The adoption of periodical conferences between all Christian ministers in given districts for purposes of counsel and encouragement, with the special object of discouraging waste of effort by the overlapping of Christian agencies. (4) The earnest cultivation of the belief that by frank and brotherly conferences, differences may be overcome, mutual concession may be made, and such a desire for real unity cultivated among all Christians that we may see Our Lord's Prayer fulfilled that all his disciples shall be one even as He and the Father are one.

EARLY MORNING EFFORTS.

Could not a great work be done for God by earnest Christians in the centres of industry holding open-air meetings during these summer mornings before our toilers commence work? As a rule we direct our efforts to late evening meetings, when the majority of the men we want to reach are in the public-houses or places of amusement. Why not do as our fathers did—rise early in the morning, and preach the Gospel of our salvation to the great masses of working men who in streams are to be found converging towards different centres of work?

Since the 1st of May last this plan has been tried by Mr. Hogben and his band of helpers connected with The Welcome Mission, Portsmouth. There the men commence work at the docks at 7 o'clock. Shortly after six on Friday mornings the Mission band gathers at the Unicorn Dock Gates, through which some 4000 men are passing, to proclaim a free, full, and present salvation for all who will yield to be saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Many tokens of blessing are known of; Christian men have been helped and strengthened by testifying to their fellow-workmen of the great things which God has done for them. Some of the worst of sinners have stayed to listen, and felt the power of Divine truth. Each Friday morning the interest manifested by the men has increased, and Mr. Hogben's testimony is that this meeting is of greater value in reaching and helping men than any other he holds during the week.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The report of this Mission is full of the interest of living and fruitful service. Praise is rendered to God that the needs of the year have been fairly met, and that the hearts of many have been stirred on behalf of this work among the poor, the tempted and tried. The director says:—"With larger means more might have been done; but we rejoice in what has been accomplished, and look confidently forward to greater things in the year before us. The work of the St. Giles' Christian Mission divides itself into three great divisions:—The general mission work, touching the adult poor around us, helping them spiritually and physically as they have need, and including active relief work. The Sunday-school and Band of Hope work, for the poor untaught and neglected children, who are not only taught, but helped and cheered in many ways. The prison mission work, dealing with men, boys, and women who have been committed and who are really desirous of reformation and a return to honest industry."

Details follow of the work at the Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, the Seven Dials Mission, and the various branches in Brewers' Court, Drury Lane, and Brooke-street. Many incidents are given, illustrating the need of the people and the results of the work. The four large Sunday-schools and the children's services are also shown to be full of encouragement.

The efforts among discharged prisoners, boys and women, are described, and Archdeacon Farrar's weighty testimony is given at some length. The cases cited show that this work among "men who have done wrong" has been greatly blessed. With regard to the whole work, the eloquent words of the late Lord Chief Justice Coleridge are quoted:—

> The heart of England is not callous to the sufferings of her children. Men upon these subjects are for the most part either indolent or ignorant. They do not think about them; they do not know about them, and they turn away from them as they turn away from other unpleasant subjects, not with a cynical, callous, determined dislike, but simply with unawakened sympathy, because they do not know, have not studied, and do not understand the matter. But once let the heart of England be really aroused, let the conscience of this country be really excited and convinced that it is its duty to do something for those whom its own wealth and prosperity, and the consequences of its own wealth and prosperity, have in many cases made what they are, and I do not believe for a moment that there will be any lack of workers in the cause, or any lack of enthusiasm for the great objects which that cause undertakes to follow. As far as I know history, there has been no time in which the general duty of the community towards the unhappy has been more widely recognised, nor in which it has been more seriously, honestly, and heartily performed.

Possibly no problem has been found more difficult of solution than that contained in the question—"What shall we do with our criminal classes?" Some years ago the query was answered by shipping the worst class of them to distant lands. But now this method of transportation has for some time past been abandoned; and, like the poor whom "we have always with us," the criminal class is very much in our midst; and society, for its own protection, must deal seriously with the matter.

Any organisation, therefore, which has recognised the difficulty and grappled with it, by close and constant personal dealing, is worthy of public sympathy and support. Such an organisation is the St. Giles' Christian Mission, which during the past eighteen years has aided about 60,670 discharged prisoners to make a fresh start in life; exercising an oversight and influence over those receiving its help, which cannot have been other than of great benefit to the community at large.

There is yet much remaining to be done. Thousands only need to know of such an agency to be willing to aid it. We trust this statement will reach many of these. The need is very great. The possibilities of rescue work are vast. Surely these workers will not be allowed to turn a deaf ear to any pleading for a way of escape. The director, Mr. William Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, W.C., will gladly afford information as to the work of the Mission.

WOMEN OF ORISSA.—Miss Gleazer, writing from Cuttack, says:—"The need all round Cuttack, even within comparatively short distances, is so great. It makes one's heart ache to think of the many, many women, within a circle of fifty miles of here, who have never heard the old sweet story of Jesus and his love, and this is acomparatively well-worked district. Oh, if the women of England could just for one short week be planted here right in the midst of heathenism as it is, not as it is written about in such books as the 'Light of Asia,' they would realise, as they have never done before, how awful is the need."

THE "SCOTTISH SPURGEON."

Writing under this title in the Pietermaritzburg magazine, Rev. D. Russell reviews the results of the recent mission held in the town by Messrs. McNeill and Burke. He says:—

"Mr. McNeill is probably the hardest hitter that has ever preached in the city, and yet no one took offence; for, as he himself put it, 'he knew nobody, and it suited his purpose to know nobody.' Mr. Burke's singing of the Gospel fairly electrified his listeners. Wherein, then, lay the charm of his singing? Much, no doubt, may be put down to his well-trained and splendid voice, but especially to the fact that people felt they were listening to a sanctified man singing for God.

"One of the most striking things in connection with the visit of the evangelists is the fact that we hear so little about actual conversions. Mr. McNeill declares that he does not look for immediate results, and that he is rather opposed to 'ticketing' converts, as he terms it. Undoubtedly much harm has been done by such statements as are frequently made about the number of the saved; but, on the other hand, much good is done when it is known that some have actually been saved.

"The results of the Mission may be summed up as follows: (1) The union of the churches for an assault upon the strongholds of worldliness. (2) Bringing together of Christians for worship, praise, and prayer from all denominations. (3) Getting large numbers to listen to the Gospel who are outside the influence of the churches. (4) A striking presentation of the bright and manly side of Christianity by a Christian humorist and orator. (4) Comfort to ministers and Christian workers."

AN ALPINE VALLEY.

High o'er some Alpine mountain
We see at break of day
The herald of the morning
Arise in gold and grey;
Between us lies the valley
Deep in its purple night,
Above us lifts the glory
In floods of dawning light.

We cannot count the dangers
Which there may intervene,
The torrents, crags, and snowdrifts
The light alone is seen;
But though we long to reach it
And gain the other side,
We dread the sombre valley,
The swollen torrent's tide.

And thus, as on life's journey
We see the Eastern sky,
Bright with the golden dawning
Which tells that Christ is nigh—
We long to rise and meet Him
Far in the morning glow,
Where, flooded with the sunlight,
We leave the night below.

And still we hear beneath us
The deadly torrent's roar,
And think how chill the waters,
Ere we are safely o'er.
A little while of waiting,
Some dawning day will find
That we have crossed the valley,

THE SABBATH IN VENICE.—This week I have noticed with pleasure in the shop-windows of the tailors, haberdashers, drapers, and hatters of Venice, the following notice:—"The public are hereby advised that on Domenica (the Lord's Day) August 5, and on each Lord's Day and festa recognised by the State thereafter, this shop will be closed punctually at mid-day." Thus the example set first by King Humbert and the Emperor of Germany, and then followed by the grocers and sellers of the food-stuffs in Venice, has become contagious, and soon we may hope to find all classes in Venice keeping holy the Lord's Day. The clause in the notice above which says "and festas recognised by the State" is especially noteworthy, for it means that the thousand-and-one saints' days of the Church of Rome, which have been like all else belonging to that deceitful system, a source of mischief to Italy, are to be totally disregarded. The Church of Rome is the corrupter of Italy; the State is the purifier.

HAPPY SUMMER-TIME,

AMONG OUR CANADIAN CHILDREN.

Our dear fellow-workers will be glad to hear tha the smile of our Heavenly Father continues to abid upon our humble efforts year by year. In ou Home Mission we seek to carry forth the Gosp message to thousands in the East of Londo by voluntary helpers assisted by converts in th mission, and by ladies who gather with us, to vis hospitals and infirmaries, where hundreds of th very poorest of our fellow-citizens lie sick or dyin Many a bright jewel is being added to the Saviour Kingdom, as well as earnest young workers becor ing fitted to labour in far-off fields or in Ea London.

CANADIAN DISTRIBUTING HOME.

A quarter of a century placing out among the brave, industrious farmers our young people, mak our summer visits now a great variety and pleasu Their own magazine, called Home News, keeps the posted up in our movements, so from day to day welcome a great many of both boys and girls. The visits give one more opportunity of close questio ing as to their soul's welfare. These interviews followed up by the gift of a little Testament, and prayer commending them once more to the Lo We long and pray that a still deeper work of gra may be seen amongst them all, and for this we your fellowship, kind reader, by prayer.

The harvest has commenced; every hand in t land is fully at work, ingathering the splen crops, which are seen everywhere as we visit homesteads. Far views are glorious to beho golden grain, showing the goodness of God to m and beast. These fields of fulness are broken the grand old woodlands attached to every fa stead. Near views, at the sun-setting as we retu show us the tired farmers after the long day of t and our boys here and there riding their ho homewards.

We had just taken the evening meal at the h of one of our boys. Who was he? One found the neighbouring narrow street to 29, Beth Green-road, by a converted Jew who labou among Jews. His parents were penniless, but with twelve obedient children. The father beco a Christian, and now the God of Abraham opened up a way for them all.

The farmer, a godly man, could not speak hi enough of our boy. He was treated as one of family. Our experience is that Jewish lads thorou enjoy Canadian outdoor life and the cultivatio the soil. With God-sent workers hundreds of the dren of the persecuted Jews could be trained t the fields of Palestine in due time. Ten of t are now doing well here.

Our two visitors, both young men, hoping in time to become missionaries, are out in different tricts, each with a good horse and buggy, ta counsel by letter or telephone over any difficult with the superintendent of the distributing h One visitor writes, after being on his tour se weeks, "As yet he has not found a case requiri be removed or sent back to the Home." The o "That he finds many of our growing-up chil hungering for the Word of Life. Also many, eighteen, planning their future; they especially prayer at these turning-points in their lives." faith is in God, whilst we cry to Him that they become wholly his, having Him for their Keeper Guide in every fresh step in their young lives.

HOTEL MEETINGS.—Many readers travelli Switzerland may be glad to know that Mrs. B Clibborn proposes to hold hotel meetings at Chamo Villars, Zermatt, and other places. Particulars be had from 3, Rue Auber, Paris.

SOUTH AFRICAN "KESWICK."—Rev. A Murray has issued his letter, calling the annual vention at Wellington, October 26; the subject "Christ our Life." He says:—"Three though suggested. We need first to know what that in itself, and how it can be seen and known of For this we will look to Christ's life upon ea the flesh. We then must see that we unde God's way of making us partakers of this life the conditions of our reception of it. We s know Christ living in our heart by the Holy And last we consider what the object is with that life takes possession of us—that Christ ma the instruments with which to carry out his re ing work. We see Christ living in heaven to work through us."

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

(From a Correspondent.)

There is generally something so personal about he Ladies' Meetings that they can only be described s a family gathering. This makes them difficult o report, for, however carefully those in charge of hem have been led to prepare before God for them, has often been that the atmosphere of the time as led to a different line being taken, so as to keep the current of the need of the week.

We have always found these meetings to be very al times of direct dealing with God, and the result om very simple speech has made us again and gain feel how wholly the work is for Him.

Mrs. Bannister and Miss Nugent were again in arge. Several helped in prayer—Lady Carbery, rs. Tottenham, and Mrs. Noble. Each day the quests for prayer were more numerous, which is rely of itself a sign that the Lord is felt to be ar. Each meeting was generally opened with ing over them, so that none might be left out.

On the first day, Mrs. Bannister began by saying w deep and real our need was, and yet how little knew of it! and we all required to be roused up see how deep it was. But how often had we con- ered the other side of it, and thought of the need the Lord Jesus with regard to us, his need of ing us cleansed and fitted for his service, his d of having in us those who would understand follow his mind, and sympathise with his pur- es?

She read Isaiah xiv. 2, which had been, she , very much in in her mind for these meet- s. It opened with the yearning now in many rts: "Oh, that Thou wouldst rend the heavens hat Thou wouldst come down." He has come n indeed, but yet to each, individually, there st be some marked coming forth. When He es forth, how will it be? To the sinner He es, with his wounded hands, empty, so to speak, ing his substitution; to the forgiven one He es, with a fan, that he may purify and nse. Then Mrs. Bannister unfolded all He ld do with his fan. Turning first to Isa. xli., showed how the Lord-breathing would wither n the goodliness of any service which was at all he flesh. Are we willing for this? for this ering even of goodliness?

he then turned to Isa. viii. 4, taking the words will regard my set dwelling place" (margin), showing how He must treat his dwelling place, what He would make of any soul which was his ple. First it was conspicuous as his chosen e (2 Chron. vi. 4-6). Is it evident to all, that st is dwelling in you? Second, it would be a e of prayer, and where the poor and needy ones ld gather to meet Him (Isa. lvi. 7). Do people e to you if they want Him? Third, it will be ace of sacrifice, as 2 Chron. vii. 12. Are you gs ready to give Him the best of your life and erty? Fourth, it would be a House of Rest, , for ever." Can Jesus find a rest in you? annot rest where there are self-will and self- ing.

e closed with the picture of a desecrated le, in 2 Chron. xxix., with untrimmed lights, closed doors, so that none could enter. Which re shall be our life? The temple occupied by bringing forgiveness and healing to all the or desecrated, without Him? It is a matter gent importance whether He is in possession t, whether we work at home or abroad, for it t us the heathen want, it is Jesus. Shall they im in us?

e next day the requests were again numerous, hen Mrs. Bannister read Gen. xxxii., with its austible teaching, pointing out briefly how the which broke Jacob is the deep yet open secret coming not only prince with God but with men. Nugent followed, and although nothing had planned as to the passages chosen, it was felt the Spirit's finding that her message so fitted he previous one. She said that underneath e yearning these meetings were witnesses of, was one great cry, "Oh, for a touch from my a conscious grasp of His exceeding near- " And therefore she took the subject of the of the Lord, showing how intensely He de- that contact, made it, and maintained it! were two classes of "Touch"—the Touch of ng and the Sovereign Touch. The first was ted by Matt. viii. 3, ix. 20, and Luke vii. 39; he second by the instances where eye, ear, tongue, feet, were touched by the Mighty Lord who empowers after He cleanses, and does both by the same means—living and unfettered contact with Himself. The last point was the instance of the woman made straight. She had no definite disease; she was only bent. Were any there in that condition—crooked, earth-borne, and bending? They, too, needed his touch to straighten as well as to cleanse. His sceptre is a sceptre of straightness. Nothing crooked can endure under it. Oh, that many might mark his words, "Ought not this woman to be loosed!" Might that ring on, and ring on until they had come to Him to be made straight by his hands Who had already cleansed and claimed them. May that "Ought not" of his ring on yet!

Each time the little room was fuller than it could easily hold; yet each time the message came like a personal message, so that each seemed there to receive alone the word from her Lord.

Thursday and Friday were also days in which the presence and power of the Lord made the Lecture Hall a very sacred place.

Thursday Mrs. Bannister undertook the requests, and Miss Nugent spoke on Isa. lxiv., saying how that passage had been impressed on the minds of several in view of this week. She took the words, "When the melting fire burneth" (v. 2), and traced the use of fire in the Scripture, showing how each person in the Godhead was in connection with it, and dividing it under the three headings of (1) fire against us—a subject we dare not leave out, for it was only by knowing God's view of sin, and seeing how He Himself treated it, that we could know its nature; (2) fire for us, and (3) fire in us. Fire was a sovereign power; none could kindle but God; but our part was to gather the fuel, so that the blessed Spirit might have material to work upon. If we need Him to consume and cleanse, provide the fuel by confession; if we need Him to empower, gather the fuel of his Word and a yielded life.

This was followed by a brisk word from Mrs. Amanda Smith, who first sang "Keep close to Jesus," and then addressed the young lives present, of whom there were very many, on letting go the past under the Blood, and gave a very telling exhortation on avoiding the books which doubt God.

The closing day, Mrs. Bannister spoke on Rom. xii., joined with Rom. xiii.: the consecration, followed by practice. She entered into many very plain, and, alas, needful, words about common failings. She was especially strong on the emphatic words, "Owe no man anything," speaking of our debts to God; our debt—spiritual—to all around us; and also the money debts which we should be deeply careful about. Her words on this will not soon be forgotten—strong, piercing, practical. This last meeting was closed by very many taking part in prayer, and the expressions used by many told how very really the message had gone home.

Now all has passed, and as we look back we see two things very strongly—how very deep our need is, and how very real his power to meet it. May He bring to each one's remembrance as He promised, "Whatsoever I have said unto you."

It may be mentioned here as a matter of interest to the many who have thankfully heard Mrs. Bannister, and who love her for his sake and his voice through her, that in obedience to her growing sense of the Master's own yearning for the heathen, she is about to open a small missionary training home, where about twelve will be received and fitted. May we ask the prayer of those who have received blessing through her that this effort, made in conjunction with her family, may be guided and maintained in the power of the Lord?

THE LETTER GUILD.—"Your love has made the love of Jesus so real to me," wrote one day a young woman to her friend. If there is any one else who would be glad thus to be helped and befriended, will she write to Mrs. Cattermole, Eleigh Water, Chard, Somerset.

CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, JERUSALEM.—In a recent letter to a friend Dr. Sandreczky writes: Our work is extending in the new home; many patients must be sent away. The people like our house, as they live in it like a family. Christians of all denominations and Mahommedans live together. We have now six operative cases. One boy is from Jaffa, one from Hebron, one from a far village. As they must be long in the Hospital, they come inside Christian influence without preaching or compulsion. One boy sings hymns and chants, the girl reads the Gospel, the nurse explains, and the amputated boy passes his time in reading the Gospel. Anna and Mary, my daughters, help. I thank God they sacrifice themselves to his work

CONVENTION AT DUFFTOWN.

This annual event took place on Wednesday week. Though some showers fell during the day, the weather on the whole was favourable to the comfort of those attending.

There were, as on former occasions, three gatherings during the day. The forenoon meeting, devoted to Bible exposition, was addressed by the chairman, Rev. J. C. Smith, who referred to four leading conditions or preparations for victory in the Christian conflict, namely, Refreshment, as seen in Exodus xvii.; Surrender, as seen in Joshua v. and vi.; Prayer, as seen in 1 Chron. xvii. and xviii.; and Anointing, as seen in Matthew iii. and iv.

The leading address was given by Mr. J. Butland, who traced in a most comprehensive and edifying manner the purpose of God in liberating a people to serve him, based on such portions of the New Testament as Luke ii. 71-75 and Colossians i. 12, 13, and strikingly illustrated by the deliverance of Israel from the bondage of Egypt, as recorded in the Book of Exodus. God would carry through his purpose, and all the power of the Pharaohs could not hinder it. "Let my people go, that they may serve me," was finally fulfilled, not a hoof being left behind; and then, later, all they brought out with them was to be the willing-hearted offering to Him for his service.

The afternoon gathering was addressed by Mr. J. A. Smith, evangelist, who spoke some timely and telling words on the responsibility and privilege of all Christians to testify, live, and labour for the one Lord, and by Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, superintendent of the Mission to Lepers in India. As an eye-witness of what the Gospel and the kindness of friends have done for the poor lepers, Mr. Bailey, in tender and touching words, told the story and work of the mission. It was truly pathetic and subduing to learn that there are about half a million lepers in the world; that a very large proportion of those gathered into the asylums and homes seem, by the grace of God, to become true Christians, and are received into Church fellowship, the elements in the Lord's Supper having to be put into their mouths, their hands, in many cases, being eaten away by the fell and incurable corrosion; and that the little acts of Christian devotion performed by them are touching proofs of the reality of their confession. The glimpse we got of the awful sin and suffering of the millions fairly broke our hearts.

The evening meeting was addressed by the chairman, Rev. J. B. Cumming, who read and gave some practical and pungent remarks on the 24th Psalm; and by Mr. Butland, who earnestly urged young and old to follow the example of Moses, who chose God and the tribulations of God's people rather than the pleasures of sin for a season. The leading address was given by Mr. W. Ferguson, of Kinmundy. Mr. Ferguson was a new voice at our Convention, and his earnest, clear, and persuasive address on "Soul-thirst, Soul-satisfaction, and Soul-cleaving," as taken from the 63rd Psalm, will abide with us as a precious, practical memory and power. Mr. Ferguson conducted an after-meeting, at which some stood up in token of blessing received. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

EVANGELISM IN GALWAY.

A fruitful fortnight's mission has been brought to a close in the Congregational Church, Galway. The meetings, conducted by Messrs. F. G. Eland and R. Miller, have proved a source of much blessing. One lady visitor stated she had never spent so pleasant a holiday in her life; moreover, two of her sons professed conversion during the mission. Another lady professed receiving blessing through the singing of a hymn. This special effort has shown that there is need of a Gospel mission conducted on undenominational lines. Friends are praying that an earnest evangelist may be sent here.

There is conducted in the vestry of the above church on two days in the week a sewing-class for the benefit of the poor women, who are taught sewing and knitting. Only a very small number can now be supplied with work owing to lack of funds. The work done, being imperfect, is sold for less than the cost. The object is to help the very poorest, to encourage industrious habits among them, and to tell them the "story of the cross." The ladies' committee contemplate organising a soup kitchen for them during the coming winter, and will require a small stove and some crockery, etc. Mrs. Burton, Zarifa Lodge, Galway, will receive contributions.

"THE HAVEN."

The Haven is a rescue home, situated in the densely populated region of the Borough. It is a branch of the wonderful Mildmay work, and is superintended by two ladies of large experience. The doors are ever open to those who seek shelter. Some who enter are little more than children—alas! that it should be so! Young women from almost every part of England have found refuge here; ay, and from Ireland and America.

The premises are in Trinity-street. Passing down a short passage, I climbed a flight of stairs and found myself on a small landing. To my left was a mission-room, capable of seating a hundred people, where bright, cheerful services are held on Sundays and during the week. Facing the staircase is a door, which opens into a large circular room, which is surrounded by kitchen, sitting-room for young women, private room for ladies in charge, and a storeroom.

Climbing another flight of stairs, I came to a large airy dormitory. In the centre was a stove, and down each side a row of cosy-looking beds. At the end was the matron's room, and what I called the "hospital ward," where invalids were nursed. It is often needed, for sometimes serious cases of sickness occur, when good medical attention and careful nursing are cheerfully given.

"Waste not, want not," is a maxim in daily practice here. The management is exceedingly economical. Though the expense per head is very small, there is nothing like stinginess, and the food is both wholesome and sufficient. Everything is made the most of, and sympathetic friends cannot do better than send parcels of old or new clothes, and other household necessaries to 60, Trinity-square, London, S.E.

Some people object to homes of this kind, on the ground that they are like prisons, and the rules are too stringent. This is a real home, the law of which is love. The workers display firmness without severity, tenderness without weakness, vigilance without suspicion. On the side of the inmates there is service without servility, liberty without license, friendliness without familiarity. The walls of the private room are adorned with simple presents given by the young women at different times, and I fancy their price to the possessors is above rubies.

A sweet spirit of Christian cheerfulness pervades the Haven. The religious life of the workers is bright, thorough, and hopeful; they labour heartily for the "glory of God," believing for the salvation of the worst, knowing from past experience that Christ is mighty both to save and keep. Consequently those who enter the Home find it a place of hope; they begin to realise that even for them there is a future of peace and service. The majority of those who pass through the Home realise a change of heart; as they nearly all remain faithful in after life, it is clearly the effectual working of the Holy Spirit.

Many of the girls pass out into service, giving great satisfaction to their employers, and intense joy to the Christian workers. They are followed by letters of advice and sympathy, which often prove "a word in season." They have brought courage and strength to many a fainting heart; frequently they have been blessed to the salvation of souls.

As I returned to the din and roar of the streets I thought with pain of the thousands of sisters who, having erred and strayed like lost sheep, were friendless and alone in the great metropolis. What awful loneliness theirs must be? Is it any wonder that they drown their misery for the time in drink? Forsaken as they are, is it any marvel that they forget the tender care of the "Good Shepherd" who came to seek and to save? Then I rejoiced that at the Haven loving hands were stretched out to rescue the perishing from sin and despair; that hearts yearned with Christlike compassion to give weary wanderers a "shelter from the storm."

EXTENSION IN NEW GUINEA.

Sir,—I wish to thank some of your readers for contributions kindly sent to me through the L.M.S. for my work here in New Guinea. I should like at the same time to enlist the sympathy and practical help of a much larger number in the new work which we are now undertaking. There is a very large native population in British New Guinea, variously estimated at half a million to a million and a quarter. How to reach these multitudes, who are quite willing, and in some cases anxious, to receive a missionary, has long been with us an anxious problem. South Sea Island Christians have nobly "come to the help of the Lord" in New Guinea, but the great distance from their homes, and the trying effect of the climate upon them, limit their power and usefulness very much. We have long felt that the innumerable villages of New Guinea, especially in the interior, will only be reached and evangelised by New Guineans. Already we have proved the practicability and usefulness of this agency. Thirty-five New Guinea teachers are at present working among their countrymen, and with many tokens of God's presence and favour.

To increase the number and enlarge the efficiency of our New Guinea helpers, we are now building a central college to which young men from every part of the Mission may be sent. At the request of the directors and my brethren in New Guinea, I am taking charge of this work. The responsibility of it is very largely my own. Will any of your readers help me and so have a share in carrying the knowledge of our Saviour Jesus Christ to the hearts and homes of New Guinea? The L.M.S. has made a grant for the initiatory work, but I am looking to my personal friends by their sympathy and their gifts to make our beginning more effective and complete.

In the meantime the forest has to be cleared, roads made, students', teachers' and missionaries' houses to be erected, and the church and schoolhouse built. We want to make the place attractive, so as to overcome the native love of tribal isolation, and make a Christian home under new conditions. The New Testament is already printed in the language that will be spoken at the college station, so that all who come will have that portion of the sacred Scriptures opened to them. We want them to be well trained for the work of Christ among their countrymen. Thirty-four years of missionary work has given me a strong faith in the power of the Gospel to raise and save the wildest and most savage men.—Yours in faith and hope,

W. G. Lawes.

AFRICAN NATIVES AND THE SABBATH.

One of the workers in the Zambesi Industrial Mission in Nyassaland writes:—

I find in the Z.I.M. the work I like and what suits me. There is one thing, however, that grieves me constantly, and it is this. Nearly 150 Angoni work for me six days of the week, and on the seventh day, they go to the neighbouring Yao villages and work there for their food. Being chiefly slaves they require to deliver up the greater part of their earnings while here to their headmen and chief in their own country, and are allowed nothing for food.

Instead of their coming here to hear God's word, they all require to go and work for their food. Their huts are but thirty yards from here, and if they were free, such a lot of work could be done among them. They get no rest for their bodies and have no opportunity on that day of hearing the Gospel, and they break one of God's commandments.

I cannot go and say "Do not work on Sunday," they must have food. Truly there is something wrong if we cannot give utterance to all the commandments. If these people work for me through the week, I think the Lord means me first to attend to their souls on Sunday, even before the villagers. If we take labour from them, surely they ought to have more in return from us than calico. Every evening as many as choose come up to the house for worship, when we sing a hymn or two and Mrs. Wilson or I gives a short address. They seem very interested and attentive, and it is to a large number the first time they have heard the Gospel.

I merely wish to state that £10 would set 100 Angoni free every Sabbath day for six months. We could buy maize, and store it, then after the morning meeting hand out every man his ration, and the same after the evening meeting. Thus the whole of every Sunday could be used in giving the Gospel to these people, and who can tell the influence it may have when they return to their far away homes.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Rev. Newman Hall, D.D., has promised to visit Sunderland and preach on behalf of the association on Tuesday, October 16.

The weekly meetings of the Brighton Young Men's Own Class, Workers' Preparation Class, at the Y.M.C.A. have been continued with much interest.

The Sunderland Y.M.C.A. has received encouraging tidings from Mr. David Callum, late a member of the association, now a missionary in Song Pan, China.

The annual report of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. for the year ending 30th June last shows that the membership of the Association was 9954, an increase of 590 over the former year, and the income amounted to £4694, the balance in hand, after paying all accounts, being £1 13s. 7d.

One of the most effective agencies of the Devonport Association, is a class for the training of Christian workers, conducted by the general secretary. Examinations were recently held and certificates awarded to several students who satisfied the examiners as to efficient knowledge of the bases of the Christian faith. The Bible Reading Union also proves itself a veritable entrenchment against the inroads of spiritual apathy, much blessing having been given to the members.

The States and Canada are not slow to invent or to copy, but up to the present they have failed to follow the lead of the "old country" in the matter of providing pleasant Homes for Y.M.C.A. men in search of health and rest. A recent issue of an American Association journal calls attention to the fact, and urges the desirability of the establishment of such "Homes of Rest," and says that "Homes of this character would unquestionably be appreciated and would give added interest to the work of the associations in this country" (America).

The Tottenham Association has arranged a united open-air evangelistic demonstration in which the following organisations are to take part:—Y.M.C.A. P.S.A., Salvation Army, Gospel Union, Working Men's Mission, Baptist Bible Class, and Blue Ribbon Bible Class. The meeting is to be held in the Mount Pleasant Fields on Sunday afternoon (19th) at three o'clock. The prayers of all God's people are asked on behalf of this effort, that God may make it instrumental in bringing some of the strollers of our streets and fields to the Lord Jesus Christ. The work of the association as a whole has considerably improved, and great things are expected this autumn.

By invitation of Sir Douglas and Lady Fox, the secretaries and delegates of the South-Western District Union met in the charming grounds of Coombe Springs, Kingston-on-Thames, on Saturday week, for their quarterly conference. It was termed "a special jubilee meeting," and members were also invited to it, a hundred responding. Tea was served on the lawn, followed by the conference, over which Sir Douglas presided as chairman of the Kingston and Surbiton district. In the course of a few opening remarks he referred to the need of the district, surrounded as it was by so many things calculated to tempt young men into the paths of evil, such as the racecourse and the river. The honorary secretary, Mr. C. H. Lee, pointed out that in the South-West Suburban District Union, which comprised eight branch associations, great progress had been made. Mr. G. A. Barrett introduced the subject of "Jubilee Lessons," and the discussion which followed was taken part in by Messrs. Glass (Baltimore, U.S.), Lomer, Captain Cundy, Arthur Hills, and delegates from Egham and Epsom, Mr. Hind Smith summing up the observations and concluding the discussion.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The annual Y.W.C.A. Conference in Ireland will be held on September 28.

Miss Daw has been accepted to go out and join Miss Orlebar for the work of the Y.W.C.A. in Calcutta.

The Y.W.C.A. has only at present ten branches in the Punjab—five for English-speaking and five for Hindustani-speaking members.

The Continental division reports a revival of the little work commenced in Wiesbaden four years ago. A prayer union amongst English young ladies has been formed, which meets regularly for prayer and Bible reading.

MARSEILLES.—Madame Lermet, the devoted worker of the east end of this town, has incorporated her work with the Baptist church lately established with Pasteur Colin for minister. Mrs. Frankland continues her arduous hospital and other work. "Christian union and brotherly love" being the grand aim of her life.

Letters to the Editor.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I have read with much interest the letter of Rev. Edward Storrow on "The Salvation Army in India" in your issue of May 31, and Mr. Booth Tucker's reply to it in your issue of the following week. Judicious readers will have formed their own opinions as to whether or not the reply was a fair treatment of the question.

As the work of the Salvation Army in Travancore has been carried on for the most part in that little portion of the field where my work lies, I beg to be allowed to make a few remarks on the question raised by Mr. Storrow. Travancore has a total area of 6730 square miles. That portion of it in which the Salvation Army has hitherto been at work has an area of less than 200 square miles. Within this small bit of territory, of about twenty miles in length and averaging about nine in breadth, the London Missionary Society has ninety congregations with 13,000 adherents on their registers, and 130 schools attended by 5700 scholars. It is, of all parts of Travancore and of India, by far the most thickly studded with Protestant Christian congregations. Nowhere in India in the rural parts is there within an equally small area such a numerous agency at work for the evangelisation of the heathen as is here employed by the L.M.S. Yet it is to this small field that the Salvation Army has come with such force.

It is difficult to get exact statistics of anything relating to the Salvation Army in India. We look in vain into the annual report; and the Army does not unite with other missionary societies in publishing statistics. How many officers the Army has at work in this small field at present it is difficult to say, but at the beginning of this year there were, according to The War Cry, not less than 112. Now Mr. Tucker, about the close of last year, in the November number of The Review of the Churches, told his readers that in India with its area of a million and a-half square miles, and a population of 280 millions, the Army had then "no less than 110 European officers," and "some 320" native officers. Thus at least a fourth of the entire force was concentrated on this district of less than 200 square miles, which, before the S.A. came to it, was more amply supplied with Christian workers than any other rural district of equal area in India.

The L.M.S. in the different departments of the work here—that is, in the congregations and schools in the outstations, in work in the Zenanas, and in the high school and college at Nagercoil head-station—employs four European missionaries, seven native ministers, and 242 unordained agents.

But not only has the S.A. come into this district, it has stationed officers in many villages where the L.M.S. has had congregations and schools for years. This has been and continues to be a source of much trouble. How can we expect anything but discord when one missionary society settles its agents in a village of some sixty or eighty houses where another society is already at work? This is what the S.A. has done in many cases in this district.

Mr. Tucker tells us that he has drawn up at some pains what seemed to him a reasonable set of regulations by which the S.A. was prepared to abide, on condition that they were accepted by the missionary societies; and he adds, "I regret to say, however, that the secretaries have not thought it possible to accept them, and we have been obliged to go on as best we could." We might look for a moment at what the nature of this has been. Some time ago, a member of one of our congregations who had had a quarrel with his wife, and had put her away, wished to marry another woman, and asked us to proclaim the banns. This, of course, we declined to do. Still the man persisted in carrying out his determination, and arranged, with the consent of the other party, a day on which the tying of the tali (in the opinion of the people the essential part of the marriage), should be performed. At the tying of the tali the two S.A. officers located in the place were present, and solemnised the occasion by reading the Scriptures and conducting prayer; and this man, whose sin they thus countenanced, was almost immediately afterwards employed as one of the paid agents of the S.A. At least other two of the officers at present in the employ of the S.A. are men who have been expelled from the membership of our churches because of irregularities of this kind. The case of one is similar to that narrated; while the other has taken to wife the wife of another man. Both cases are well-known to the responsible officers of the S.A. here.

Thus do our S.A. neighbours help us in the exercise of church discipline. There seems to be constant efforts made to take away our agents. Within the past few days two of our agents have assured me that they have quite recently been offered, by responsible officers of the S.A., exactly double the salary that they now receive from the L.M.S. I may say at this point that I have frequently been applied to for work by officers of the S.A., but to avoid all occasion of friction have never employed one.

On June 14, one of our people, who for several years has allowed us the free use of a piece of land for our school, agreed to sell me, for Rs.40, another piece as a site for a house for our agent in the place. A week later, when the native assistant missionary with a view to completing the purchase of the land was in the act of measuring it, the owner was called away by the officer in charge of S.A. affairs in that quarter, who, as he reported, offered him Rs.60 for the land. The result was that only after a delay of some days were we able to purchase the land at Rs.45, though Rs.40 was the price which the owner originally asked. I might give many similar instances of annoyance did your space permit.

In this way have the S.A. officers been going on "as best they could," sometimes succeeding and sometimes failing. If the "reasonable set of regulations" which Mr. Tucker drew up left room for this sort of thing, we need not wonder that "the secretaries have not thought it possible to accept them."

A. L. Allan.

RITUALISM.

Sir,—In reply to your three correspondents, permit me to say:—

1. How is it possible to account for the devoted lives and peaceful deathbeds of many High Church folk except by the fact that Evangelical Truth, in which I include a living faith in a personal Saviour, is now the chief cause in the High Church revival?

2. Mr. Forbes says that he walks eight miles on Sundays to "hear the true principle of Reformation Protestantism," while possibly quite near at hand, accompanied by regrettable æsthetic excrescences, he would find to his utter amazement the preaching of "Jesus only," even without "Baptismal Regeneration."

3. From ten years' experience at Kensington, with both the Pro-Cathedral and the Carmelite Chapel in the parish, I find it generally acknowledged that since the "externalisms" of the parish church, under Mr. Glyn, with earnest evangelical preaching, have been brighter than in the days of the old church, "going over" to Rome has been of the rarest occurrence, which was not so formerly.

4. Mr. Sankey leads the way in all sorts of pleasant musical attractions. He even sets the Lord's Prayer to music. And our good brethren the Salvationists indulge in the most tremendous "externalisms," and yet none of their followers are denounced as placing "Ritual" in front of Christ.

5. I find the Romanists have a much greater fear of our services being bright and attractive to unconverted people than of those which are bald, dull, and repulsive, especially to young people, though evangelically orthodox to the last degree.

6. I maintain that if devoted evangelical people, instead of running away when they see a cross or a candle, would hold on to the church for a time, and by sympathetic gentle persuasiveness seek to get these things replaced by individual personal love for the "Light of the World," who died on the real cross, then souls would be won for Christ and the Church saved from that blank ceremonialism which may easily come over her.

7. Though I do not myself preach "Baptismal Regeneration" as some would understand it, and though in my early days, when worshipping with the Brethren, I was baptized as an adult at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, yet I now find that infant baptism is one of the greatest levers to press the need of real conversion and a baptism of the Holy Ghost.

8. By "Baptismal Regeneration" most churchmen that I know mean that blessing which a child receives inwardly in answer to prayer when the outward rite is performed in obedience to our Lord's command. What this blessing is I don't know, but I thank God for it and often find its effects are very lasting.

9. In reference to "pictures," I plead guilty to recommending their use for both inside and outside of church and mission hall as powerful evangelising agents. As to "painted windows," our means have never justified me making any suggestion.

10. Neither the executive of the Church Army nor I personally have ever "permitted the introduction" of crosses into our labour home chapels, but on several occasions, at the request of friends, we have removed them.

11. I have never been a member of the English Church Union, though I know many of them who are far more keen on simple evangelical preaching than they are on what is called the "Catholic movement."

In conclusion, I press that without conceding in any essential point of true evangelical doctrine, it is possible to work with devoted men who differ from us on "non vitals," and that in this way the unconverted will see how we "Christians love one another," and will wish to become our Lord's disciples.

W. Carlile,
Founder and Hon. Chief Sec. of the Church Army.

STUDENTS' CONFERENCE, KESWICK.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to point out to you a misunderstanding which has somehow found its way into the account given in last week's Christian of the Students' Conference at Keswick?

Your reporter inadvertently makes me state that it was "the determination of the S.V.M.U. to extend its operations to all colleges," etc. He should have written, I.U.C.U.

The primary object of Wednesday's meeting was to explain the nature of the Inter-University Christian Union (I.U.C.U.), and to rouse interest and secure funds in order to enable it to carry on its work. The I.U.C.U. was founded last year at Keswick, but hitherto, owing to lack of money, had done little or nothing. Its object is to extend Christian organisation (prayer meetings, Bible readings, etc.), not merely missionary organisation, to all colleges, and it needs funds in order to send a travelling secretary to open up these various centres. While it is true that Mr. Byrde, as representing the S.V.M.U., spoke in behalf of that organisation, and the money subscribed was divided equally between the I.U.C.U. and S.V.M.U., yet the meeting was called primarily for the purpose of setting before the students the object, scope, and needs of the I.U.C.U., and getting funds to enable it to become an aggressive institution. The meeting of Friday, July 27, which was held in the dining marquee at the camp, and which you reported in your issue of Thursday, August 2, was exclusively to set forward the claims of the I.U.C.U. Although I am travelling secretary of the S.V.M.U., I was on the Executive Committee of the I.U.C.U. I add this in order to make clear that the two organisations are really distinct.

To the minds of those who are engaged in the management of this new effort to widen the sphere of Christianity among students, the distinction, which your report loses sight of, is of sufficient importance to call for an express statement of what the I.U.C.U. really is, and what it hopes, under God, to effect. It is with this object that I write on behalf of the committee, with the hope that as you have so materially helped us already by the full report you have given of our meetings, so you will see your way by a notice of some kind to make clear to the public that while the S.V.M.U. aims at rousing missionary interest in our colleges, the I.U.C.U. endeavours to establish in these institutions definite Christian organisations.—

Yours truly, Frank Anderson.

[Rev. Louis Byrde, a past member of the S.M.V.U. Executive, writes to us in somewhat similar terms.]

GIPSY SMITH IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

Gipsy Smith, according to the Christian Weekly of Adelaide, has had a very remarkable mission in that city. "The mission began in the Archer-street Church on Sunday, June 10. It soon became evident that a mighty man of God was in our midst. Concern for the soul's welfare became general; the interest deepened; the good news spread. Very little advertisement was needed; those who received blessing told their friends; men and women besought their unsaved neighbours and acquaintances to come to the house of prayer. Towards the close the intensity of feeling was wonderful. On Saturday night, June 23, a fellowship meeting was held, and it was a sight never to be forgotten. The church was nearly full of Christians eager to speak for Jesus. In a little over an hour 100 testimonies were given, mostly from new converts, and such testimonies! The prayers of many years were answered then. The address of the evangelist was a trumpet-call to forward work, and it cannot remain unheeded. On Sunday, at the afternoon working men's service, there could not have been less than 800 men present. Such a gathering has never been seen in Adelaide before. In the evening the church was crowded. Every available bit of space was occupied. The vestries were packed; hundreds of people were standing in the aisles: and an overflow meeting had to be conducted in the adjoining lecture-hall. And the spiritual results were proportionate. On Monday afternoon, Gipsy Smith, accompanied by the Archer-street choir, visited the Stockade, and spoke to about 100 prisoners."

MARGATE.—A daily prayer-meeting is held at twelve o'clock for forty-five minutes, at 4, Cecil-square. It is under the auspices of the Free Churches in the town, and has been a means of blessing to many.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The congregation of Trinity Free Church, Glasgow, appear to be determined to prosecute the call to Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, notwithstanding his expressed intention to decline it.

By the will of the late Professor Sandeman, Perth has received a sum of £10,000 to institute a free library. The town will eventually receive an income of £900 per annum from the deceased's estate.

Mr. Alexander R. McGown, of Alexandria, has been appointed by the Foreign Missions Committee of the Church of Scotland as a missionary teacher at their flourishing station, Domasi, Blantyre, South Africa.

Considerable interest is felt in Aberdeen with respect to Dr. Joseph Parker's forthcoming visit to the city. Dr. Parker will address meetings on Sept. 3, 4, and 5, and he will be entertained to a public breakfast on Sept. 6.

The new Eye Infirmary at Greenock, which was the gift of Mr. Anderson Rodger, Glen Park, Port Glasgow, is proving a great blessing to the town and district; Dr. Cluchie, the resident oculist, passed no fewer than 100 patients through his hands on Saturday.

A well-known figure in social, municipal, and political circles in the North has been removed by the death of Mr. Peter Esslemont, ex-M.P. for Aberdeenshire. He had filled the posts of Sabbath school-teacher, manager, and elder in connection with the Belmont-street U.P. Church in Aberdeen.

Good evangelistic work has been done this year at Dunoon. The meetings are held at the shore, and have been largely attended. This was particularly the case when Rev. John Robertson, of the City Temple, Glasgow, preached. A deep impression was made, and fruit has been gathered among the visitors.

Both the Established and Free Church Presbyteries of Glasgow have unaminously passed motions, expressing the strong desire of the Churches generally for a speedy and peaceful settlement of the coal strike, which is causing ever-increasing privations to thousands of women and children in the mining districts.

It is stated to be the intention of the relatives of the late Mr. John Hope, W.S., to question in the Court of Session the deed by which Mr. Hope created a gigantic trust for the carrying on of temperance and anti-Popery work in Scotland. The reason which is given for the reduction is the mental condition of the deceased at the time he executed the deed. By the deed Mr. Hope devoted £84,000 and the lands of Broughton, Gayfield, and St. Leonards, whose value is estimated at £130,000, for the purposes of the trust.

A very interesting and successful evangelistic meeting was held in a large tent near the racecourse of Paisley on Sabbath. It was attended by the show people, many of whom are in the town just now at the Fair. They were very attentive to the earnest addresses which were given by well-known local Christian workers, and spoke feelingly of the interest that is now manifested in their spiritual welfare in the different towns they visit. Even in this unpromising field the Gospel is not without witnesses of its power.

The Lord Provost of Glasgow has interested himself in trying to bring about a settlement of the coal strike, and has induced the miners to offer to return to work at a reduction of 12½ per cent. on last year's rates of wages, on the understanding that this wage is to be the minimum one for the next eighteen months, and that a conciliation board on the English model is to be formed. The non-associated coal-owners are likely to accept these terms, so that about 10,000 out of the 90,000 miners now on strike may return to work, but the others will have to fight the matter out. The distress in many parts of Scotland is appalling.

The death of Mr. George Galloway, chemist, Inverness, which occurred early on Tuesday morning, has removed from our midst (says The Inverness Courier) one of the oldest, best known, and most respected of our citizens. Mr. Galloway was in his eighty-fifth year. Of quiet and retiring disposition, he never took an active part in public affairs, but his upright character, his intelligent interest in a wide range of subjects, and his courteous, unassuming, kindly nature earned universal respect. He was a citizen of the solid, unpretending, intelligent type, which makes its mark for good in a community. A member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, he was much interested in religious work.

A CIRCULAR, signed, amongst others, by the Bishop of Chester, the Duke of Westminster, and Mr. Chamberlain, has been issued, explaining the objects of the Association formed at Grosvenor House for the reform of public-houses. Considering that the public-house is a necessity, they are anxious to reform rather than abolish it. They wish to do away with private gains in the management of taverns—in short, to municipalise the drink traffic.

IRISH NOTES.

Mr. J. J. Browne, of the London City Mission, has been addressing with good effect a series of meetings in Kilkeel, and also in Rathfriland, co. Down.

The Baptist church at Lisnagleer has done good evangelistic work in the district around. There are some seven or eight preaching stations where services are conducted.

Much regret is felt at the announcement that the Bishop of Ossory, owing to ill-health, has had to cancel all his engagements for some months to come, and again to leave his diocese.

The Belfast Christian Endeavour Union now numbers 900 members, showing an advance for the year of thirteen societies and 586 members. Rev. Henry Montgomery has been elected president of the Union for the ensuing year, and Rev. J. D. Lamont vice-president.

A Home has been opened at the popular seaside resort of Howth, since June last for members of the Y.M.C.A. It is hoped it may prove a great blessing, not alone to Irish Y.M.C.A. men, but to English and Scotch men who may visit the Green Isle. Full particulars on application to the proprietor, Y.M.C.A. Home, Howth, co. Dublin, Ireland.

The forthcoming convention which will be held under the auspices of the Dublin branch of the Evangelical Alliance will meet in the last week of September. Among those who will give addresses or otherwise take part in the proceedings are Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, Rev. E. W. Moore, Viscount Bangor, Professor Laidlaw, the Archdeacon of Glendalough, Rev. John Bond, Rev. W. J. Dawson, the Archdeacon of Cashel, Rev. C. B. Sawday, Rev. Richard Hobson, Dr. R. McCheyne Edgar, etc. There will also be a special conference on Christian reunion in Ireland.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

In Adelaide, during the recent depression, a Christian Endeavour free soup-house fed nearly 16,000 hungry men. It required 4000 gallons of soup, and more than 10,000 loaves of bread.

The South Wales Calvinistic Association has passed a resolution rejoicing in the work done by the Christian Endeavour Society, and recommending the establishment of a branch in connection with every church.

A united gathering of the C.E. Societies at Stansted and Bishops Stortford was held in the grounds of Stansted Hall, by permission of Mr. W. Fuller-Maitland, M.P. At the evening meeting, Rev. Eustace Long, of Stansted, presided, and addresses were given by Rev. J. C. Davies and Mr. Crisp.

In connection with the Three Counties C.E. Union, a convention was held at Lake-street, Leighton Buzzard, on Bank Holiday. At the afternoon conference, four papers were read—"My Salvation," by Mr. Loosley; "My Prayer," by Mr. H. Mander; "My Bible," by Miss Pratt; and "My Consecration," Mr. H. Horsler. A public meeting was held in the evening. Addresses were delivered by Miss Prior, Mr. Culley, Rev. C. M. Hardy. The different societies joined in a consecration service, conducted by Rev. F. J. Flatt, Dunstable, secretary of the Union, who gave an address on Consecration in its three-fold aspect—(1) Separation from sin and selfishness; (2) Dedication to Christ; (3) Appropriation of Christ.

PUBLIC-HOUSE VISITATION.—The L.C.M. Magazine gives a report of the work of its special missionary in the public-houses of Westminster and St. Giles, who speaks of labouring in some 580 taverns, and 250 eating-houses which environ Trafalgar-square, pleading with souls in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God. "Many gainsay my message, or obtrude their own version of the Gospel, but very little personal opposition is met, save from bigoted Irishmen and Secularists; and many tokens of welcome are manifest, both by customers and those who serve them. The landlords, as a class, show much favour, for many of them admit the claims of Christianity."

ADVANCE IN SOUTH AFRICA.—A conference was held on Friday at the Memorial Hall, London, between the Colonial Missionary Society and a deputation from the Congregational Union of South Africa. Mr. C. Jukes Knight, of Burghersdorp, explained the position of the churches in South Africa and their desire to initiate a "forward movement" by establishing churches where the English-speaking population is increasing, but where adequate provision is not yet made by other evangelical bodies. Principal Cave, Messrs. W Russell, and others took part, and the proceedings proved of an interesting character. A resolution was adopted pledging the society to hearty co-operation with the South African Union. The need of young, earnest missionaries was strongly enforced.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

In connection with the Bible Christian Conference at Bristol, a great temperance meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall.

Encouraging success is attending the effort to establish a White Ribbon Publishing Company in connection with the B.W.T.A.

A demonstration in connection with the West London Band of Hope Union was held in the grounds of Fulham Palace on Bank Holiday. Most of the 8000 members attended.

The Organisation department of the B.W.T.A. reports 300 new branches formed during the past year, and within the last two months twenty-five new branches have been started.

At the forthcoming Church Congress, temperance will occupy a prominent place in the discussions. The expected speakers include the Bishop of London, Sir Benjamin Richardson, and Archdeacon Farrar.

Mr. D. A. Thomas, M.P., speaking of the Bill for the Abolition of Grocers' Licences, told an interviewer that he was receiving petitions urging him to go forward both from the temperance party and the publicans, probably from diverse motives.

Some temperance reformers may be congratulating themselves that no new licences are being granted in London. While, however, this is true, many of the present publicans are doubling their accommodation by a general enlargement of their premises.

The Irish Women's Temperance Union is carrying on its work vigorously. A most successful meeting was held last week, under the auspices of the Union, in the Guildhall, Londonderry, and was addressed by Miss Richardson, B.A., and Miss Hanna, the secretary of the Union.

The National Temperance League entertained the members of the British Medical Association at a breakfast during the annual gatherings at Bristol. Dr. Long Fox, who presided, said medical men might be great temperance reformers, and they should be abstainers if they had the true interests of their patients at heart.

"John Law" describes in The Fortnightly her experiences of "A Week on a Labour Settlement," the largest co-operative Labour settlement in New South Wales, a short way from Sydney. There are 450 people (100 families) on it, and they are controlled by ten gentlemen in Sydney, together with an hon. secretary, a Government official. One of the essential features of the scheme is the total prohibition of the sale of alcoholic liquor on the estate.

The annual meeting of the North London Gospel Temperance Council was held at St. John's Gymnasium, Holloway-road, N., on Monday week. There was a large gathering, presided over by Mr. T. Freeman, F.G.S., F.S.S. The report for the year spoke of great advances made in connection with Gospel temperance work. Two new societies have been started, 250 pledges taken, and forty conversions had taken place. Mr. Robert Sawyer spoke of his work in connection with railway servants in various parts of England.

Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D., of Brooklyn, speaking on "Total Abstinence for Young Men: How to Make it General," says: "To make our young men total abstainers, we must convince them of four things: 1. Nature is against alcohol; it is not the natural fruit of the vine, but the product of decomposition. 2. The Bible is against alcohol. 3. The Church is against it, and must be; a tippling pastor is worse than any ten grog-shops. 4. The State is or ought to be, against alcohol, as alcohol is against the State; it is against law."

A clarion call to battle against the liquor traffic has gone forth from the Christian Endeavour Convention that has been in session in Cleveland (Ohio). The Friday was a red-letter day in the war against the saloon. On that morning, over 30,000 earnest, energetic, enthusiastic Endeavourers listened to, applauded, and with prolonged bursts of cheering endorsed, one of the most marvellous orations ever delivered by John G. Woolley. The scenes in the hall during his address will never be forgotten by those who witnessed them. Nearly every sentence he uttered was received with approval.

Lord Wolseley, in a recent letter to the grand secretary of the Good Templars, says: "There are yet some great enemies to be encountered, some great battles to be fought, by the United Kingdom, but the most pressing enemy at present is 'drink.' It kills more than all our newest weapons of warfare, and not only destroys the body, but the mind and soul also. All movements therefore intended to meet this foe commend themselves to me, and no one can wish the 'Good Templars' success more sincerely than I do. I am glad to say that we have now but little drunkenness in the army—less of it in our ranks than in any other class of Her Majesty's subjects. To this fact I consider we owe much of the improvement in every respect that has been steadily going on for the last twenty years."

PERSONALIA.

The Archbishop of Dublin is, we regret to hear, suffering from an attack of erysipelas, and is confined to bed.

Mr. John Shrimpton has been suffering from neuritis for several months, and is still confined to his chambers at 3, Victoria-street, S.W.

Dr. Lunn is going to America in November to attend the convention of the World's W.C.T.U. and to organise the temperance campaign round the world.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Varley intend sailing for Australia in November. He is now in the midst of a mission in Malvern, in connection with the Free Church of England.

Rev. John McNeil, the Scoto-Australian evangelist, has written a treatise entitled "The Spirit Filled Life," of which Mr. Macartney, of Melbourne, speaks very highly in an introduction. It is being published by Mr. Hutchinson, of Melbourne.

Dr. Talmage has begun his lecturing tour in the Colonies. His first appearance in Auckland drew an immense crowd. Dr. Talmage is courageously evangelical, and he has the secret of saying familiar truths in a fashion which may offend units but which delights crowds.

Dr. Muir Sandeman, son of Rev. R. J. Sandeman, of Free St. Andrew's, Edinburgh, has been appointed medical missionary at Swatow, where he will find a great work giving room to all his gifts and energies. He will assist Dr. Lyall, in whose hands the hospital has quite outgrown the strength of a single man.

Mr. T. B. Pandian, having completed his mission here, has returned to India per s.s. Peninsula. He is thankful to God for his wonderful dealings during his stay in this country. He goes back to India to preach the Gospel to his heathen countrymen, and hopes to be supported by the prayers of many English friends.

Archdeacon J. R. Wolfe, who was needing a change and rest, went for a sea trip to Japan in April to meet Mrs. Wolfe, returning to Fuh-Chow after several months spent by doctor's orders in California. Mrs. Wolfe is much improved in health, though still very weak. The Archdeacon writes that the short trip set him up completely.

Miss Ling, of the C.E.Z.M.S., at Ooty, India, has achieved a triumph. She has almost completed a translation of one of the Gospels into the Toda language. This is the first attempt that has been made to give the Todas the Bible in their own language, and Miss Ling deserves great credit for this noble undertaking.—The Record.

Mr. F. S. Arnot will sail on Saturday for Africa. Various things have concurred to make him feel that his presence is required. Messrs. D. Crawford and Thompson must speedily be relieved. Besides he hopes to mark out a new and shorter line of route from the East Coast to Garenganze. His friends, on account of his health, sought to dissuade him from going back to Africa, but he seemed to feel that he was called to go and that prompt action was urgently called for. Many will pray that he may be led aright and his health sustained.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has been very strongly urged to take a long rest. He has suffered increasingly during the last two years from the incessant strain of overwork. He is very reluctant to yield to this kindly pressure, but it is probable, under all the circumstances of the case, that after a long stay in Switzerland he will go to Italy, and will not return until the end of this year or the beginning of next. Under these circumstances his numerous engagements for the autumn, to his great regret, must all be cancelled.

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer was liberated from Byculla Prison (otherwise known as the House of Correction), Bombay, on Friday morning, July 20. The time officially fixed beforehand was eight o'clock, but a few minutes after six the superintendent sent word to him that he must depart immediately. The object of this sudden order was presumably to prevent a reception being given to him on his exit by his friends. In this the change of hour was partially successful. Pandita Ramabai had come from Poona for the occasion, and a number of missionaries and others went to the prison. In order to obviate disappointment in some degree, Alfred S. Dyer returned with Man Sukh Lal to the prison precincts at a quarter to eight. The expedient to prevent any sort of demonstration on Alfred S. Dyer's release was in harmony with the determination to keep from him while in jail any news of the outside world. A telegram of sympathy from the standing representative committee of the Society of Friends in Great Britain, as also a telegram from the Monthly Meeting of Friends in London, with which he is particularly connected, were withheld from him till within a few moments of his release.—Bombay Guardian

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. James Oatey is working a tent in West London. After a stirring mission at Acton, he pitched his tent last week at Wembley, where, with the aid of a few earnest young helpers from Shepherd's Bush, good work has been done.

Mr. Matthew Burnett revisited the Great Assembly Hall last week, and delivered a Gospel temperance address to a large audience. At the close of the address a number of persons signed the pledge. Subsequently another large meeting was held in the vestibule.

Messrs. McNeill and Burke began their evangelistic work in the Antipodes by a short mission at Hobart Town, Tasmania. They were expected to reach Melbourne about July 20, and it was hoped they would remain there several weeks before passing on to South Australia.

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver are the missioners at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, during August. From the very first meeting it was plainly seen that God was with them, and at every service as yet there have been increasingly distinct evidences of Divine blessing.—W. R. Nicoll.

Hyde Park.—Mr. Oscar Owers writes that "the blessing on my labour in Hyde Park has been so very encouraging that I intend continuing even through this and most of the month of September. Will you, therefore, ask your readers to give me a constant place in their waiting before the Father? The services are on Tuesday, Thursday, and twice on Sundays."

Devonshire.—During the past fortnight Mr. R. H. Parsons, of the South London Mission, has been holding a series of Gospel meetings at the Baptist Chapels of Uffculme, Culmstock, and Prescot, in Devonshire. The gatherings have been largely attended and of deep interest. The addresses were full of Gospel truth and earnest entreaties, and it is believed that much good has been done.

Howard-street Gospel Mission, S.W.—Some twenty-eight workers of this Mission went to Epsom on Bank Holiday by van. An open-air meeting was held in the town, and a large crowd was soon gathered to listen to the Gospel. Several men who came out from the public-houses under the influence of drink and came and stood in the crowd were rather noisy at first, but they soon quieted down, and for an hour and a-half a capital service was held.

Forest Gate.—Mr. J. J. Sims has continued his mission with much interest. Four meetings were held on Sunday, and though the tent seats some 800, numbers were outside. Not a night passes without conversions. One aged man told a worker that he and his wife had both been saved. A minister also stated that his church had been set on fire through the work at the tent. Mr. Day, who has been helping, spoke to twelve persons one night who had previously found peace. With all this there is a marked absence of excitement.

Rev. Thomas Cook has had remarkable services in Wesley Church, Melbourne. The church, which holds from 1500 to 2000 persons, has been crowded, and even the mid-day services had audiences 1000 strong. Mr. Cook preaches the familiar evangelical doctrines. After his sermon he appeals to all who have resolved to accept Christ to signify that by rising. All who thus declare their willingness to accept Christ pass into the inquiry-rooms, where they are counselled by a band of Christian workers. Every night great numbers in this way commit themselves definitely to Christian life.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.

Whilst the neighbourhood of the Welcome Home, Ratcliff-highway, on Tuesday last, was in an excited state, and Satan seem to revel in it, a blessed time was realised in the crowded foc'sle, the occasion being the monthly muster of the crew. The text for the month, "Rise, He calleth thee," proved a practical keynote, and pointed addresses upon it were delivered by the Misses Child, Tuck, and others.

Amongst other items of deep interest was the story of a young Russian. After he was converted at one of the Christmas gatherings of the Home, and being led step by step by God, he is now on his way to New York, there, at their persistent call, to work among the Russians, who are defraying all expenses.

METHODISTS AND GAMBLING.—At the Conference of the Wesleyan Reform Union held last week at Barnsley, a resolution was passed—"That this meeting of delegates deeply regrets the spirit of betting and gambling which so extensively prevails, and especially deplores its hurtful effects upon young people, and would urge upon all ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and members of Christian churches to do their utmost in denouncing this great evil; and would also urge upon Parliament to adopt such measures as would tend to remove this reproach from our country, and that the supplying of betting news through the postal telegraph be discontinued."

OBITUARY.

MR. BENJAMIN CAWOOD.

In the death of Mr. Cawood, which took place on Sunday, the 5th inst., at his residence, Clayton-road, Newcastle, Tyneside Methodism loses one of its best known and most successful workers. Few men have had greater spiritual success in the pit villages of Northumberland and Durham than Mr. Cawood has met with as evangelist. His simple style, earnest manner, and knowledge of song made him a great favourite with all classes. For some time past he had been in feeble health, and unable to take any active part in the work he had so much at heart.

REV. R. SELKIRK SCOTT, D.D.

This honoured leader in the work of the United Presbyterian Church died at his residence in Dowanhill, Glasgow, on Monday, 6th inst., at the advanced age of eighty-two. For twenty-one years the Secretary of the Home Mission Board, and a prominent figure in the Church, he did much to stimulate the Christian zeal and liberal activity of its members. By his efforts and kindly, genial manner, he was successful in a high degree in pushing forward the many schemes of the Church which had for their object the extension of the Gospel; and his death will be mourned by a very large circle throughout the whole Presbyterian Church. Some time ago he caught cold, and it developed into pleurisy, from which he never properly rallied. He leaves a widow and grown-up daughter.

PASTOR REINMUTH, OF GRATZ.

In our issue for August 2 we gave Mrs. Reinmuth's letter as to the illness of her husband. Many will hear with sorrow of his departure to be with Christ. To the last he bore calm, bright testimony to the faithfulness of God. He would fain have lived for the sake of his loved work, and his wife and six children, but realized to the end that God's will must be best and his way right. He longed much over his work in Styria, praying that suitable workers might be raised to carry it on. After a night of great distress and partial unconsciousness, he fell asleep on Thursday morning, August 2, just as the beams of the rising sun reddened the peaks of the mountains, he loved so much, opposite his window. He had expressed his wish to be laid to rest in the Tyrol, where he had done much evangelistic service, should he be called home there; and accordingly his body has been committed to the dust in the little Protestant cemetery of Innsbrück. Mrs. Reinmuth intends returning to Gratz on September 1 to continue the work as the Lord may lead. She will be thankful for the prayers and fellowship of the Lord's servants.

REV. JOHN MAY, SALTASH.

The venerated pastor of the Baptist Church in Saltash, Cornwall, has just passed away at the age of seventy-nine. In 1840, when the enthusiasm of the Churches for the West Indian Mission work was awakened by the fervent pleading of the emancipator William Knibb, Mr. May and his young wife went to the West Indies with Mr. Knibb and a band of newly-enrolled missionaries, and laboured for ten or twelve years in Jamaica. In the period which immediately succeeded the emancipation, when the planters used every endeavour to keep the negroes still in practical bondage, it was the privilege of the missionary to shield and guard the liberated slaves, and thereby to become himself the object of hatred and persecution. In the stupendous difficulties of fostering, educating, and Christianizing these slaves, Mr. May bore a large share. By his death there has passed away the last survivor of that noble band of men who laboured hard as fellow-workers with William Knibb, Thomas Burchell, Walter Dendy, and others. In 1854, having been forced by a serious illness to leave Jamaica, caused by his arduous labours during the cholera visitation, Mr. May on his return to England again took up the work at Saltash, and for twenty-five years continued the ministry of the Baptist church there, until he was compelled by infirmity to retire from active labour in 1879.

WESLEYAN MEDICAL MISSION, FATSHAN, SOUTH CHINA.—Dr. Wenyon is able to report that, as of old, the healing art is the key to innumerable doors of opportunity. The well-to-do young men who were his neighbours brought him all sorts of impossible cases to trouble him, hunchbacks and confirmed cripples. One day it was a blind beggar, and the doctor performed a successful operation for cataract. One day there was a powder explosion, and the Chinese doctors advised that the most merciful course to the survivors was to drop them into the river! They sent for Dr. Wenyon instead. He raised ten of them up to health, and he received a tablet upon which he was described as "the angelic healer from beyond the seas."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

November 18 has been fixed as "Temperance Sunday" for Manchester.

Rev. J. C. Krœnig has returned to Hull after his recent operation, and has resumed his ministerial duties.

The mid-day churchyard services in St. Botolph's, Aldersgate-street, continue to attract large audiences. Amongst the speakers last week was Sir Richard Temple.

Rev. E. Abbey Tindall, of St. James's, Didsbury, is doing excellent work in this suburban parish, and is a welcome addition to the younger Evangelical clergy in Manchester.

The sunset services being held on Sunday evenings at Emmanuel Church, Plymouth, have been so successful that the vicar contemplates continuing them through September.

The Worcester Diocesan Conference will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, October 24 and 25. Amongst the subjects set down for discussion are Welsh Disestablishment and the Church Patronage Bill.

The Bishop of Worcester, having been attacked for his friendly intercourse with Nonconformists, has, in a published letter, declared his intention to tell his critics what he thinks of their statements in his next visitation charge.

Rev. J. B. M'Govern, who has succeeded Canon West as vicar of St. Stephen's, Chorlton-on-Medlock, was formerly a Roman Catholic priest. He has done good work in Manchester, and is greatly respected by his brethren. He is a very decided Evangelical.

Two more of the devoted missionaries on the deadly West African coast have broken down through the unhealthiness of the climate. Rev. W. E. Godson, who went out to Lagos with Bishop Tugwell, has had a bad attack of fever. He is now somewhat better, while Rev. S. S. Farrow, of Ibadan, Yoruba, has had to be invalided home.

Archdeacon Denison, preaching at Wells Cathedral on Sunday, from Luke xv. 13, said there was a "parable within the parable." The inner meaning of the word "substance" he took to be "the fear and the love of God, the foundation of all our hope of better things to come. This we spoil and mar by conceits, vanities, and the inventions of man's earthly learning." The "riotous living" is within us, in the mind, in the heart. There are secret things of God about which there is no more room for controversy than about the being of God Himself. We must not meddle with the secret things of God, but hold fast to the Word of God.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Dr. John Hall, of New York, preached last week at Buxton Church.

A mission church, capable of seating 250 persons, has been erected at Fyfield.

Rev. Hugh Elder, of Salem Church, Massachusetts, occupied the pulpit of Greenfield Chapel, Bradford, on Sunday week.

Rev. Frederick Hastings, who has accepted the pastorate at Markham-square, Chelsea, will commence his duties on Sunday next.

A new church has been formed at West Hanningfield, as a result of evangelistic services carried on for twenty months by Mr. W. McNaughton.

Rev. L. P. Jacks, of Renshaw-street, Liverpool, has preached his farewell sermons prior to entering upon a new sphere of labour in Birmingham.

Rev. W. S. Houghton has been appointed general secretary of the Warwickshire Union, and Rev. F. Moore, secretary of the Birmingham District.

Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, of Boston, U.S.A., preached at Grafton-square Church, Clapham, on Sunday, and will preach at Enfield on Sunday next.

A missionary conference will be held at the Town Hall and Pavilion, Brighton, from November 8 to 16, in celebration of the centenary of the London Missionary Society.

Calls.—Rev. J. C. Johnston to Belgrave, Torquay; Rev. D. G. Truss, of Dalston, to Cam, Glos.; Rev. J. A. Lees to Hood Memorial Church, Bridgeton, Glasgow; Rev. James Neil, of Forres, to Salford.

Resignation.—Rev. J. Charteris Johnston, of Queen-street, Leeds.

BAPTIST.

A new Baptist chapel has been opened in one of the principal streets of Belper.

During the past year fifty-five candidates have been baptized and received into Grays Church, by Rev. T. Heywood.

A new place of worship has been erected at East Greenwich for the church formed two years since by Rev. W. E. Wells.

The work at Vicarage-road, Leyton, is growing and extending. New school buildings are being erected for 500 scholars.

Eleven persons were immersed by Rev. J. Huntley, on Sunday week in the river at North Bradley, in the presence of many spectators.

A chapel is in course of erection at Rothesay-road, near the Ouse Embankment, Bedford, for the church assembling at Providence Chapel.

Saltash Church has celebrated its centenary. Rev. G. Macfaydean stated during his fifteen years' pastorate ninety-one members had been received.

Interesting meetings have been held at the Tabernacle, Cargate, Aldershot, in connection with the laying of the foundation stone of new school buildings, by Messrs. W. Johnston, M.P., and W. Olney, and Rev. E. Poole-Connor.

On Sunday week twelve persons were baptized at Nettleton, near Marshfield, in a pond, by Mr. J. W. Seaman. Earnest addresses were delivered by Messrs. J. R. Huntley and J. Swann. Several hundred persons were present to witness the ceremony. Two were baptized on Sunday at Bathford.

Foundation and memorial-stones of a new chapel at Teddington were laid by Rev. Charles Spurgeon, Rev. V. J. Charlesworth, Mr. F. W. N. Lloyd, and Mrs. Chas. Deayton. Rev. R. J. Williamson is the pastor; during the past year fifty-one have been admitted to membership. There is a population of 5000 within a radius of half a mile, and the present places of worship within that radius only seat 1900.

At Clarence-road Chapel, Southend-on-Sea, the sixth anniversary of the pastor, Rev. F. A. Hogbin, was held on Sunday week. During the year twenty-four members were added, and the Sunday-school had increased from fifty-two to 102 scholars. On Wednesday there was a public tea and meeting. Mr. F. L. Edwards, who presided, promised £50 if the church raised two £70 in two years, thus wiping out the debt of £190.

Mr. S. B. Burton, of Newcastle, who has generously consented to visit Kingston, Jamaica, in order to ascertain the best course to be taken in relation to the repairs and sanitary improvements absolutely necessary in the Calabar College buildings, and generally to confer and advise with the staff and managing committee of the Calabar Institution thereupon, sailed by the Royal Mail steamer Don, from Southampton for Kingston.

Calls.—Rev. C. T. Allen to Cottenham, Cambs.; Rev. H. J. Wileman to St. Albans; Rev. F. E. Miller to Earlstown, Warrington; Rev. D. Matthias to Sirhowy, Tredegar.

Resignations.—Rev. George Wyard, of Stevenage; Rev. W. H. Ibbetson, of Lindley, Huddersfield.

METHODIST.

A new chapel has been opened at Southport.

A new Wesleyan chapel is being erected at Arthington, Yorks.

Memorial-stones have been laid of a new chapel at Flixton.

Memorial-stones of a new chapel were laid last week at Gayton-le-Marsh.

The Free Methodist Chapel Relief Fund has received £580 from the Wesley Memorial Fund.

At the Wesleyan Reform Union conference, Barnsley, Mr. Thomas Johnson, of Fieldhouse, Stairfoot, was elected president for the ensuing year.

The Methodists of various names, in and around Darlington, have been holding united camp-meetings, and the presence and power of the Lord have been felt.

In the Bible Christian conference, held this year at Bristol, Rev. Samuel Allin, of Exeter, has been elected president, and Rev. Daniel Murley, of Chichester, secretary.

The Fernley Lecture of next year is to be delivered by Rev. James Chapman, of Harrogate, and twelve months later it is expected that Dr. Moulton will undertake the duty.

The London Primitive Methodist Council has resolved to appeal against the decision of the Marylebone stipendiary magistrate prohibiting open-air services at the corner of Solent-road and Mill-lane, West Hampstead. They contend that this ruling, if upheld, would practically put an end to all street-preaching in London.

Rev. George Patterson has issued a series of tables dealing with the income of the Wesleyan Missionary Society for the past eighteen years, more particularly with the income derived from all ordinary circuit and district sources. He shows that while the income in 1876 was £108,780, it had fallen in 1883 to £93,928, and in 1893 to £90,793.

Methodist reunion has been seriously discussed at Grindelwald by four ex-presidents—Primitive, New Connexion, Bible Christian, and Free Methodist. There was a consensus of opinion that reunion of Methodism in Great Britain would be a splendid object lesson, and that this opportunity was at hand. All were agreed that there were no vital grounds for longer separation, and a strong feeling was expressed for the immediate appointment of a representative committee to deal with the question. Later a private meeting of the presidents of the conferences was held to consider whether further steps could be taken, and it appears possible that a remarkable departure in favour of Methodist reunion may be one of the first practical results of the Grindelwald conference.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. B. Meharry is on holiday in Norway.

Rev. G. M. Smith, of Gloucester, is preaching at Hull during August for Rev. J. J. Mackay.

A scheme is under consideration for the amalgamation of the Myrtle-street and Mount Pleasant Presbyterian Churches, Liverpool.

During Dr. Pentecost's absence the Sunday services at Marylebone are being conducted by Revs. Dr. Lorimer (of Boston), W. Ewing (of Birmingham), W. Young (of Manchester), and Dr. McGaw.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor is having a month's holiday at Ballater. He resumes his ministry on Sept. 2. During his absence his pulpit is being filled by Rev. Mr. Ross, Bridge of Allan, Rev. Mr. Adamson, of Crook, and others.

The following Presbyterian churches in England are without a minister:—Haltwhistle, Newbiggin, Millwall, Newington (Hull), Ellison-street (Jarrow), High-street (Whitehaven), Millfield (Sunderland), Bow-road (London), Nottingham, Douglas, Kendal, Southwark, Etal, Tulse-hill, Moseley-road (Birmingham).

The amended Home Mission rules of the Presbyterian Church state that for the future the Church Building Fund will make a maximum grant of £1400, instead of £750. The Home Mission Committee is empowered, where there is a reasonable prospect of the congregation in a densely populated or working-class neighbourhood becoming self-supporting, to provide three-fourths of the cost of a new church.

Calls.—Rev. J. E. Adams, B.D., to Dreghorn; Rev. J. G. Kelly to Irvine; Rev. J. Webster to Alyth; Rev. W. McKeown to Cork; Rev. J. Bonnellie to Darvel; Rev. R. T. Barr, of Dalry, to Bressay.

Resignation.—Rev. R. J. Rees, of Pwllheli.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Mr. Bramwell Booth held meetings in the Town Hall, Eastbourne, on Bank Holiday. The visit was a success; the behaviour of the townspeople towards the Army being kindly.

The West-end Shelter in Burne-street, Edgware-road, although close to the scene of the small-pox outbreak, has not recorded a single case within its walls, although some hundreds of the poorest class resort there nightly.

A serious religious riot is reported from Quebec; the Salvation Army in company with the French Anglican and French Baptist Missions being attacked. The assistance of the police was required, and much damage done.

General Booth returns this week from his short tour in Holland, Copenhagen, etc., to start again for the principal Yorkshire towns. He is making arrangements to remain in the United States until the spring. He will visit all the principal centres, conduct meetings, and open newbuildings. Nine years have elapsed since his last tour in that country.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Putney, Mr. George Lobjoit, aged 31, a devoted worker at Union Church and in the Putney Adult School.—Mr. M. H. Houghton, aged 25, only son of Rev. W. Houghton, of Guildford.—At Pontselly, on 4th inst., Mrs. Evans, the mother of Revs. Herbert Evans and Justin Evans.—At Rauds, Rev. W. Skelly, aged 48, who lately resigned the pastorate of the Baptist Church at Raunds owing to ill-health.—At Crail, on 6th inst., Rev. James Anderson, aged 53, minister of the old Parish Church, Edinburgh.—At Upton, Retford, aged 90, Mr. W. Small, a valued class-leader.—At Wardle, Mr. T. Bamford, aged 73, for nearly sixty years a preacher of the Gospel.—At Tavistock, on 3rd inst., Mr. J. D. Dingle, aged 71, a devoted class-leader.—At Hurst Green, Rev. R. J. Wallace, for thirty years vicar of the parish.—At Pembroke, on 10th inst., the oldest and best known minister among the Calvinistic Methodists, Rev. William Powell, who held the office of moderator of the assembly, celebrated his jubilee in 1887, and continued in the ministry for fifty-six years.—At the Manse, Urquhart, Elgin, on 6th inst., Rev. Gordon Ingram, aged 65, for thirty-five years minister of the parish.—At Wiesbaden, on 13th inst., Rev. J. R. Graham, aged seventy-four, vicar of St. Jude's, Bristol, where he was loved for his active service.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE CONFERENCE.

The forty-eighth annual Conference of this Society to be held in Tunbridge Wells from September 2 to the 27th, promises to be a large and very interesting gathering. This is the first occasion on which the Alliance has met in Tunbridge Wells. A special committee has been formed for the purpose of making the local arrangements, and this committee includes representative men of all the churches. It is expected that the Alliance will receive a very hearty welcome, and that the proceedings of the Conference will be of wide interest and importance. Among the topics upon which addresses are to be given may be mentioned the following: Present-day unbelief and how to meet it; the Basis of the Evangelical Alliance as a bond of union; Faith's achievements; Sacerdotalism contrary to the Scripture doctrine of the Atonement; the Word of the Truth of the Gospel; the meaning of Pentecost; Evangelisation on the Continent; the World's Evangelisation; and Home Missions. It should be added that copies of the programme and full particulars regarding the arrangements may be obtained of the General Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London; or of the Local Secretary, Mr. William Brackett, Tunbridge Wells.

A KENTISH VILLAGE.

To the very real regret of many it seemed likely that the mission that has for some years been carried on at Meopham Green, Gravesend, by Dr. Baber would cease through his lamented death in May last. But we praise God that this has happily been averted by another servant of the Lord stepping into the breach. Dr. Baber ever sought the spiritual as well as temporal welfare of those with whom he came in contact. Gospel services were carried on in an unsectarian spirit. Help has also been given in surrounding villages. A Sunday-school, mothers' meeting, and reading-room for men in the winter were amongst the efforts put forth.

In the villages of our land is an opening for the investment of time, thought, care, and money that shall bear rich return, not only in the present but in the future, when young men and women who are constantly drifting off to the larger populated centres shall go prepared and strengthened for the battle of life.

Chas. J. Smith.

A TOURIST MENTIONS that the Duke of Argyll owns the island of Iona, and will not allow anyone there to keep a public-house. Consequently, no policeman is needed, although several hundred people live on the island.

FREE CHURCH CONGRESS.—Rev. Dr. Mackennal's invitation (on behalf of the Free Church Congress) to the Nonconforming communions to come into conference, with a view to secure co-operation rather than competition in the rural districts, is bearing fruit. The Wesleyan Conference and the United Methodist Free Church have appointed delegates, and now the Congregational Union of England and Wales has elected representatives as follows:—Revs. Dr. Barrett, president, and Urijah R. Thomas, president-elect; also Revs. Dr. Brown (Bedford), J. G. Rogers (London), J. D. Jones (Lincoln), F. Hall (Wimbledon), W. Spensley (Sunderland), W. J. Woods and W. F. Clarkson, and Messrs. Gerrard Ford (Manchester), Batty Langley, M.P. (Sheffield), and D. Ford Goddard (Ipswich). The conference is expected to be held in London during December.

THE NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN is just now in great need of financial help. Last year—the tenth year of its work—was one of serious disaster, the income falling short of the requirements by nearly £6000. Mr. Waugh, in the appeal he is sending out, says that there is every prospect of this year's income being satisfactory. The rapid growth of this society is one of the most remarkable facts in the annals of philanthropy. The support in the first instance came, not from those who usually aid in works of love and mercy, but from quite a different class. Now, however, the Society has no lack of friends amongst the churches. The new report will show several interesting features in the work. Prosecutions are only undertaken when it is "necessary to obtain sufficient power over the mind of the culprit to secure a reasonable life for his child." In the early days its warnings to its prosecutions were three to one; now they are six to one; but two notable cases tried last year show that warnings in the worst cases are of but little avail. The operations of the Society are, on the whole, very satisfactory, and there is but little need of second prosecutions. During the last ten years the Society has secured nearly 7000 convictions.—Manchester Guardian.

Notes and Comments.

We have received from America a small consignment of copies of the Student Missionary Enterprise, being a report of the proceedings of the Conference held in Detroit last spring. We have already drawn attention to this most valuable book, which deals with world-wide missions and their claims on the Christian youth of our time. We would repeat our commendation of the volume, and trust that it may prove a messenger of strength and help to many young men and women in whose hearts the Spirit is now saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Nothing is more likely to stimulate missionary zeal than a perusal of its eloquent pages. The price is 4s. 6d.

The imperfection of the divine life in many of God's people is very apparent from the way in which they associate their duties with fellow Christians. They lean on others and look to others to a surprising degree. They do things when they are asked, perhaps; if they are not asked they seem to be free from a sense of responsibility. When they are asked to give money they behave as if he who asked were the person to be complied with or refused, and not God. The relation is regarded as human, not divine. To give is to oblige a brother, but if that brother should not be a persona grata then he may be refused without a demur. Out of this low sense of privilege and duty come those worldly devices for coaxing money from Christians which are a reproach to them, and at the same time a deteriorating influence. Why should they have to be persuaded by others to buy something, the price of which or the profit on which they could as easily give? True, there are some who can give time and labour to Christ's cause who cannot give much money, and others will buy from them cheerfully; of them we say nothing. But the others should be lifted up to a higher sense of privilege.

When our Saviour sent forth the seventy He commanded them to "salute no man by the way." As it takes men in the East from one to three hours to get through their formal salutations before they have answered the demands of an exacting etiquette, we can easily see that He meant to save his disciples' time. A passing salutation was permissible, not a prolonged ceremony. We must, like the seventy, save our time, which is the indispensable condition of all service. The ablest man is bankrupted if he is robbed of his hours for thought, for prayer, and for work. The solemn, lofty, and strenuous manner of our Lord's daily life warns us against wasting our time upon elaborate trifling. Business men will not allow their time to be wasted, neither will scholars, neither will anyone who feels he has a work to do, least of all should Christians who are called with a holy calling.

Our Lord guarded the seventy also from the danger of insincerity. We can hardly spend a great deal of time upon "civilities" without sacrificing truth and candour. Unaffected interest and godly sincerity cannot flourish well when we are always calling upon ourselves to say something complimentary and pleasant. The prevalence of insincere but pleasant language is the subject of one of the most solemn and most searching of the Psalms—the twelfth. Plain language may not be popular, but if he who uses it does so for truth's sake, it is on him that people will lean in the day of trouble. As the seventy had to call sinners to repentance, it was absolutely necessary that they should be men of sincere speech.

An eminent saint of God said in his old age: "The little circumstance of death will make no difference with me; I shall have the same friends in that other world that I have here, the same loves and aspirations and occupations. If it were not so I should not be myself, and surely I shall not lose my identity." It aids us much to a right apprehension of the invisible world to recall our Lord's incarnation, his life on earth, his delight in the fellowship of men, his ascension in our nature to the right hand of the Father, and the assurance that "this same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." The homeliness of Jesus among men enables us to believe that to be with Him will be homely.

In the first ten years after the passing of the Divorce Act (1857), 1480 divorces a vinculo were granted; in the ten years ending 1890, the number was 3458. The average number of divorces per annum has risen from 148 to 345. The rate of increase of divorces in England between the years 1867 to 1886 is greater by eleven per cent. than that in the United States. The divorces obtained by wives are increasing at a far more rapid ratio than those obtained by husbands. In thirty-five years 9179 families have been broken up, and some 46,000 persons have been affected in their family relations. These do not take into account cases which have been dismissed, nor cases in which the decree nisi has been reversed on the intervention of the Queen's Proctor. The record is one of the saddest in our national life. A reform in the law itself is called for. We ought to make the law equal as between men and women, and divorce ought to be obtainable on either side for one and only one cause—adultery. The guilty person ought not to be allowed to marry again. No minister of any church ought to be obliged to marry even the innocent person if he has conscientious objections to doing so.

The close connection there is between the researches of science and the daily life of poor toilers has seldom been more powerfully put before the public mind than by the discovery which Dr. J. S. Haldane professes to have made of a method by which miners can live for some time—from one to three hours—in the after-damps, which generally are more fatal at explosions than the explosions themselves. The brain of the thinker, we hope, has again done something to relieve the miseries and dangers of workers. If Dr. Haldane's steel bottle of compressed oxygen, to be released by turning a tap, whence it passes through a tube to be breathed through a kind of respirator, which can be used at a moment's notice, should prove to be as successful as he hopes, then many a miner will be able to find his way to the bottom of the shaft, and have his chances of escape increased. How much domestic woe may be prevented we can hardly tell.

Mrs. Sparrow gives us food for sad reflection in her paper in The New Review upon the "Doss-House Girl." She points out that the very centre of home-life among the poor has received a shock from which it will never rally. The streets at night swarm with girls of fourteen or fifteen years of age, who either have no home to go to, or, if they have, won't enter it. The child of this age has her bed made for her, her floor scoured, her kitchen utensils provided: she never thinks of patching her clothes, but renews her raiment from the pop-shop, domestic duties are unknown, the little unselfishnesses of family life never come in her way, and she grows up thoughtless, improvident, defiant of authority, ignorant of the rights of property, bold, shameless, and unconcerned. Whereas the female doss-houses used to be the night refuge of the tramp and the vagrant, they are now the systematised homes of thousands of our working women, who have no other intention than to live in them, labour from them, and move out of them only when compelled to pay the last debt of Nature in workhouse or hospital. That this description is true so far as the streets are concerned, anyone with eyes may see for themselves.

And if they know anything of our London poor they will also know how painfully true is Mrs. Sparrow's remark that "even sickness does not soften or bind closer Nature's ties, for the poor are learning to depend less and less on each other, and not at all on themselves. There's the hospital to go to if they are ill, where, without the cost of a penny, they can have their malady attended to, and they are shoved off thither at a moment's notice by landlady, husband, or father, eager but in one thing—to get rid of the invalid, and with her all responsibility and expense." Village life with all its drawbacks at least fosters care of the poor by the poor, but in London, so great is the crowd, so terrible the pressure, that poor souls die unnoticed on staircases which lodgers are passing up and down night and day. Indeed, we are not sure that the nearness of the hospital and the efficiency of its means are not proving a temptation to the well-to-do to send their sick away, and get rid of the trouble of nursing them. All that breaks up the home, be it a rich or a poor one, is a danger to religion and the State. By home we mean the house in which we sorrow and rejoice, toil and rest, nurse and are nursed, live and die together, as well as eat and sleep together.

The Bishop of Sydney has well said to a representative of The Religious Review of Reviews that one hindrance of ministerial efficiency is the admission of worldly motives into plans of Church work and of worldly methods into Church procedure. He warns against encouraging the spirit of gambling, and the excessive pleasure-seeking which characterise the ordinary secular view of life under the guise of asking for charitable aid. He thinks that we need to keep in check the tendency to substitute for direct giving and real self-denial in working for God, those indirect and attractive methods of appealing for aid which, "although the use of them may be, to a certain extent, a legitimate and necessary adaptation to human nature, are too apt to degenerate into an expensive-advertisement kind of charity, where there is 'much cry and little wool.'" Ought we not, however, instead of always adapting ourselves to human nature, to try and adapt human nature to the methods of Christ, which always work the best, and produce the most? None get so much money or get it so easily as those who imitate Him, and trust in God.

Rev. Compton Reade has a paper in The Religious Review of Reviews on "The Coagulate Theory of Cosmogony," which well deserves attention. We cannot give its main idea in a few words, but he has some sentences on the common geological hypothesis, which we may quote for consideration:

On the common geological hypothesis, the species man, plus the numerous species of animals, have flourished for circa two million years. Impossible! Making every allowance for wars, plagues, famines, and the struggle for existence, an arithmetical ratio would carry us back to a single pair of human beings in about 4,000 years. Moreover, immense tracts, until this century, were totally or almost uninhabited. The habitable globe, until the discovery of America, barely included, mile by mile, two continents, whereof a portion was mountain, desert, river, lake. To say that this confined area has supported the species for two million years, ex hypothesi, during the major part of that protracted period with no increase, the population being stationary, simply beggars commonsense. . . . . What we want is a rational explanation of an alleged stationary population. None has yet been offered. None seems likely to be.

One cannot ponder the various forms of attack made on the Bible without asking whether they are made because of a sincere love of truth, of vanity, of hatred of something ancient, or of a dislike of the moral and religious truth the Book contains.

According to The Delta Pastorate Chronicle, the Episcopalian Christians at Bonny, New Calabar, Okrika, Opobo, and Benin, and the interior market-places, with chapels voluntarily built, and services kept by their converts, adjacent to these coast towns, have formed themselves into a self-supporting community. This was the sphere of the late Bishop Crowther's labours, and these brethren have not separated from the Church of England, neither are they unmindful of the services rendered to them by the C.M.S. They say:—

No one who knew the character of the late Bishop Crowther would venture to believe that in his old age he could contemplate the adoption of so grave a step as seceding from the Church of England, nor do we, whose earnest desire is to follow in his steps, entertain any idea of separation from the Church of our baptism and deliberate choice; and we can boldly say that, as regards the Church Missionary Society, we had not the most distant intention of setting ourselves in opposition to it when we constituted ourselves into a native pastorate, our object, like the late Bishop's, being simply to carry out the Society's own oft-expressed wish that the churches founded by them should, as soon as possible, be self-supporting and self-governing.

Success in evangelisation and permanence in church organisation depend on the native churches becoming self-supporting and self-governing.

THREE BRIDGES.—A meeting has been held in the Worth Mission Hall to bid farewell to Mr. W. Wilkes, who is about to leave for the Congo. Before entering Harley College, Mr. Wilkes was a much-beloved worker at Three Bridges, and a portable harmonium was now presented to him.

The Empowered Scholar.

By Mrs. MERRILL E. GATES.

Belief in God as Creator organises the soul. The conflicting sentiments, the confused emotions, and the vague unrest of our nature, fall into a certain calm upon hearing the ancient voice, "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth." Such a belief then becomes a formative power, and order is introduced among the soul's forces, and by it they are made effective. Man needs this great underlying belief, not merely to steady him, but to unify and empower his mind.

The thought of God as Redeemer, and belief in this fact, is as much more powerful to produce the same effect, as it is in its nature more personal and intimate. It is in this relation which God holds to him, that the scholar finds his greatest hope.

Power to see things as they are, and to grasp their essential principles, is intellectual power. The scholar may hope to see first principles and their relations more clearly, if he may gain the point of view of Him who gives the principles and relates all their effects. He may hope to see most truly when he looks with God along that line of vision where all things fall into beautiful patterns and tremble to their destined place, as atoms obey musical vibrations. When he follows that glance of God, which is creative in its swift outlook, he will be more likely to feel something of the Divine harmony which is in God's mind. Is it too much to claim that the scholar who by means of his alliance with God holds this central position and looks along the rays of light as from a central sun, should have a certain clearness in his conceptions which is fundamental to scholarship? He, if any man, may expect the clear-sightedness which comes from being rightly placed. Beyond clearness, the scholar-Christian may gain a new force in his intellectual processes.

But beside clearness and strength of thought there may be a peculiar lustre of beauty added to the mental conceptions of a Christian scholar. His work as a student, all his intellectual expressions of himself may radiate a beauty far beyond merely human possibilities. His reception of knowledge and his impartation of knowledge may be made an easy, beautiful thing by reason of the anchorage of his soul on God, the ultimate source of all beauty. His knowledge is touched with glory from a realm where God's glory rests on all things. His own mind becomes a sanctuary for the eternal Shekinah. The scholar who brings all his literary, scientific, historical work into the presence of the Great Light Giver, will experience an ease, a delight, and a power in his work which will be most like the action originally intended for the mind.

Clearness, force, and beauty of thought are a noble triad of mental characteristics. The scholar who attains to them is empowered. The scholar-Christian is entitled to them as a consequence of his belief in Christ, always supposing that he is a devoted student, using and making the most of his natural powers. God does not work a miracle upon a slothful, unfaithful scholar. But the scholar who is a sincere believer is placed by that fact where the same effort will produce greater results than in the case of the unsanctified intellect. "To him that hath it shall be given."

While this is true there are also two conditions which, if unfulfilled, may prevent the religious student from getting the benefit of the new light which comes to us by being Christians. They are, the conditions of personal humility and actual faith. These two qualities underlie all real scholarship. But they are demanded in a new and spiritualised sense if one is to obtain the increase of power of which we have spoken. Perfect humility on the part of the scholar would prepare his mind for the reception of the highest truths in the fullest possible manner, since nothing would be for his own glory—all would be entirely for others. And we are sure if there is a mysterious withholding of this peculiar enlightenment, it must be from the unbelief one feels in regard to the possibility of such enlightenment. "All things are possible to him that believeth."

These increased abilities come not for the sake of the scholar, but for the good of man, and proceed only from a prevailing, soul-moving belief in Christ as God's manifestation of Himself to man, leading to acceptance of Him as a personal Redeemer. It is because the Son of God was also a man that these most glorious things of the intellect are at all possible. This heightened intellectual power is not produced magically, but in accordance with possibly unthought of but surely acting spiritual laws. This is a real union of Christ and the believer, so that power intellectual as well as moral and spiritual may be communicated from Him to those united to Him.

Since Jesus is the first-born of the creation of God, and in all things has the pre-eminence, He is the first in respect of his intellect. He shares his matchless gifts. He gives grace for grace. The scholar, not formally but vitally in union with Christ, is privileged to expect much of himself, though not for himself, since he shares by this union powers which never could be his by nature alone.

All light is constantly new. Fresh vibrations from instant to instant strike upon his soul who receives light from God. Man's being coming into contact with God, receives in every part a heightened impulse. Such impact means ennobled intellectual life, as well as wider, warmer heart-life. The Christian scholar has power to respond most unerringly to the touchstone of culture of heart and mind, for he draws without reserve upon the great stores of love and mind-power contained in Christ for him. Profounder, more beautiful thinking comes from God. The Christian obtains it by deeper union with Christ, "in whom are hid all the treasures of knowledge and wisdom."

Human knowledge is like the mountains. The men who attain it rise above their fellowmen. And it is worth while to labour strenuously for the advantage that comes even from a very slight degree of elevation, a degree which on the grand scale of sidereal measurement might even seem almost imperceptible. We set our great astronomical observatories upon the heights, that we may gain the slight advantage that comes from greater steadiness of foundation, and for the sake of the clearer vision to be obtained through rarer air. So the Christian scholar raised by study a little above the rude jarring of the world, and into the serener, finer air of philosophy and reflection secures a less obstructed vision. From this position, by the clarifying, enlarging power of the Spirit of God, he of all men sees most clearly the majesty and magnitude of the serene heaven of God's illimitable knowledge. On the knowledge acquired by the Christian-scholar the starry lights of God may rain down a more mellow influence than ever rests on the wilful ignorance of man, or even on learning acquired with no reference to the source of wisdom. The tuition of the Spirit of all knowledge is the crowning glory of scholarship.

Heresy, Schism, and Reunion.

The exalted position and enormous influence of Mr. Gladstone have gained for his article, "On the Place of Heresy and Schism in the Modern Christian Church," the world-wide attention which the subject deserves. The essay was at once discussed by the secular and religious Press, and has given an immense impetus to the idea of reunion. That it has contributed a healing and mollifying influence to the several divisions of Christianity, so far as we can see at present, there seems to be no doubt.

Yet it affirms a position from which all Evangelicals dissent. It affirms that the catholic Church is a divine society founded by Jesus Christ, and committed by Him to the perpetual charge of the apostles and their successors. On the contrary, Evangelicals hold that the Church is evermore in the charge of Jesus Himself. The Apostles were responsible to Him for faithful service, and so are all who have been called to the work of the ministry. So, indeed, are all who have been called into the fellowship of the Gospel. The claim of an historic Episcopate is just as objectionable to many Evangelical Protestants as that of the Papacy is to all Protestants.

The usurpation, by the historic idea of Christianity, of the place that belongs to the spiritual idea is the root of most of the Church's troubles. The historic Church has been the organised Church; the organised Church too frequently has also been the formal, dead Church, in which spiritual men could find no home, and from which they were compelled to separate or be untrue to their Lord. It was not a question of self-pleasing, but of fidelity. Nay, in countless cases they would have been only too glad to remain in the historic Church, but it would not retain them so long as they would declare the truth of the Gospel, and so long as they protested against abuses and sins of false teaching. The whole difficulty of fellowship was created, not by the schismatics, but by those who sat in the apostles' seat. Not the Huguenots of France, not the Calvinists of Holland, not the Protestants of Germany, not the Nonconformists of England in 1662, not the Methodists, were the heretics, but those who, having no sympathy with the Gospel, drove them forth from the Church.

Surely no spiritual man would think that the Greek Church, with its deadness, worldliness, and cruelty, is the Church of Christ in Russia, and that the poor Stundists are wicked, wayward heretics and schismatics, who are threatening its unity. We must not confound the organised community, which may have turned the Church into a mart, into a banqueting house, into a den of thieves, with the company of faithful men who meet in the name of Christ and with Him in the midst.

We are far from affirming that there have not been men who hated the truth and all brotherly authority, who would have a communion of their own and went their own way. But they have not enjoyed that blessing which brings prosperity. In their selfish isolation they have withered and died. But those great divisions which have occurred through loyalty to Christ have grown and prospered, and have done so just in proportion as they have remained true to the principle which originally gave them birth. Every branch of Protestantism has flourished not alone according to the vigour with which it has resisted human interference and usurpation in the things of the Kingdom of God, but according to the love and zeal with which it has used its liberty for the diffusion of the knowledge of the Saviour. Freedom from the domination of a hierarchy or of an earthly prince or earthly government is of use only as it becomes a sphere in which the living spiritual Church may work the work of God. As soon as that work is neglected, the affirmation of liberty declines and the sphere of liberty narrows. Stundism will vanquish the Greek Church if it keeps on praying and preaching, but only if it does that.

Mr. Gladstone's article was careful to discriminate between those schismatics who originally broke loose from the "historic Church," or were expelled from it, and those who have been born "in schism." The latter have no such responsibility as rested on their fathers. It is pleasant to see that there is a fair-minded desire on the part of the members of "the historic Church" to think kindly of such as go not with them. Thus The Guardian says:—

> The sin of schism, like all other sins, requires knowledge and consent. Without these it is not really sin. It is schism, doubtless, to leave the catholic Church. But if a man leaves the catholic Church either because he no longer holds her to be catholic, or because he honestly believes that the conditions of catholic communion are unrighteous conditions, he is a schismatic in act, but he is not a schismatic in intention; and the guilt of schism, as of all other sins, lies in the intention. A man who takes another's money, believing it to be his own, is not a thief; a man who takes another's life, believing that he is doing it in self-defence, is not a murderer. We leave on one side all considerations as to the origin of the mistake in each case, and dwell only on the existence of the mistake, when the act was committed. And so with the act of schism. Whether he who commits it has taken proper care to inform and enlighten his conscience is one thing; whether he is obeying his conscience at the moment of action is another; and it is upon this last only that his fellows can form an opinion.

While granting this position, The Guardian is careful to say that it believes there is such a thing as schism, but that it is to be looked for in "other quarters than among professed schismatics." Now we do not know that there are any "professed schismatics"—but that apart, it lays the blame upon such as, from worldly motives, separate themselves from their brethren. This we think is right. Unruly, lawless, self-willed, self-willing Christians incur a grave responsibility.

The Grindelwald Conference has expressed its great satisfaction with the progress which the idea of Christian Unity among the churches has made. The Conference sees evidences of it in America, in Australia, in Great Britain, and even in the Pope's last encyclical, "which, whilst full of the haughty assumption of Rome, does, nevertheless, include Protestants within the great Christian Brotherhood in a manner new to such encyclicals." The genuine progress of the idea we believe to be mainly the effect of the spread of the truth in the world; for every church that spreads the truth becomes numerous and powerful, and has to be reckoned with by other churches. Rome cannot ignore Protestantism; Anglicanism cannot ignore Nonconformity; Methodism cannot ignore the Salvation Army. Unity is dependent on the diffusion of the spirit of Christ through the declaration and acceptance of the Gospel, so that every convert made from the world is an aid to unity.

That there should be practical unity of faith in the great cardinal truths of the Gospel is certainly a thing to be thankful for. Mr. Gladstone has laid his hand on the very centre of the situation here:—

> The tenets upon which these dissonant and conflicting bodies are agreed are the great central tenets of the Holy Trinity and of the incarnation of our Lord. But these constitute the very kernel of the whole Gospel. Everything besides, that clusters round them, including the doctrines respecting the Church, the ministry, the sacraments, the communion of saints, and the great facts of eschatology, are only developments which have been embodied in the historic Christianity of the past, as auxiliary to the great central purpose of redemption; that original promise which was vouchsafed to sinful man at the outset of his sad experience, and which was duly accomplished when the fulness of time had come.

Let but the faith in those great virtues become more real and operative, expressing itself in abounding labours and in true self-denial, and spiritual unity will strengthen and spread over every land. J. P. G.

BABY HOME, ST. PETERSBURG.

Dear Sir,—Kindly allow me to express my gratitude to those of your readers who have contributed to the support of the "Baby Home" of Miss Grundberg and Miss Wennberg at St. Petersburg, and at the same time to commend these ladies and the forty-three children "mothered" by them to the continued sympathy of Christians in Britain.

When I first made the acquaintance of these ladies and their large family they were housed in a miserable lodging in the Pokroffskie-place. The children, who are of many nationalities, prayed, each in his own language, for a better house "and, please, a garden, Lord." About two years ago a house was rented for them for a year at 1000 roubles (about £100) by some friends, and when the children saw that there was a large garden as well, they knew that it was their prayer that had been heard.

Attached to the house was a byre, and it occurred to the children to pray for a cow. It did not occur to them to be afraid lest the cow should not be given. Every morning they toddled to the byre to look for the cow, and one dear child whose only knowledge about cows was that they were good things to have, asked Miss Grundberg: "When God sends the cow, may I take it to bed with me?" After many days those who one morning got first to the byre were soon crying exultingly to the rest, "It's come! It's come!" No one at the Home had bought or suggested the purchase of the cow. Some of the children looked up to heaven assured that it had come straight from there. I cannot suggest any better explanation than theirs.

Often there have been no bread and no money in the Home, and the children, on their own initiative, have gone to their rooms, and prayed for their daily portion, and then run to the door at every sound of the bell, each anxious to be the first to meet the messenger from the Lord coming in answer to their prayer. They have often waited long, but they have never been put to confusion, and their faith is now strong enough to remove mountains.

It has come to be known that the children's prayer "availeth much," and sometimes a gift is bestowed, with the request that they will pray for the donor by name. A lady lately left "a small sum" at the Home, and asked that these conditions might be considered as attached to the gift, viz., (1) that the donor should remain anonymous; (2) that her three children should be mentioned daily in prayer by the children of the Home; and (3) that the money should be kept in reserve for any special need which might afterwards arise. Now, it will be necessary very soon either to buy the house and garden and byre or to quit them. The children, when told of this, immediately agreed amongst themselves to pray to God to allow them to keep the house which He had found for them; and when they heard of the "small sum," which proved to be £150, given by the anonymous friend, they said, "His name is God, and now we can buy the house."

Of course, a great deal more than £150 is required, but it is very desirable that the house should be secured, and possibly some of your readers may be glad of an opportunity of being the bearers to these children of God's answer to their prayer. For the daily maintenance of the Home support is also urgently required, and Miss Grundberg has herself explained the claims which this institution has upon the sympathy of "free England."—I am, etc.,

Pastor of the St. Petersburg British-American Church.

PROFANING GOD'S TEMPLE.

AN ADDRESS AT KESWICK,

By Rev. CHARLES INWOOD.

(Ezekiel viii.—xi.)

I do not intend to attempt to harmonise or to interpret all the details of this very sublime vision; I want, as God may help me, to point out and to press home some truths in this vision which seem to me to touch very vitally on practical, experimental holiness.

Notice, first of all, that this vision relates to the Temple. What was it that distinguished the Temple from all other buildings? Not a difference of material. There were two things which distinguished it. One was this: it was a building set apart for sacred uses only. The second was, that it was to be in a very special sense the dwelling-place of God. And the apostle had both these thoughts before his mind when he wrote to believers, to men who had known and experienced the regenerating power of God the Holy Ghost: "Ye are the temple of the living God." Your entire being, spirit, soul, and body, is to be devoted to sacred uses, and in that temple God is to rest and to dwell. So it is yours to yield yourselves, spirit, soul, and body, to God for sacred uses; that is consecration from the human side. And then it is God's to fill that surrendered temple with his own almighty presence and glory; that is consecration from the Divine side.

It seems to me that the realisation of this truth —my being God's temple—lies at the very foundation of all practical and experimental holiness. That thought revolutionises and ennobles everything. It supplies us with an unfailing test as we go along in life, not merely in relation to sinful things, but in relation to what we call doubtful and questionable things. If you want these questionable things tested, here is the test. Is this an act of worship? Does this harmonise with the sacred functions of a temple? Will this or that damage the structure of the temple, even the physical part of it? These are tests you can apply; and if you apply them in the strength and grace of the Spirit of God you will soon be delivered by God from this constant worry and teasing of yourself about whether this or that or the other is a safe and harmless thing for the child of God.

What I want particularly to speak of to-night is

THE PROFANATION OF THE TEMPLE.

The prophet here speaks of four ways by which the temple may be profaned, and it is significant that that which the natural man would consider the least abominable is called by God the crowning or greatest abomination of the four. They are recorded in the eighth chapter, and I will only briefly refer to them.

First of all, there is the image of jealousy. This seems to have represented, not so much the worship of any particular idol, as the spirit, the disposition toward idolatry. Then there is what is called the foul imagery on the inside of the walls of the temple. Then there is the licentious worship of Tammuz, the beloved of Venus. The rites connected with the worship of that particular god were as foul and gross as the evil heart of man could make them. And then, as the crowning abomination, there is the worship of the sun; the worshipping towards the east.

Now, mark, all were not equally gross and vile. No one would be prepared to say that the refined worship of the sun was as foul and gross and low as the worship of Tammuz. But they were all alike in this: they all ignored the sacred uses for which the Temple had been built. They all deliberately set aside God, who claimed the right to possess and control and fill the whole Temple. We have been singing in this Convention more than once or twice, and, thank God, we sing it as a keynote in all our Conventions, and I trust we always shall—our first hymn—

> Search me, O God! my actions try,
> And let my life appear,
> As seen by Thine all-searching eye;
> To mine my ways make clear.
> Throw light into the darkened cells,
> Where passion reigns within;
> Quicken my conscience till it feels
> The loathsomeness of sin.

I want to throw the search-light in, and to ask you whether that temple of your heart, as a child of God, is profaned by any one of these four abominations. Take the first. Not a particular form of idolatry, but rather a disposition towards it, and the prevalence of a general spirit of it. Let me ask you, as saved men and women, is there as God sees you —not in the Convention, but at home—a disposition to set God aside in any part or realm of your service and your life? You take God with you into your church; do you take Him as readily and really into your home? Or you say you take God into your home; do you take Him as really into your business? How many of you business men—and business women, too, for that matter—never come to a decision in your business, or write a business letter, without definitely asking God to guide you and bless you in your effort? How many of you know what it is, when you post your letters, to offer a prayer to God as you put them in the box, that He may go with them, and so use them that his glory will be promoted? If there is a realm of your life or service into which you do not take the trouble to consult God,

YOU ARE SETTING HIM ASIDE.

Let me come closer. Many of you are engaged, as Christian men and women, in what we call social and philanthropic work. Let me ask you what I asked a brother minister very recently. We were talking of the privilege of taking God into everything, and I was trying to show him what a revelation that truth had been to me. I said to that brother, "When you are going to give an evangelistic address, or hold a mission, do you take God into all your methods, plans, and messages?" "Yes, I do." I believe he did. Then I said, "If you give an address on the Deepening of Spiritual Life, would you take God into that?" "Yes, of course." "When you go to a Band of Hope meeting to give an address, do you go to God just as simply as if you were going to give an evangelistic address, or one on holiness?" He said, "No, I am free to confess that I have not done that." "Well, brother, if there is any department of your work into which you do not by faith and prayer bring God as a real definite presence, you are shutting Him out of that realm, and you are displeasing God, who has bought you with the precious blood of his Son."

One of the troubles of the Christian Church today in this land, if I am not mistaken, is this—the incoming of a great humanitarian tide that has not God in it from first to last. There are churches, and there are movements, and there are individual workers that are because God is not put first in these great movements. If there be a part of your work, or your life, or your service, into which you cannot take God, pitch that overboard at all costs, and never touch it again. If there is any disposition to shut God out of any part of his temple, we are profaning that temple.

Look at the second form of profanation, a much more solemn one; where the prophet is permitted to come and look into, or inside, the Temple, and inside the inner walls of that Temple. Hidden away from ordinary gaze, there were these foul pictures. I want to ask you whether the chambers of your imagery are unclean? Not what you say, or do; but as God looks into that heart of yours, what does He see there? What is the trend, the drift, the tone of your thought-life? What are the thoughts that you welcome and nourish and cherish in secret? What kind of books are some of you reading in secret? I have heard recently of young people—young ladies many of them—who profess to follow the Lord, but in secret they are reading books that are not merely unhelpful, but are a positive disgrace and shame. When you get away from your homes and churches, and run across to the Continent, where nobody knows you, what kind of books do you read in secret? What kind of thoughts do you cherish? If God were to come at this moment, and all unknown to you take

of the inner walls of your spirit and thought-life, is there any picture there that you would be ashamed for your mother or your brother, or your pastor to look at?

What makes the thing so sad is, that all this went on while the incense was waving. You can go to church on Sunday, and you can pray and sing and join in Christian worship and service. There is a good deal that is religious in your life; yet all the time that incense is waving, unseen by any eye but the All-seeing Eye, there are those nasty dirty foul pictures hanging on the thought walls. And what makes it sadder is this: the Revised Version tells us it was the elders who were doing this. None of us are safe! The devil watches every one of us, and those who are leaders and have known God longest are exposed to the most subtle forms of temptation inside the spiritual life.

The third form of profanation deals not so much with what is wrong in the inner realm as in the outer life—foul, unclean habits and acts in our daily conduct. Further than this, let me here, in the name of my Master, lift up my voice against many questionable habits that at all events have this filthy mark on them. There is not a child of God here who would not endorse what I may say against gluttony, drunkenness, immorality, and sins of that sort. But how many saved men are there here to-night who at all events are victims of the filthy habit of smoking? I remember speaking in a Holiness Convention not long ago. During a Gospel address many "Glory Hallelujahs" and "Amens," etc., came from all parts of the tent; but the very moment I lifted my voice against the foul, worldly habit of smoking, there were just from one corner, and all the rest were quiet. I thank God it is rare in the ministry in Ireland to find smokers. There are some churches there in which you could not find two smokers in the whole ministry. Let us lift our voices against these things. I do not say it is so bad for a man to smoke as to drink, but I do say that smoking is bad, worldly. My dear brethren, some of you do not know what joy and freedom will come into your life if you have the courage to trust God to deliver you from that filthy habit.

If we could get all the Christian pipes put out, and all the Lord's money that is wasted rescued for foreign missions, we should not have to talk, as some of us have had to talk, about the work in India, in China, and in Africa that needs to be done; about millions wanting the Gospel, men and women ready to go, but no money to send them. How can it be? You cannot spend the Lord's money on these worldly, filthy, luxurious habits, and have money enough left for the Lord's work.

Notice, for a moment, the fourth form of idolatry, that of those who were sinning by worshipping the sun. Let me point out to you that this refined idolatry begins always with the back turned upon the altar. If you are familiar with the map of the Temple, you will know that the position these men took up meant this: they had turned their backs on the altar, and were worshipping the sun in the very opposite direction. I believe this is that besets Christian life and thought in this civilised land to-day. Thousands and thousands of Christian men and women—ay, and very many ministers of the Gospel, too—are turning their backs upon the altar, turning their backs upon the atoning work of the Lord Jesus Christ. God sees it, and knows it; and few things pain Him like that. Whether we believe it or no, our attitude toward the atoning work of the Lord Jesus Christ is of the deepest significance in God's sight. Do not let anyone go away from this Convention saying we undervalue the atoning work of the Lord Jesus. If we undervalue that, if we set that aside, and push it out of its place, then, I say, the Lord prevent us from ever having another Keswick Convention! Oh, no! the one and only ground of all our hope for salvation and sanctification is, and must ever be, the blood and the righteousness of Jesus Christ, God's only and well-beloved Son. If we are to live a healthy, holy life, we must always live in full view of the cross; always face to face with it; always in full view of the altar; always in full view of the slain Victim; always in full view of that life laid down for us. Do not let the devil persuade you, through the semi-Unitarian teaching that is paralysing and emasculating the ministry of large sections in Great Britain, in any way to undervalue or think lightly of the atoning blood of Jesus Christ our Saviour.

Get the back turned on the altar, and the other comes as a matter of course: then there is the worshipping of the sun. What do you mean by that? I will tell you what it seems to me specially to imply and teach. The tendency in so many Christian hearts to-day is to bow before

THE RISING SUN OF FASHION,

And when I say "fashion" I do not mean the coarse and vulgar form of it that relates to dress. I mean something far more serious than that. I mean the tendency we see to-day to bow, for instance, before the latest fashion in science. Let some great and able scientist declare some new-fangled notion, and no matter how it clashes with the old Book, there are thousands of professing Christians who will go down and worship in a moment the sun of science. I do not know what you think, but to me the sight of a poor ignorant Hindoo falling down to worship the sun is not half so sad a sight as to see a great capacious brain like that of Huxley falling down and worshipping the image of natural law.

Then there are many Christians worshipping the latest fashion in theology. They are being caught by this craze that is called the "Higher Criticism"—far more anxious to read a book that will tear the old Book to pieces than spend the same time on their knees in reading the Book itself, in asking God to speak through it and prove its inspiration. There is no apologetic like that. I do not undervalue apologetics or evidential lectures; they have their place, and God has work for them. But if you want to know whether that portion read to-night is true, whether it is the Word of God, quick and powerful, you are not going to find it out by reading Canon Driver's "Introduction." Get on your knees and say to God: "I want to hear thy voice; to know whether the Book is from Thee; speak through it to my heart and my conscience and will, and I will obey." You will soon get such overwhelming proof that you can no more doubt the divinity and inspiration of that Book than you doubt the certainty of your existence.

The same thing is true in the realm of literature. I do not know how you feel, but, as a Christian man, and, I may add, as a Christian patriot, let me say how my heart was wrung with tears and blood to see a great nation like this welcoming, hailing, treating as a sort of divinity, a man who visited us recently, and who, whatever his literary claims may be, stands before us as the apostle of French filth in this nineteenth century. I have gone into Christian homes, and have seen that man's portrait hung on the wall, and in ministers' studies, too. I had as soon put a portrait of the devil before me as that of a man who is doing more than any other man I know into the gutter the young men and young women in the cultured ranks of British society. It is by things like these that we profane the temple.

I do plead with you that if God has been throwing the search-light into you; if you have seen this or that as never before, and your conscience says, "The temple has been profaned," then, as God's ambassador to you, not as a teacher talking to pupils, but as a brother in Jesus Christ, I plead with you, let Him come into the temple now! He can cleanse all the filth out. It may have been there twenty years, but He can have it all out in twenty minutes. He is almighty to save, to cleanse, and to deliver. If every temple here till now profaned, it may be, in some part, be yielded up to Him, and possessed by Him, then the glory will come and fill the temple so that it will indeed tremble under the exceeding weight of glory. When the cloud of God's presence came down to Sinai those bare, dull, passionless peaks trembled under the pressure of the glory that found even a temporary resting-place there. And when the greater glory comes and fills us, then, and not till then, do we know what it is to fall down before God and be filled with all his fulness.

OPEN-AIR MISSION, JAPAN.

Dear Sir,—It is already eight months since I departed from your midst, and my old days are hanging in my memory. I thank God for the privilege of fighting in the United Kingdom, and that during that time He has enabled me to be true to Him. I mean by his grace to prove true to the end.

Since I got home I have tried a good deal of open-air preaching here in Yokohama. I wish we could do something to reach the coolie and fisherman class. Our tent is only a cloth roof on five bamboo poles, put up in the market-place every day. Our methods are wholly successful. We have a large number of friends, and the mission owns 350dols. worth of property at present. The special efforts were greatly blessed, and we are aiding the temperance cause here.

I am going up to the northern part of this country with a tent on salvation business.

Yours at Jesus' feet, S. L. Nagasaka.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

THE RECHABITES.

Jeremiah xxxv. 6—10.

Happy if full of days—but happier far
If, ere we yet discern life's evening star,
Sick of the service of a world that feeds
Its patient drudges with dry chaff and weeds,
We can escape from custom's idiot sway,
To serve the Sovereign we were born to obey.
Cowper.

The march of Nebuchadnezzar on Jerusalem was anticipated by incursions of Syrians, Moabites, and the children of Ammon. These may be compared to the squadrons of light cavalry used in modern warfare to harass the enemy and prepare the way for heavier armaments. They swept up the valleys, massacred the peasantry, devoured the crops, and spread terror on every hand. The inhabitants, therefore, of the neighbouring country, eager to save their lives and some relics of their property, left their houses and lands to the mercy of the invader, and fled for protection to the metropolis; accounting that within the massive walls of Zion they would find safeguard. What a stir there must have been as day by day the motley groups pressed in under the old gateways, grey with age, and sought accommodation and food in the already overcrowded tenements of the city!

Amongst the rest came a tribe that must have excited much curiosity by reason of its strange and antique manners. It came in full force—of men, at least. The sheikh's name was Jaazaniah—"he whom Jehovah hears"; and his brethren and sons and the heads of other households were with him. They refused to shelter in the houses or permanent buildings of the city; but pitched their dusky tents in some open space within the walls, and there awaited the turn of events.

Their record was an honourable one, and reached far back into the early days of Hebrew history. When Israel was passing through the wilderness of Sinai, the tribe of the Kenites showed them kindness, and this laid the foundation of perpetual friendliness between the two peoples. They seem to have adopted the religious convictions of Israel, and to have accompanied them into the Land of Promise. Retaining their integrity as a pastoral people, the Kenites had maintained these friendly relations with Israel during the intervening centuries; and it was of this tribe that the Rechabites, for such was the name of this strange tent-loving people, had sprung (Judges iv. 17, 24; 1 Sam. xv. 6; 1 Chron. ii. 55).

About the time of Elijah, and perhaps largely influenced by him, the sheikh or leader of one branch of the Kenites was Jonadab the son of Rechab. He was dismayed at the abounding corruption and iniquity of the time, and especially of the Northern Kingdom, then under the fatal spell of Jezebel and Ahab's influence, and resembled some rank jungle in whose steamy air, heavy with fever and poison, noisome creatures swarm, and foul pestilences breed. In his endeavour to save his people from such a fate this noble man, who afterwards became Jehu's confederate in extirpating idolatry, bound his people under a solemn pledge to drink no wine for ever; neither to build houses nor sow seed, nor plant vineyards, but to dwell in tents. Two hundred and fifty years had passed since then, but when they arrived in Jerusalem they were still true to the traditions of their race; and with sturdy strength stood out among the effeminate and idol-loving people of Jerusalem, living representatives of the noblest and purest days of Hebrew story.

I.—JEREMIAH'S TEST OF THE RECHABITES.

So soon as their arrival was noised abroad, and had come to the ears of Jeremiah, he was seized by a Divine impulse to derive from them a striking object-lesson for his own people. With an inventiveness of which only passionate love could have been capable, the prophet caught at every incident, and used every method to awaken his people to realise their true position in the sight of God. Taking the leaders of the Rechabites with him, he went into the Temple, to a room belonging to the sons of Hanan, known as a man of God, immediately adjacent to the room occupied by the princes, and above that occupied by the gatekeeper.

Probably a little group of Jews, arrested by the prophet's association with these strange-looking men, had followed them in to watch the proceedings. They were curious witnesses of the prophet's action, when he caused bowls of wine to be set before them, and cups to be offered them, that they might dip them in and drink; and of the blunt unqualified refusal of these quaint old-fashioned Puritans, "We will drink no wine," followed by an explanation of the solemn obligation laid on them centuries before.

The moral was obvious. Here were men loyal to the wish of their ancestor, though he was little more than a name to them, and refusing the offered sweets in which so many freely indulged themselves; whilst the people of Jerusalem persistently disregarded the words of the living God perpetually remonstrating against their sins. The prohibitions of Jonadab were largely arbitrary and external, whilst those of Jehovah were corroborated by the convictions of conscience, and touched the deepest foundations of religion and morality. The voice of Jonadab was a cry coming faintly from far down the ages; whilst Jehovah was ever speaking with each new dawn, and in the voice of each fresh messenger whom He rose early to send.

There could be but one result. Judah, eaten through with the crimes and corruption against which God had protested in vain, must reap the whirlwind, as she had sown the wind. There could be no escape from the judgment which was drawiug nearer with every daybreak. If the people could not heed words of expostulation, of entreaty, and warning, accounting them exaggerated and vain, they should at least be compelled to admit that not one of God's threats of vengeance fell impotent on the air or missed its aim.

Whilst on the other hand, such devotion to principle, such persistent culture of simplicity, frugality, and abstinence, such literal adherence to the will of the father of their house, not only carried within them the assurance of perpetuity to the people who practised them, but must receive the signature and countersign of the Almighty. "Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before Me for ever."

This phrase has a very definite meaning. It suggests, of course, obviously, that the tribe should not cease to exist. And it is to be noted, first, that Dr. Wolff, the missionary traveller, met a tribe in Arabia who claimed to be Rechabites, and read to him these words of Jeremiah from an Arabic Bible; and, secondly, that Signor Pierotti, near the S.E. end of the Dead Sea, met a tribe who also called themselves Rechabites, and quoted these words. But there is a yet deeper thought. This phrase is often used of priestly service. And may we not infer that where there are that devotion to principle, and that detachment from the world, which characterised these men, there will always be a strong religious tone, a knowledge of God, a power in prayer and intercession, which are too sadly lacking in much of the religious life around us? This will lead us to thoughts which are alike suggestive and salutary.

ESTHER ABRAHAM.

This Nestorian lady, who has been visiting England for the last two years, is now about to return to Persia. She wishes to express her gratitude to the many friends who have received her. She says, "Everywhere I received the greatest kindness; the aged people opened their arms as if I were their own child, and the younger people received me as if I were their sister. The railway and train men, and policemen, have shown the kindest interest in guiding me, so that in my many journeys I have never missed my way; I wish I could shake hands with them all. The doctors, especially, have been good to me. God has been guiding us day by day and caring for me and my two little children in the most wonderful way."

Esther's mission to England has been a success; friends have promised the support of twenty children in Deacon Abraham's Orphanage; and Esther herself has gone through a valuable medical training in the Royal Maternity Hospital, Edinburgh, where she gained two certificates.

Our sister asks the prayers of English Christians for a safe journey for herself and her children; and for continued blessing on the orphanage in Oroomiah, and on the mission work which she and the Deacon carry on in the surrounding villages.

CANNOCK CHASE CAMP.—Gospel tent meetings were held every night last week, and were pretty well attended. The Congregational minister, and some of his members from Rugeley, came up to the camp to help; also Mr. Bowles from Stremall Camp, and Armourer-Sergeant B. Jones, 4th battalion Liverpool Regiment.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 26.—DANIEL IX.

Daniel's Intercession for his People (1-19).—Darius was uncle to Cyrus, who ruled in his name. This was the year B.C. 537, the year before the Jews were permitted to return from exile. (2) This refers to Jer. xxv, 11, 12, xxix. 10. We should found our prayer upon Divine promise. God's promises must be claimed. (3) The set face as of one who knew the ground on which he stood, and was not to be dislodged by doubt or delay. (4) It becomes us to confess the sins of those who will not confess for themselves. As priests we offer confession vicariously. (7) Bitter as had all God's dealings been with Israel, Daniel could not but admit that all had been justified by their sins. Some day we shall understand how much better God dealt with us than we deserved. (15) Israel was still "thy" people. Sin cannot break the covenant relationship into which God enters with us, though it makes chastisement inevitable. (18) Notice how the prophet identifies God's glory and good name with the condition of the chosen people.

The Divine Answer (20-27).—How ready is God to answer prayer. Whilst we are yet speaking He hears. Indeed, the answer starts at the beginning of our supplication, which is, so to speak, a reflection of God's purpose. Oh the swiftness of God's angels! (21) How careful the prophet was to maintain in thought the service of God's house, so should we be careful to keep up the times of daily prayer, and of the service of God's house, though we be in a foreign land. (24) The people seem to have supposed that the Messiah, so long expected, would come to deliver them from Babylon. They were now taught that a certain period must elapse. And in this prediction the prophet sketches the course of events to the crucifixion, and to the fall of Jerusalem beneath the legions of Titus. The time is calculated on the principle of a year for a day. Seventy weeks would be, therefore, 490 years, and should date from Ezra's journey to Jerusalem in 457 B.C. (26) There would be a space, the prophet saw, between the death of the prince and the fall of the city. In the beginning of this and the following verse he deals with the Messiah's cutting off, in the latter parts of each verse with the fall of Jerusalem. (27) It is thought by some that this week is yet to be realised in a compact to be made between the Jews and Antichrist at the close of the present dispensation, which is counted as a parenthesis, and not noticed in this enumeration of what would primarily concern the Jewish people. Perhaps it will be more profitable for the majority of readers to take the general impression of the whole paragraph, and to derive spiritual help from considering the phrases which describe so wonderfully the scope of Messiah's work. The difficulty of computing the dates arises from the uncertainty as to the years from which to count them.

MONDAY, AUGUST 27.—DANIEL X.

The Vision (1-8).—In this chapter we are permitted to look into the eternal world, and behold the perpetual ministries of holy spirits on the heirs of salvation. (1) It came in the third year of Cyrus's reign, i.e., two years after his decree for the restoration of the Jews. (2) The mourning here referred to may have arisen either from the unwillingness of the chosen people to bestir themselves, or to great difficulties that stood in the way of the realisation of their deliverance. (4) The Hiddekel was the Tigris. Being advanced in years, it is supposed that the prophet had retired from the burdens of office, and was now giving himself to intercession on the behalf of his people. (6) Linen of purity, gold of royalty, fire of purity. If this is the description of an angel, what must not the Lord of angels be. (7) All round us there are visions, but only those whose eyes are anointed behold them. It was so at the conversion of Saul of Tarsus (Acts xxii. 9).

The Voice (9-15).—Oh to hear God say of us, "greatly beloved." There is no reason why it should not be: first, abide in the Beloved; second, love Him; thirdly, obey Him. (12) Even for those who are greatly loved, there are delays in the divine answers. They are not denials. There are hindrances in the spiritual world, storms which delay the vessels in their course, of which we know nothing. (13) We may infer from this that each kingdom of men has its president evil spirit, set over it by the prince of this world—an influence which is borne out by the apostle's reference to the world—rulers of this present darkness. It is probably to these that we must refer many of the political hindrances to the spread of the Gospel. And this gives a new reason for intercessory prayer, for it is only so that we can throw our weight into the fray which is proceeding between light and darkness, between good and evil, in the heavenlies.

The Touch (16-21).—What a delightful repetition of the thought of v. 10. Why do we not seek more often this Divine touch, that would carry with it strength to bear the great of revelation, and ability to speak with heaven, face to face? It is to those that have no strength that this wonderful touch comes. (19) It is impossible to comment on these words. They should be pressed lovingly upon the soul, in all days of alarm and weakness.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 28.—DANIEL XI.

It is impossible in the brief limits of these notes to expound this confessedly difficult chapter. A few general suggestions are all that can be attempted. The purpose of the chapter is to describe the events which transpired between the days of Ezra and Nehemiah and those of Christ; and it must have been eagerly scanned by many earnest hearts during those dark centuries, as a traveller compares the signs indicated by his guide-book with the features of his route. (2) The three kings of Persia were Ahasuerus, Artaxerxes, and Darius, as in Ezra iv. 6, 7, 24; the fourth, Xerxes, who invaded Greece in B.C. 480, and was utterly overthrown. (3) Alexander the Great. (4) On his death his kingdom was divided between his four greatest generals. (5) The prophet henceforth concerns himself with the perpetual strife between Egypt, under the Ptolemies, and Syria, because it concerned so nearly the chosen people, and led to the dread personality of Antiochus, whose cruelty towards the chosen people are one of the main themes of this chapter. Many expositors suppose that, in harmony with a general principle of interpretation, there are references of the Spirit of prophecy to Mahomet, and to Antichrist, who alone can realise all the terrible things here set down in order. (6) The King of Egypt gave his daughter, Berenice, in marriage to Antiochus, but the arrangement did not secure the peace that was looked for, and a rival wife murdered her and her child. (8) Her death was revenged by the King of Egypt, her father, making a raid on Syria. (11-13) Wars between Antiochus and the King of Egypt. (15-19) Antiochus's victory over Sidon, leading to the subjugation of Palestine. (20-45) The reign of Antiochus, his wars against Ptolemy, successful through craft (21-27), and against the Jews (28-35), his iniquities and death (36-45).

We do well to notice v. 32. To know God is to be strong. (35) God can overrule our very failures to our advancement in the Divine life. We shall not be tried beyond a certain point, and till then we must be patient and submissive, seeking to acquire the Divine lessons.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 29.—DANIEL XII.

The Wise shall Shine (1-4).—This refers, primarily, to the end of the reign of Antiochus, but in its full meaning to the destruction of Antichrist. Michael is the guardian spirit of the Jewish people. He is distinct from our Lord (Jude 9). When the time of trouble has reached its climax, whether in national or individual life, help is near. The book is that of God's eternal purpose (Ps. lvi. 8; Luke x. 20; Rev. xx. 15). (2) It was the hope of Resurrection, of the life beyond the darkness of their times, that animated the hearts of the chosen people. In the same way the Apostle Paul refers to it (1 Cor. xv. 58). The national resurrection of Israel is without doubt included, but the resurrection at the last, when that of the just shall precede that of the unjust by the millennium, is clearly the topic of these wonderful words. These words were specially quoted in the dark days of the Maccabees as encouraging them to be faithful unto death. (3) The stars are sometimes hidden by the floating cloud-wrack, but this is temporary. After a while they shine out from their indestructible thrones. (4) Daniel's prophecies were to be sealed, because their entire fulfilment was not to take place for many days. Compare Rev. i. 1-3, which was to be immediately fulfilled. The closing words of this verse are probably being realised in the diffusion of truth throughout the world.

How Long (5-7)?—Three and a-half probably stands for three and a-half prophetic years, which, on the year-day system, gives 1260 days or years, and is therefore equivalent to the forty-two months of Rev. xi. 2, xiii. 5. This is the time of the world-power, half the perfect number seven. The supremacy of the Gentile kingdoms is 2500 years, of which this is the latter half, now surely nearly expired. If so, the holy people will not much longer be scattered.

What shall be the End (8-13)?—Even the prophets searched what the Spirit of God, who spake by them, intended (1 Peter i. 10-12; 2 Peter i. 21). (9) In all probability, we shall never understand these visions until they are fulfilled. (10) The purer we get the more shall we be allowed to understand God's purposes. (13) There are endless speculations as to the precise reference of these numbers. Generally it is enough to know that God has a plan, and that the limits of suffering and discipline are marked. It will be enough for us to stand at last in our lot, with those with whom we have been identified in justification, worship, and ministry.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 30.—HOSEA I.

The Inscription (1).—Hosea means salvation: Beeri, my well. Jeroboam II.'s reign was very prosperous to all outward appearance, and this made these prophecies the more startling (2 Kings xiv. 23).

Israel's Unfaithfulness (2-9)—It is matter of discussion, whether this was literally realised or was only symbolical. Nothing is gained, and much lost, by refusing the literal interpretation; and it is to be noticed that the prophet's wife became unfaithful after their union, as did Israel after her betrothal to God, on the shores of the Red Sea and at Sinai. They departed from the Lord. (4) Jezreel meant, God will scatter. There is an allusion to Israel, in the similarity of the sound of the words. Jehu was very merciless in dealing with the city of Jezreel (2 Kings ix. 9, 16, 25). He executed God's purpose, but did it vindictively, for which his race was to be punished. (6) Lo-ruhamah. Not an object of mercy (Rom. ix. 25, 1 Peter ii. 10). (7) This refers to Judah's deliverance from Sennacherib, and subsequent return from the captivity. (8-9) "Not my people." Though the third period of Israel's kingdom was strong and vigorous under Jeroboam II., as compared with the preceding and effeminate period, still they were not accounted by God as being his people, and were left to the hand of their foes.

Promises of Restoration (10-11).—These gracious words, which include Israel and Judah were partially fulfilled on the return from Babylon; but spiritually they are being fulfilled in all who turn to God through faith in Jesus, and become one people. There is yet a further fulfilment at hand when all Israel shall be restored as one (Rom. xi. 26; Isa. xi. 12, 13; Ezek. xxxvii. 16-24). Jezreel here means "God will sow," referring to the replanting of Israel in their own land, as when a husbandman scatters seed that it may strike root all over the ploughed field.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 31.—HOSEA II.

Israel's Infidelity to God (1-5).—The soul of man is capable of such oneness with God, that the closest ties are used to describe it; but the very possibility of this blessed union carries with it the awful peril of unfaithfulness. Israel had turned to idols, and how often does the soul turn to evil things, whether of ambition, or gold, or pleasure. It is impossible to act thus without Divine remonstrances as here, and God will often strip us bare of all that we have acquired, and leave us, like Job, naked and bereft, if He can only awake us to understand the enormity of our crime, and to return to Himself. Drought and thirst; the fever of unsatisfied desire. If you leave God you can expect nothing less.

The Hedge of Thorns (6-13).—How true! The right and narrow path is plain and unimpeded, but the wrong way is hedged up. It is not with a brick wall; we can pass it. But we tear and hurt ourselves as we do. This is God's love warning us off the wrong track. (8) We must attribute the gifts of life to God, or we may lose them. (11) Only they have a right to mirth whose hearts are right with God. (13) To forget God is a grievous crime. The nations that do so are turned into hell.

God's Infinite Grace (14-23).—This paragraph is full of I wills. It is in the wilderness, once a garden, that God speaks to us. (15) If we put away sin, as Achan from the camp, in the valley of despair and defeat, a door will open into hope, a Paradise full of blessing: as when the traveller bursts out of the Mont Cenis tunnel on the sunny plains of Italy. (19) The marriage relationship shall be renewed again, but this time "for ever." Notice the ascending scale, the people pleading with the earth for her gifts, earth calling to the heavens for rain, and the heavens calling to God for the precious showers, and God hearing and doing more than He was asked. For now the other meaning of the word Jezreel would be fulfilled. It had meant only scattering to destroy: now it should mean, scattering to sow.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1.—HOSEA III.

We must take this chapter literally. For long Hosea's wife, Gomer, had been living with another man, just as Israel had been devoted to idols. But Hosea loved her still, just as God loved his people; for our sin cannot shut us away from the infinite love of God. (2) The price paid was half the price of a female slave (Ex. xxi. 32). Hosea bought her for himself to separate her from her abominable sins, and that she might be tested in her desire to be delivered from them. But at first she was not received back into his home. (3) He was waiting for her, ready to take her to himself, when the time of probation was over. (4) So Israel has been redeemed, purchased by the incorruptible price of the blood of Jesus. She is also now living apart from idols, and abhors that which was once her crime and ruin. And God has not taken to himself another nation to usurp her place. It waits for her yet. But the time of probation, which has lasted for 1800 years, is not yet over. They are still without king or prince, and sacrifice; just as they are without the pillar of the grove, the ephod of the priest, and the seraphim, i.e. the bust of the idol. Some day they shall turn to God, and find peace in his love. Then will He come and reign over them; and they shall fear to sin, lest they grieve the true husband of their souls.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.

Jesus Cleansing the Temple (John ii. 13-25).

Golden Text.—Verse 16.

(12) The journey to Jerusalem to attend the Passover feast rendered the visit to Capernaum (12) a very brief one. It was the first Passover Jesus had attended since his entrance upon his public work. No doubt the profanation He corrected now had been going on during all his previous visits to the Temple. But until He had been proclaimed and anointed as the Son of God and the Messiah, He did not attempt the work of purification.

The Temple Profaned (14).—The word Temple here describes the whole of the sacred enclosure, including the building itself, and the surrounding courts. This market was held in the outer court, that of the Gentiles. "It had an area of about fourteen acres, and was separated from the inner court by a wall breast high, and bearing intimations which forbade the encroachment of the Gentiles on pain of death. Round this outer court ran marble colonnades, richly ornamented, and supported by four rows of pillars, and roofed with cedar, affording ample shade to the traders."—Dods.

No doubt this arrangement was intended for the convenience of worshippers crowding into Jerusalem from all countries. They found it possible to purchase on the spot all they needed for sacrifice. The money changers were necessary; for the Temple tax, amounting to half a shekel (Exodus xxx. 13-15), must be paid into the treasury in Jewish money. The profanation consisted, not in having such a market, but in having it in the Temple area. It not only destroyed the worship of the Gentiles in the only place where they were allowed to enter, but it disturbed other worshippers also, and introduced into the house of God the spirit of bargain-making, and avarice, and greed. Are there no ways of profaning God's house now? Inattentive, irreverent, thoughtless worshippers are doing the same.

The Cleansing (15-17).—At first sight this story surprises us. Jesus acts in anger and indignation. Let us not mistake. Anger is not in itself sinful. All depends on what calls it forth, and how it is exercised, and with what motive. In Jesus it was but another side to his love, and his holiness. His love for his Father, and his reverence for his Father's house, and his love for men, who ought to find the Father's house their place of worship, prompted this indignant action. Be careful lest you make his holy anger an excuse for your anger when it is unholy. The measure of our true devotion to God will be the measure of our true wrath against that which insults Him.

The manner in which the cleansing was effected shows that Jesus had perfect control of Himself. He drove out the animals that their owners might follow them, poured out the changers' money, and commanded the owners of the doves to take them hence. He could discriminate even in his wrath. And He gave a reason for his conduct (16). What true son will not resent an insult offered to his father? Compare this expression with that in Luke ii. 49. The Scripture which this action explained to the disciples was from Psa. lxix. 9.

Learn (1) that Jesus can be wroth. See Rev. vi. 15-17, where it appears that men desire to hide themselves from the wrath of the Lamb! (2) That his wrath is always directed against sin. Because sin dishonours God, and ruins men. Be on his side in hating evil.

The Sign Demanded and Given (18-22).—Simeon's prophecy already begins to be fulfilled, The Jews who ask for a sign are those who "fall"; the disciples who reverently watch and believe are those who "rise again" (Luke ii. 34).

His reply (19) was given in words not easily understood, but the Apostle immediately explains them (21). They mean (1) His death and resurrection. There is a warning in his words for the Jews if they will take it. Their antagonism to Him will eventuate in their destroying Him. And yet that crime will only cover themselves with greater shame. It will proclaim their utter defeat and his complete triumph. This was the sign Jesus ever gave. (Matt. xvi. 4). (2) There is evidently some connection between his body and the Temple. The word used does not refer to the whole enclosure, as in verse 14, but to the sacred house itself. To reject and destroy him was to put an end to the Temple worship and to insure its destruction, while by his resurrection He should build that new Temple composed of his own people (Eph. ii. 22).

How differently this word was received. By the Jews it was remembered, only to be perverted and quoted against Him (Mark xiv. 57, 58), though they were not ignorant of its true meaning (Matt. xxvii. 63). By the disciples it was treasured, and served to explain the resurrection when it took place. Many words of Scripture need to be kept in the heart in the same way until the event makes their meaning clear.

Evidently Jesus performed miracles at the feast (23), which convinced men of his Messiahship (iii. 2). Such faith is good as far as it goes, but if it does not go farther than a mere conviction of the understanding it is useless. Jesus knew its value (24). He does not commit Himself to any save those who commit themselves to Him. Does your faith go as far as full trust in Him as your Saviour and Lord?

What other temple is there that needs cleansing? (See 1 Cor. iii. 16.)

For the Young.

SCARLET RAGS.*

I suppose you all have heard the cry of a certain man who goes through the streets calling out "rags, bones, and old iron." After this man has passed through the various streets, and his large sack is well filled with what he has gathered from street to street, he takes them all to his home, and eventually, when he has collected a large pile of rags, they are made up into great bales and sent off to the factories, where they are made into paper. But before the factory man can use them, the rags of different colours must all be separated. The white rags are placed on one pile, and the coloured rags upon another. The white rags are then taken and manufactured into white paper, oftentimes into writing paper, such as you and I use when we write letters to our friends. The coloured rags, which are made of cotton, are washed and bleached, and then, by the aid of salts and in various other ways, they take out the dark colours, until at last the rags are left white, when they also are manufactured into paper.

But when they are sorting and separating, they oftentimes come across some rags which are the colour of these which I now hold in my hand. This lighter colour is called scarlet, and this one of darker colour is called crimson. Now, the man who makes the paper can use the rags of various colours, but when he comes to these rags which are coloured with scarlet and crimson, he is not able to use them at all in manufacturing white paper. He cannot bleach them, for these colours cannot be removed in any manner. So, after the manufacturer has a large collection of these crimson and scarlet rags, they are all ground up, the same as the white rags, but instead of making them into writing paper, they are manufactured into this red blotting paper. And this is the only service which can be made of them.

When the Prophet Isaiah was upon earth, hundreds of years ago, and when the people of Israel were very wicked and God was greatly displeased with them, the prophet called upon them to repent of their sins and turn to God, and in order that they might not be too much discouraged because of their sins and guilt, the prophet said to them, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool" (Isaiah i. 18). The prophet sought to show them that their sins were so grievous that no hope could be expected from any human power, yet if they would turn to God in true repentance He would give them pardon and salvation.

There is not a boy or girl here this morning who has not often disobeyed God. Oftentimes we do not realise what great sinners we are in the sight of God, but at other times the Holy Spirit reveals to us our sins, and when we see our sins as they really are, we are apt to feel that God might not be willing to forgive such great sinners, and then it is that this passage of Scripture comes to us and gives us great comfort, by the assurance that "though our sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

John, one of the disciples of Jesus, when he had grown old, was banished by a wicked ruler to the island of Patmos. When God would comfort him, He gave him a view of heaven, and when he looked into heaven he saw many wonderful and very beautiful things. Among the other things he saw a great many people who had on white robes, and he asked the angel who these were, and the angel replied and said, "These are they who have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. vii. 14). So you and I may come to the Lord Jesus Christ, and He will place upon us the robes of his own righteousness, take away our sins and our guilt, and make us pure, and holy and right, and then when you and I die we also may enter into heaven above, and be one of that throng who "have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." I pray that you all may desire to be clothed with the righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ. Give your heart to Him, and give to Him your whole lives in humble service.

* From Five Minutes Object Sermons to Children, by Dr. Sylvanus Stall (4s. Funk and Wagnalls Co.). The objects used in this sermon were pieces of scarlet and crimson cotton cloth, and some red blotting paper.

A YOUNG CONFESSOR.

Lord Bennet, writing recently of some meeting he and others had been engaged in, says:—There was one very touching incident. A little child of eight and a-half years came up after an open-air meeting, and said she wanted to give her heart to Jesus. Mrs. Davidson said, "Will you tell him so now," and without any prompting she knelt down before them all and prayed, "Lord Jesus, I want to give my heart to you and be your own little lamb for ever." It was a reproof to us all. For to whom has not "the fear of man" been a snare at times?

CHILDREN'S S.S. MISSION.—SEASIDE SERVICES.

The following are the arrangements for the Children's August Seaside Services:—Bridlington, H. Hutchinson, to Aug. 31; Blackpool, S. J. Hewlett, to Aug. 31; Brighton (West), H. Hankinson, to Sep. 7; Bognor, Rev. J. Barnes, LL.D.; Carnoustie, N.B., B. L. Livingstone-Learmonth, from Aug. 13 to 31; Colwyn Bay, Rev. Martin J. Hall, to Sep. 4; Largs, N.B., Josiah Spiers, till Sep. 11; Eastbourne, A. G. Dodderidge, to Sep. 11; Exmouth, P. Welch, to 26; Felixstowe, C. F. H. Battersby, M.D.; Herne Bay, Geo. Goodman; Hoylake and West Kirby, F. O. Lasbrey and others to Aug. 18; Ilfracombe, W. R. Moore, to Aug. 29; Littlehampton, J. S. Tyler and E. Hughes; Llandudno, E. J. Kennedy, C. Edmunds, T. B. Bishop, Arthur Outram, L. B. Butcher, Evan J. Hopkins, and others; Llanfairfechan, H. C. Jenner, to Aug. 17; Lowestoft, E. Arrowsmith, to Sep. 14; Mablethorpe, C. J. Small, to 28; Penmaenmawr, E. E. Nickisson; Pensarn, E. Collier and F. W. Betteney; Rhyl, A. C. Jewell and Sydney S. Weatherley, to Aug. 26; St. Leonards, T. W. Graham, to Sep. 10; Scarboro', J. Reginald Naylor; Southend, J. Waters Coldicott; Southsea, S. M. Warner; Southwold, F. Churchill, M.B.; Swanage, Rev. F. S. Walbancke Jones; Cleveleys, Poulton-le-Fylde, Rev. F. J. Horsefield; Cromer, F. Aldous (Sunday afternoons); New Quay, Mr. Henry Lloyd.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending September 1:—Sun., Aug. 26, St. John viii 12-30; Mon., 27, viii. 31-47; Tues., 28, viii. 48-59; Wed., 29, ix. 1-14; Thurs., 30, ix. 15-29; Fri., 31, x. 30-41; Sat., Sept. 1, x. 1-18.

TEIGNMOUTH.—Pastor Owen Tidman has been conducting most interesting children's services on the sands here, which have been attended with much power and blessing. He has also preached the Gospel at Kingsteignton.—E. S.

BLACKPOOL.—The seaside services arranged by the Children's Special Service Mission during August are now in full operation around our coasts. The work is being carried on here by Rev. T. Longstaff, Messrs. S. J. Hewlett, C. H. Collier, A. Lyon, T. Whiteley, G. Matthews, and others. Last summer the work was greatly blessed to young and old, and already the workers have had much encouragement this year. After-meetings are held each evening in the school-room, Rawcliffe-street, close to the beach, where the workers get into close and personal contact with souls, and many go away rejoicing in the assurance of a present salvation. The weather, though unsettled, has not materially hindered the sand-services. The Lord's people are asked to pray for a great blessing on all the children and others who are reached thus during their holidays.

THE DEACONESS INSTITUTION, JAMAICA, reports earnest work for the past year, alike in training nurses for service among sick poor, and deaconesses for service in visitation, Bible-class, mission, and similar efforts. Nine nurses are now working in connection with the Home. The correspondent in London is Miss Florence Klein, 24, Belsize Park, N.W.

CONGO-BALOLO MISSION. — Regions Beyond announces that "The last mail brings us the eagerly-anticipated news of the safe arrival out of the little party who left us on April 4—Messrs. Ruskin and Hayes, Misses Elliott and Cook. They reached Boma May 1, but were delayed there discharging cargo until the morning of May 6, when they went on to Matadi, and arrived in the afternoon, all 'looking remarkably well.' Happily carriers were waiting, and so, after a day's rest, the two brethren were able to proceed up country at once, the sisters remaining behind until the dry season fully set in and more carriers came down, when Mr. Wooding hoped to accompany them as far as Lukunga."

"The Ascent of Man."—2.

By Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P.

I should like now to examine, in the light of history as well as of Scripture, the main thesis of Professor Drummond's book: that evolution is steadily carrying mankind and all things in the universe towards a higher goal. Its key-note he tells us is "perfectness"; and lest I should misrepresent him I quote two important passages, p. 435:—"For all things are rising, all worlds, all planets, all stars, all suns. An ascending energy is in the universe, and the whole moves on with one mighty idea and anticipation. The aspiration in the human mind and heart is but the evolutionary tendency of the universe becoming conscious." . . . "Evolution is less a doctrine than a light; it is a light revealing in the chaos of the past a perfect and growing order, giving meaning even to the confusions of the present, discovering through all the deviousness around us the paths of progress, and flashing its rays already upon a coming goal. Men begin to see an undeviating ethical purpose in this material world, a tide, that from eternity has never turned, making for perfectness."

This is a very lovely picture, how far is it true?

We have a tolerably accurate record of human history for about 3000 years. We know something of the rise and fall of the Assyrian and Chaldean Empires, of the Egypt of the Pharaohs, of ancient China and India; and, coming to later periods, we have accurate and reliable history of ancient Greece and Rome. Do we see in this long stretch of human history the constant ascending process? I think not. We see a succession of advances followed by reactions; we see successive civilisations swept away by waves of barbarism; we see nothing permanent and no solid basis for progress, except so far as real living faith in God has purified national life. Ancient Egypt, Assyria, Chaldea fell

BECAUSE THEY BECAME CORRUPT.

The ruins of Nineveh, Babylon, and Thebes tell of a higher civilisation 3000 years ago than now exists there. The China of Confucius, the Persia of Zoroaster, the India of Sakya-Muni, had a higher life than they possess to-day. No one doubts that the Greece of Æschylus and Sophocles, of Marathon and Platæa, was better than that corrupt and decayed nationality which fell an easy prey to the Romans. The Sophists who disputed with Paul on Mars Hill were pigmies compared with Plato and Socrates. In the same way the Rome of Cato and the Scipios was a purer and a nobler state than the Rome of Nero and Tiberius. Never did humanity sink lower than in the times of the twelve Cæsars when Rome was undisputed mistress of the world. The worst pessimists are Tacitus and Juvenal, who are but echoes of the first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans.

Is not the ethical history of ancient civilisation epitomised in these words "Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind to do those things which are not convenient"? Rom. i. 28. Is the root-principle of modern civilisation in any wise different? I think not. It contains no principle of perpetuity apart from living faith in a holy God; when this declines all that is good declines as well. The Paris of Robespierre, the France of Zola, have the seeds of decay as surely implanted as the Rome of Caligula, or the Babylon of Nebuchadnezzar. If the wave of atheism and sensuality that is sweeping over France is not checked, it will as surely extinguish French civilisation as it did that of ancient Rome.

All over Europe we see the same conflict waged; the forces of evil were never stronger than at the close of this nineteenth century. All the great cities of Europe and America present the spectacle of vast numbers of people as dead to God and the higher life as ever the heathen were. Whence this outburst of Anarchism in modern times? Whence come the dynamiter and the assassin, such conspicuous figures of late years? Whence this desperate social bitterness which eventuated the other day in a kind of civil war in Chicago? They come from the decline of religious faith and

THE INEVITABLE CONSEQUENCE, LAWLESSNESS.

Does the present outlook of humanity justify the optimism of Professor Drummond? Might not just as good an argument be made in favour of the pessimistic theory? Are the British people, that most favoured race, getting better and better? Examine the literature they read to-day; is it purer or more elevating than in the times of the Puritans? Is it even as good as in the days of Sir Walter Scott, of Dickens, and Thackeray? Is not the special note of this time the immense increase of unclean books and periodicals, the steady drift towards the bestial literature of modern France? Nothing but the stricter enforcement of the law against obscene publications keeps this country from sinking to the same level. Just as the reading of a nation deteriorates, so do its morals, and the London of to-day presents too many traces of the same moral decay which undermined the nations of antiquity. The fearful convulsions in the United States have drawn attention to its moral condition. I quote a true description of American civilisation from one of their religious periodicals, which recently was reproduced in The Christian:—

> It is strange that good and sensible men can look upon the state of things existing in our own country without alarm. Here is a land hid from the nations of Europe until the Art of Printing and the Reformation. God sent to it the Puritans and the Huguenots, the best seed of earth. He gave to them statesmen with wisdom to lay the foundations of the most beneficent government the world had ever seen. In climate, soil, extent of territory, wealth, increase of population, and all the elements of prosperity, it has never been equalled. Yet where are we to-day? Anarchy, lawlessness, crime, and violence, threaten our national existence. . . . The utter weakness of Congress to cope with the financial difficulties that oppress the people; the rapid increase of murders, suicides, and divorces; the wide separation between the Church and those known as labourers; the condition of the Church itself, honeycombed with infidelity and decaying with worldliness: all betoken that we are on the eve of a disastrous and destructive change, and that the conversion of this part of the world at least is the wildest dream.

To this I will only add that 6,000 murders were committed in the United States last year, and lynch law reigns supreme in a large part of its territory. I ask, do the signs of the times justify the optimism of Professor Drummond, or the darker outlook of the New Testament?

What does the Inspired Volume teach about the history of this dispensation? Our blessed Lord says:—"As the days of Noah were so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be; for as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Matt. xxiv. 32-9. St. Paul says:—"Know also that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy." 2 Tim. iii. 1, 2. St. John says:—"All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father but is of the world, and the world passeth away and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." 1 John ii. 16-17. The Bible clearly teaches that this dispensation will end in failure like the previous ones; it points to a time of sore judgments, when "the vials of God's wrath" will be poured on the earth, and after this time of judgment will come a purified earth, and these words will be fulfilled:—"The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever." Rev. ii. 15. So far from teaching continuous evolution from good to better, from high to higher, Scripture teaches a final catastrophe, in which all that is of the earth earthy shall perish, and in which only that which is "unseen and eternal" shall remain; "nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Now, I am well aware that all is not black in the modern outlook. I do not forget the outburst of faith and zeal that has marked several branches of the Christian Church in the last half century; the great increase of missionary effort, the many pious and holy lives that are led. We have two opposing currents running side by side; just as the muddy waters of the Arve run side by side with the pure waters of the Rhone, the stream of evil gets darker, the stream of good purer. But there is this difference, that whereas formerly the irreligious part of the community outwardly admitted the obligations of Christianity, now they ostentatiously ignore them; their language is, "there is no God, no heaven, no hell, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." There are far more avowed agnostics and atheists in Great Britain and America than there were fifty years ago. Universal human experience shows that this phenomenon coincides with national decay; it has become so striking a feature of these latter days that one is not surprised that many of the most devout souls presage the near approach of that catastrophe which Holy Scripture predicts is to end this stage of the world's history. Europe is one armed camp containing fourteen millions of trained soldiers liable to be called out at the outbreak of war; and what with the anarchism, infidelity, and class hatreds and national antipathies that prevail, it is easy to see that what men call an accident might cause the powder magazine to explode, and shatter modern civilisation to pieces.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN GLASGOW.

It is a not uncommon experience that a second mission, by even our foremost evangelists, is not so successful as the first; the novelty, the peculiar method of handling the truth, and the methods of work, which attracted many, became familiar, and with the familiarity, there often appears to be more or less of loss of interest.

In the case of Mrs. Baeyertz at Cowcaddens Free Church it has been otherwise. The interest from the very beginning of her second mission was more intense than last year. Her subjects were almost entirely different, although they were not at first sight so striking. Glasgow as a whole takes holiday about the middle of July, and the people in thousands go to the coasts or to the Highlands, and on Glasgow Fair Sabbath a good many churches are closed. At Cowcaddens, however, a good congregation gathered in the afternoon, and at night there would be fully 900 present.

From the very first, impressions of a very definite kind were made. The Bible-readings of the first week were greatly blessed to a large number of believers, some of whom came all the way from Rothesay, Greenock, Kilmarnock, Coatbridge, Paisley, and other places. During the second week the numbers attending were trebled, the central area of Cowcaddens Free Church being almost quite filled. The exposition of Scripture day by day was remarkably fresh and powerful, and the teaching clear as daylight. The addresses on "The Holy Spirit" and on "The Clean Heart" were almost overwhelming, the latter being specially helpful to Christians who were previously fighting an almost hopeless battle. The last of these Bible-readings, on "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost," was the most largely attended of all the day services. Several ministers from a distance came into town in order to be present. The impression was both deep and real. These day services were verily a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

The evangelistic meetings were well-attended during the first week, and many remarkable cases came under the notice of the workers in the inquiry-room. One who was arrested by the truth the first Sabbath night had a hard struggle for a whole week to break loose from gambling companions, with whom during the last four years he had spent a large sum of money; but on the second Sabbath night he came clean out for Christ saying with Ephraim, "What have I to do any more with idols?" Similar cases occurred during the following week. The second Sabbath witnessed the climax of the mission, when nearly forty souls in deep earnest entered the inquiry-room.

By the second Wednesday, the church became crowded, and so continued till the close of the mission on Tuesday evening, when the passages had to be filled with chairs and still numbers had to stand. It was a night ever to be remembered by many. After an address of remarkable strength, clearness, and spiritual power, from Romans vi., a second meeting was held, to which over 900 persons waited. In the consecration service that followed, Mr. W. A. Campbell, Mr. P. M. Bryde Stewart, Mrs. Baeyertz, and myself took part. During the mission about 240 persons were dealt with; a much larger number than last year being persons who previously had no church connection, although many connected with other churches, far and near, were partakers of the blessing.

Our office-bearers have been so impressed with the blessing connected with Mrs. Baeyertz's visit that they have adopted a resolution, in which they gratefully acknowledge the goodness of God at this time, their appreciation of the service rendered to the cause by the labours of his servant, and their desire for her return, at the first providential opening, for a third mission in their midst. She begins in Trinity Free Church (D.V.) on the first Sabbath of September.

CHRISTIAN PHYSICIAN, JAPAN.

To those who dwell in western lands, where Christianity has long shed the blessed influences of individual freedom and social progress, the recent history of Japan has afforded many tokens of encouraging interest. Within the period of a generation's life, most remarkable strides have been made in the arts of civilisation and all that makes for the enlightenment and physical well-being of the people. In the moral region, too, there has been notable advance, although in some respects, particularly as to the position of woman, the prevailing sentiment of the nation is still on a very low plane. It is not yet forty years since the first glimmerings of Christian life began to penetrate the heathen gloom of these islands of the south. For a time little progress was manifest, but within the past decade of Japanese history, the spread of the Gospel and its evident fruits have been among the brightest triumphs of modern missions. The unhappy strife with China that has recently turned the sunrise kingdom into a theatre of war, must inevitably push back the tide of national progress and of Christian achievement; though in the end we cannot doubt that the way will be opened in both countries for still more rapid advances in the saving knowledge of God and of his Christ.

The young Japanese friend whose portrait we give in this issue, is a very striking illustration of the national forward movement, as well as of the transforming and ennobling power of the religion of Jesus Christ. Riichiro Saiki was born in March, 1862, a date almost contemporaneous with the opening up of Japan to the beginnings of progressive civilisation. He came of an old and highly-respectable family, though his parents were not of the wealthy class. It is recorded of him that in early youth he was daily taken to school by a grandmother, whose wise words of counsel and encouragement were not lost on the boy, and bore fruit in due time.

At the age of fourteen he concluded his ordinary school education, taking high rank among his fellows. He showed such proficiency that his parents fell in with his earnest wish that he should continue his studies, receiving the little help they could afford. In due season Mr. Saiki graduated in his preparatory course of study, being first in deportment and third in scholarship out of a hundred and twenty students. Choosing the profession of medicine, he entered college, and at the end of other six years received a degree equivalent to our English M.D.

At this point in his upward career the young man moved from his native island home to Tokio, the capital, as opening up a wider sphere of professional and intellectual advance. He had hitherto led "a stainless, studious, prudent life," but was as yet a nominal heathen. He applied himself ardently to the acquisition of further knowledge in surgery at Tokio University, and at the age of twenty-two, laden with honours, was ready for the practical work of active life. An appointment as assistant surgeon in the Imperial Navy of Japan being vacant, Dr. Saiki was a competitor; after a very rigorous examination, physically and mentally, he came out first from a roll of eighty-one applicants, and received the appointment in October, 1884.

A few months previous to that, however, a great change in his spiritual experience had culminated in the open profession of Christianity. Before going to the Japanese capital he had been thrown into contact with some young men who had embraced the Christian faith, through the influence of an American teacher. Naturally opposed to this step on the part of his fellows, he was yet honest and sincere enough to enter on a prolonged and careful study of the Christian Scriptures, with the result that he calmly and definitely decided to forswear the Buddhist faith, and become an avowed disciple of Jesus Christ. This decision meant much to one in his position at that period, but he never faltered, and gladly consecrated all to the service of his new-found Saviour.

His faith and zeal were speedily put to the test in his naval post of service, where by the grace of God he not only witnessed a good confession, but was instrumental in influencing others to a decision for Christ, some being fellow-officers who had previously opposed and persecuted him. He was promoted to the full rank of surgeon, two years after joining the navy.

Desiring to obtain fuller professional qualification he purposed going to the United States for a time for the purpose. By special command of the Emperor of Japan he was granted leave of absence on partial pay, and left Japan with special marks of imperial favour. Further successes and honours awaited him during his course of study in America, which he followed up by a stay in Germany for the completion of his medical and other equipment. Meantime his family at home had all embraced the Christian faith, in answer to his earnest and continued prayer.

Having attained to the full standard of professional proficiency, Dr. Saiki resumed his place in the naval service of his native land. In 1891 we find him on the banks of the Clyde as surgeon on board a steel cruiser being built there for the Imperial service of Japan. The ship was delayed for some time before sailing for the East, and Dr. Saiki heartily aided in efforts made by Miss M'Lean and others to bring Gospel influence to bear on the crew of 160 men-of-wars men. Little meetings were daily held in a hut in the shipyard and were much appreciated. During the time of his sojourn on our shores Dr. Saiki became known to some leading Christian friends in Scotland, who have doubtless followed him since then with their prayerful concern.

Shortly after the arrival of the British-built war-ship in Japan, Dr. Saiki resigned his position and prospects in the Imperial navy and entered on the general exercise of his noble profession in Tokio. He opened a dispensary and carried on medical work among the poor. Almost simultaneous with this fresh start there came a terrible earthquake, which devastated some of the surrounding villages. In common with European and other native medical men, Dr. Saiki rendered at that painful juncture very efficient help.

More recently he has had his attention specially called to the condition and needs of many young mothers in Tokio, who lack medical help in the time of child-bearing. Social morality in Japan unhappily is not what it ought to be, and there are many who incur the responsibilities and trials of motherhood out of lawful wedlock. Dr. Saiki, out of compassion to this class, has established a maternity hospital, where the needful care can be bestowed on them, while they are also influenced for God and righteousness. In the furtherance of this scheme he has the sympathetic co-operation of the best Christian people of Tokio. Rev. Barclay J. Buxton, the young C.M.S. missionary, is one of his Japan committee. At the recent Keswick Convention Mr. Buxton referred to Dr. Saiki's work as one of the hopeful movements of that far eastern land. Miss M. M'Lean, of the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, London, S.W., as a long-standing and true friend of all good work for Japan and the Japanese, is also much interested in Dr. Saiki's work, and will gladly give further information respecting it to any inquiring friends. It is a work which we can heartily commend to the sympathies of our readers, with the earnest prayer that this young Christian physician may be long spared to follow the footsteps of his Divine Master in seeking to care for the bodies and the souls of men.

PAKEFIELD CONFERENCE.

The annual conference for the promotion of growth in grace was held on Wednesday and Thursday last in the Cunningham Schoolroom, Pakefield. For sixteen years the esteemed rector, Rev. Lewis Price, with the aid of devoted friends, has convened this meeting; and it is gratifying to know that many holiday-seekers in the locality, as well as the residents of the village and surrounding district, have been edified and stimulated by the teaching presented. This year was no exception to what has come to be regular; the occasion was one of real interest and profit to goodly gatherings of Christian people.

On the evening before the Conference there was a special service in the parish church, at which the preacher was Rev. Thomas Graham, vicar of Southborough, who also made several important contributions to the Conference itself. Those who heard his address on the Wednesday evening could not but be deeply impressed. In a study of 2 Peter i. 1-9, he invited Christian people to realise their resources. He advocated a disposition on the part of believers to help and cheer each other with their experiences; and as showing how those who are in spiritual darkness may thus be benefited, he described the conversion of Latimer, consequent upon Bilney's impassioned confession of what the Lord had done for him. Speaking of the preciousness of faith, Mr. Graham asked "Are we sufficiently thankful to God for giving us faith?" Faith never would have been ours but for the merit and righteousness of our God and Saviour.

A thoughtful address was delivered by Rev. Robert Conway, of Alconbury, who remarked that although we can never be perfect here, we can be a great deal less imperfect than we are. Where thirst for holiness is given to a soul, God has assuredly made provision for the quenching of that thirst. Opening up the Lord's figure of Himself being the vine and his disciples the branches, the speaker enlarged upon contact, connection, subjection, and reception. Some are content with the first and indifferent regarding the others; but if we would grow in grace we must live upon Christ, and receive of his gracious fulness. Why are Christians so fond of the world? Is it not because they do not get enough out of Christ? If we get more out of Christ we shall want less out of the world.

Among other speakers at the Conference was Bishop Ryle. At the concluding praise meeting, Mr. Price pressed the importance of holy living as a practical demonstration of the truths which had been enunciated, the most powerful sermon being a consistent Christian life before the world. Revs. T. Graham and J. E. Rogers (Great Yarmouth) followed with addresses in keeping with this thought.

The Conference is now quite a parochial institution; and the success which has attended the earnest efforts of Mr. Price should encourage others to follow his example. In villages and even narrower circles, where first things are put first, a periodical conference might bring waverers to decision, and give point and urgency to long-continued exhortation regarding Christian life and duty.

ABORIGINES IN QUEENSLAND.—In a letter from Mrs. Gribble as to the work of the Bellenden Ker Mission to Aborigines, she says: "We have sustained a serious loss; our mission boat was totally wrecked and the verandah blown down by a severe hurricane which passed this way. God mercifully spared the house. We have another helper, Miss Menia Maspero, from Sydney, who is a great help; but we need much more help, as my son is quite overworked, and needs rest; he is the only white man here. The climate is trying, and the work arduous and continuous. The children are getting on well in school. We have about twenty resident on the Mission, but we sadly need dormitories for both girls and boys."

A GOOD SUGGESTION.—In closing a letter to The British Weekly on the Keswick meetings, Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes says:—"Why should not the annual denominational gatherings of our different Churches devote at least one session to the deepening of the spiritual life with addresses and prayers? And though thereby they might pass fewer 'resolutions,' ministers and delegates might return to their respective spheres with the most potent resolution of all, passed by the acclamation of all their faculties and engraved on their souls by God's Spirit, that henceforth they will serve Christ with greater devotion than ever. Stimulating and educating as these annual meetings are, they would be more inspiring if we gave God more time to speak to us, and ourselves more time to

THE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.

Mr. Moody must be a happy man to-day. It almost seems as though the Master whom he serves had filled his cup to overflowing, and put the crown on his work.

It has been an exquisite day. Away beyond the Connecticut river, into the blue distance, the landscape has lain in unrivalled beauty, beneath the smile of radiant sunshine; yet the atmosphere has been cool and pleasant. All the great buildings in which the students live and pursue their studies are turned into extemporised hotels, in which these same students act as cooks, servants, waiters, and waitresses. They are crowded with people from all parts of the States and of the world. There must be from 1200 to 1500 such. But this is not the special reason for our friend's gladness.

Last year he gathered the people who had come to the conference, and took them up to a bare site, and told them of his desire to erect there a large auditorium, to contain the vast gatherings that from year to year assemble at these conventions. It must have seemed to some an extravagant idea to build a place capable of seating comfortably 2500, and of holding 1000 more at a push. I confess that when, on my arrival yesterday, we went straight there together, and I saw its vast proportions, I was a little startled. But he said in his characteristic way, "God has so often exceeded my faith that I thought I would build a bit in advance, so as to be able to hold the blessing when it comes."

But to-day he has been amply vindicated. Even last night the area was comfortably filled. But at this morning's service every seat in every part was occupied; audiences have gathered through this afternoon and this evening which could by no means have been accommodated in the old Stone Hall.

It is not to be expected, of course, that these great congregations will be maintained during the week. Evidently to-day the whole country for miles around has been pouring in its contingents. From Mount Hermon, where large numbers of the visitors are housed, from lonely farmsteads, from villages and towns within an area of twenty miles, vehicles of every description have brought their loads. And as the director and host of it all is the man whom they had known from boyhood; who was not ashamed to point this morning to his old employer for whom he worked forty years ago; and who receives the same honour amongst his own people as he gets in every city he visits on either side of the Atlantic, surely it is a perpetual illustration of the words, "Them that honour Me I will honour."

The auditorium is one of the noblest and best proportioned buildings, and the most suited for its purpose, of any that I have seen. Mr. Moody has put into it the results of a wider experience of buildings than any man living. And the architect has been very successful in realising his ideal. Mr. Moody himself thinks that it will become a model of similar buildings in other places.

It stands on the highest knoll in Northfield, is of deep red brick, and is as nearly as possible square. There is a square tower on either side of the front, and inside the eye is at once arrested by the beautiful curve of the deep gallery, faced with unvarnished wood, which sweeps right round the building, and is reached from many entrances, and also by a broad flight of stairs leading up on either side from the platform or daïs on which stands the little reading-desk and Mr. Sankey's harmonium. Behind this is the singers' gallery, with room for 200. Spacious windows and glass doors give plenty of light and air; whilst the ceiling is so roofed as to carry the speaker's voice without the least difficulty. It might not be so suitable for our more changeable climate, but it is precisely adapted for the beautiful summer weather of this lovely region. The cost is about £12,000, but as this is not yet all raised, Mr. Moody refuses formally to dedicate the building; though how it can be better dedicated than by the services of to-day, and notably by his first sermon there on "Faith," I am at a loss to understand. Christ Himself was there to take the building for his own. It is to stand open day and night for any who wish to use it.

This morning, Mr. Moody was very interested in organising his choir, which he has picked up from the congregation, and they certainly sang beautifully under the lead of Mr. Jacobs and Mr. Stebbins. The male quartette gave a musical rendering of Eccl. xii. and Isa. liii. in a superb manner. Mr. Sankey sang "Rock of Ages" and "The Ninety and Nine." This afternoon Dr. Hastings, Professor Gray, and Major Whittle took the meetings for an hour each. In the evening I preached on Isa. xlv. 9.

Till now, Mr. Moody has been unable to invite his neighbours and friends, because there has been no house-room for them. Now, however, all this is altered, and it is probable that the neighbourhood generally will much benefit by the invitation he issues. Excursion trains are to bring people in at reduced rates every day this week.

In conclusion, let me earnestly ask prayer for all that lies before us. The Convention proper closes next Sunday. During the week we are to have the help of Drs. Gordon, Pierson, Hamlin, and several others. After it is closed, I am to carry on the meetings for a fortnight myself. I hope to report progress in subsequent letters. This evening the Spirit of God was very evidently at work.

To any personal friends who may look here for information as to myself, I have to say that God brought me safely across the ocean, giving us a good passage of six and a-half days in the Fürst Bismarck; though the weather was cloudy and foggy, it was fairly calm. F. B. Meyer.

Who are Israel?—2.

BY MR. H. D. BROWN.

It is deeply interesting to trace this "holy seed" from the beginning, running through the Bible like a line of living light. Founded typically in the blood of Abel and the living Seth (type of resurrection)—of whom Eve, "the mother of all living," said, "God hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew"—we trace it like a silvery thread through antediluvian times until Noah, when God gave the blessing first to Shem, but promised that Japheth should "dwell in the tents of Shem." Then on to Abraham, the "father of all them that believe"; from him to Jacob, the first "Israel."

Henceforth the holy seed, like a river pent up between its banks, was confined within family, tribe, and nation; but all through the history we find two Israels, to whom God addressed his words. There was proud, stiff-necked, rebellious, idolatrous Israel, bearing the name indeed, and enjoying the national privileges, but "serving other gods," to whom Jehovah spoke in anger, in tender pleading, and in bitter complaint. These were the children "born after the flesh," the sons of Hagar, of whom it was said in due time, when they had filled up the measure of their iniquity, "Cast out the bondwoman and her son, for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman."

There was also the true Israel, the "remnant," the "holy seed," the "poor of the flock," the "seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee to Baal"; and, mingled with the thunder, the earthquake, and the whirlwind of the wrath of God against "a gainsaying people," there is ever heard the still small voice, comforting, strengthening, upholding his righteous ones, to whom were given "the exceeding great and precious promises."

At last Jehovah-Jesus, the "Shepherd of Israel," came, and in this connection the tenth chapter of John is deeply instructive. The true meaning of the chapter is often misapprehended through not observing its dispensational character. The Lord here speaks of those false Messiahs who were thieves and robbers, and led many astray (see Acts v. 36, 37), but "the sheep did not hear them," "for they know not the voice of strangers." But He, the "Shepherd of the sheep," entered in by the door of God's appointment—in fulfilment of type and prophecy—entered, that is, into the Jewish fold, and "calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out," out of the Jewish fold within which they had hitherto been confined, out into the wilderness, outside the city, outside the camp, "and when He putteth forth his own sheep He goeth before them, and the sheep follow Him, for they know his voice," as we read in Zechariah xi. 11, "So the poor of the flock that waited upon me knew that it was the word of the Lord."

Then He said, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold, them also I must bring, and they shall hear My voice; and there shall be one flock [not fold] and one Shepherd." There is no longer a fold on earth, the sheep are out in the wilderness with the Shepherd.

And how striking the parallel. As in old time there were two "Israels," an outer and an inner, even so in this dispensation there has always been an outer and an inner; and as in old time the "holy seed" were "the flock of slaughter," and their chief persecutors were those who falsely bore the name, so the "holy seed" in this dispensation have found their most bitter and cruel persecutors amongst those who falsely profess the name of Christ.

This does not in the least interfere with what is known as "dispensational truth." The nation is still "beloved for the fathers' sakes," though individually the Jews are only the objects of the compassionate love of God in common with the Gentiles. The nation will again have its place; the "natural branches" have been "broken off" that we might be "grafted in," but "they, also, if they abide not still in unbelief shall be grafted in, for God is able to graft them in again." For "blindness in part is happened to Israel* until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and

SO ALL ISRAEL SHALL BE SAVED."

Not all the Jewish race, nor all they of the twelve tribes, but all "the Israel of God." The ungodly ones shall be "like the chaff which the wind driveth away," but not one grain shall be lost of all "the holy seed" from the beginning to the end.

It is evident, then, according to New Testament teaching, that all we who believe in Christ are not Gentiles but Israelites. True, we were "in times past Gentiles in the flesh . . . . aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise," but now we "are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God," and Paul declares to us "the mystery of Christ . . . . as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel." This entirely cuts away the ground from the thought that believers in this dispensation are in any sense a separate body from the Old Testament saints. It sets forth the unity of application of the whole of Scripture, and is a subject of deep importance to us, for it is one thing to be able to derive help and comfort from promises given to others, and quite another to be able to claim them as directly our own, our priceless heritage, our inalienable right in Christ Jesus. After all, He, not Abraham, is the real fountain and federal head of Israel, and when He is called "the glory of my people Israel" it is surely not of the apostate Jewish nation, but of the sons of the living God.

The study of prophecy is undoubtedly of great importance, especially in the present day, when the Times of the Gentiles are manifestly nearing their end, but we must be careful lest it become so absorbing as to cause us to lose sight of the present and personal application of Holy Scripture. Let us by all means pray and labour earnestly for the conversion of the Jews, and let us watch with intense interest the indications of their return as a nation to their own land, as one of the principal signs that herald the speedy return of our Lord: but let us not in so doing apply to them what belongs only to believers and to all believers; though we may rejoice in all that is spoken of their future restoration and glory.

Only one thing remains. Some may ask, Do the promises concerning the land belong to us? Certainly they do, in the same sense and degree as they belong to our father Abraham, to whom they were first given. They were given to him as the representative of the holy seed, and though we personally shall not possess the land, it will be possessed by our spiritual descendants, the same holy seed, which will then be found coterminous with the restored and converted nation after they have been again grafted into their own olive-tree.

* Obviously the name Israel is still usually applied to the nation, but the whole of the New Testament argument is to show that the real position belongs only to believers in Christ.

PRAYER FOR TIBET.

Open, Lord, the two-leaved gates;
Loose the loins of hostile kings:
As our faith expectant waits,
Show us great and mighty things.

Make the crooked places straight;
Lead the way untrod before;
Let thy Word throughout Tibet
Find a wide, effectual door.

By the servants Thou hast sent,
Haste thy pleasure to perform:
Let the ancient veil be rent;
Thresh the mountains with the worm.

Thine the power, O Lord most high;
Earth and hell thy Word obey:
Say Thou to the deep, "Be dry":
Make the wilderness thy way.

Thou hast said, "Go up possess
Cities great and walled to heaven:"
Let thy foes before thy face
Be as smoke by tempest driven.

While around yon "hermit land"
Faith keeps marching day by day,
Cheer the brave beleaguering band,
Nor the conquest long delay.

Let the knell of Buddha's power
Sound through every falling shrine:
Let the deadly lotus flower
Fade before the living Vine.

Bid the hoary summits yield,
Echoing now the trumpet blast:
Let an empire's grave, unsealed,
Glow with Gospel light at last.

SAILORS' WORK AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

In a few months the Constantinople Sailors' Rest will have been open ten years. A decade of Christian service in these last days is an important period. Miss H. L. Green-Armytage has often stood almost alone in this great work for God. She now greatly needs a lady helper who would be able to consecrate herself to this work without coming upon the small Rest fund. This is the more necessary as Miss Armytage has just been called to England by a sick relative, and though she hopes shortly to return, a suitable helper in this great field of service is much needed. Others might like to help our sister in this work of faith and labour of love.

Admiral Grant was recently there, and speaks highly of the spiritual work and of its tremendous need. Sailors have met their Saviour at this Rest. Communications might be sent to Mr. E. W. Matthews, Sailors' Institute, Shadwell, London, E.

PROTESTANT SCHOOLS IN MADRID.

Some weeks ago you inserted in The Christian a note from Mr. Kingsmill, of Brighton, asking for someone to take up the work he has been doing in connection with these schools. I have consented to take up this work, and shall be thankful to correspond with any who may be interested in the movement.

These schools were supported by Mr. Müller, of Bristol, but in consequence of decrease in his funds he was unable to continue this support. Now the schools, which are under the care of Mr. Fenn, who has laboured for many years in Madrid, are dependent on the free gifts of the Lord's people.

LORD KINNAIRD ON RAFFLING.—On Saturday afternoon Lord Kinnaird opened a sale of work in the grounds of Rossie Priory, Inchture, N.B. The sale was held for the purpose of raising £100, the sum required for paying off debt already incurred, and for completing the improvements on Kinnaird parish church. His Lordship said that in their sale there was to be no raffling. To bring a system of gambling—for raffling was practically that—into God's house, and thereby teach young people to gamble, was one of the most terrible signs of the time. They did not require to be taught to gamble by their spiritual pastors. Unhappily, they could learn that here without attending church bazaars. He was confident they could raise £500 if it was required without raffling, and were they to give less because they gave it in a way which they believed to be for God's glory, and for the good of his kingdom? Surely not.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS.

Rev. C. A. Fox was the first speaker at the first of these meetings. He described the Book of Deuteronomy as the book of consecration. It is the book which our Lord made use of to refute the Evil One. Rev. Charles Inwood followed with some personal experiences. "I wish to answer by personal testimony the question which will frequently arise in this convention, 'How does full salvation work in the "tight corners" of life?' My own experience is that God is able to relieve us from every 'tight corner' when we are in it, not before. I have given up trying to explain God's leading. God will vindicate his own decrees." Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor added his testimony as to the all-sufficiency of Christ for every emergency. How many of us know what it is to have our backs broken by sorrow; to learn the lessons we can learn in no other way. It is not till we have had that experience that we can fully realise Christ's all-sufficiency.

Addresses by Rev. J. J. Luce, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, and Rev. Barclay Buxton brought to the close a most impressive and helpful meeting.

Next time the young men met the ministers present were asked to join them, and again God's Spirit was poured out on many. The first address on that occasion was from Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who dealt with the questions: Why and how we should glorify God the Father? It is a noticeable fact in the Bible records that no sooner was a blessing given to individuals than they began to glorify God. Note the case of the paralytic in Luke v. 25, 26, where even the bystanders glorified God. There was the dead young man (Luke vii. 16), where again they all glorified God. In Luke xiii. 13 we have the woman who had been bowed down doing so too. A little further on, Luke xvii. 15, we see an outcast leper doing so, and he a Samaritan. In Luke xviii. 43 it is a blind man whose sight is restored; and in Luke xxiii. 47 even a Roman centurion joins in the chorus! Which of these are you? Are you paralysed? Are you dead? Are you bowed down with sinful habits? Are you consumed with sin? Are you blind to all that is offered you? Or is it the offence of the Cross, such as would have kept that centurion back? Whatever it is, Christ is waiting to set you right, that you too may glorify God. Give yourself right over to the Christ that healed you, and He will keep you too.

The man who was healed of the devil possession wanted to follow close with Christ, but was sent to witness at home, which is far harder. You, young man, engaged to be married, go home and tell that girl that Christ is now to be all in all to you, and unless He is the same to her you must part! Minister, go back and tell your congregation that hitherto you have been but fooling with the ministry, but that in future you are going just to let God work through you. That man, once saved, went through Decapolis and testified, till when Christ came again that way, all were prepared for a mighty work. Go thou and do likewise.

Rev. C. A. Fox said it is a very solemn thought that even after we are in the Holy Land, and after a notable victory, there should still be exceeding danger of a fall (see Joshua vii.). The defeat at Ai was not caused by great things, but by a small thing. When Ai was viewed, the people thought it but a small thing, not requiring all their forces. We thus see often after victory that some small thing overcomes the conqueror, flushed with triumph. After victory we must be more careful, more humble than before. It may be that with us there is some accursed thing that blocks our way. It is fire that alone can burn up the accursed thing; it is not our putting it away. Let reputation or ecclesiasticism go; let everything go that stands between us and God.

THE LATE DR. WHITTEMORE, rector of St. Katherine Cree and St. James's, Aldgate, for many years preacher of the Lion sermon, who died recently, left to the Mount Hermon Orphanage the sum of £2000, and to the London City Mission, the Theatrical Mission, the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Church Missionary Society, and the Church Pastoral Aid Society, £500 each.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For special services in Theatre, Anderston, Glasgow, now being conducted by Mr. James Wharton.—For the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, for Divine guidance and help in the crisis in its affairs arising from the sale of the lease of Palestine-place by the London Jews' Society.—That the downward career of a sister might be stopped, and her heart turned to the Saviour, and that an aged mother may have a clearer knowledge of the truth.—For a Christian man, that his faith fail not during a time of great anxiety.—That much blessing may attend a ten days' mission, commencing September 1, to be conducted by Mr. Henry Varley, in connection with the Sheffield Y.M.C.A.

MISS KATE MARSDEN.

Last week we very briefly noted the fact that the projected mission by this lady on behalf of Siberian lepers had terminated. A correspondence has appeared in The Times on the subject. In the issue of August 16 Rev. Alex. Francis, of St. Petersburg, wrote stating that, as the result of an inquiry into serious charges made against her, the committee of investigation "recognised that Miss Marsden's leper work is necessarily at an end." He said also that she had in writing acknowledged the truth of the gravest of the charges against her.

In The Times of Saturday last Miss Marsden writes denying Mr. Francis' assertions, and declaring that the report of the St. Petersburg investigation committee was quite in her favour. She appends a copy of the report, which on the face of it seems very satisfactory, so far as Miss Marsden's reputation is concerned.

In the same issue, however, Mr. Francis replies to those statements. He admits that in the absence at the time of condemnatory proof, a draft report was drawn up exonerating Miss Marsden, and says that she got the report signed by three members of the committee and other friends. Subsequently, he says, "abundant and convincing evidence" came to hand of the truth of the charges, and the report was "suppressed" by those who had signed it under misapprehension. Miss Marsden was informed of this by letter last March, but she now produces the report as though it had not been disavowed.

Miss Marsden, in her letter to The Times, having threatened Mr. Francis with legal proceedings, he replies that he cannot withdraw what he has written, and if she proceeds with an action at law the whole of the facts will of course be divulged.

The two following letters appear in Monday's Times:—

Sir,—Our client, Miss Marsden, has to-day been with us, and has called to our attention her letter to you appearing in The Times of to-day, and the reply of Mr. Alexander Francis thereto.

Having regard to the position that Mr. Francis has taken up, we have, on our client's instructions, to-day issued a writ against him for damages for libel and slander, and as, no doubt, the matter will hereafter be fully inquired into in a court of law, we trust that your readers will refrain from coming to any judgment upon the matter until the action has been tried.—We have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servants, Colyer and Colyer.

Sir,—A number of contributors to this fund have written to ask me for information. Kindly allow me to state that legal proceedings may possibly be taken against me, and at the trial, if it comes to that, there will be information enough and to spare.—I am, etc., Alex. Francis.

SUNDAY NEWSPAPERS.—In reply to a deputation of newsagents, who waited on him to ask his aid and influence in support of their efforts to obtain one day's rest every week through the publication of the Sunday newspapers on Saturday night, the Archbishop of Canterbury has expressed his sympathy with the views of the deputation, and while he fears that the time has not arrived for taking legislative action or making a formal public appeal, thinks no opportunity should be lost of awakening public opinion on the subject. When that has once been effected, the remedy is not far off.

HAKODATE, JAPAN.—While acquiring fluency in the Japanese language, Miss Matilda Laurence, of the C.M.S., is devoting herself to work among sailors at Hakodate. She writes:—"Sometimes as many as two thousand men are ashore at one time, and there is not a single place to which they may go besides the grog shops. The sealing fleet is making this place its chief port of call. A room, entitled 'The North Sea Temperance Café,' has been opened under favourable auspices, but outside help is required if it is to continue." Communications may be addressed to Miss M. Laurence's sister—Miss L. Laurence, 27, Crouch Hall-road, Hornsey, N.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.—Writing in The Review of the Churches, on the coming School Board election and its bearing on the recent controversy as to religious education, Archdeacon Sinclair says:—"The fact is that the danger has been deliberately created, with the object of discrediting the School Board system, and of giving the so-called 'Church' party the opportunity of appearing as the ransomers of religion. Hence all these exaggerations, misrepresentations, and misapprehensions. The Committee of moderate Churchmen and Nonconformists who met at Sion College, and who have formed themselves into the 'Bible Education Council for the London School Board Election,' by urging on the one side the dropping of the circular, and on the other a hearty and sincere adherence to the word 'Christian,' may yet restore peace."

RITUALISM.

Sir,—Your correspondent, "A Sincere Christian," asks, "How can baptismal regeneration and faith meet and shake hands? Are they all one?" May I be allowed to answer that question? His letter is, I think, a little involved, but I gather that his argument is as follows:—

Assuming that God saves the soul by faith, baptism is thereby excluded from doing so. To this we Churchmen who accept the Prayer Book interpretation of the Scriptures reply:—We agree entirely. God, and God only, can save the soul; no priest, no sacrament can do so. But—and there is a large "but"—we believe, on the authority of Christ's doctrine and practice, that God saves (as a rule, not always) instrumentally, and baptism is the appointed instrument. Thus God, and God only, is the efficient cause, the sacrament of baptism is the instrumental cause, and faith is the necessary moral qualification.

The doctrine of baptismal regeneration and that of faith shake hands then by a recognition of the truth that the sacraments are not magical charms, but are ordinances based on moral principles, and by discerning clearly the difference between the efficient and the instrumental cause in any Divine operation.—Yours truly, Wyndham S. Heathcote.

Dear Sir,—Rev. W. Carlile, in his letter which appeared in your issue of August 16, says: "By baptismal regeneration most Churchmen that I know mean that blessing which a child receives inwardly in answer to prayer when the outward rite is performed in obedience to our Lord's command."

Will Mr. Carlile kindly tell me which command of Christ he refers to, giving the chapter and verse in which it occurs; for the only command of Christ's which I know of on the subject is the one in Matt. xxviii. 19: "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (I quote from the Revised Version, as that is the truer translation of the Greek). Now, this is evidently not "our Lord's command" referred to by Mr. Carlile, because it distinctly says the "disciples" are to be baptized, and not infants, who are too young to know anything about Jesus, and therefore cannot be "disciples."

As I only desire to know the truth of the matter, I shall be very glad to have the reference I have asked for.—Yours in Christ, Edward F. B. Colyer.

Sir,—If by "externalism" Mr. Carlile means the "externalism" of what is popularly known as Ritualism, then I maintain he is wrong in saying that "many clergy simply adopt externalism because they think they best draw a crowd, and who have never changed their simple love of Gospel truth." On the contrary, it is an acknowledged principle with Ritualists that "externalism" is adopted as the exponent of so-called Catholic doctrine—in other words, to publicly represent by the outward and visible their deadly sacramentarian system and superstitions. For instance, the following question and answer appear in "The Ritual Reason Why": "Why is the priest to say it [the prayer of consecration] standing before the altar?—Because this is the position of a sacrificing priest." Also the late notorious Ritualist, the Rev. W. J. E. Bennet, in claiming the use of distinctive vestments, told the Ritual Commission of the House of Lords that the use of vestments involved the doctrine of sacrifice, and that he considered he offered "propitiatory sacrifice in the Lord's Supper." Surely Mr. Carlile, who sends evangelists into "High" parishes, ought to be acquainted with the common teaching of Ritualistic catechisms, for what can be the future of the converts handed over to such training in parish churches?

But I feel it my painful duty to disclose the real attitude of Mr. Carlile towards Ritualism. I once attended (at the invitation of Miss Robinson) an inaugural meeting in connection with the Church Army in Portsea, and at the close I asked Mr. Carlile, publicly, whether he advised the converts to attend their parish church if such church were Ritualistic, to which Mr. Carlile, after some evasion of this pointed question, answered "Yes."

This is a serious matter, and as this is the policy of the Church Army it behoves the public to be aware of it. Where, then, is the consistency of Mr. Carlile, who claims to be so "loyal to Evangelical truth" that he "gave up the High Church eastward position" in two churches to which he was appointed, and yet he advises his converts to frequent the very churches where these and similar unscriptural practices are indulged in, which I have already shown to be indicative of false doctrine.

I remember once reading the advice of a certain Jesuit to Roman Catholic preachers. "Where Wesleyan doctrine will be acceptable, preach it; where Calvinism will be acceptable, preach it. Gain the hearts of the people, and their future is in your power." Let this advice be borne in mind in connection with Mr. Carlile's statement as to Ritualistic preaching of Gospel truth.

Mr. Forbes' statements as to the condition of the Church of England are correct, and I would advise those who doubt his accuracy to read the reports of the colporteurs in charge of the Church Association vans, who travel through so many counties, visiting villages and towns, and they fully confirm what Mr. Forbes has stated. What shall we say to the fact that 4500 clergy and 32 bishops are enrolled as members of the English Church Union?—Faithfully yours, H. Lindsay Young,

Vicar of St. John's, Portsea.

CONTINENTAL SERVICES.

Dear Sir,—I have just returned from Germany and Belgium (where I have had the privilege of giving my Gospel object lesson upon "The Scales" four times to most interested audiences). I have in most places been perplexed where to go on Sundays. I tried the English services twice, but was so utterly disgusted that I gave them up. If people desire Popery, there are plenty of Romish Churches to go to, but as I do not, I shall avoid the chaplains in future.

My object in writing is to let any of your readers who may be going to Antwerp know of an oasis in the wilderness, which I was delighted to discover. I allude to the Mariners' Church, 21, Avenue de Commerce, Antwerp, near the docks. The name is on the upper part of the building. There they will find a simple service, and the old Gospel faithfully preached by Mr. Adams. The services are held at eleven and seven. I am sure that many Christians will be glad to know this.—Yours in the Lord,

W. P. Partridge, Dep.-Surgeon-General.

DEGRADED ART.

Dear Sir,—Thank you very much for your article in The Christian of August 9 on "Tableaux Vivants," etc. I am sure it will do a great deal of good. Please do speak out about these things continually. "And the Lord God made for Adam and for his wife coats of skins and clothed them," is a splendid argument against the nude in painting and sculpture that some of us will be very glad to use.

May I say, as a local president of the B.W.T.A., that a very large number of our association are very sorry for the articles that appear in The Woman's Signal in favour of theatre-going. In your article you exactly express our sentiments. We are loyal to Lady Henry Somerset, and love and admire both our president and Miss Willard; but in this matter we are utterly opposed. Although The Woman's Signal is the organ of the B.W.T.A., it does not in this matter represent the Association.—Yours truly,

Liverpool. J. E. Prowse.

ROMANISM IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—Herewith is enclosed a paragraph copied verbatim from a report recently presented to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. It needs no comment. One cannot help asking, "Why this great disproportion?" For services to Government, ministering to soldiers, etc., Rome is paid on a scale three or four times more liberal than that adopted in making payments to Protestant Free Churches, on account of the same work. Surely it is time the existing ecclesiastical system should again receive "full consideration" and to more purpose than ten years ago. Let there be rigid fairness, so that all churches should be remunerated according to one scale. I am sure the people at home have no knowledge of the way in which our Government pampers this foreign superstition.—Yours faithfully,

Stephen H. Gregory.

Rawal Pindi, Punjâb, July 30.

Extract from the report on Indian Churches, presented at the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland this year.

About ten years ago full consideration was given by the Government of India and the Secretary of State to the subject of Ecclesiastical Establishments in India. In connection with these, salaries are given to chaplains of the Churches of England and Scotland on the regular establishment, and also grants to the amount of over Rs. 300,000 per annum to Roman Catholic bishops and priests—about thrice the expenditure on our Scottish establishments—and Rs. 56,120 to "other clergymen of different denominations," viz., Presbyterian, Wesleyan, American Episcopal Methodist, etc.

The decision then arrived at by Lord Kimberley, Secretary of State for India, was not to interfere with the working of the existing ecclesiastical system.

SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Booth-Tucker, in his letter in your issue of June 7, says, "Re Travancore, I may say that we for years held off opening our work in this country, in spite of reiterated appeals from the people. Finally, two years ago, we considered the time had come for responding to those appeals." It would appear from this that the S.A. came into Travancore with great reluctance, and only after having for long withstood the urgent entreaties of the people, presumably of the heathen people.

This sounds well, but what does it amount to? There is little doubt that the S.A. did receive reiterated appeals from a European gentleman in the neighbourhood, who was at one time a missionary of the L.M.S., and who doubtless had reasons of his own for calling in the Army. There may also have been received reiterated appeals from a few members in our L.M.S. Mission, but such appeals are not usually heeded where there is a due regard for missionary comity, and a desire to maintain the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. It could not be truthfully asserted that anything like a general appeal was ever made either by Christians or non-Christians.

But the case is briefly thus: For a considerable time before the Army settled in Travancore its officers were accustomed to come here now and again to collect money for the funds of the Army. These we received as we would receive any other missionary brethren visiting our stations until we began to learn that they were acting the part, not only of money collectors, but of scouts. After rumours of the Army's coming began to get abroad, on one occasion one of these collectors, after he had stayed here for about two weeks and conducted several meetings, told me, in answer to my inquiries, that the S.A. had no intention of entering Travancore to work, and that his only object in coming here was to collect money. But two weeks later I read in the Indian War Cry an extract from the report which he gave to his superior officer on his return to Trichinopoly, the headquarters of his division, in which he said that Nagercoil was a most suitable place for beginning work at once.

The consequence was that within three weeks Major Musa Bhai and a number of other officers of the Army entered Nagercoil, and continued for three weeks to conduct meetings daily. Their torchlight processions in the night, their daily marches through our streets, and the beating of the big drum at all hours caused a good deal of commotion in this quiet little Christian town. We can hardly wonder if a few people, led away by the novelty of the thing, were prevailed on to join in a petition requesting the Army to settle here. But the leaders in the affair were men of unworthy character, and disaffected toward the L.M.S. The prime mover (and, as he himself informed me, the first to sign the petition) had just recently returned from a period of imprisonment. Another chief party had only a few weeks before been dismissed from the employment of the mission for immoral conduct. These things took place before the close of 1889; yet Mr. Tucker says that the S.A. first opened work in Travancore "two years ago."

This is just an instance of the incautious and inexact way in which Mr. Tucker often deals with facts when writing about the work of the S.A. in India in your own and other English journals. As for example his statement that the Army gives its officers "no bungalow, no pony or carriage," etc. On the day I read this statement of Mr. Tucker's in his letter to The Review of the Churches, I met when returning from my work, five officers of the Army on horseback—two Europeans and three natives, and three riding in a dog-cart—one European and two natives. And this was no exceptional but an everyday occurrence, so far as the European officers are concerned such means of locomotion are needed. The S.A. Major at Nagercoil occupies a much larger and better bungalow than do at least of the L.M.S. missionaries at that station. Only the truth be known.

Mr. Tucker adds, when speaking of the results of the Army's work here, "In several cases entire village communities have been swept in, and we have now some enrolled soldiers. I have not the exact figures before me, but I am informed that at least 80 per cent. of these converts were raw heathen." If by this language it is meant that entire villages have been converted to Christ by the agency of the S.A., then all I can say is that such cases are not known here. That such reports have appeared in the Indian War Cry is well known, but I have no hesitation in saying that they are utterly unfounded. In December last the case of the conversion of an entire village was reported in The Madras Mail, but when I visited every house in the village, and talked with the people, not one individual would acknowledge having in any way avowed a change of faith. When I stated this in The Madras Mail Major Musa Bhai maintained his report was correct, and the following week, in The Indian War Cry, it was falsely alleged that some agents of the L.M.S. had visited the place and tried to reconvert the people to heathenism. The S.A. has not, and never had, a convert in the place.

In a village called Narikulam 200 people were reported to have been converted on the night of January 2 of this year. Then in April it was reported that the remainder of the village had been converted, and that the whole village was now Christian. I know the village well. We were at work in it a good while before the S.A. entered it. There are not many Christians in it, and certainly less than a dozen of them have been led to a change of faith by the S.A. I could mention other villages from which as many as 200 converts have been reported at the first meeting held by the officers of the S.A., and where there is even less real result than in the case just mentioned. Yet it is on the basis of such reports that such glowing statements have from time to time been made in your columns about the progress of the S.A. in India. Forties, sixties, and eighties, and similarly large numbers have often been reported when there is really no result whatever. In order to make this credible the method of the Army has to be known.

The large crowds of what are called prisoners are caught by what the Army call "booms." In these booms the practice has been for some forty or fifty officers to unexpectedly attack a village. The Army has, for the past two years been confining its efforts entirely to the class called Pariahs, to whose somewhat excitable nature the Army's methods are found to be more attractive. A large crowd of officers enter a village of usually from thirty to sixty houses. They come with their drums and other musical instruments, the latter of the sort of bow and bells which the heathen people employ to excite their devil-dancers. The female officers use the Kuravai cry which is used by women at these heathen dances. They perform also, in the presence of the poor villagers, what they call a "war dance," in which male and female officers dance separately. Some testimony is given to Christ's saving power, and the people are asked to receive Him as their Saviour. Finally, all who want salvation are asked to kneel while some officer offers prayer. Of course the poor ignorant people after having been entertained and amused in this way are ready in their turn to please their entertainers by kneeling at prayer, and the S.A. pro-according to the statements of some of their own officers, is to report as converts all who thus kneel down. They are said to have been "out for salvation," and are reported as "prisoners" or as "souls in the Fountain." But this kneeling down in ninety cases out of a hundred means nothing on the part of the people.

The expression "raw heathen" is a favourite one with Mr. Tucker. But it should be borne in mind that the Gospel has been made known in all these villages for years before the advent of the S.A.—Yours truly,

A. L. Allan.

A PLEA FOR "NURSERY GOVERNESSES."

Dear Sir,—Permit me to draw attention to the sad cases of many "nursery governesses." I am now not alluding to resident governesses in the families of noblemen, where they occupy and accept their position as the governess, or to the farmhouse or tradesmen's governesses, where they are treated as "one of the family," but to the poor "nursery governess" in the families of the upper middle classes. She is expected to be a lady by birth and education, to be competent to teach English, music, French, drawing, etc., in many cases to undertake the whole of the needlework connected with her charge, often including dressmaking. After taking sole charge of her pupils all day, she is often expected to remain in solitary confinement, and sew in the evening. Generally a small salary is offered, and very few holidays; week in, week out, with few changes.

Will not ladies having "Nursery Governesses" in their establishments, consider this matter and reflect if they would care for this monotonous existence? Surely a little social intercourse in the evening would greatly lighten and brighten the lonely life of many a gently born girl, who, through reverse of fortune or loss of parents, has to turn bread-winner for herself and possibly often help to support members of her own family. I think if a little kindly consideration for the poor governess were shown we should not hear so often of her breaking down in health, or even dying in consequence.—Yours truly,

M. S.

UNIVERSITIES' CAMPS.

These camps for boys of our public schools are growing in number annually, in consequence of their increasing popularity. Camp "D" was pitched on a beautiful site at Highcliffe, near Christchurch, Hants, on August 2.

The cadets, with officers, numbering over 100, have been spending a healthy and happy time. They have not only indulged in manly sport, but have learnt that Christ's service is the secret of happiness. It is recorded with heartfelt gratitude that many tokens of definite blessing have been evident.

Residents in the neighbourhood of the camp evinced hearty sympathy with its object, and showed this by their kindness and goodwill on all possible occasions.

The weather, though unsettled, did not detract in anyway from the enjoyment of camp life, cricket, boating, swimming, and other sports being indulged in daily with much zest.

The camp was commanded by Major Liebenrood, assisted by Canon J. Taylor Smith, Rev. S. Power, and Mr. A. E. W. Gwyn, with several other officers.

Major Liebenrood also writes:—

From the first God's Spirit was manifestly at work, and at the close of the camp hardly one of the eighty or ninety boys remained untouched, and many definitely decided for Christ.

None who were present at our closing meeting will ever forget the solemn, and yet joyful sight, as boy after boy rose at the invitation of Canon Taylor Smith, and testified to blessing received, giving a text of Scripture in concluding. Many of the officers also testified to blessing received; indeed we all felt encouraged and strengthened by the simple faith and earnestness of these bright English schoolboys.

I am also glad to hear of good times from the other camps. Will you readers join with us in praise to God for his goodness in answer to much prayer on behalf of these camps?

May I add that each of these summer camps is under the command of a military officer, each tent in charge of an undergraduate or some other decided Christian young man, with a doctor and chaplain attached. Any further information desired by parents can be obtained by applying to Major Seton Churchill, Lichfield.

GIPSY W. SMITH, of Ashtead, Surrey, has lately been conducting a Gospel meeting in a tent specially erected on a brickyard at Ore, Hastings. All those who were known to the writer as taking an interest in the spiritual welfare of the people were invited to join. This invitation, started from our own Mission, was well responded to by the vicar and other workers, especially by Mrs. Holt, a lady who has meetings and schools every week in the Board School rooms close by. The addresses were accompanied with Holy Ghost power, and many came forward for prayer. It is proposed to start an adult school for men, many of whom cannot read intelligently, and have now no attraction but the public-houses. These have been increasing, with their attendant evils. There is great need of a good coffee-house as a counter attraction. Further particulars will be gladly supplied.

Samuel Beck,

THE ARBITRATION ALLIANCE.

The following memorial has been forwarded to the Earl of Rosebery and the Earl of Kimberley. It represents the views expressed by the Christian Churches in their assemblies recently held. The memorial is signed on behalf of the following churches:—

The Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, the Baptist Union of Scotland, the Bible Christians, the Church of Scotland, the Congregational Union of England and Wales, the Congregational Union of Scotland, the Congregational Union of Ireland, the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, the Evangelical Union of Scotland, the Free Church of England, the Free Church of Scotland, the Society of Friends, the Irish Wesleyan Methodists, the Methodist New Connexion, the New Church, the Presbyterian Church of England, the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, the Presbyterian Church of Wales, the Primitive Methodist Connexion, the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Scotland, the Salvation Army, the Unitarians, the United Methodist Free Churches, the United Original Seceders (Presbyterian), the United Presbyterian Church, the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and the Wesleyan Reform Union; and also by the Bishop of Durham, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Bishop of Killaloe, the Dean of Winchester, the Dean of Hereford, the Dean of Canterbury, Rev. Canon W. Barker, Rev. Canon Benham, Rev. Canon W. Moore Ede, Rev. Canon James Fleming, Rev. the Hon. Canon W. H. Fremantle, Rev. Professor H. C. Shuttleworth, Rev. Canon Basil Wilberforce, Rev. Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies, Rev. the Hon. A. T. Lyttelton, Rev. J. Frome Wilkinson, and others on behalf of a large body of opinion in the Church of England and the Church of Ireland.

The following is the text of the memorial:—

"1. At a meeting of representative members of various Christian denominations, held at the central premises of the Society of Friends in London, on April 17th last, Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, of Bristol, in the chair, serious consideration was given to the duty of Christian Churches in face of the armed peace which oppresses Europe, and menaces it with the horrors of war, and the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

"'This conference, meeting by invitation of the religious Society of Friends, and composed of members of the various Christian denominations, being convinced of the urgent need, in the present state of Europe, for definite action being taken towards the international reduction of armaments, believes that the time is ripe for the Government of this country to propose to the other Powers the adoption of practical measures designed to promote that object, and urges upon Christian Churches the duty of unitedly approaching the Government for this purpose, and also for the promotion of some permanent system of international arbitration.'

"2. Resolutions adopting the foregoing have been passed by all the religious bodies named above at their annual representative meetings recently held, and it has further received a large measure of support from influential opinion in the Churches of the Anglican Communion in England and Ireland. We believe it may be taken to express a large preponderance of the Christian feeling of this country upon the subject.

"3. Her Majesty's Government is, we are sure, fully alive to the present condition of Europe. The Great Powers have of recent years enormously increased their armaments, vying with one another, until some are now brought to the verge of bankruptcy. Loans are raised which mortgage the earnings of future generations; the burden of taxation drains the resources of the people; and the 'blood-tax' of almost universal conscription seriously cripples their individual life. Christianity and civilisation are outraged; social discontent is engendered; and a powerful weapon is placed in the hands of those who are seeking to destroy society.

"4. War is futile as an arbiter. No question of right is resolved by its agency, and the conditions extorted from the vanquished too often become a seed-plot for future animosities. Brute force has gradually yielded to the reign of law throughout the domain of civil life, and the time seems now ripe for the creation of the tribunals which shall take hold of international disputes from their commencement, and resolve them by methods of conciliation in consonance with righteousness and justice. International arbitration is no longer a nostrum; it has been abundantly justified in practice, and the wounds which it has healed have left no festers behind. But it has yet to emerge from the stage of experiment into an organised and readily applicable international institution.

"5. There are abundant signs that throughout Europe the feeling of general unrest and almost of despair under the burdens of militarism is giving place to a growing hope in the possibility of a pacific issue from the present situation. The views of M. Jules Simon and others have awakened a wide response upon the Continent, alike from the highest and the humblest quarters. As professed followers of the Prince of Peace, we cannot be silent at this juncture. We believe that in urging upon Her Majesty's Government in the name of Christianity the duty of availing themselves of the present opportunity, we are asking for a course of action which is in harmony with all that is noblest in our country's history.

"6. There is a widespread belief that the initiative can be best taken by Her Majesty's Government. The neutral policy of this country, the smallness of our offensive armaments, our insular position, the commanding personal influence of Her Majesty, and the friendly relations in which she finds herself with all the European powers, appear to give Great Britain a unique opportunity, and to impose upon her in this matter a unique responsibility. While not presuming to suggest any special line of action, we desire earnestly to ask Her Majesty's Government to propose to the other Powers the adoption of some practical step designed to promote the international reduction of the armaments and the establishment of some permanent system of international arbitration.

"7. We are aware of the practical difficulties that may lie in the way of action. But we have every confidence that in considering this momentous question Her Majesty's Government will approach it in the spirit which is proper to the great purpose in view, and to the high influence which, under the blessing of God, England may exercise in the promotion of international peace."

RELEASE OF THE MOSLEM CONVERT.

In a letter, dated Tunis, August 10, Miss Harding writes as follows respecting the convert from Moslemism who had been arrested:—

"We trusted in our God, and He has wrought for us a wonderful deliverance. Ahmed, after two days' imprisonment in the Arab divan, was released by prompt intervention of the Sécrétaire-Général. We applied to him, after receiving from the Cadi, by whose order he had been arrested, the charges against him. We found they were all false, the Cadi himself lying; it was only on religious grounds that Ahmed had been imprisoned. On his release we all met for a united praise meeting in Mr. Flad's house. Ahmed first gave us an account of his two days' experiences. He was tried to the utmost by every possible threat and menace, having interviews with different persons all day. However, he remained firm and immovable, wondrously kept, knowing that God was undertaking his cause.

"This trial has strengthened our faith, and made our position in Tunis more secure, as the people are now assured we have power behind us. There is religious liberty now, and Ahmed, having come unscathed out of Ramadham, his baptism, and now the much-dreaded power of the Cadi, the way will be opened for others who are convicted of the truth of the Christian faith, to follow."

THE GRANVILLE, BOURNEMOUTH, is a temperance hotel and boarding-house, situate at the corner of Yelverton-road and Richmond-hill. It is a palatial building, handsomely appointed, and lighted by electricity. It is the property of a company, the directorate of which includes the names of several influential residents of Bournemouth. The hotel occupies a central position, and announces moderate tariffs; therefore it should serve a useful purpose, and prove a profitable investment.

PREVENTIVE MEDICINE.—With the double object of opposing the erection of a Pasteur Institute or British Institute of Preventive Medicine and of agitating for the repeal of the Vivisection Act, there was an open-air mass meeting at King's-road, Chelsea, on Saturday afternoon. The speeches were delivered from a carriage, in which were seated Mrs. Fowle, Miss Jennie Craigen, and Mr. Trist, of the Victoria-street Society, and others. It was contended that the great advances made in surgery and the slow progress there had been in the use of medicine were traceable to the unsatisfactory management of our hospitals, which were open to abuses affecting the health and bodies of the suffering poor and the personal rights of individual patients. It was urged that all these institutions should be under the control of the State. The system of experimenting on hospital patients was the direct outcome of the system of experimenting on living animals; therefore the whole system of animal experimentation ought to be condemned and the law legalising vivisection repealed and abolished. While it was admitted that there was no legal power to prevent the erection of a British Institute of Preventive Medicine on the Thames Embankment at Chelsea, where the barbarities of the Pasteur Institute would be repeated, it was hoped that the protests that were being made would have the influence of preventing the project from being carried out.—The Times.

IRISH NOTES.

From the report of the Dublin Association for the relief of distressed Protestants, just issued, it appears that during the past year 3500 persons were assisted, and a sum of over £1100 expended.

The Roman Catholics are now taking to the holding of open-air services in Ireland, provoked probably by the examples of their Protestant neighbours. A few Sundays ago they held one in Youghal, co. Cork, but there was no disturbance.

Twelve young men from Harley College, Bow, received a warm welcome a few days ago at Howth. They are working in connection with the Irish Open-air Mission, and after an enthusiastic meeting in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, left for Limerick, Galway, and Athlone.

During the recent military manœuvres in the Queen's County there was a large encampment at Blackford for eight days. Rev. T. Moran obtained leave from the officer commanding to open a soldiers' home, which proved to be a great success. Two marquees were used for the purpose, and these were crowded in the evenings by the troops belonging to the various regiments. Fifty-six men signed the pledge during the first four days.

In its Irish correspondence, The Times of Monday says:—"Mr. Williams and four other street preachers arrived in Limerick yesterday, with the object of conducting an open air-mission. As in Cork, the intention was, it seems, to commence preaching this (Sunday) afternoon, but in view of a threatened hostile demonstration if such were attempted, and acting on the representations made by the constabulary authorities and others, the preachers decided not to have an outdoor meeting to-day. Those who have invited the preachers to Limerick complain of the want of police protection, no extra force, it appears, having been drafted into the city in view of the visit paid by the missionaries. Special detectives were, however, on duty all day, and the constabulary, acting on instructions received, had made elaborate preparations to preserve the peace should any tumult arise."

A later report says: "The street preachers conducted their open-air mission in Limerick on Monday evening, but were subject to such interruption by a crowd of some 200 people that they had to desist after a very short time. There was a force of police present in charge of a district inspector, but they did not interfere in the proceedings, the mob not offering any violence to the preachers, but combining in a pretty-well sustained effort to howl them down. The singing of the preachers was drowned in a chorus of counter-demonstrations, individual members of the crowd singing music-hall ditties. Under the escort of the police the preachers returned to their hotel singing hymns and pursued by the crowd, who derisively cheered and threatened them alternately. No breach of the peace occurred.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon has promised to open the Spurgeon Memorial Temple, Leith, on September 18.

Meigle Free Presbytery is to be reinforced by two young ministers, Rev. Thos. Tully, who has been elected to Rattray Church, and Rev. James Webster, who has been elected to Alyth.

The death is announced of Mr. And. A. Ranken, of Skelmorlie, on the Clyde, a gentleman who devoted himself with unwearied zeal for the promotion of every good object in the district.

Mr. John Currie, evangelist, has closed a fortnight's mission in Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow. His meetings have been largely attended, and followed by much blessing. Several places are asking for his future services.

Hillhead Baptist Church congregation, Glasgow, are showing great zeal in aggressive work, and are going to erect a mission-hall in Douglas-street at a cost of £3500. The district in which it is to be set down is a very populous and needy one.

The aggressive work carried on in the Windsor Halls, Great Western-road, Glasgow, by Rev. Mr. Taylor, of Raglan-street Methodist Church, has proved a great success. The large hall is crowded every Sunday evening, and some always remain to the after-meeting to be dealt with. Through this mission 150 were brought into church fellowship during the past year.

The death is announced of Rev. A. B. Brown, minister of the East Free Church, Kilbirnie, Ayrshire. He has been in delicate health for several years, and had gone from home on leave of absence for three months. He has laboured in Kilbirnie with much zeal and acceptance for the past fourteen years, and was greatly beloved and highly respected in the district for his beautiful Christian character and fine gifts. He was clerk to the Free Presbytery of Irvine.

Rev. Dr. Donald Macleod, of Park Church, Glasgow, referring to the late Professor Dobie, who was recently accidentally killed on the Highland Railway, dwelt on the beauty of the Professor's character—its tenderness, reverence, and devoutness. The deep, passionate enthusiasm which prompted the earnest literary labours that brought him distinction and led him more than ever into bold and perilous adventures in their pursuit, was combined with an almost womanly gentleness. The learned orientalist acted for four years as assistant to Dr. Macleod.

A conference was lately held in the Y.W.C.A. Hall, Arbroath, in connection with the work of Messrs. Stewart and Bayne, who have been conducting evangelistic meetings in the country villages throughout the district during the summer months. There was a good attendance from the various places at which the meetings had been held. Addresses were given by Mr. D. M. Bayne, Mr. J. Stewart, Miss V. Hislop, and Miss Smith, the latter of whom is about to proceed to Ceylon as a missionary.

In the Upper Hall of the Christian Institute, Aberdeen, a special meeting of the members of the Aberdeen branch of the Young Men's Christian Association was held to welcome home Messrs. W. Thomson and C. Stewart, two old members of the branch, who have returned for a short furlough from work in the Livingstonia Mission. Mr. Sheriffs, secretary of the Association, said it was nineteen years since Dr. Laws, now the head of the Livingstonia Mission, stood in that hall telling them of the work that he had undertaken at the request of the committee of the Mission. Since then many had gone out from their midst, and though sorry to lose these members, they were glad to think that their Association had been so honoured.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A capital united C.E. Convention has been held at Ashburton, U.S.A.

In most of the States the Unions now observe special Christian Endeavour days.

The annual Convention of the Wellington Provincial C.E. Union was held in July with great interest. The Union includes eighteen societies, with 811 members. The attendance was large and enthusiasm great.

Endeavour Thanksgiving week, instituted in Victoria and New South Wales, has been very successful, inspiring and enthusiastic meetings being held, and generous contributions given to aid in extending and carrying on the Endeavour cause.

Dr. Clark is now enjoying absolute rest on the coast of Maine, and for the present is not allowed even to write letters. Very many have been the sympathetic messages by telegraph and by letter that have been sent to him since the great Cleveland Convention.

The members of a junior society in Fresno, Cal., make a point of earning the money that they give at their consecration meetings. At each of these meeting five minutes of the time are spent by the juniors in describing the way in which each earned the money that he gives.

In the United States nineteen hundred and thirty-two members have signed the Floating Christian Endeavour pledge. Seventy-six floating societies on shipboard have been organised; thirty are to-day in good condition. There are on land seventeen floating societies especially for seamen.

In Japan there are now fifty-seven fully equipped C.E. societies, and they have held their national convention in Tokio. In India the constitution has been translated into six languages already, and it is being rendered into Canarese, so that now the Christian Endeavour principles can be read in Tamil, Telugu, Hindi, Marathi, Bengali, and Hindustani.

Rev. W. J. L. Close writes: The advance of Endeavour in Australasia continues. We crossed the thousand line in the number of societies some time ago. The last returns gave 1118 societies, with 34,870 members. This in six years. Victoria still heads the list with 460 societies, and 15,000 members; South Australia has 270 societies, and 7000 members; New South Wales 197 societies, and 6000 members. It is stated that the percentage of growth has been twenty times greater than that of the movement in America during its first six years; and, while there can be no real comparison with that time when it was new and utterly unknown, it is gratifying to know that the vitality has not diminished by transplanting to the lands of the Southern Cross.

ACHILL.—For some years Mrs. Edward Nangle, of Dublin, has collected money in aid of the widows and other poor people in the Island of Achill. The subscriptions received last year amounted to £21, and this, as well as a number of articles of clothing, was distributed, under the care of Rev. R. L. Hayes, who writes from the Parsonage, Dugort, Achill:—"The aid you give the poor people here is, in more ways than one, almost invaluable; and I pray to God that you may long be spared to carry on your work of true charity for them."

took a leading part were Rev. F. W. Bristol, D.
Professors Torrey, and White, Dr. Parkhurst, a
Miss Lucy Rider Meyer.

The Cork Association has opened a holiday ho
some distance from the city. Last month a m enjoyable afternoon and evening was spent there about thirty of the members. After tea seve short addresses and testimonies were given.

The members of the Adelaide Y.W.C.A. hav

Notes and Comments.

We have received several replies to the articles on "Who are Israel?" which we inserted at the request of various friends, in order that the subject might be ventilated. We will insert replies, so far as our space will allow, in our next issue and the following one.

---

The war between China and Japan is a striking example of the fallacy of the saying, "If you would have peace, prepare for war." These two countries have been emulating European nations in building fleets and arming soldiers, and now are unable to keep from employing them against each other. Like children with a new toy, they cannot refrain from using them to see how they work. Experience is showing them some dreadful results—civilisation delayed, debt incurred, bitterness and anger created, social confusion and poverty spread through the country, the mind and ambition of the people turned to unfruitful objects, in addition to the sacrifice of thousands of lives. In the presence of such a calamity as this war, which will retard Eastern development for many a year, we can only comfort ourselves with the thought that God's kingdom, like heaven, is working behind and in spite of all the mistakes and sins of men.

---

The servants of peace will suffer in this Eastern war; the first to do so has been Rev. James A. Wylie, Presbyterian Missionary at Liao Yang, second son of the Provost of Hamilton. He appears to have been maltreated by Chinese soldiers marching to Korea, and to have died of his injuries. The very closeness of intercourse between Japan and Western Christian nations, and the cordiality of feeling between them, have aroused Chinese jealousy, and made China attribute Japanese action to the instigation of Christians. Hence the attack on a missionary. Other like calamities may be expected to follow. Yet these things will probably be used of God to open some doors that are closed.

Rev. H. A. Bridgman, editor of The Congregationalist, Boston, U.S.A., said, very truly, in a sermon which he preached in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road:—

> Though in the Christian Church the Christ-life has had very inadequate expression, yet that Church holds in its hands the things the world wants. The world will never become so wise that it will not want the wisdom of Christ; the frontiers of science will never extend so far that we can dispense with the flood of light which Jesus, and Jesus alone, throws upon the problems of life and death and the hereafter. Not long ago a mixed company of Americans, including leading journalists and actors, who were travelling from the battlefield of Gettysburg, fell to discussing the social problems confronting society. The last man who would have been expected to express such an idea said, "I will tell you the remedy for all our social ills; it is the popularisation of Christianity"; and no one in the company dissented. That is coming to be the judgment of all men deeply interested in social reform to-day.

By "the popularisation of Christianity," Mr. Bridgman means the application of it to every condition of life, making it the inspiration and guide of all conduct. The sooner its simple but comprehensive injunctions are substituted for the wisdom of the world, the sooner will the world emerge from the confusion and misery into which its wisdom has led it.

In a letter to his paper, Mr. Bridgman is struck with the fact that Scotland is far in advance of England in her current contributions to theological thought, and, on the other hand, with the relatively small importance attached to sociological questions in the Scottish Churches.

> Theology and philosophy are the supreme concerns in Scotland, alike of ministers and people, and the social problems to which the English Churches are so thoroughly awake scarcely seemed to be realised in all their pressing importance.

We think this needs some qualifying. Able contributions have been made by Scottish ministers on social questions considered from the Christian standpoint; while the City of Glasgow, which is greatly indebted to Christian public men, has led the way in many a social improvement. In the main, perhaps, Mr. Bridgman is right; and as the difficulties of England and America are so similar in the great cities, he naturally was struck with the place which theology, rather than sociology, still, as for generations past, holds in Scotland. Will the Scotch ever cease to be a theology-loving people? We hope not.

The National Protestant Church Union has presented to the Archbishops and Bishops a memorial on popular Ritualistic teaching. It is signed by Lord Middleton, president of the Union; Prebendary Webb-Peploe, its chairman; Mr. Abel Smith, M.P., treasurer; and Rev. Alexander Roberts, M.A., secretary. While referring our readers to last week's Record for the full text, we may characterise the memorial as a timely and categorical exposure of the Romeward movement in the Established Church. High Church service books and manuals are shown to contain teaching utterly unscriptural and un-Protestant, the extracts being given at length, with convincing reference to page and section.

Confession, penance, and absolution; the mass and priestly sacrifices; the adoration of the Virgin Mary and prayers to the saints: are among the doctrines and practices unequivocally inculcated. Here is an extract regarding the ordinance which Protestants usually style the Lord's Supper:—

> When the Priest begins the prayer, that which is on the Altar is Bread and Wine. When the Priest ends the prayer, That which is on the Altar is Christ's Body and Blood; it is Jesus; it is God.
> Who does this? The Priest acting for Jesus in the power of the Holy Ghost.
> How does he do it? I cannot tell you; he does not know himself how he does it; but it is done. It is a work of God, and no one knows how God works. If you were to ask the great St. Michael, he could not tell you. If you were to ask the Blessed Mary, she could not tell you. It is God's Own secret, a knowledge which belongs to Him and to no one else.
> We go to the Altar and kneel down, and the Priest comes to us with the Blessed Sacrament. We receive That which looks like bread, and which tastes like bread; we receive That which looks like wine and which tastes like wine; but That which we receive is the Body and Blood of Christ, IT IS JESUS HIMSELF, IT IS ALMIGHTY GOD.

This out-Romes Romanism; and that such teaching should not merely exist, but apparently flourish, in the Church of England is a fact which, whatever else it may involve, imposes upon those who remain Evangelical members of that Church the obligation of vigorous and persistent protestation against error and for truth.

The fact that a Roman Catholic college, on a large scale, for training female teachers, is about to be inaugurated in Glasgow, shows great activity on the part of the Papists, and should not be without its moral to earnest Protestants. It seems that the staff of the new college will belong to the well-known Notre Dame sisterhood, who will combine with their training work the conduct of schools for the higher education of young ladies. That there are already many excellent Protestant schools and teachers is beyond question; but the fact that Roman Catholic ladies of position find a "sphere" in practical educational pursuits, may indicate a career for Protestant ladies at once honourable and useful, and one affording opportunities for exercising a deep and widespread influence.

One of the unwelcome sights in London on Sundays is that of boys selling newspapers. Even in well-to-do suburbs these boys may be seen calling at houses, from some of which, a short time later, the respectable tenants will come forth on their way to church. How much needless work is implied by this custom! And what affords a tainted pleasure to Sunday newspaper readers imposes a painful burden upon newsagents, who are now very rightly striving to obtain one day's rest a week. The Archbishop of Canterbury, whose aid has been invoked, thinks that nothing can be done at present except to form a better public opinion. At least, such an opinion ought to exist among the church-going portion of the community.

Henry Bortsh, a baker, after working as usual for twenty-one hours at a stretch, fell back on the bakehouse floor dead. "As usual"; his life is that of numbers besides. The coroner said:—

> There was no doubt the severe hours hastened the man's death. It was a terrible thing to contemplate, that while men were agitating for eight hours a day in the open air, other men should be compelled to work such an outrageous number of hours under such circumstances without even a holiday on Sundays. It was a terrible existence for a fellow-creature to have to undergo for the sake of keeping his home and family.

Perhaps poor Bortsh's death may make our bread so sour in our mouths that something will be done to alter the conditions of life under which so many labour—and die!

Rev. Alfred Norris, writing to The British Weekly on "the increase of the Licentious Element in Public Amusements," expresses the opinion that this is seen in "the assumption by women of the clothes and characters properly belonging to men. The assumption by men of the clothes and characters properly belonging to women. The reduction of all dress to the vanishing point by both sexes, as they show themselves in act, song, or dance to a promiscuous public assembly." Mr. Norris gives impressive evidence of the dangers which are being incurred by the manifest increase of this immoral element, and then offers suggestions as to how it may be dealt with, the last of which is this, "We might refuse altogether to visit such places rather than allow them to profit by our cash or patronage." Might we not add, "Rather than be partakers even in appearance with such things." It is the sense of personal responsibility for having aught to do with such abominations that needs quickening in too many professing Christians.

Anarchists

The terror inspired by Anarchists is likely to lead rather to the curtailment of liberty in most countries than to the removal of the conditions of life out of which Anarchism springs. Even America seems likely to vie with Europe in passing hard measures. England remains calm in the conscious strength of her freedom. Let us also show the restless, troubled men who seek our shores, that life may be so ordered as to prevent occasions for violence, and that while they live in quietness among us their safety is as secure as anyone's. Certainly it seems somewhat discomposing to learn that as many as 400 Anarchists landed on our shores in a week, but England has often had flocks of strange immigrants before, and they have never done her any harm—some of them have done her much good—and she has not seldom been useful to them.

This characteristic is a good omen for the power of Christianity. Secret societies of desperate men exercise such a degrading and tyrannical power over their members that messengers of Christ can scarcely reach them, or, reaching them, are hindered by secret rules and resolutions. Hence we are not surprised now we learn that Anarchists are so loosely bound together, that in France several of them have been converted, and "are devoting their whole time and energies to bringing others to the God of love." The influence for good in every sense of one such convert cannot be measured. They are earnest men, however misguided; they are moved by the ills of our time, however mistaken their judgment about them; many of them will risk every earthly thing for their object. To make converts to Christ of such men is to make a body of the finest workers.

That there are phases of this movement of which we have in England next to no knowledge is proved by the following extract from a recent manifesto by Elisée Réclus :—

Supposing you have a quarrel with anyone, what do you do? You settle the difference between yourself and the individual as best you may. You do not make the innocent suffer for the grudge you bear. Anarchism is, above everything else, a humanitarian doctrine. It is the primary duty of whoever calls himself an Anarchist to be kind and forbearing. Genuine Anarchists regard outrages as crimes. If those who are responsible for these barbarous deeds imagine that by committing them they are doing a service to the Anarchist cause, they are terribly deceived. The only result of such outrages will be that the public will conceive such a horror of Anarchism that all possibility of the doctrine making further progress will be destroyed.

We should try to understand the various thoughts of these men, their principles and methods. For the methods are not always the knife, the pistol, and the bomb. The old trade-unionists of England used to be classed by ignorant persons with murderers, because some murders were undoubtedly committed by trade-unionists, but violence was no necessary part of the system, which has been purified just as righteousness has been done to the working classes. We seem now to have in the political world a similar condition of things. Could not some English Christian of known standing get into contact with some of the men who are now enjoying the protection of our country? It strikes us that God has put a great opportunity within our reach.

The Open Air in Ireland.

The story of the attack on street preachers at Galway (p. 22) is painful reading. That the civil and religious liberty upon which England prides herself above all the peoples in the world should be non-existent in our lovely neighbour isle; that fellow subjects in Ireland should be more bitterly opposed to the preaching of the Gospel than the people of Spain or Italy, are intensely disappointing considerations. Preachers of Christ's Gospel pelted with stones and the filthiest refuse, and ignominiously driven off the field, "bandaged, bloody, and muddy," with garments damaged, if not destroyed, and having narrowly escaped being drowned, is a humiliating spectacle for this advanced period of British history.

When we turn to the secular side of the subject, the picture is no less disagreeable. That the representatives of Government, in protecting the preachers, should have their own lives seriously endangered; that they should be assaulted with bricks and stones, broken bottles, and every other available missile, and their garments besmeared with the worst description of nuisance, is an exhibition of lawlessness, violence, and bestiality which no Government, autocratic or democratic, can afford to suffer.

Nor is the case alleviated by the fact that this mob of would-be lynchers was not confined to the roughs of the city; for when some who were thought to be of the better-conducted class were allowed to follow the preachers on their return, they were found to be supplied with rotten eggs, apples, potatoes, and such like, and boldly (not bravely) advanced and struck the preachers full in the face with those missiles. The whole assault was an exhibition of unmitigated barbarism and heathenism; and proves that Paganism is as cruel and demoniac under the name of Romish Christianity as it was from Cain to Canaan, and from Nimrod to Nero.

But now we are asked to "do our best in a righteous cause," and by God's grace we will; though we fear that like many other advisers we may not be thanked for our opinion. We must candidly say, therefore, that we are unable to commend the line of action which has led to these deplorable results. The disgrace falls less heavily upon the deluded ignorant mob at Galway, than upon those whose dupes they were. And if there was any want of Scriptural wisdom and Christian tact in the action of the brave and devoted young men, who so severely suffered for their unflinching courage, the mistake was not theirs, but those who directed them.

What was the purpose of the attempt? Was it to test and to assert the right of open-air preaching? or was it to win souls? We have little doubt the reply would be the latter. Were these, then, the best means to this end? Has Christianity one stereotyped method of precedure, of which open-air preaching to a howling, raging mob is an integral part?

We have not all the facts before us, and therefore do not venture to speak dogmatically, but it appears to us that in such a locality and under such circumstances, the work of the Scripture-reader and the colporteur is more likely to succeed than that of the open-air preacher. We were told at Keswick most encouraging experiences of brethren selling Bibles and Testaments at markets and fairs, and of their having opportunities not only of speaking individually to those who looked at or bought their books, but frequently of addressing the group around their stall or Bible-carriage.

Joshua sometimes gained victories by fetching a compass or lying in ambush. When our Lord was rejected at Nazareth, He passed through the midst of them and went his way—went round about the villages teaching, and by-and-by the people ran out of all cities and came together unto Him. He never attempted to preach to a howling mob. He never wasted time and strength in futile attempts to speak; while on the other hand He never shrank from uttering the most caustic truth in due season, when opportunity offered and occasion required. But having effectively spoken, and enraged the Pharisees, He withdrew, hid Himself, passed by, and in passing by met with and embraced new opportunities of effecting his Father's business (Luke iv.; Mark vi.; John viii., ix.).

He wisely adapted means to ends. He was the true "Siloam," the Sent One, whose waters go softly. And in this as in everything else He left us an example that we should tread in his steps. This the Apostles did, and with the warmest appreciation of the desire of zealous evangelists to preach the Gospel, we cannot but urge them to do likewise.

VISIT TO ACHILL ISLAND.

The Lord Mayor of Liverpool recently visited Achill Island, to distribute the funds raised in that city for the relatives of those who lost their lives by the Westport disaster. His lordship is a shrewd observer, and he has given his impressions to an interviewer, and they are depressing in the extreme.

The able-bodied inhabitants of the island migrate annually. In the spring the girls go to Scotland, chiefly about Glasgow and the fertile valley extending from Perth to Dundee, earning from £7 to £10 a season in digging and cleaning potatoes. After spending some 30s. in underclothing, they take back the remainder to their parents, in order both to help to pay the rent and provide for the winter. About 700 annually visit Scotland in this way; they are kindly treated by their Scotch employers. The men, to the number of from 1200 to 1300, go as harvesters to England. They take back all the savings they can. This is 2000 out of a total population of 6000.

The women of Achill are hardworking and industrious. They are clad in woollens of bright colours woven by themselves, though they wear neither headgear nor shoes. The dress is picturesque. Fuel is abundant. Turf is to be had for the labour of cutting and drying, but the difficulty of drying it for winter, owing to the wet season, is causing great anxiety. Another result of the bad season is that the potato crop, both in Achill and other parts of the West, is in a precarious state. The dreaded blight has appeared in many places, and unless a spell of fine weather sets in the consequences will be serious. Whilst the surrounding waters are known to abound in fish, the fisheries are neglected.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—Canon Sayers, of Ballinderry, co. Antrim, in a letter on the work of this Society, says: "There are many adversaries, no doubt, but a 'great door and effectual' is open, and ready admittance is found for those who read the Scriptures in all parts of Ireland, even the most disturbed. When this is so, is it not sad to find that one of the best—if not the very best—of those agencies for spreading the Scriptures of Truth among the Irish peasantry—I mean the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland—has begun this year with a serious deficiency, nearly £400, in the income required? The Society maintains Godly men of the same class as those among whom they go, and understanding their ways and modes of thought; and these Scripture readers go among the people with one object and one instrument, to make known Christ the Saviour of sinners by his revealed Word. They keep clear of controversy, though ready, if anyone asks 'a reason of the hope that is in them,' which they give 'with meekness' and in the fear of God." The secretary of the Society is Captain J. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

The British Association.

A meeting of the British Association furnishes matter for speculation from more than one point of view. Apart from the purely scientific aspect, which naturally dwarfs all else at the time, to those who stand aside and watch the waves and currents of human thought, as they break in quick succession, now dashing to pieces some fragment of long-cherished belief, now tossing back the same again on to the shores of possibility, there is an absorbing interest and there are lessons of incalculable value. If this is true of all such gatherings where men meet to advance knowledge by scientific methods, of the recent meeting it is true in a peculiar sense, owing partly to the genius loci. To listen to discourses, the spirit of which was in direct antagonism to ideas which were the very essence of the philosophy that once found its home in the University of Oxford, was to be made forcibly conscious of the rapid whirligig of time—that evolution which none may escape. "They are exalted for a little while, but are gone and brought low."

It may not be wholly without interest or profit to indicate briefly some of those general tendencies of thought which the Oxford meetings furnish from the side of Christian ethics. We are met at the outset by a fact which, simple as it appears, cannot be overlooked. The large numbers who attend, and the spread of general interest, which becomes greater with every meeting, are more than mere statistics; they are facts which involve grave moral issues. A British Association meeting is not now a gathering confined to leading scientists and specialists; more and more every year it becomes one also of men and women taking a real though an outside interest in the researches made for their benefit. The demand for ladies' and associates' tickets; more than this (showing that the social attractions are not the sole feature), the large attendances at the sectional meetings, and the number of papers now read by women, point to an increasing dissemination of scientific knowledge throughout the country. This increase must become still more prominent, the more Board Schools and other educational agencies make the elements of science part of their curriculum.

While there is grandeur in the thought that multitudes are waking up to the search after truth, feeling with Lessing that the ever active desire to seek truth is better even than attainment, and saying with him, "Father give me this, pure truth is only from Thee," there is also, on the other hand, a very sad side to the question. In such a gathering there are necessarily many who have never deeply sifted truth for themselves. They are easily led to hasty conclusions from insufficient and perhaps inaccurate knowledge. Brought face to face with inquiries touching the awful problems of the origin and development of life, they are apt to take at once for gospel some daring hypothesis which is submitted to them. They are told how such speculation was for long arrested by the influence of conservative theology; and those who implicitly accepted the received faith strove to explain away all difficulties that Nature raised up; how they ruined their cause, and how in the face of discovery their arguments are only "excercitations of learned ignorance." "I am surprised to find how many share my opinions" were the words said to the writer by one present who revelled in a pure rationalism.

If this is the attitude of many of the rank and file, it is not so with the leaders of thought who have gone through the mill at terrible cost, painfully and laboriously climbing from one step to another. The President's address struck the keynote of the humility which was observable in much that followed. Throughout his speech, and in his mention of the various conclusions drawn from experimental research, there were decided notes of caution. Lord Salisbury insisted on the danger of accepting mere conjecture in the name and place of science (as Weissman does the theory of Natural Selection, the process of which he can neither demonstrate nor imagine). He laid stress on the difficulties which still surround us on every side, emphasising the fact that religious belief must ever be distinct from the issues of physical research. Geology must not be sought in the Bible. The mysteries of the vital force of life and of the origin of the infinite variety of life have never yet been touched. While such grave difficulties still surround Darwinism, while biologists and mathematicians are even yet at war as regards the period of organic life upon earth, the theory of a principle of design has been too much overlooked.

The devotional meeting which is always held on Sunday afternoon by a few of the professors was perhaps the most direct and the most splendid illustration of the same line of thought. Both in prayers and addresses there breathed the spirit of the little child, ignorant and helpless, yet able from those very conditions to enter the Kingdom of heaven, as well as the kingdom of nature.

Space forbids mention of more than one other broad tendency of thought which coloured every section, viz., the drift from pure to applied science. Few would not hail this with joy; few would follow the pure scientist who is said to have once given the toast, "Here's to the latest scientific discovery, may it never do any good to anybody." In such discoveries as that of signalling through space, of a new gaseous element in the air, of Dr. Haldane's bottle of compressed oxygen to enable miners to endure in fire-damp, and of many applications of science to acute diseases, the element of humanity comes largely to the front.

But it was in the economic section that this feature was perhaps most strongly to be observed. There the revolt becomes ever greater against the orthodox economists who dealt with wealth as if the factors of its distribution had been mere machines. The truth underlying Sismondi's question to Ricardo, "What, then, is wealth everything, is man nothing?" is recognised in the large number of papers on side issues which this section now admits. Regard of those moral forces that influence human action, and a belief that social and political questions touch economic ones, are facts that are increasingly prominent. The subject of Ideal Socialism, chosen as one of the evening discourses, points in the same direction; greater insistance is made on every hand that a wider mode of treatment of these questions, bringing in the jurist, the political philosopher, the sociologist, must be adopted. In this way will the danger of specialisation, which causes certain tendencies to predominate unduly, be avoided, the introspective man and the experimentalist will work side by side and correct each other.

Not only this, but by bringing scientific gatherings more and more closely into touch with humanity outside, with the wants and woes of those who suffer and they know not why, greater sympathy and larger charity will enter into every discussion. The personal bitterness and recrimination which still, alas! are not quite absent from some subjects, will be removed, and in the heat of controversy none will forget they are men and brothers before they are scientists.

THE NILE DELTA.

"What is the simplest and most effective way of reaching this great mass of people?" is the question we are ever putting to ourselves. By following the ordinary methods of missionary enterprise it will evidently be a long time before such an immense and scattered population can be overtaken, probably not till the next or following generation. But what about the present generation? Are they to be left untended and uncared for? Is not our paramount duty toward them rather than their sons and their sons' sons?

These and similar thoughts led us about two months ago to undertake a preliminary missionary journey amongst these millions. As the bulk of them live along the numerous waterways of the land rather than the railways, we hired a boat, and itinerated for about six weeks. We found the population denser than we anticipated. Towns, villages, and hamlets were passed situated at from half a mile to three miles from each other, and ranging from fifty to fifty thousand souls. At some places where we stopped we reckoned there were fifty thousand people within a radius of seven miles, nearly all living in villages. Almost the whole of this vast population are without the knowledge which is eternal life!

As to their moral and spiritual condition, we found it saddening in the extreme. Although there are mosques and shrines in every village, only a few—very few—could read, and none of those I met made any pretence to a life of godliness. There was a great deal of ascetic "sanctity," but no purity of life. The ladies of our party found the women wild and uncouth to a degree, many of them like untamed animals. The men are superstitious and without any conception of a sound morality. They show a great reverence for Divine things, which at first deceives one as to their true spiritual condition, for on a deeper acquaintance with their religious life we find their souls languishing and hungry. All the spiritual food they have is the few elementary truths and the many incongruous errors taught by that most erratic of books—the Koran. They have not yet heard that Jesus Christ is their Saviour and Sanctifier.

Our reception amongst the people was encouraging. On a few occasions we got rebuffs, but generally we had freedom in pressing home eternal truths to their hearts. In some villages I had open-air meetings, and in a few instances met with those who wished to know more about these things.

At the close of our journey we felt this was one way in which we could reach the throngs of the Delta with Christian influence, and we were led to pray for a house-boat in order to undertake this work. To have a suitable boat is expensive. On making inquiries we find that a small vessel, suitable for accommodating two workers, can be got for £180. Towards this amount we have in hand £80 given by a friend who is interested in the evangelisation of Egypt, so that we still need £100 in order to make this plan of extensive itinerant work possible.

Communications may be sent to our honorary secretary, Mr. E. H. Glenny, 21, Linton-road, Barking, E. William Summers.

North Africa Mission, Alexandria, Egypt.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY has two funds—one general, the other African. The fifty-first annual report states that the major support is given to the general or home fund, many circuits doing nothing at all for the African fund. The net income of the Society to the general fund for the past year is stated to have been £10,061 15s. 11d., which is £1140 18s. 1d. less than the previous year, whilst the income of the African fund has been £2900 4s. 11d., a diminution of £380 6s. 11d. The Society occupies 110 stations at home and abroad, and employs agents on these stations to the number of 139. Of the African missions, now in their twenty-fourth year of existence, the report states that there are six stations, with 969 members, nine European ministers, three native ministers, four native teachers, and forty-two native local preachers, with forty-six class leaders.

Fellowship.

AN ADDRESS AT KESWICK

By Rev. E. W. MOORE.

"If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John i. 7.)

This verse is one of the most precious in Holy Scripture, and also one of the most profound. I suppose that hundreds of souls in their dying hour have pillowed their hopes on the last clause of this verse—"The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin"—and have passed away in peace, resting upon the truth of it. Yet when we read Scripture in its context, as we ever should do, we see that the special force and emphasis of this most precious assurance has to do, not in the first instance with the sinner in his sins, but with the believer walking in his faithfulness. Let us glance at the three great truths which the verse presents. First, we have here a great privilege offered—"fellowship one with another"—fellowship with God and with man. Then we have a godly character described—"If we walk in the light." And then we have a gracious provision made—"The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

First, let us think of the great privilege offered. That privilege is summed up by the apostle John in the one word "fellowship." It is not too much to say that and the world to-day is fellowship. Look abroad at the state of the world, and see the seething contention and strife, the wars and rumours of wars. See Europe a vast camp, and ask yourself if to-day the great need of the world without is not the concord that is implied in such a term as "fellowship." Look at the state of the Church, at what we are accustomed to call our "unhappy divisions"; look at the sectarianism, bitterness, strifes, misunderstandings, suspicions, harsh judgments, censoriousness, and unkindness among professing Christians, and say if the great need of the Church of Christ to-day is not "fellowship."

It used to be said, "See how these Christians love one another!" Can that be said to-day? Thank God, it can be said: and I believe that, in a deep measure, it can be said of Keswick. But look abroad and see if it can be truly affirmed that the great characteristic of Christian intercourse is loving fellowship. Look at the individual souls, at the needs of each human heart; think of the longings that come up from the deep hidden abyss within every man. There is something appalling in the strange, complicated constitution of man. He is so shallow, and yet so profound. There are such depths in him. He can swallow up all the pleasures and baits and gifts which the world offers, and still remain unsatisfied, like the yawning grave, echoing "Give, give." Oh! that depth in the human heart which refuses to be satisfied with the creature. What an argument it is that

WE WERE MADE FOR GOD.

If we cannot have fellowship with God, we are for ever undone. Happy they who have learned it, and turned from the vain delights of earth to seek soul rest in fellowship with Him who alone can bestow it. The world can never give the bliss for which we sigh. Lord, we were made for Thee, and we shall never rest till we have found rest in Thee. Does the Gospel meet this profound and universal need? There is no Gospel without fellowship. It is the very purpose of the Gospel to create fellowship. It is the very object and aim of God in the Gospel to restore man to fellowship with Himself, and to fellowship with his brother man.

But notice the nature of the fellowship. "Truly," says the apostle, "our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." There can be no Gospel without fellowship, and no lasting fellowship with man unless it is based on fellowship with God. As it has been often said, there is no brotherhood without Fatherhood. It is here that all the modern schemes of men go wrong—the attempt to set up fellowship with man and his brother man. They once attempted to form the brotherhood of man; in that attempt they deluged the city of Paris with blood, and upon the walls of the smoking ruins they wrote, "Brotherhood, equality, fraternity," and the like; as if writing it on the walls of the houses would be equivalent to writing its meaning upon the hearts of the people.

BROTHERHOOD MUST BEGIN DEEPER DOWN.

If you are to have fellowship with man you must first have fellowship with God. Even in Christian lives and circles you can have no lasting fellowship with your brother unless you are in fellowship first with your Father. There are times in your Christian life when your bonds of friendship will be strained and tested beyond endurance, and unless you have within you the nature of your Father; unless you have within you that nature that can love those that love not Him; that nature which can love those who do you wrong; that nature which can pray for those who despitefully use you and seek your injury; that nature which does not love an object because it is lovely, but loves it to make it lovely; unless you have got a love that is unselfish and Divine—there will be no lasting fellowship between Christian and brother Christian. It is here that contentions and strifes come in. Men get out of fellowship with God, and hence they are out of fellowship with their fellow-men. Adam got out of fellowship with God, and, the next moment, was out of fellowship with his wife; accusing her in the presence of God, and she accusing him.

And, mark, there is no true fellowship with God except there be fellowship with Christ. "Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

What is fellowship? Fellowship, we all know, is one of those words in our language which has a twofold meaning—a primary and a derived meaning. In its original form it means simply nothing more nor less than partnership, where two or three persons hold the same things in common. Thus James and John were partners with Simon. They had their nets in common, their boats in common, their haul of fish in common. Just as Fellows of a college to-day hold certain things—revenues and privileges—in common, and meet in a room called "the common room." How wondrous is this privilege that we are called into — fellowship, partnership with Jesus Christ, God's Son, our Lord!

FELLOWSHIP IS MORE THAN SONSHIP.

When we speak of having fellowship with Christians we are not thinking of the fundamental idea of partnership; we are thinking of the secondary idea, of mutual sympathy. So we say we have "union of heart." As we spoke together heart went out to heart. We had fellowship one with the other. But that fellowship, if we had analysed it, would have been found to rest upon the community of certain great truths or tastes which we had in common. It is in a twofold sense that God calls us into fellowship with Christ. We have certain great truths with Christ in common. We have his death in common: we have been crucified together with Him, and buried together with Him. We have life in common: we have been quickened together with Him, raised up together with Him. We are to have, as the consequence and result of these great fundamental truths which we hold in common, a second aspect of fellowship—tastes in common, sympathies in common, sufferings in common, joys in common, peace in common, glory hereafter in common.

So, you see, fellowship is more than sonship. I remember years ago hearing a brother say this—and I can adopt his words to-day:—"I have a little son at home. He is very dear to me. He can never be more my son than he is to-day. That is sonship. But he is still a little fellow. He is not yet able to have fellowship with his father. He is not yet able to understand his father's thoughts and purposes, and hopes and aims; though he can and does sympathise with his father in his childish way. But he must grow up before he can enter fully into fellowship with the father who loves him." And methinks there are many dear children of God who are verily his children; who will not be more his sons and daughters than they are to-day, but they have not yet understood that they are called not merely to sonship but into fellowship with God's Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. They have not understood that glorious life of union with Jesus Christ, which will transform their being and change their whole purpose in life; which will make them sorrow with Christ's sorrows, and joy with Christ's joys; which will make them feel that they can have no life or object in life apart from their Saviour and the interests of his Kingdom. That is the friendship and fellowship into which God is calling us. Are we understanding it, and responding to the call?

It is a great privilege. But it is a privilege that can be enjoyed

ONLY UPON CERTAIN CONDITIONS.

What are they? There are two set before us in this passage. I feel it is a very important thing to observe, that this passage does not refer to the backslider or to the sinner far away from God in his sins. See the character described here. "If we walk in the light." What is it to walk in the light? First of all, light is an emblem of sincerity. "Whatsoever maketh manifest is light." The man who is walking in the light has nothing to conceal. The man who is truly a child of light is through and through in his purposes Godward. He will not walk in craftiness. He will "renounce the hidden things of dishonesty." He will be open as the day. Do we all here answer to that description? A great deal must have taken place in the history of any soul before God can truthfully affirm of it that it is walking in the light.

Light is an emblem of purity. The light is undefiled and undefilable. To be walking in the light is to be walking holily. Can that be affirmed of you and me? "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Light is an emblem of gladness. "Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is to behold the Sun." Are we living lives of holy gladness? Is there joy in the Lord in our life and heart? Or are our knees hanging down? Are there gloom and sadness in our face and heart? I say a great deal must have taken place in the history of any man before he answers to the character of "walking in the light."

One great end of these meetings is to bring men into the light. I had almost said it is the greatest end, because if it is really achieved everything else will come right. Are we willing to come into the light? To submit to the search-light of God? If not, we may as well go away, for we shall get no good, but harm, in Keswick. We who are speakers—have we been willing to submit our hearts to God's search-light? Unless we have, we had better not be standing upon this platform. It is an awfully solemn thing to deal with God.

What is the next condition of fellowship with God? Though we walk in the light, we cannot venture into the presence of the most holy God. Unbroken fellowship "in the light" we may have; absolute sinlessness we cannot have.

A GRACIOUS PROVISION IS MADE.

"If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." I want to think for a moment of this provision. What is the key to it? It is all-important to have the key, and rightly to understand the thought of God in this passage. I believe the key is found in the Old Testament ritual—in the nineteenth chapter of Numbers, where you have given at length the ordinance of the red heifer. I cannot go into it to-night in detail. But I want to point out that for the Israelite, walking "in the light" in his day, there was a provision made whereby his communion with God, if it were interfered with, not only by conscious but by unconscious sin, might be restored through a remedy prepared and stored up, and ready for immediate use.

I would have you notice how the Gospel transcends the Law. Under the Law, although a man when he had contracted any defilement might be restored, and would be restored if he applied the remedy, yet a certain delay took place. He was excluded from the camp, and a certain time must elapse before he is brought again into full communion with God and his brother. But under the Gospel, if you are walking "in the light," though the searching eye of God may have discovered something you may not have seen, there need be no interruption of the communion even for an hour, for "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth"—it is a perpetual presence, a perpetual efficacy; there is no interval; there need not be an instant's delay if you are walking in the light. Sins of wilful disobedience are not here in contemplation, but for every possible need— known and unknown—remedy is provided. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Now mark that this remedy has three things about it. First, it is costly.

IT IS A REMEDY THROUGH BLOOD.

It is atonement made through the laying down of life. Life is always costly. Oh, at what cost has this provision been made for you and me! "We are not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ." Further, this remedy is constant, it is a Fountain always open. It is our privilege not only to come to that Fountain, but to live in it. Lastly, it is complete. "It cleanseth us from all sin." It atones for every sin—sin original, mortal, or venial (though there is no such distinction), sins of omission and commission, sins against the light, sins of ignorance—whatever the sin is, the blood of Jesus Christ meets it at once, and can not only cleanse, but keep clean the soul that walks "in the light."

Grace there is my every debt to pay;
Blood to wash my every sin away;
Power to keep me spotless day by day;
In Christ for me.

THE RECHABITES.

Jeremiah xxxv. 6—10.

(Concluded from last week.)

II. THE ELEMENTS OF A STRONGLY RELIGIOUS LIFE.

The phrase "to stand before God" designates a high-toned religious life, which includes the knowledge of God, the faculty of executing his commands, and the power of interceding for others. These conceptions must at least be present, because the phrase was a favourite one with Elijah, as expressing the spirit of his great career, and was chosen by the angel Gabriel as conveying the truest thought to the maiden of Nazareth, of his authority and veracity. Who is there who reads these words that does not long that the spirit and attitude of what remains of life might be designated thus? Oh to stand always before Him, on whose face the glory of God shines as the sun in his strength! But if this is to be something more than a vague wish, an idle dream, there are three things to be remembered, suggested by the words of the Rechabites.

(1) There must be close adhesion to great principles.—Many superficial reasons might have suggested to the Rechabites compliance with the prophet's tempting suggestion. The wine was before them; there was no sin against God in taking it; the people around had no scruples about it; and the prophet himself invited them. But against all, they stood on the principles which Jonadab had laid down to guide them; and they did not hesitate to avow them, let those ridicule who would.

In contrast to this, it is the general tendency amongst men to ask what is the practice of the majority; what is done by those in their rank and station; and what will be expected of them. We drift with the current. We allow our lives to be settled by our companions or our whims, our fancies or our tastes; and if ever we have a momentary qualm, in contrasting our lives with the standards of primitive simplicity, of which Scripture and old biographies are full, we excuse ourselves by saying that so long as the main purpose is right the details are unimportant. This reasoning is wrong. We make a grave mistake in supposing that the main purpose of our life is something different from that which reveals itself in details. What we are in the details of our life, that we are really and essentially. The truest photographs are taken when we are unprepared for the operation. The true man, therefore, is always settling his life in its details, as well as in its main direction, on some great principle. And before we go another step let me entreat my readers not to allow themselves to do or permit things simply because custom, or taste, or public opinion advocates them; but to bring their entire life to the touchstone of some great Christian principle, which shall do in the moral what the force of gravitation does in the physical sphere, ordaining the course of worlds and of molecules of dust.

And if it be asked, What principle is far-reaching enough in its scope, and powerful enough in its force, for so great a work? let me recall what William Law so perpetually insists upon in his Serious Call: "The first and most fundamental principle of Christianity is an intention to please God in all our actions. It is because the generality of Christians have no such intention that they so fall short of true devotion." And, indeed, when we consider the characters of the early disciples of Jesus, or those of saints, martyrs, and confessors, must we not admit that they were as scrupulous in seeking the will of God about the trifles of their life, as the Rechabites were in consulting the will and pleasure of the dead Jonadab? The thought of God was as present with the one, as of Jonadab with the other. And was not this the secret of their strong and noble lives?

What a revolution would come to us all if it became the one fixed aim and ambition of our lives to do always those things that are pleasing in his sight! It would not make us less tender in our friendships, or less active in our service. It would not take the sparkle from the eye; the nerve from the grasp; or the warm glow from the heart. But it would check many a vain word, arrest many a silly jest, stop much selfish and vainglorious expenditure, and bring us back to whatsoever things are true, honourable, just, pure, lovely, and of good report.

(2) Abstinence from the spirit of the age. It was an immense gain in every way for the Rechabites to abstain from wine. Wine was closely associated with the luxury, corruption, and abominable revelries of the time (Isa. xxviii. 1-8). Their abstinence would not only be a protest against the evils which were honeycombing their age, but was a sure safeguard against participation in them.

In these days, the same principles apply. Whatever may be said about the use of alcohol in certain forms of sickness and debilitated health, it is incontrovertible that it is, to say the least, unnecessary as an item of ordinary diet. It is very closely identified with the vilest practices of impure passion, with the obscenities of the music-hall, the licence of the stage, and the coarse revelry of the racecourse. Its fumes fill the card-room, the billiard-room, and the scene of abandoned vice. The votaries of sin confess that they could not do as they do, apart from its excitement. Add to all this the incontestable direct results of the drink traffic in crime, poverty, misery, suicide, and death; results which Mr. Gladstone once declared to be more deplorable than those that flow from famine, pestilence, and war combined. Surely, then, we shall do well to say with the Rechabites, whoever may ask us to drink, "We will drink no wine."

But wine may stand for the spirit of the age, its restlessness, its constant thirst for novelty, for amusement, for fascination; its feverish demand for the fresh play, the exciting novel, the rush of the season, the magnificent pageant. It is easier to abstain from alcohol than from this insidious spirit of our time, which is poured so freely into the air, as from the vial of some demon sorceress. We might well refer to this the wise words of the Apostle: "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit." You cannot exorcise Satan by a negation. You must be preoccupied, prepossessed. And it is only they that are filled by the Holy Spirit, in his blessed energy, who are proof against the intoxicating cup of this Circe World.

(3) We must hold lightly to the things around.—The Rechabites dwelt in tents. They drove their vast flocks from place to place, and were content with the simple life of the wandering shepherd. It was thus that the great patriarchs had lived before them (Heb. xi. 9, 13). And ever since their days the tent-life has been the chosen emblem of the life that is so strongly attracted to the other world as to be lightly attached to this.

It is difficult to say what worldliness consists in. What would be worldly to some people is an ordinary part of life's circumstances to others. But all of us know what it is that holds us to the earth; what we cling to; what we find it hard to let go, even into the hands of Christ; what we are always striving to augment; what we pride ourselves in. It may be name, fame, respect, notoriety, pride of fashion, rank, money. But whatever it is, it hinders us from living on the highest level; and it should be laid deliberately on his altar, that He may do with it as He will, and that we may be able, without let or hindrance, to be wholly for God.

CLAPTON MISSION.—This Mission has suffered considerably, owing to loss of contributions from friends who were pecuniarily affected by the Liberator frauds. The current year's work had to be commenced with a deficit of £400, and this recently led us to entertain the question of discontinuing several of our social agencies. I am thankful to state, however, that our position is assuming a more hopeful aspect. Mr. W. P. Hartley, of Liverpool, has made us a generous offer of £100, on condition that we raise the remainder of the £400 within three months. Will your readers help in this critical period of our work? ## NORTHFIELD CONVENTION.—2.

It has been a very remarkable and blessed week. Mr. Moody said to me yesterday, "I feel just like sitting still and praising the Lord all the time for what He is doing." The tides have been rising higher and higher, till they have become rivers to swim in.

In the beginning of the week we had some very searching times. Men beheld the evil of their own hearts, and made some startling confessions and renunciations of hidden sins which were eating out their hearts. Then we learnt our standing in Jesus, our right to claim deliverance from known sin, the secret of victory, the blessed filling of the Holy Spirit. Side by side with these subjective and inner experiences, we have had addresses by Dr. Dixon, Dr. Chapman, Mr. George Needham, Dr. Mabie, Dr. Pierson, Dr. Gordon, and Mr. Moody, on several of the main doctrines of Christianity, such as regeneration, separation, prayer, the resurrection, etc.

The number of ministers attending the Convention could not have been much under 300, and, to judge by what they have said, very few will go away without very definite blessing. Many are saying that they feel to be standing on the threshold of an entirely new life.

Dr. Gordon has been in great force. His address on the Administrative Power of the Holy Ghost and his sermon on the Resurrection are among the finest things I have ever heard. Dr. Pierson presided at the great missionary day on Friday, and spoke with much freshness and power.

Mr. Moody has been his brightest noblest self. He has been thoroughly gratified and pleased with his new auditorium, and the way in which the Master has owned the first week of services. He spoke in his happiest vein to-day on the Grace of God, and said how glad he was to be able to welcome the vast concourse of people that filled every available corner of the spacious edifice, and sat on the steps right and left of the platform. He has received about £2000 towards its cost; and a lady has just promised him £5000 for the erection of a chapel, to hold 1000 persons, for the use of the students at Mount Hermon.

American Christians, so far as I have seen them here, appear to know comparatively little of the doctrines of the inner life, as they are increasingly taught in England; and it is delightful to witness the joy with which they welcome them, and the interest with which they turn to Scripture for the ground and basis of what they receive.

One of the most impressive scenes connected with this Convention was the baptism by Dr. Gordon of five persons in the lake. It was a unique spectacle, the thousands of spectators rising up from the margin of the lake, the placid water, the calm of nature, the hymn, the brief explanation and prayer, and the immersion. Mr. Moody always permits such an act where it is desired, and in cases where conscience has been deeply exercised on the matter there is no option but to pass through the rite. One of those baptized was a Methodist minister; but Mr. Moody told me it would not necessarily hinder his connection with that body, as there is greater liberty about this matter in this country.

Many are now leaving, but the hotels are still full of considerable numbers who are remaining for a course of Bible readings, which I trust will issue in a deeper work than any yet. F. B. Meyer.

WORK AMONG SOLDIERS.—An opportunity occurs for a Church of England lady to take up work in a Soldiers' Home, out of England, at her own charges.—Address, A. B., care of the Editor.

A BLUE MONDAY.—Dr. A. T. Pierson mentions in The Homiletic Review some of the causes of Mondayishness which are to be shunned. (1) Needless excitement in preaching. (2) Worldly ambition to excel: with consequent untrustful anxiety. (3) Overfeeding on the Lord's Day. (4) The use of stimulants—not merely intoxicants, but strong tea, and strong coffee, and tobacco. (5) The lack of physical exercise on the Lord's Day. (6) Preparation under needless pressure; the crowding into a few hours at the end of the week what should have been got ready earlier. (7) Needless drain on the nervous organism on Sundays, such as visiting the sick, receiving visitors. Aim at absolute quiet between the services. (8) There should be stated times of absolute rest. "Three hours of every twenty-four should somehow be employed in exercise in the open air." (9) Restfulness in God should be carefully cultivated. The reflective and passive habit of communion is too readily overlooked.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.—HOSEA IV.

The Sins of Israel (1-4).—In these solemn words the prophet exposes and reproves the sins of the people. Where God is out, all manner of sin is in. Where you have no truth, or mercy, or knowledge of God, you may expect to find swearing, impurity, and all other sins. Let in the light, and the darkness is dissipated. (3) There is an intimate connection between national and personal sin, and the penalties that follow even in this life. Creation groans and travails because of human guilt. (4) It was useless to reprove Israel, indeed reproof only hardened them in their course of wrongdoing. They knew that they were doing wrong, as much so as when a man goes in the teeth of priestly warning, and therefore their hearts were becoming callous and their sins aggravated.

The Sins of the Priesthood (5-9).—The priest and prophet are here addressed; they would not be exempted from the fate which must inevitably overtake their mother country. (5) The day would ordinarily be safe for the traveller, but even then they would stumble, because judicially blinded. They rejected knowledge; and not having it themselves, because they had wilfully put it away, they would not be able to impart it to the people, and these in turn would perish for lack of it. (6) Oh awful Nemesis! Forget God, and He will forget thy children; reject Him, and thou wilt be rejected. (8) The priests had no reason to regret the sins of the people, because they brought so many sin-offerings, on which they fed (Lev. vi. 26; x. 17).

The Common Doom (10-19).—How wonderful it is that sin brings its own penalty. Inordinate indulgence arouses appetites that cannot be satisfied. Men and nations, steeped in sin, after a while cease to propagate, and the entail of sin is stopped. (11) There are spirits that have no bodies, and there are bodies which have no spirit; all the nobler part has been eaten out by sin. Beware! (12) Proof indeed that their heart and understanding were gone. Stocks are wooden idols. Staff refers to the mode of divining by marking on which side a rod fell. (13, 14) The worship of Astarte was the worst licentiousness, under the guise of religion. God said that He would not punish the women directly, but the men whose sins had set them so ill an example. (15) Israel's failure should warn Judah. Gilgal and Bethel (called Bethaven, the house of vanity, because of its many idols) had been sacred places, but they were now profaned with the evils of idolatry. (17) It is an awful thing, when God gives up all further effort to arrest the sinful soul. Let us keep away from such, except to save them. (18) "Her rulers dearly love shame" (R.V.) (19) Israel shall be swept away from her own land, as on the wings of the wind; and then idols will not be able to help them.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.—HOSEA V.

God's Withdrawals (1-7).—This prophecy was probably delivered in the days of Pekah, one of the last kings of Israel. Mizpah and Tabor, on the east and west, include the high places on which those who ought to have been watchers against evil had acted as hunters trapping game. (2, 3) Jeroboam's scheme was a deeply-laid one, but God saw to the bottom of it. Though the sacrifices were presumably offered to Jehovah, they were not accepted by Him, and were merely as the slaughter of beasts in the shambles (R.V.). (4) Sometimes a man's doings involve him in such a mesh of evil that he seems unable to turn to God; in other cases, the spirit of impurity and infidelity has so deeply rooted itself within, that he does not wish to repent. (5) Those who proudly assert their independence of God will ultimately stumble to an irretrievable fall; so it was with the chosen people; so it will be with all who similarly assert themselves against Him. (6) It is useless to offer religious sacrifices to God, so long as evil reigns rampant and unjudged in the heart. The sacrifice of Christ Himself cannot avail in such a case. (7) But a brief interval, a moon or month, would intervene, and they would be destroyed.

The Descent of Assyria (8-15)—The trumpet announces the approach of the foe. These three towns were in the territory of Benjamin, showing that the chastisement would reach the southern kingdom. (9) Israel, (10) Judah, were to suffer surely and terribly. Let us beware of trespassing on forbidden territory, and so of removing God's landmarks. Penalty is sure. (11) See marg. R.V.: "Because he was content to walk after vanity." (12) God's judgments are light in their beginnings, but they eat out strength and heart. (13) Supply the word Judah before sent: Ephraim did so (2 Kings xv. 19; xvii. 3), Judah (2 Kings xvi. 7, 8). But the result was disastrous (2 Chron. xxviii. 16-21). Jareb should be rendered their avenger. (15) When we lose the sense of the smile and the presence of God, we should carefully search our hearts to see whether there is anything in us to account for our awful loss. If so, it must be confessed and put away, then the light will shine again.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4.—HOSEA VI.

Come, let us return.—Delivered in Pekah's reign (1-3).—If you return, God will return. The beginning of a new and blessed life is in returning to God. We must retrace every inch of the path of rebellion, till we get to the point where we left the narrow way. There is always a sure promise awaiting our return. He will heal: He will bind up; He will revive. (2) The third day primarily meant that Israel need only suffer for a short period, but there is a deep sense in which it can only refer to Jesus Christ. In union with Him we rise and reign. (3) To know God is the chief end of man. "Yea, let us know, let us be zealous to know the Lord," is a better rendering. As sure as the dawn on the revolving earth, is God's advent to the seeking soul. The latter rain fell at the end of February, the former rain in October. God would be to his people all that rain was to the thirsty soil. So He will be to thee, soul, if thou wilt turn to Him with full purpose of heart.

The Morning Cloud and Early Dew (4-11).—What a contrast between the dawn, and the morning cloud which soon vanishes; between the rain, and the dew that is dissipated by the first sunbeams. (5) The prophet was God's axe and sword. Then addressing the stricken people, he says, Thy judgments, those which thou hast suffered, are as the lightning (compare Job. xxxvii. 3-15). (6) These words cut at the root of mere ritualism (Micah vi. 6—8; Matt. ix. 13; xii. 7). (7) Like Adam; how his first sin has reproduced itself. (8) Gilead, beyond the Jordan, was implicated in Pekah's conspiracy against Pekahiah. (9) Shechem was a refuge-city, and one of the priestly settlements. The priests had become so abandoned that they plundered those who fled thither for safety.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5.—HOSEA VII.

The Sins of Ephraim and Judgments.—Delivered after Pekah's death. (1) God always wants to heal, but man's iniquity seems at times to shut him out and preclude hope. There is no limit to God's forgiving mercy, but that placed by our rebellion and unbelief. (2) God never forgets sin till it is placed beneath the blood of Jesus. Our sins hem us in like prison walls, and stand as witnesses against us before the bar of God. (3) The king and princes ought to have discountenanced the sins which were so ripe. (4) The heat of their licentious passion was like that of an oven which the baker has no need to stir, because its heat is so intense. (5) The anniversary of the royal birth or coronation. (6) All night the fire smoulders, but in the morning bursts forth with fiery intolerable intensity, so mischief broods in the hearts of sinners till the time of action arrives. (7) Zachariah, Shallum, Menahem, Pekahiah, and Pekah had all fallen by murder. (8) Menahem had sought alliance with Assyria, Pekah with Syria (2 Kings xv. 19, 20; Isa. vii. 1). The unturned cake, baked only on one side, stands for the union of hypocrisy and ungodliness, overdone religiousness and underdone performance. (9) So it was with Samson. What a lesson of unconscious deterioration! Grey hairs are symptoms of decay. (10) See v. 5. (11) The frightened dove flies hither and thither for help, but in vain. She flies to the snare. So God's people sought one alliance after another to their ruin (2 Kings xvii. 3). (14) This is the cry of anguish, which would never have been uttered if only there had been the cry of penitence and confession. Instead of this, they assembled in idol temples, seeking good harvests and vintage from false gods. (15) Whether God chastened (marg.) or strengthened them, they were equally set against Him. (16) Their return was not to the Most High, but to false gods. Like a deceitful bow, whilst apparently aimed towards God, they really hit a mark beside Him.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6.—HOSEA VIII.

The Assyrian Invasion.—Probably delivered in the reign of Menahem. (1) The approach of the foe. (2) Compare Matt. vii. 22. God denies the claim. In effect, He says, "I know you not." (4) God's choice was David and his line; Israel had set up Jeroboam. (5) How often are we cast off by the very objects on which we have lavished affection and trust. So Henry VIII. cast off Wolsey. (6) The calf had emanated from Israel's own imaginings, not from God; therefore it must be broken up. (7) As we sow, we reap. It is terrible when we are set to reap stalks alone, no ears of grain, because strangers have swept the fields bare. (8) Psa. xli. 12; Jer. xxii. 28. (9) Menahem applied to Pul for assistance. For the wild ass we may turn to Jer. ii. 24. So headstrong, perverse, and untameable were the people whom God had redeemed. (10) The people whom Israel lured to help her would turn out to be the agents of her punishment (2 Kings xv. 19; Ezekiel xvi. 37). (11) They had multiplied altars, but they had been the scenes of fresh sin. Their religious acts had become abominable. (12) Israel's prerogative was her trusteeship of the holy oracles, yet these were accounted as worthless; this greatly aggravated her sin. (13) To return to Egypt is to be relegated to similar bondage to that from which Jehovah delivered them (Deut. xxviii. 68). (14) To forget our Maker is in itself a strange and awful anomaly. He has done everything to lay us under loving remembrance. Let us ask the Holy Spirit to make this impossible, even for an hour, that the evil days may never come.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 7.—HOSEA IX.

The Assyrian Captivity (1-6).—There was joy when the league with Pul brought a temporary respite, but it would not last, since sin must meet with its just recompense. (2) As they had reckoned their crops the gifts of idols, so these crops would certainly fail. (3) They would go into captivity, like that from which God delivered them in Egypt, but they would eat the food of Assyria, which was not clean according to the Levitical law. (4) Our religious duties are displeasing to God when performed from a disobedient heart. The bread of mourners was unclean (Deut. xxvi. 14; Jer. xvi. 7). Their sacrifices might sustain their own physical life, but would be valueless to propitiate. (6) This was fulfilled (Jer. xlii.).

Deeply corrupted (7-10).—The false prophet who had predicted deliverance would be shown to be in error, and convicted of folly. In spite of all, the days of visitation would come, because of the multitude and greatness of their sins. (8) The prophets of Ephraim had watched with God, now they laid snares for the people, in which they found their ruin. His god surely refers to the worship of the calves. (9) Gibeah was the scene of terrible wickedness (Judges xix. 16-22). (10) God felt great joy in his people, but the sin of Baalpeor alienated them from Him, and followed them throughout their history (Num. xxv. 3-7).

Cast away (11-17).—Ephraim means fruitfulness, but its children should perish from the birth. (13) The people of Israel adjoined on Tyre, and it would appear as though there was no reason why they should not be as fruitful as their neighbours, but there was a worm at the bottom of the gourd. God had departed from his heritage, their children would be born only to be slain. (15) Gilgal was closely identified with the national sins (1 Sam. xi. 14); it was there that idol-worship was maintained (Amos iv. 4; v. 5). (17) A clear anticipation of Israel's dispersion. Let me remember, oh my soul, how inevitably and terribly God will avenge thy infidelity to his holy covenant. May the Holy Spirit help us in abiding fellowship with the Bridegroom of souls!

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8.—HOSEA X.

Israel's Sins (1-11).—This prophecy was uttered between Shalmaneser's first and second invasion of Israel; see ver. 6, in which reference is made to Israel's appeal to So of Egypt for assistance. It is a terrible recital of charges against God's people. (1) Like a fruitless vine, Israel's strength was wasted in mere leaf-bearing. The greater their material prosperity, the more their idolatries. (2) As they had rejected the heavenly King they would be deprived of their earthly one; indeed their case would be too desperate to be helped by any earthly monarch. (4) They broke their covenant with Shalmaneser (2 Kings xvii. 4), and made a compact with So, king of Egypt, and judgment would spring up like weeds in a field. (5) Bethaven is Bethel, so called in derision. No doubt the presence of the calf there was a source of considerable gain, but it would be taken off into captivity, Jareb means avenger. He has been looked to as defender, he turns out to be a destroyer. (8) What a picture of desolate altars and terrified worshippers. (9) Israel had stood persistently in the sins first perpetrated at Gibeah (Judges xix. and xx.). The last clause should be read as a question, admitting only of one answer (see R.V. margin). (10) "Bound to their two transgressions" (see R.V.) seems to refer to the tenacity with which they clung to the two calves. (11) Ephraim is compared to a heifer, which enjoys the easy work of treading out corn, on which it feeds from time to time, becoming sleek and self-willed; but the Assyrians would soon impose a yoke, and, so to speak, ride upon the people, driving them into captivity.

Call to Redemption (12—15). How much fallow ground there is in us all. Tracts of talent and character which lie neglected and untilled. We need that God's deep-cutting plough share should pass through us, turning up the soil and breaking the clods. Then we may sow the seeds of God's precious truth, and look for the heavenly showers. (13) We are all apt to trust in the multitude of our mighty men, but we come to find that this is the way of false confidence and lies. (14) Arbel was in Naphtali, nearest Assyria, and Shalmaneser poured on it his rage. Its fate became proverbial. (15) The calf at Bethel would be the cause of a similar fate to all the land. Destruction would come inevitably as the dawn.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 9.
Jesus and Nicodemus.—John iii. 1-16.
Golden Text, verse 16.

The truths with which this lesson deals are the New Birth and the Atonement—the one describing the work of the Spirit in us, the other the work of Christ for us. Both these are connected—the one truth requires the other. It is in looking by faith to Christ our atonement that the work of regeneration is effected. The truths may be seen with greater interest if the lesson is treated as a narrative.

I. An Anxious Inquirer (1, 2).—Picture Nicodemus when night falls, and the streets are silent, making his way to the house where the new Prophet abides. He is a great man among the Jews, one of the members of the Sanhedrim. How have his class already treated Jesus and his forerunner (i. 19; ii. 18)? Here is an exception, who has seen in the miracles of Jesus proof that God sent Him, and though he is not yet prepared to commit himself to Him, he is willing to inquire. What does his coming teach?

(1) That he was dissatisfied. His strict religious observance as a Pharisee, his honourable position as a ruler, his extensive knowledge of the Scripture as a teacher (10 R.V.) were not enough. He needed, as all do, the inward change our Lord afterwards demanded. (2) His candid and sincere spirit.—He was not blindly led by the prejudices of his class. He was willing to learn, and, in order to learn, was willing to inquire even of One whom the rulers generally despised. Truth is worth a diligent search.

(3) His courage.—There may have been unworthy fear in his coming at night, but possibly he chose this season because it was most convenient both for Jesus and himself. But there was a manifestation of independence and courage in his coming at all, and especially in his addressing this Jewish peasant (as Jesus appeared) as Rabbi, and confessing Him as a teacher sent from God.

II. Our Lord's Demand (3-8).—He speaks at once with the authority of One who was sent of God. "Verily, etc." (3-5), marks the importance of that which He teaches, and calls special attention to it. He corrects two mistakes of Nicodemus, first as to the kingdom of God, and next as to the condition of entering it. The kingdom was no mere overthrow of the Romish authority and the substitution of an earthly kingdom over which the Messiah should reign. It was spiritual—consisting of the rule of God in the heart and life of the individual. And the condition for entering was the same for the Jew—and even the Jewish ruler and teacher—as for the Gentile. No man was in the kingdom because he was a Jew; no man was excluded because he was a Gentile. The same demand was made from all.

Detailed exposition is impossible. But note (1) What the new birth is. It is an inward change, such as was promised in Ezek. xxxvi. 25-27. Illustrate by a watch with broken mainspring. What does it need? A moving of the hands to the right time of day? No—but a new mainspring. Or by a corrupt tree—will the lopping off of some of the branches improve it? No, make the tree good, then the fruit will be good. Out of the heart are the issues of life. Man must be renewed there. Jesus says it: "Ye must be born again." If needful for Nicodemus equally so for us. (2) Whence it comes (4—6). Nicodemus would understand "water" to refer to the baptism of John. "Spirit" to the work of Him whom John announced (1-33 with 1 Cor. xv. 45). The two combined include the outward change preached by John, and the inward renewal to be effected by Jesus The new birth is being born of God (i. 13), and is known only by its effects (8).

III.—The Way Made Plain (9—16) Thus far Nicodemus has only been puzzled. Contrast his question now (9) with his confident "we know" (2). Before answering, our Lord reproves the unbelief with which his testimony has been received (11, 12), and claims authority to speak about heavenly things, as one who dwells in Heaven (13). Could He have asserted his own Divinity in stronger language? He was much more than a mere teacher come from God (2)! The Old Testament Picture which Jesus presented to Nicodemus (14, 15) was well known. Note how accurately it illustrated the truth (Numb. xxi. 9). This "must" should be put side by side with that in verse 7. "Lifted up" refers not only to our Lord's death, but to the exaltation and glory resulting from it. "Eternal life" is that which the new birth begins in us. It is eternal in its duration; but more than that, it is the very life of the Son of God Himself (1 Jno. i. 2, v. 11, 12), which is communicated to us. "Whosoever" opens the door for all who need this life and are willing to believe in Jesus. The love of God, as originating this Gospel, enforces its claims (16). It is not for the Jew only, but for "the world." Its measure can only be determined by its wondrous gift. This is the Gospel in a verse. We can repeat the verse from memory; but have we accepted the provision it announces?

Did Nicodemus? Note the three references to him. Here he is a cautious enquirer. In vii. 50 he is a timid defender. But in xix. 39 he is a bold confessor.

THE LIVING PICTURE.

As I move in and out amongst you, I notice that the beauty and the comfort of your homes, and the love by which you are surrounded, sometimes prevent your realising that other love which so guards—silently but surely—your lives, and so fills them with sweet content that you are unaware of its holy presence, and unconsciously careless of its claims upon you. Do not think I am going to "preach at you"—no, but let me tell you a little incident which may help you to bear in mind the love of God for you, and to raise in your hearts an altar "to the memory of God's great goodness."

A poor deaf and dumb lad, who had learned from an old sailor of God's love to him in Christ Jesus, of the sorrows and pains He endured through the Cross, and of the Crown He wears as King of Love, was so possessed with the desire to tell others of the joy he had found, that he got his old friend the sailor to tattoo upon the palm of one hand the figure of a cross, and upon the other the form of a crown. He then conceived the idea of going among the strange sailors in the harbour, and, showing the cross on his palm, he would point to the sky, and by various eloquent gestures convey the impression he wished to make, of sin, a Saviour, and happiness.

Then he would open the palm of his other hand, and display—with glad smiles—the representation of the Crown. He preached Christ in this way with such success that the sailors, with true respect for his efforts and their result, called him "The Dumb Preacher."

He was asked one day why he had had the cross and the crown imprinted upon his palms, and he wrote the answer; "I forget so soon; God never forgets. I saw in his book that I was graven on the palms of his hands (Isa. xlix. 16), and so I thought that, though I could not speak his name, it would help me to tell others of Him by bearing his mark on my palm." The thought was a beautiful one, because it was the free expression of a loving heart. But we have no need to bear the marks of our discipleship on our palms if we carry them into our daily lives. I have heard that the Arabs, after their day's work, gather in their tents and pass the hours by telling stories, reciting tales, or singing songs. But the Hebrews chose a more lasting amusement than this. Sending for a native artist, who brought with him an etching of some building or place of interest, they bared the arm, or palm of the hand, and the artist, rubbing his model in charcoal, stamped it swiftly and firmly upon the outstretched arm or palm. Then dipping two needles joined together into a solution, he carefully punctured all round the outline of the impression he had made. This done, he washed over the whole with henna, and an indelible picture remained. How easily could these people understand the words of their Father when He said to them, "Behold, I have graven thee on the palms of My hands"!

You do not wish to forget Him, and yet you know that you often do so—that He is not as real to you as you feel and know He ought to be. A young friend wrote to me, "I want God to be the background of every picture I make in my life, yet more often that background is self." It is true, we are all guilty in this way, but He can and will help us so that, day by day, we may be less so. With Him in our lives, forming "the background" or foundation of every thought or picture, how much we shall gain of added pleasure and joy, and help for others! and how much we shall lose of selfish desires, hopes, aims, and struggles!

Whoever you are, you need the loving Saviour, and, what is so wonderful and so true, He needs you. With the knowledge of this in your strong young heart, carrying its sweet remembrance with you into everything, and hiding in it in times of difficulty and pain (how little they know who think childhood and youth are free from sorrow), you will be free from the disappointments of a feeble hope in God, for you will know that you are "before" Him (Isa. xlix. 16), as He is with you for ever.

MY FLOWERS.

"Oh! these lovely flowers, father!" said a little town-bred girl, as she walked in the garden of a country house at which she had come to stay with her parents. "How sweet they smell! What do you do with them, uncle?" she said, turning to a gentleman who was watching with pleasure her childish delight.

"Make them talk, dear, sometimes. Sometimes they carry Royal messages, or act as that finger-post you saw in the road that told you the way to my house; sometimes like that letter I sent to my dear little niece and told her I loved her and wanted her to come and see my flowers. Yes; my flowers can talk, though they do it without making a noise." "Oh! uncle, how funny! What do you mean?" "Well, dear, it is time for you to go to bed now. Come out here in the morning before breakfast and you shall hear what some of my flowers are going to say."

Very early next morning Gertie was in the garden. There was her uncle cutting lovely blossoms and tying them in bunches and fastening tiny cards to them. "See," he said, "this is how I make my flowers talk. This bunch is going to a poor old man who is very ill, and I think Jesus wants him to have a Royal love message. Here it is: 'The Father Himself loveth you.' This bunch must go like a finger-post to a poor fellow who has had an accident, but does not love God, so must say, 'Look unto Me and be ye saved,' 'I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life.' These others are going to the hospital to the poor sufferers there, and will carry all sorts of messages from the Lord Jesus and to some of the sick children. Now don't you think my flowers can talk?"

The child's face had been growing thoughtful, for she had never heard before of the Flower Mission. She looked at her uncle and said "Yes; I think they say to me 'Jesus loves you,' and makes me want to love Him, and be, like the flowers, his messenger." Are there not many children who can send their flowers to some poor sick ones who cannot get out in the sunshine?

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending September 8:—Sun., Sep. 2, St. John x. 19-30; Mon., 3, x. 31-42; Tues., 4, xi. 1-16; Wed., 5, xi. 17-31; Thurs., 6, xi. 32-46; Fri., 7 xi. 47-57; Sat., 8, xii. 1-19.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—The Children's Special Mission services have been conducted here by Mr. Leonard Newky, of St. John's Hall, Highbury, since August 7, and will be continued until September 7. The services are well attended and greatly appreciated. The Lord's blessing is resting upon our services. We hear that Mr. Spiers is not coming to Weston this year.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

The fine hospital ship Queen Victoria is about to start for an evangelistic tour round the English coast. Leaving Great Yarmouth on August 30, she will sail for Lowestoft, and on leaving there will call at as many ports as possible, making a special effort to visit Folkestone, Cowes, Falmouth, Penzance, Newquay, Ilfracombe, Weston-super-Mare, Bristol, and Torquay.

Aggressive Mission work will be earnestly carried out amongst the fishermen at each place. Mr. G. Andrew Hutchison, editor of "Toilers of the Deep," etc., has kindly taken charge of the vessel, and the assistance and cordial co-operation of all local clergymen and ministers, with other Christian friends, will be very heartily welcomed by him.

"The Ascent of Man."—3.

By Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P.

(Concluded.)

I conclude, therefore, that we have no warrant for the optimist views set forth in the "Ascent of Man," but we have ample reason to believe the threatenings of God's Word, and to fix our hopes not on this evil world, "which passeth away," but on the Kingdom of God which endureth for ever.

But Professor Drummond may say, what are 3000 years of human history to evolution? Its scale of measurement is millions of ages; let modern civilisation be blown to pieces, what matters it if millions of ages hence mankind "will arrive" at something better? This is not very cheering; but turn to a longer period of history, the story of the rocks. How far does it support his theories? I am no geologist, but I fancy that few geologists will deny that the fossil remains of man came last in the history of the globe, and they will also admit that the "missing link" has not yet been found between man and his ape-like progenitor; so far as I know no fossil remains have yet revealed the "Ascent of Man" from the lower animals; the fossil skeleton of the remotest savage is toto cælo removed from the highest ape: we cannot lay our hands upon any trustworthy evidence of human evolution.

Sir Chas. Lyell says:—

Man must be regarded by the geologist as a creature of yesterday.

Professor Huxley, in "American Addresses," says:—

I cannot at present find any intermediate forms which bridge over those gaps or intervals. . . . We know of no animal now living which in any sense is intermediate.

In his "Lay Sermons," 1880, pages 225-6, Huxley remarked:—

What, then, does an impartial survey of the positively ascertained truths of Palæontology testify in relation to the common doctrine of progressive modification? . . . It negatives those doctrines, for it either shows us no evidence of any such modification or demonstrates it to be very slight.

Professor Dana, eminent geologist ("Geology"):—

No remains of fossil man bear evidence to less perfect erectness of structure than in civilised man, or to any nearer approach to the man-apes in essential characteristics. Not the first link below the lowest level of existing man has yet been found. If the links ever existed, their annihilation, without trace, is so extremely improbable that it may be pronounced impossible until some are found. Science can never assert that they existed.

Professor Virchow:—

On the whole, we must really acknowledge that there is a complete absence of any fossil type of a lower stage in the development of man. Nay, if we gather together the whole sum of the fossil men hitherto known, and put them on a parallel with those of the present time, we can decidedly pronounce that there are among living men a much greater number of individuals who show a relatively inferior type than there are among fossils known up to this time.

Lord Salisbury, in his recent address to the British Association, says:—

The cloud of impenetrable mystery hangs over the development and still more over the origin of life. If we strain our eyes to pierce it, with the foregone conclusion that some solution is and must be attainable, we shall only mistake for discoveries the figments of our own imagination.

He closes his address with these remarkable words:—

I prefer to shelter myself in this matter behind the judgment of the greatest living master of natural science among us, Lord Kelvin, and to quote as my own concluding words the striking language with which he closed his address from this chair more than twenty years ago: "I have always felt," he said, "that the hypothesis of Natural Selection does not contain the true theory of Evolution, if evolution there has been in biology. . . . I feel profoundly convinced that the argument of design has been greatly too much lost sight of in recent zoological speculations. Overpoweringly strong proofs of intelligent and benevolent design lie around us, and if ever perplexities, whether metaphysical or scientific, turn us away from them for a time, they come back upon us with irresistible force, showing to us through nature the influence of a free will, and teaching us that all living things depend on one everlasting Creator and Ruler."

I think, therefore, I am justified in stating that the whole Evolution theory rests upon conjecture, and nothing but conjecture; the transmutation of species even in the animal and vegetable kingdoms is confined within narrow limits. As Professor Drummond stated in his first book, Natural Law in the Spiritual World, "impassable barriers mark off the provinces of Nature, as the organic and the inorganic are staked off from each other by a boundary which cannot be crossed," so, according to the Professor at that time, "the spiritual man" was separated by an impassable gulf from "the natural man." His language was then most emphatic. "The passage from the natural world to the spiritual world is hermetically sealed on the natural side. The door from the inorganic to the organic is shut. No mineral can open it; so the door from the natural to the supernatural is shut, and no man can open it" (p. 71). "There is no spontaneous generation in religion any more than in nature. Christ is the source of life in the spiritual world, and he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son, whatever else he may have, hath not life" (p. 74). "No exposition of the case could be more truly scientific than this, 'the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.'"

But a marvellous development in his views has occurred since then. According to his later book Evolution has overleaped those barriers. All living things that now exist have been evolved out of original protoplasm, and I fear the distinction between the natural and the spiritual has disappeared with all other dividing lines.

I assert that all we know in the realms of fact is opposed to this theory of dreamland. Human history so far back as it exists knows nothing of this metamorphosis, neither does the geological record of the earth. It is a remarkable fact that after all these ages of evolution, since the first savage ancestor of man appeared on the earth we have to-day plenty of savage races scattered over the world as backward as in the earliest dawn of history. The pigmies whom Stanley discovered in the vast African forest are exactly the same as described by Herodotus 2500 years ago. How has their evolution stood still all this time? The Australian and Patagonian savage marks no advance since primeval times. One thing alone can raise him, that is the religion of Christ. Even Darwin allowed that Christianity had turned Patagonian savages into civilised beings, and he subscribed to the end of his life to the Patagonian Mission. When Dr. Paton landed on the New Hebrides he found a brutal race of cannibals living just as their ancestors had done for thousands of years; to all appearance if left to themselves "Nature" would have evolved nothing better for other thousands of years; but

A "SUPERNATURAL" ELEMENT WAS INTRODUCED.

The story of "Jesus Christ and Him crucified" was brought to them and preached, "with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven," and thousands of these cannibals are now leading beautiful Christian lives. That Divine power which is now civilising the natives of Patagonia and the New Hebrides did the same for our savage forefathers; it tamed the Goths and Vandals who swept away the rotten edifice of ancient Rome, and whatever there is good in modern Europe is due to its healing power.

I assert that no natural development accounts for these things. It was the "God of gaps," to use Professor Drummond's not very reverent language, who suspended the natural order at the birth of Christ and introduced a supernatural order. All that is good in European history is due to the fact that "the Word became flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."

If this vision fades from an unbelieving world the hopes of humanity will perish with it. They are not the friends of mankind who seek to belittle this glorious vision, who would remove it from the category of the supernatural to that of the natural. If Christ is not "God manifest in the flesh" He is no Saviour for men; if He is merely the latest stage of Evolution his religion will die out as surely as the faiths of Isis and Osiris, of Odin and Thor.

Thank God, we are left to no uncertainty on this question of questions: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Peter i. 16). Our faith stands "not in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God," and the time is drawing near when the whole world will proclaim the truth that "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

SALVATION ARMY RESCUE WORK.

The annual thanksgiving of the rescue work of the Army will be held at 259, Mare-street, Hackney, on September 11 and 12. Applications for help are daily increasing, which means that the expenses are continually growing. Mrs. Bramwell Booth has taken a room in Warwick-street, off Regent-street, for the use of the midnight workers, as it is found necessary for them to be on the spot, in order to accomplish their work more successfully. The Piccadilly Home is full. Over fifty cases have been received since its opening, some four months ago.

Unless a considerable sum is raised by the end of September, the yearly accounts of the rescue department will be closed with a heavy balance on the wrong side.

REVEALED MYSTERIES.

There are several passages in the New Testament where the word mystery occurs. Thus in Eph. v. the Mystery of Christ and the Church; 1 Cor. xv., the Mystery of the Resurrection in the likeness of Christ; Col. i., the Mystery of Christ in you, the hope of the glory, etc.

A mystery is a secret truth which cannot be discovered by our minds, but which needs revelation in order that it may be known. The unseen things of God, as regards his everlasting power and divinity, are not mysteries; for ever since the creation of the world they may be clearly seen, being perceived by the things which are made. On the other hand, that the first man was a figure of Another, who would be the Head of a new creation of God; and that Adam and Eve prefigured Christ and the Church—these truths were mysteries. No such ideas could have originated from within ourselves. They needed revelation. And indeed, as to revelation, it must be twofold; objectively, by means of the Word of God read by the eye or heard through the ear; and subjectively also, for we need a spirit of wisdom and revelation to be given unto us that we may know.

The following are some of the passages above referred to. May some who in these busy days of service seek time for quiet rumination for their own inner profit find them in their diversity promotive of comprehensive study and a balanced mind!

Col. ii. 2.—The Mystery of God and of Christ;
1 Tim. iii. 16.—The Mystery of Godliness;
Eph. vi. 19 and Rom. xvi. 25.—The Mystery of the Gospel;
Matt. xiii. 11.—The Mystery of the Kingdom;
Eph. i. 9.—The Mystery of Christ's Universal Headship;
Eph. iii. 3.—The Mystery of God's Purpose amongst the Gentile Nations;
Rom. xi. 25.—The Mystery of Israel's National Temporary Blindness;
Col. i. 27.—The Mystery of Christ in you, the Hope of the Glory;
1 Cor. xv. 51.—The Mystery of Resurrection in the likeness of the Heavenly;
Eph. v. 32.—The Mystery of Christ and the Church;
2 Thess. ii. 7 and Rev. xvii. 5.—The Mystery of Lawlessness and of Babylon the Great;
Rev. x. 7.—The Mystery of God will be finished.

[This list forms the groundwork of a neat pamphlet entitled, "Revealed Mysteries," by Mr. James Van Sommer (1s. From the Author, Cuffnels, Wimbledon Common). The expository notes on the various "Mysteries" are at once succinct and suggestive.]

HARVEST.

Wearing the moonlit veil of night,
The sunlit crown of day,
Adorned with blossoms white and red,
The summer wends her way
To meet brown autumn as a bride,
And give herself away.

Harvest, the year's great festival,
When fields are white with grain,
And white with busy youths and maids,
And vocal with their strain,
Ringing amid the rustling corn
On mountain side and plain.

The stalwart farmer, ruby red,
Smiles by the granary door,
While gathering in his golden sheaves,
The coming winter's store,
Contented, thankful, and repaid
For labours gone before.

But what thy harvests, human life?
We mortals ever stand
Beside a grave invisible,
Upon "the dead man's land."
The fatal scythe is never still
In Death's relentless hand.

Yet, direst of all harvest days,
When those who die in sin
Awaken in eternal fire—
A hell without, within:
A passless gulf between and heaven,
Which once they might have won.

But blessed reaping time of grace,
When sorrowing souls are riven,
Pierced by the two-edged sword of truth—
Believe, and are forgiven.
Then songs of joy burst up from earth,
And echo down from heaven.

But, last and best, that dateless day,
This world's great harvest time,
When all the angels come with Christ
To reap each earthly clime—
To carry home his waiting bride
In ecstasy sublime.

DR. G. D. DOWKONTT, NEW YORK.

If truth is not always stranger than fiction, it is, at any rate, more instructive and helpful to the serious-minded reader. The life history that we very briefly outline to-day has in it elements of strangeness and romance far exceeding many a successful work of fiction; but it is also full of the strongest encouragements to the tried believer to trust fully in God in the darkest hours.

George D. Dowkontt was born in Bayswater, London, in 1843, his father being a Polish refugee who was engaged in the revolution of 1830. His mother was Mary Oldfield, granddaughter of a Ludgate Hill lapidary and goldsmith. The father was a man of resource and energy, and at the time of the birth of George was in a very fair way of business in the West End.

When George was about twelve years of age the family met with severe reverses, and were reduced to extreme poverty and need. One day, when wearied, hungry, and footsore with tramping about trying to get something to do, a gentleman asked George to hold his horse for him, and gave him a shilling for so doing. Sixpence was spent for supper for the family of six, and the remainder laid by for a start in the "news business." The following morning, early, this sum was invested in papers, which were soon sold, and others purchased, until the young business man returned home with two shillings, and declared that "want should be no more."

A few months later he had the misfortune to lose his beloved mother, who had by precept and example sought to train him in the way he should go. A friendly physician in London took the poor boy to live with him, where he remained about a year. In 1859, he entered the Royal Navy as an ordinary seaman, and during the next ten years passed through some thrilling experiences, and had some marvellous escapes. His knowledge of medicine obtained for him the post of sick berth steward—a position similar to that of hospital sergeant in the army—after two years' service, which position he retained until 1870, when he was appointed to H.M. Dockyard, Portsmouth, as surgery attendant, where he remained until 1876.

During his early naval service the young man lived without God. There were times in his experience when his life, and those of all on board, hung as it were by a thread, and he was saved as by miracle; and yet none of these things led to a change of heart. One bright Sunday afternoon in June he was walking with some companions through a little country town, and heard some children singing one of the old Sunday-school hymns, the sound of which went to his heart. It was "the still small voice," and the turning point in his life's career. Being himself saved, his first thought was for others. Mr. T. B. Smithies, of The British Workman, and a few other friends aided him by supplying papers, etc., for distribution.

In 1867 he joined H.M.S. Crocodile on the Indian troop service. During his service in this ship he was subjected to considerable persecution by some of the officers because of his efforts to bring others to Christ. It was while in this vessel that he was instrumental in leading Miss Agnes Weston to devote her life to the cause of the Royal Navy. A Christian soldier when leaving the vessel at Alexandria spoke of his intention to write Miss Weston an account of the voyage. This led Mr. Dowkontt to remark, "I wish we had at least one lady for the Navy; the Army has several such." Miss Weston wrote to him offering to be the one lady for the Navy, if she were shown how, and what she could do. A list of all the Christian officers and men in the Navy known to Mr. Dowkontt was sent to her, and thus the foundation was laid.

In 1871 Mr. Dowkontt succeeded in founding the Royal Naval Temperance Society upon the paying off of H.M.S. Reindeer at Portsmouth. He held the position of secretary of the Society until, in 1873, the work had grown to such an extent that it was deemed best to hand it over to the National Temperance League and Miss Weston's care. In 1876 he was interested in "Uncle Tom," and arranged meetings at Portsmouth and elsewhere on his behalf. While so doing, his mind was turned to medical missions by Colonel F. W. Sandwith and Rev. C. J. Whitmore. After writing to Dr. W. Burns Thomson upon the subject, he assisted in the Liverpool Medical Mission for three years, and was much blessed in his labours there.

In August, 1879, he crossed the Atlantic, landing in Philadelphia, where he further studied medicine, and obtained his degree of M.D. In March, 1881, he went on to New York, and there founded what is now known as The International Medical Missionary Society, for the twofold purpose of fitting medical missionaries to labour abroad, and at the same time reach the sick poor and vicious classes with the Gospel. Opening a mission in the Fourth Ward, the worst part of New York City, many trophies were won from the slums and the paths of sin to Christ. In 1885 a large house was taken as an institute and home for male students. In 1887 a second house was rented for female students. The good work has gone on until nearly 100 of these students have gone to India, China, Africa, Russia, Burmah, Siam, Syria, Ceylon, and other lands.

In 1886 Dr. Dowkontt began to publish The Medical Missionary Record, which he still continues to edit. A few months since he issued a little book entitled "Murdered Millions," which was strongly endorsed by Rev. Dr. Cuyler in a warm introduction. It has caused considerable stir in the United States, The New York Herald devoting a whole column to it, and over a hundred other leading secular and religious journals calling attention to its contents. It is a wonderful and fearful revelation of things in heathen lands.

DR. G. D. DOWKONTT.

Dr. Dowkontt has lately prepared an autobiography, the manuscript of which we have had the opportunity to look over. It is full of marvellous experiences and providential interpositions and deliverances. We purpose giving some extracts from its pages in subsequent issues.

The Doctor has just been paying a visit to his native city and country, and sails from Glasgow for New York in the Ethiopia on August 30. At the present time he is particularly interested in the founding of a fully-equipped Medical Missionary College in America, where intending missionaries can as easily get medical knowledge and training as theology. It is indeed strange, in view of all the theological institutions in existence, that there should not be at least one fully organised medical missionary college in the world; yet such is the case. To meet the great demand for medical knowledge in heathen lands, and in view of its immense value in mission work, efforts are being made by several institutions to give limited medical training, or, as in Edinburgh and London, to house, and aid pecuniarily, those preparing for the mission field. If Dr. Dowkontt should be successful, as we trust he may, in carrying out the comprehensive scheme which he has formulated, the beneficent results in the future history of missions will be unspeakable.

'BUSMEN IN BRIGHTON.—Mr. J. Pratt, 8, Jubilee-street, Brighton, writing of work among omnibus men in that town, says Sunday evening meetings have lately been held for the men and their families. Helpers who can speak for the Master will be welcomed. Many cases of need are met with, which it is desired to relieve.

REV. J. McNEILL AT MELBOURNE.

On July 20, Rev. John McNeill and Mr. J. H. Burke arrived in Melbourne, after cheering work in Tasmania. The Victoria newspapers at once introduced him to the community at large, telling the story of his life and labours, and describing his powers as an evangelist.

Mr. McNeill was met by Rev. Dr. Robinson, Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, and a number of clergymen of various denominations. The same day he met the ministers (350 in number) of the principal churches in Melbourne, at the Assembly Hall, Collins-street. After an address of welcome by Dr. Bevan, Mr. M'Neill delivered a lecture, entitled "Hints on Preaching," after which several hymns were sung by Mr. Burke.

In the evening a crowded meeting was held in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, Bourke-street. Rev. Dr. Robinson, who presided, introduced the evangelists, and Rev. H. B. Macartney (Church of England), said that his father, the Dean of Melbourne, charged him to convey his sympathy with the Mission. Melbourne was sadly in need of evangelisation, for though the lamps of God were burning brightly in places, still there was much darkness, and intemperance, infidelity, passion, lust, and ignorance were rampant.

Rev. S. T. Withington, representing the different branches of the Methodist Church, welcomed the evangelists on behalf of that denomination, and Rev. W. H. Laurence, chairman of the Congregational Union, and Mr. G. P. Barbour, on behalf of the Baptists, delivered hearty addresses. Mr. McNeill followed with a powerful speech on 1 Chron. xii. 22, emphasizing co-operation in work for Christ.

The next day, the mission began in earnest. In the afternoon a crowded meeting for "men only" was held in Wesley Church, Lonsdale-street. In the evening, the Theatre Royal was filled with an audience that proved very attentive to the preacher's message. The singing of Mr. Burke was a valued feature of the meetings, the Gospel being forcibly presented in the well-known pieces which he rendered. Latest accounts state that the mission was expected to last six or seven weeks.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN IN DUBLIN.

Those interested in the cause of suffering and neglected childhood will doubtless be glad to hear of the work carried on by Miss Carr in her Homes for Destitute Children, Dublin. She began, not quite seven years ago, with a small house, few children, and very little money. The numbers of needy little ones increased rapidly, pressing cases pleaded for admission, and now the work has reached important proportions.

Since last year's report of work in Eccles-street and Temple-street, Miss Carr has been presented with a home for elder girls in Northbrook-road, a very fine house, suitable in every way, having originally been built for a school. It was brought under her notice early in the spring of this year, but the purchase money, £1300, seemed an insuperable obstacle, the funds at the time being at a low ebb. However, the owner, a Christian friend, was anxious that Miss Carr should have the house, and waited a little while with this object in view. The matter was not in any way made public, merely being mentioned to a few persons deeply interested in the work. And the heart of one whom God had blessed with means was moved to buy the house, as already stated.

This has greatly cheered and encouraged all concerned in the welfare of these Homes; and, realising God's favour and blessing, some forty of the elder girls were drafted over to their new abode in May. Miss Carr has at present under her care 190 children, varying in age from two to fifteen years (girls are in the majority). Several other children have passed through her hands to different homes and institutions, their cases being brought before her by those interested, and through her influence and unceasing effort they have been suitably provided for. Her own homes are filled with those who, from one cause or another, cannot be received elsewhere, their one and only plea being utter destitution. Children from all parts of Ireland are in the homes. The funds just at present are very low, and £500 is urgently needed. Miss Carr's address is 6, Northbrook-road, Dublin.

THE FOES OF YOUTH.

A remarkably powerful address on this subject was given at the recent Christian Endeavour Convention at Cleveland, Ohio, by Mr. Anthony Comstock, of New York. We give some extracts :—

"To-night we sit around the camp-fire. I, who have been more than twenty-two years at the front, on the skirmish line, am to speak of things which I know, and testify of things that I have seen.

"According to the last census there are more than 22,400,000 youths in the institutions of learning in the United States. These youths are character-building. Characters are being moulded, developed, and established. In each individual it is possible to build a character so grand and sublime as to help others toward heaven, and shine in glory for ever. But the odds are against them. To-night we are to hold a council of war in their behalf. You shall be generals in consultation, while the scout maps out in part the situation of the enemy. Deadly foes lie athwart the pathway of each child.

CHARACTER-WRECKERS ABOUND

all along the way from earth to heaven.

"The last census informs us that out of a population of about 66,000,000 inhabitants in the United States there are 1,000,000 habitual drunkards. This is a proportion of one to sixty-six of the entire population, and less than one to forty-four of the adult portion, who are habitual drunkards.

"The foes of society, church and state—intemperance, gambling, lust, and infidelity—have brought death into our homes and palaces; and the children and young men are cut off and slain by these terrible influences.

"The defiled imagination is the most deadly, insidious, and persistent foe we have to contend with. It plants its masked batteries and trains its guns against the spiritual development of each youth. It buries sunken mines in the heart, and a line connecting the brain with them has memory's button attached, which Satan presses at his pleasure. Ruts and grooves are formed in the brain by impure thoughts, and into these run the wheels of the motive power of passion, intemperance, and unhallowed living. The flash lights of sensual pleasures and self-indulgence are turned ofttimes full in the face of our youth, blinding their eyes, so that their feet turn aside from the straight and narrow way that leads to everlasting life.

"The sloughs of secret vice are loading many down with burdens, that continue to increase, as old age advances. A detachment of hell is everywhere present with fetters to bind the feet of the feeble and easily tempted—those who are brought into the world with

INHERITED APPETITES AND PASSIONS.

Worse than condors, vultures, and birds of prey by day, and lions, tigers, jackals, ghouls, and beasts of prey by night, are foes overshadowing and surrounding the young men and maidens of our day.

"In the heart of every child is a chamber of imagery—memory's storehouse. Behind the door in each heart, unless the Holy Spirit has possession, an imp of darkness is stationed by the spirit of evil, to keep the door closed, opening it only when some degrading influence is sought to be hung up as a decoration within. If the devil can, through eye and ear, gain access for a few years only in youth, and decorate those walls according to his will, the bars within will soon be so encrusted with vanity, self-conceit, and sinful pleasures, that nothing but the grace of God can pull them back or open the door for the entrance of the gentle messenger who stands pleading without the door.

"Satan, taking advantage of man's greed for gain, has led men to open many recruiting stations for hell. All that money can secure has been used to make their places attractive. A belt line of fire encircles our youth. Dram-shops, fitted up with polished mirrors, cut-glasses, carved and highly-finished woods, electric lights, and walls draped and decorated with works of art, all bid for our young men. Surrounding these are dives, brothels, and low playhouses. Bill-boards, fences, and walls of buildings serve as finger-boards to point our youth to places where the atmosphere is fœtid, and where young women are employed to divest themselves of their modest womanly apparel and disport themselves in shameless attire and in shameless manner for the entertainment of patrons of opera, theatre, and low playhouses. Concert saloons and dives are but the grading downward of these pestilential exhibitions. All these are pest-holes in society—scourges worse than the plagues of flies or locusts of old. They are slimy serpents that seek to charm the senses until the victim falls an easy prey.

"Add to all these the great daily and weekly newspapers, teeming in many instances with highly sensational details of loathsome crimes and filthy details of divorce and abandonment cases in the courts; column after column of advertisements wherein the respectable editor bargains for a consideration to introduce the quack, abortionist, lottery thief, green goods swindlers, smut dealers, race-track gamblers, tricksters, and villains of all sorts to their readers—taking, as it were, these moral lepers by the hand, and leading them into the bank, store, manufactory, home and school, and introducing them with his endorsement. The more high toned the paper the higher price the fraud, thief, and quack are willing to pay for the privilege of advertising therein. Many and many an invalid has had his or her disease aggravated by the lies of the quack thus brought to their notice. Thousands of persons have been thus swindled and robbed each year.

THOUSANDS OF YOUTHS ARE CURSED

by the stories of crimes and criminals, and wreck and ruin follow.

"Then add to the above the illustrated weekly papers, devoted to stories of bloodshed, lust, and crime. Then take account of the dime novel, half dime story paper, and cheap books without a moral quality. These influences morally craze young people. A young man, from reading trashy books, ran away from home, entered upon a life of crime, got into a fight, was wounded, and upon his deathbed, when counselled to make a point for a new life, he replied, 'I can't. If I try and have better thoughts the scenes of vice come right back to me like a slap in the face. They're burned in. I can't get rid of them. When you read the Bible to me I see faces, and I hear the words which filled those terrible dens, and I can hear nothing else. They come, too, between me and the memory of my precious mother. How dare I think of her! Oh, I couldn't look in her dear face again. But warn all young people whom you know to let those foolish books alone. They're very silly, but they do harm to many, and they've ruined me. They take you one step on a bad road, and the rest comes quick and easy.' Towards the last he was penitent, but the memory of the past haunted him and intruded upon his sacred moments.

"How many Christians can testify to the same intrusion upon sacred hours of things put before the mind in youth, defilements hung up in the chamber of imagery. Many are overwhelmed and dismayed by these recurring visions. For their sake let me say, temptation is not sin. It's the devil's torture. He rings memory's bell, and as often as he does it the hated thing intrudes itself. These visions haunted this dying boy almost, if not quite, to the gates of heaven. Just before he died he said: 'If, through His infinite mercy, I am ever forgiven, don't you think I'll cease to remember? How could I enter heaven with those polluting memories clinging to me?

OH, IF I COULD ONLY FORGET.

"Last, and worse than all, add the contagion of photographic publications, forty-seven tons weight of which have been seized and destroyed by the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice. An equally baneful curse has arisen from the action of unscrupulous men who, for gain, have scoured the archives of ancient, oriental and pagan literature to find buried and forgotten indecencies to substitute for modern filth.

"Well for the community would it be if we could stop here. But no. We must add the allurements to dishonesty offered by race-track gambler, lottery, policy, banking game, pool-selling, and other kindred vices, to say nothing of concert saloon, dive, brothel, and other resorts where men, led on by defiled imaginations, rush to gratify passion thus aroused. Is there not a dire necessity, young soldiers of the cross, that each of you should put your Gospel armour on and drill for the fight? We must deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow our leader, Jesus Christ. Professing Christians must withdraw their patronage from the brokerage shops of hell.

"With corruption in high places; statesmen turned into truckling politicians; judges and prosecuting attorneys administering laws in the interests of criminals, instead of for the protection of morals, peace, and good order; with sworn officials levying blackmail; with persons occupying positions of trust recreant to their charge and becoming defaulters, forgers, and thieves; with newspapers every day serving up 'tips' on gambling ventures; with professing Christians patronising these swindling and dishonest schemes, and all these evil examples set before the rising generation, can we hope to save the young and build up noble characters for the future unless these evil influences are removed? Surrounded by such environments, can our youth be saved from ruin?

"To-night, young soldiers, I ask you with all earnestness, what are you going to do about it? The outlook is not bright. These foes are ever active and aggressive. The seed-sowing must be stopped ere the harvest of crime and ruin can be lessened."

PROGRESS IN BARCELONA.

Our school examination passed off satisfactorily, the children replying well, particularly to Scripture questions. At the close the sub-mayor of the town thanked us publicly. Our success, added to the praises of our school heard on every hand, has greatly incensed fanatical Romanists.

A few weeks ago we had the opportunity of distributing Scriptures to a good number of invalid soldiers stationed here. In spite of the hot weather, our Gospel meetings continue to be well attended, and the Lord is evidently working in the hearts of the people.

We are paying visits to neighbouring towns and villages, where the Gospel has not yet been preached. There are hundreds of small places in this country where the people would joyfully welcome the good news of salvation without money and without price.

We need the prayers of the Lord's people. While we have much reason to be encouraged, our difficulties are also many. Superstition, ignorance, and wickedness abound on every hand.—Yours truly in Christ, Elizabeth Lawrence.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

In a recent letter, Mr. W. H. Brealey, of Blackdown, Clayhidon, Somerset, writes:

God has heard prayer, and supplied us with a new Gospel tent, so that we have been able to pitch two tents during the past two months. We believe in each place real help and blessing have resulted. The Lord's people have expressed themselves as having been greatly cheered and helped, and souls have been led "from death unto life." We have visited the villages of Henryock and Stapley in Devon, and Long Sutton and Halstock in Somerset. We purpose visiting others in Somerset and Dorset as the Lord directs and opens the way.

The Gospel work on these hills and districts is still being carried on with cause for encouragement in many places. The day school at Bishopswood, the infant school at Clayhidon (the one for elder children having closed), together with the various Sunday-schools, are giving us great reason for hope and cheer. For all these we would seek the prayers of the Lord's people. Being now myself entirely free for Gospel work, I would ask the prayers of the people of God for guidance in his service. My desire is to serve Him anywhere He may appoint, while still continuing to superintend the work of the Lord in our hands on these hills.

P.S.A. SUCCESS.

The following communications have been sent in response to our special request:—

Dear Sir,—I have pleasure in replying to your inquiry that we are much encouraged in our P.S.A. for men. The large and regular attendance of many not accustomed to public worship, their evident interest and profit, and the altered lives of not a few of them, lead us to consider this the best known agency for bringing a certain class of the population under Gospel teaching.

The success is probably due to (1) the work being undoubtedly the child of prayer; (2) the earnestness, warmth, unconventionality, and brotherliness of the engagements; (3) the entirely devotional and Biblical character of the services; (4) the active, and, in several cases, the official co-operation of the members themselves; and (5) the suitability of the brethren who are responsible for what is done.

Many of the men now frequently attend the evening service in the church, and it is no small gain that the effort has called forth the devoted activity of several capable church members who had failed to find a place in previous forms of usefulness. I cannot be too thankful for the work, both for the men's sake and our own.—Faithfully yours,

Charles New.

Robertson-street Church, Hastings, August 28.

Dear Sir,—Under "Notes and Comments," in your issue of August 16, you say you will be glad, for the sake of those who have not succeeded as to numbers (in their P.S.A. services), if those who have succeeded will state what they regard as the secret of their success. As two months hence the Great George-street Chapel Brotherhood will have been in existence three years, my own experience may be of some assistance.

In our own cases the services have been well sustained from the beginning until now. In all states of the weather a noble congregation assembles every Sunday afternoon, and the interest and attention of the men continue unabated. Strangers are always struck with the reverence and devoutness of the men; with the reality stamped upon the service, and uniformly speak in terms of warmest commendation, however strong their objections to the movement may have previously been. The singing of the men is an inspiration, of itself a service, and it is a rare thing to see a wandering eye or a listless face during the addresses. The good done covers a very wide area, and, so far as I am able to judge, the results are more encouraging than those produced by all our other services and agencies combined.

What is the explanation? It is not easy to answer that question. Many unseen and unknown forces are at work in such cases that cannot be defined. So far as I can discover it, the following explanation may be given:—

1. Divine guidance was most earnestly sought and expected in the very earliest steps of the movement. Our motives were sifted, our aims scrutinised, and not until we felt God was leading us did we move.

2. The approval and co-operation of the deacons and the members of the church and congregation were enlisted.

3. Daily prayer-meetings were held for a week before holding our first service; the workers, a band of 110 men and women, were urged to set apart a portion of each evening for special prayer, and to remember that our aim was to claim the men for Christ.

4. House-to-house visitation was carried on for seven days, embracing all the streets within the radius of a mile from the chapel. Handbills of invitation were given at the doors of theatres and other places of amusement, in the public markets, shipyards, docks, public-houses, and wherever working men congregated, along with placards on the walls calling attention to the service.

5. From the first no other idea was entertained than that of having a distinctly religious service, and to that we have persistently adhered. Our service consists of four hymns, a Scripture lesson, a prayer and brief closing prayer, an address of five minutes and another of fifteen, two solos, one of them sometimes being a hymn selected from the book we use, and the other what is generally understood as a sacred song. Having neither choir nor band, no service could be more simple.

6. We secure the services of the very best speakers and singers we can. For the former we are indebted mainly to ministers of various denominations, laymen being the exception rather than the rule.

7. Those who are to take part meet for prayer before every service.

8. We have rigidly avoided all advertising of names, either of conductor, speaker, or soloist. The men never know who will take part until they enter the chapel. By this plan the men are taught to attend for the sake of the service itself, and at the same time we avoid a possible overflow at one time and a sensible diminution in the attendance at another.

9. We jealously watch the danger incident to the solo feature of the service, lest it should become a mere vocal display. If regarded and undertaken as a Christian ministry by the singer, it is difficult to say whether the speaker or the singer secures the best results.

10. The usefulness of the movement has been materially advanced.

(a) By our Book Scheme, 1200 vols. of a thoroughly good character being distributed in May last, 10,300 having been issued in connection with our Sunday and weekday services.

(b) By our Tontine Sick and Burial Society, an invaluable boon in time of sickness and bereavement, besides encouraging habits of thrift and self-denial.

(c) By our Benevolence Fund, which gives substantial aid to members who are in temporary distress.

(d) By our Ambulance classes.

I may add that direct conversions have resulted from the services; pronounced atheists and agnostics have returned to the Christian faith; some who were engaged in the public-house trade have left it for other callings; families scattered by quarrels and misunderstandings have been reunited; husbands and wives who were living apart have been brought together again; inveterate drunkards have signed and kept the pledge of total abstinence; improvidence has been supplanted by thrift; prejudices against churches and ministers have been modified or abandoned; a love of books and the fireside has been created; and the attendance at our Sunday evening service has been materially increased; whilst many others have become regular worshippers at churches and chapels in the vicinity of their homes.

To all who are open to conviction as to the value from all points of view of our men's service, we say "come and see" and judge for yourselves.—Very faithfully yours, J. K. Nuttall.

PLEASANT SUNDAY AFTERNOONS.

Wintoun-street Baptist Chapel, Leeds, was recently filled on the occasion of the half-yearly distribution of prizes of the Pleasant Sunday afternoons for women only. The president and pastor, Rev. R. Davies, delivered an address on Pleasant Sunday Afternoons, their purpose and scope, after which Mrs. R. Davies spoke on the consecration of women to the service of Christ, and presented several hundreds of excellent books as prizes to the members.

Rev. Dr. Boynton, of Boston, U.S.A., in an address to the P.S.A. at Christ Church, Enfield, said it was a gratification to him to know that Englishmen and Americans were of one blood; they not only had a history, but it was theirs to make history in the future. They must expect hard work, and there were some things in life which gave the soul a beauty or lustre which others knew nothing about. The life of a young man in all its relationships depended on keeping the character pure. They could not hold good principles with a bad character. Dr. Boynton expressed his belief that the nations would disarm within seventy-five years.

In connection with the Ashton Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Society, held at the Albion Independent Chapel, the sum of £3200 is about to be distributed among the members who have availed themselves of the Society's Saving Club.

GLORYING IN AFFLICTION.—Some of us think it is a wonderful experience to be patient and submissive under the weight of infirmities. Paul found Jesus so precious in his infirmities that he gloried in them! Billy Bray used to say, "The Lord gives me both honey and vinegar—a spoonful of vinegar but a ladleful of honey." The glory far outweighs the light afflictions of this life. There are more blessings than trials.

AN APPEAL FROM INDIA.

Canon Christopher communicates to The Record an urgent appeal from Mr. James Monro, C.B., late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, now engaged in the work of the Gospel in the villages of Lower Bengal, in a district where years ago he acted as a magistrate. Writing from Ranaghat, District Nuddea, Mr. Monro says:—I have with me my son and his wife, my elder daughter, and a young lady volunteer. We have been doing village work, chiefly among the women, up till now, and my daughter has already given the message to above 2,500 women in villages within a couple of miles of our house. Everywhere she has met with a most cordial reception, and the village women reproach her for not coming oftener, and letting them hear the "good words." How can she go oftener? She has more than thirty villages under regular visitation, and she cannot visit each of these more than once a month. We shall be able to do more when the other ladies know more of the language, but even then there are a thousand villages in our "parish," a tract of country with 250,000 inhabitants, and evangelisation must be slow, because we have so few workers.

We have just opened our dispensary and hospital, and it will be a most valuable aid to evangelistic work. Already the daily average of attendance is about fifty, and these all hear the Gospel before the medical part of the work begins. All listen most attentively, and I believe the attendance will largely increase. Here, again, we want more workers. Can you get us any medical recruits who can pay their own way, say with £120 a year? We should then be able to establish branches, and so diminish the strain on the staff at headquarters. I wish that the immense importance of a Medical Mission was more fully realised. It opens many a heart and many a home to us, and it surely is an imitation of the practice of our blessed Lord who preached and healed. Everywhere here there is a wide door wide open. Would that more English men and English women would believe this and come out! My younger son is coming out as soon as he takes his degree at Cambridge. He is a scholar of Trinity, and a most earnest young fellow. He will do good work out here, I have no doubt.

BRITISH SYRIAN MISSION.

In a recent circular appeal on behalf of this Mission, the committee say:—

"Mrs. Mentor Mott passed away in 1891. The Lord has given her a worthy successor in Miss James, whose joy it is 'to spend and be spent' in his service among the people of Syria. Miss James is, however, hindered by lack of funds. On all sides she finds open doors for the entrance of the Gospel; a recent example being an application from the Maronite priest of a most bigoted village to 'open an English school' there. The influence of the Mission is deepening and widening in all departments. Schools are well attended, Bible-women welcomed in the houses, Scripture readers attentively listened to in hospitals, in shops, in the encampments of the Lebanon soldiers, and even among the wild Bedouins."

Three gifts of £10 are solicited to meet the promise of a friend to give £10, if nineteen others will do the same. The secretary of the Mission is Miss Mary P. Baily, 27, Homefield-road, Wimbledon, Surrey.

OUTRAGE ON MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.—Two lady missionaries, Miss H. M. Bigler and Miss S. L. Halverson, were recently severely maltreated by the Chinese in Canton. The outrages arose from the posting of the walls with placards of an inflammatory nature, stating, among other things, that "Out of revenge for having brought the plague down to Hong-Kong, the foreigners have decided to poison all the Chinese. The foreigners particularly resent the deaths that have occurred amongst their own people, and have decided to retaliate by distributing thousands of scented bags containing poison, which are being scattered broadcast by lower-class Chinese. Chinese female convicts and foreign-devil women pretend to be kind to the people, but are really intent on distributing death and disease among the Chinese. Cunning devices go with them, pretending to have power to expel evil spirits, and cure the plague. All this is deceitful, the bags containing poisonous powder, which, if smelled, must kill." The ladies were rescued from almost certain death by an English officer.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

THE MINISTERS' MEETINGS.

In opening the first of these meetings, which were both well attended, Rev. Evan Hopkins reminded his hearers of the possibility of Christians failing to live up to their privileges, perhaps not even understanding them, though well instructed in doctrine. Lack of power might also result from wrong methods of work, or of getting money, even when the doctrine is right. How many ministers of the Gospel are unsuccessful because they are weighed down by care! The Word of God meets us there: "Be careful for nothing"; "Casting all your care upon Him." We lose power if we disobey one command.

It may be that some are living in the wilderness of worldly life, cheerless and barren. Or we may be habitually overcome by the same old forms of temptation over and over again. When we are overcome we know it; we lie in the dust; but something must be wrong if we fall. Shall we not look for something to raise our lives to the level of God's Word? "God has promised; He will fulfil."

The first step towards receiving definite blessing is to see what that blessing is. It is not restoration from a condition of backsliding, though to realise where we are and to pick up is a preliminary blessing. It means to be able to meet trials and temptations triumphantly and victoriously.

There is a danger of our coming short of God's rest, as in Hebrews iv. 1, and it is the same with deliverance. It is one thing to be delivered from the authority of darkness, and another to be delivered from its power. If we see in God's Word that there is a possibility of our being so delivered, we must not rest till we have experienced it. We know it exists from the experience of others, as well as from God's Word.

For a long time, I must confess I sought freedom as an attainment, but it is not. Some think it is to be obtained by engaging in Christian work or by struggle or by growth. But this deliverance is not an attainment, it is a gift to be accepted by believing, by trusting, just as much as you received pardon in the same way. I remember how it was with myself; I struggled in vain for pardon, and at last had to take it as a gift. So it was with freedom.

Leave the question whether it will come suddenly or gradually to God. You may take it in a moment, but you have to prove it progressively. You have to know it as a continuous acceptance.

You may feel you cannot believe. We have many of us felt this, for there was a hindrance between us and God. But the moment by heart-searching we have found this out, and it has been removed, we have known what it is to believe and receive. I like to look at this blessing not as giving mere joy, but as equipment for service.

After earnest prayer, the next address was by

DR. ELDER CUMMING.

The cry of the earnest part of the ministry, of the men who feel, after exhausting their own wisdom and doing their very best, that they cannot save souls, is that they may be filled with Christ. Then, whether they succeed or not, they will be doing the will of God.

Now, what do we know about the anointing of the Spirit? No one can read the New Testament and doubt that there is such a thing. Some have sought it for years in vain, and ask if there is hope.

It seems to me that we often make a mistake by asking for the great blessing before we are ready for it, before we have experienced cleansing. I believe that we must have our hearts and minds and spirits cleansed before we can know what it is to be filled with God's Spirit. It is one thing to be a Christian with a clean heart, and another thing to be cleansed from pollution, evil thoughts, to have a shrinking from evil. There is no such thing as sinlessness this side of the grave, but there is such a thing as holiness.

The whole thing turns at these Conventions on the question, Are we cleansed, or are we willing to be cleansed? A happy hour it is when we are enabled to see our fault most clearly, when we have spotted the hindrance. You will have a very bad half hour before God, because it is so real and so practical. The fight must be gone through before you can have those wonderful blessings that God has promised.

It can be done just at once. We have not perhaps realised that we are out of joint, and that we may have to suffer pain, but that when we make ourselves as beasts before God, we may be healed.

Prayer was offered, and an address given by

REV. F. B. MEYER.

There is only one word laid upon my heart to say, a word which has played a great part in my own inner life, and you will understand that it is only following up what has already been said. The beginning of my own experience of that blessing was just that "bad half hour" by my bedside, in which I gave up all that was between me and Christ. The word on my mind is "reckon." Reckon on God's faithfulness. It came to me first through Hudson Taylor, and I pass it on to you. This applies in two or three directions, first in that moment when you are led to see one habit or sin in your life like the worm at the root of the gourd; when you "reckon"—apart from any emotion—that from that moment God is responsible for dealing with it—not that you have anything to do, but that your antagonism is diverted, and you trust God to do what He has promised to do.

When a man is always giving himself to God, he has never given himself to God. Reckon that directly you yield yourself, however imperfectly, you may absolutely rely on his keeping that which you have committed to Him.

How I remember my own struggles on these hills, that I might feel something, when I was only attending this Convention as a seeker! But directly one came to see that if the heart was cleansed up to the limit of one's light—a light that is always growing—that if the one thought of one's life was to be used as a mere channel for the mighty torrent of his love, then one reckoned that God must have responded to the faith which he had inculcated in one. God can't disappoint the yearnings which He has implanted.

One must rely on God as a partner, a co-worker, who will do his work. I urge you to cultivate the habit of "reckoning" on God, of trusting God, without an emotion. When a man seeks feeling, he misses it. He that loveth his life loses it: He who is prepared to live all his life without feeling is the man who gets as much as he can do with.

CONTRIBUTIONS AT KESWICK.

Your readers may be interested in knowing the amounts received by me up to August 20, 1894, for Keswick Convention and other missions, since July 1. For Keswick Mission, £1,080 18s. 6d.; for other missions, £507 11s. 10d.; total, £1,588 10s. 4d. This does not include contributions sent in by letter towards the general expenses of the Convention.—Yours, etc., Robert Wilson.

SHOP GIRLS' FOREST HOME.

During the past spring and summer so many almost penniless workers have been taken in, refreshed, comforted, and "set going" once more, that the funds have completely run out before more annual subscriptions are due. Miss Reynolds, the lady manager of the little home, is quite distressed at seeing herself compelled to close it, and disappoint so many longing for a sight of trees and the pure air around, unless some kind friends of this most-industrious class decide otherwise by sending a little help to put us over the difficulty.

The annual subscriptions will not keep the cottage open all the year without some help from the poor girls themselves, but naturally it is those who can never afford the luxury of a trip, even to Epping Forest, who plead to be taken in, and suffered to rest for a week or two. Indeed, many of these must sink, unless they can obtain this reprieve from London work.

Will the kind-hearted tourists, starting for weeks or months of pleasure in glorious scenery and beautiful air, alter the sad verdict, and keep the little Home open as usual? All donations received by Miss H. Reynolds, Buckhurst Hill, Epping New-road.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on special services at the Evangelistic Hall, Llanelly, by Mr. Opie Rodway on September 1-4.—That young men and women who have professed conversion at open-air meetings of the Sheffield Y.M.C.A. may be kept steadfast.—For blessing on special Gospel missions at Doncaster, Paisley, and Leeds, by Revs. F. E. Heape, J. Flannagan, and H. Thomas, in September.—For blessing on a ten days' Protestant mission in connection with the Church Association at St. Thomas's, Blackburn, by Rev. T. H. Sparshott.—For blessing on a ten-days' mission at Sheffield in connection with the Y.M.C.A., by Mr. H. Varley.

THE RUSSIAN STUNDISTS.

We are continually receiving information (says Evangelical Christendom for September) showing that the persecution of the Stundists is still carried on with vigour in some parts of the south of Russia. A few weeks ago, one who had been long identified with the movement, and an earnest worker among his fellow-Stundists, had his home visited by police officials, when his papers and letters were seized. These included some which revealed the fact of his having been in correspondence with friends of the Alliance, through whom money was supplied for the relief of many of the Stundist families.

This good brother, fearing that the seizure of his papers would ultimately mean his arrest and imprisonment, determined to leave the country, and, by the aid of friends, he was enabled to escape, though with considerable difficulty. He eventually found his way through St. Petersburg to Sweden, and thence to London, where he was able to confer with friends. He has since then returned to the Continent with the view of settling in Roumania, where he has arranged for his wife and family to join him. The Council of the Alliance has been very glad to be able, with other friends, to assist in the expense incurred in this case.

The special fund of the Evangelical Alliance has also been found useful in helping another earnest Christian who escaped from Russia only three weeks ago. This good brother was one of those who left Russia, after repeated warnings, in 1884, that he would be imprisoned if he carried on his evangelistic work. He eventually proceeded to America, where he laboured for some years in various parts of the United States, and among his fellow-countrymen. He has been very successful in his evangelistic work, and, having obtained his papers as a naturalised subject of the United States, he proceeded only a few months ago to Southern Russia, hoping that by remaining only a few days in each place, he would be able to travel through the country, seeking out the persecuted Christians, and speaking of Christ as opportunity occurred. For some time his progress was not hindered, but in May last he was arrested, put under chains, and sent to St. Petersburg, where, as he had formerly been in the Russian Navy, he was placed in the naval prison. From this he managed to escape with considerable difficulty, and at last found his way to London. He has now returned to America, where he hopes to rejoin his wife, who was with him when he was arrested in South Russia.

We feel sure that prayer will ascend to God on behalf of his suffering people in Russia; for there are many who are at this moment in grave peril, and for whom there seems to be little hope of any relief through earthly means. The two brethren above referred to will also be followed with the prayers of their fellow Christians in this country, that God may open the way for both of them to labour for Him again amongst their fellow-countrymen.

FAMINE IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

I should like to bring before your readers the present condition of the natives of the Usagara country, Eastern Equatorial Africa. Nearly the whole population is suffering keenly from famine, caused by a severe plague of locusts. The early budding crops in nearly the whole of this portion of Africa have been devoured by these insects, and consequently there has been no harvest. Added to this is a drought in some districts.

The Church Missionary Society has stations at Mamboia, Mpwapwa, and Kisokwe, in the Usagara country. I purpose leaving England early in September, on my return to Mpwapwa, to take charge of a medical mission there. I should be grateful if your readers would help me buy some rice and other food in Zanzibar, which I can take up-country with me, to enable me to minister to the needs of some of our distressed African brothers and sisters. Contributions may be sent to me to 4, St. John's Terrace, The Green, Southall.—Yours faithfully,

Medical Missionary, C.M.S.

IF CHRIST CAME to many a church in England and America to-day, would not his first act be what it was when He came to the Temple? Are there no people among us who "run a church" on Sundays much as they run a store on Mondays? Are there no hangers-on upon religious organisations, who work various convenient arrangements for worshippers for the sake of gain? What about people who get up societies that they may be made secretaries, who start religious newspapers for profit, not for religion, and the like parasites on Christian communities? What about those whose test of the prosperity of a church is its balance sheet? The Jews' market outside their little temple was a small affair. We do things on a larger scale.

RAILWAYS AND THE SABBATH.

Dear Sir,—Our memorial from shareholders of the Midland Railway, against the continuance of its vast Sunday goods traffic, was presented by Mr. R. J. Horneck, of Wexford, and Rev. Edward Heath Brown, of Twickenham, at the half-yearly meeting of the company held at Derby on the 10th inst. For about five minutes Mr. Horneck secured a patient hearing, but a few dozen shareholders favourable to Sunday labour so disturbed the meeting after that time by their outcries and stamping, that except to the reporters, the rest of his speech was inaudible. A good impression was, however, made. A few spoke in favour, and the chairman replied with some amount of sympathy. The memorial had 174 signatures, representing a considerable amount of stock, twelve of the subscribed names being those of proprietors eligible as directors.

Our Union has no intention of retiring from the field, if Christians, and especially Christian shareholders, will support us. Our modes of operation are association and organisation, fostered by prayer and animated with faith and courage. We are in correspondence with about 200 shareholders, who represent twenty-seven public companies. Our recent effort has brought to light a large amount of conscience among holders of stock and shares. It has also brought us appeals from other parts of Britain to institute enterprises in other directions in favour of the liberation of men held in Sunday bondage. We hope to communicate, by circular, with every gentleman and lady who signed the recent memorial, and in the meantime shall be glad to receive communications addressed as under.—Faithfully yours,

Jas. Fox Wilson,
Secretary, Shareholders' Union for the Defence of the Sabbath.

Letters to the Editor.

RITUALISM.

Sir,—Permit me to reply to some points in Rev. W. Carlile's letter in your issue of August 16.

"How is it possible to account for the peaceful death-beds of High Church folk?" The reply is no more satisfactory than if it applied to peaceful death-beds of Hindoos or Mohammedans. It must be remembered that the conscience is a part of our sinful nature, and replies in reproval or assent according to its education, until enlightened by the Holy Ghost.

My knowledge of the Pro-Cathedral (as once a Roman Catholic myself) does not assure me that the going over to Rome is of rare occurrence. The number of weak women prepared by the High Church party, who are pouring into the Church of Rome, is large.

"The Romanists are not afraid of your ritualistic services." If you were a reader of their periodicals, you would find them declaring such services to be an expression of a desire to be back in the "true Church," as she styles herself.—Yours truly,

George Rapkin.
3, Vespan-road, Shepherd's Bush.

Sir,—Your correspondent, Mr. Heathcote, seeks to unravel and explain my stand, when I ask, "How can baptismal regeneration and faith shake hands?" But he quite misuses the conditions. The "regeneration" I spoke of was that which is delegated to another without any "faith" at all. How can this stand save only in the secret counsel of God? Who is he that can testify through any "work," i.e., baptism, that an infant is regenerate? Such would, indeed, be the gift of Simon "the Sorcerer," who desired such "magic," when the apostle answered, "Thy money perish with thee." We, too, might say, "Thy office perish with thee."

For it is impossible in adult baptism to know anything concerning the person's regeneration save at the word of "the individual," and not certainly at or through "the office" performed. The "instrument" is not used to make the person "regenerate," but only "to confirm" that which the regenerate person testifies. Without this testimony of the person, and not "the baptizer," there is no such knowledge known to any man. True regeneration is surely and certainly independent of priest.—Yours, etc.,

A Sincere Christian.

Sir,—In continuing this correspondence your readers will, I am sure, agree with me that the most important point of all is, What is the doctrine the Church Army is teaching? Some of us, whilst believing that the Army is doing good, have some grave doubts as to its teaching pure Gospel doctrine? But let Mr. Carlile speak for himself. At a meeting of the West London branch of the English Church Union in January, 1887, Mr. J. W. B. Riddell in the chair, Mr. Carlile made use of the following words: "In one parish the Church Army evangelists might be working under an Evangelical vicar, while in another he might be under a Ritualist of advanced type. . . . Even in Evangelical parishes the Church Army had no evening communion—[cheers]—and in the parish of the secretary of the Church Association at Liverpool there were so many converts that the vicar had to start an early celebration twice a month. Canon Body was one of the greatest friends of the Army." In answer to questions, Mr. Carlile further said: "We do not hold any Calvinistic doctrines. . . . If anyone could point out to him a Calvinistic doctrine in the Army's hymn-book, he would have it expunged at once." This looks like bidding for sacerdotal support, and in return conceding sacerdotal doctrine of a fundamental nature. May I also ask Mr. Carlile, Is it a fact that within a comparatively recent period Church Army "captains" have been forced to resign rather than teach Ritualistic tenets?

Chas. J. Thynne.
Wycliff House, 6, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

Dear Sir,—My experience of High Church and ritualism is very different from that of Rev. W. Carlile. In the parish in which I live we had a much-beloved Evangelical clergyman for thirty years. On his appointment to another living, a gentleman was presented to this living who is an advanced High Churchman. He and his curates are very zealous for ritual; early celebrations (the evening ones have been discontinued), baptisms, and what they call reverence, i.e., bowings, prostrations, turnings, kissing their stole, and crossing. I suppose Mr. Carlile can see edification in these things—I cannot.

The following sentences are extracted from their teaching:—"There is something in the bread and wine after the priest has consecrated it which was not there before." "We are not to look for conversions like that of St. Paul; that was exceptional. Our conversion generally takes place at our baptism, when the Holy Spirit is given to us." "It is a great mistake to say that the Bible, and the Bible alone, is the religion of Christians. There is another word of God besides the Bible which is called tradition."

This is the teaching of members of the English Church Union; is it what Mr. Carlile regards as "simple Evangelical teaching"? I have no sympathy with mere faction, and whether a clergyman should preach in a black gown or a white one, or whether this or that is to be said or sung is to me indifferent; but whether we are to have a Lord's Table or an altar, a sacrificing priest or a Christian minister—presbyter as Hooker says; whether we are to have the Word of God supreme in the Church, these are "vitals."—Yours sincerely,

A Grieved Churchman.

Sir,—I much fear that the letter of my friend, Mr. Heathcote, on Baptismal Regeneration, which appears in your last issue, will not carry conviction to any doubting mind. Indeed, it seems to me, and with all deference, that his reply to "A Sincere Christian" is no reply at all.

He states that, as a rule, God saves instrumentally, and, therefore—surely a big therefore!—baptism, or the sprinkling of water, is the Divine instrument whereby souls are saved and brought into the Kingdom of God on earth. I agree that we are saved instrumentally; but the one instrument, or method, or means, of Divine appointment, which illumines every page almost of the New Testament, is a living conscious faith in a crucified Saviour, and not the sprinkling of water upon the faces of unconscious babes; otherwise faith—saving faith, becomes unintelligible, and the whole basis of Evangelical Christianity is subverted, and a priestly act substituted for conscious repentance, and a plain reponsible recognition on the part of the believer of Divine grace as the sole ground of his entrance into newness of life. This is impossible in infancy.

I was baptized as an infant. I am not complaining; but I avow that I had reached years of maturity before I became a member, a living member, of the Body of Christ—which is his Church. Says St. Paul: "In Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith, which worketh by love."

I hold very strongly that this doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration lies at the very root of Ritualism; and it seems to me that if it can be substantiated on clear and overwhelming Scriptural authority, sacerdotalism is justified. Mr. Heathcote's letter, however, does nothing to make the position of the sacerdotalist a bit more easy of comprehension.—Yours obediently,

London. Jas. A. McIntyre.

Sir,—I have read with something like amazement Mr. Carlile's extraordinary letter in your issue of August 16, headed as above. How our brother can reconcile "regrettable æsthetic excrescences" with the preaching of "Jesus only" passes comprehension.

The advice he tenders to "devoted Evangelical people" to exercise "sympathetic, gentle persuasiveness" when they find themselves in a professedly Protestant church, and see "crosses and candles" substituted for the light of Divine truth, scarcely becomes the leader of an army of Christian warriors. Anyway, it differs essentially from the Apostolic counsel, which bade the "sanctified in God the Father" "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints."

As an old Gospel preacher I should like to know (and so, I think, would many of your Evangelical readers) on what ground Mr. Carlile speaks of infant-baptism as "one of the greatest levers to press the need of real conversion and a baptism of the Holy Ghost." Not the smallest particle of proof can be found in their "Acts" or utterances that the Apostles of our Lord and their fellow-workers found it anything of the sort. The one and only means they employed to bring men to God was the preaching and teaching of a crucified and risen Saviour in the power of the Holy Ghost. The one main mighty lever they used in pressing his claims upon the faith and obedience of their hearers was the commanding, constraining, compassionating love of God and his Christ.

Infant-baptism they do not even once mention. True, we find believer-baptism and the baptism of the Holy Ghost in closest connection (Acts x. 47, 48). But in this case the fact that Cornelius and his kinsmen had received the latter is urged by the Apostle Peter as a plea for his submitting to the former.—Very truly yours,

Frank H. White.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—In reply to Mr. Allan's letters regarding our work in Travancore, I would, in the first place, meet with a point-blank denial the implied charges of untruthfulness which Mr. Allan has seen fit to launch against me and my fellow-officers. Mr. Allan could hardly have written in stronger terms had he been warning the public against a set of charlatans and impostors. He scatters broadcast such misleading expressions as—"only let the truth be known," "utterly unfounded," "no result whatever." I can only reply that he is either wilfully, or with an ignorance which is tantamount to being wilful, stating what he knows, or ought to know, to be untrue. Our converts are there for any unbiassed witness to see and hear for themselves.

Fortunately for us the work in Cape Comorin, has recently been visited by an entirely impartial witness. Some few months ago Mrs. Keer, the wife of Major-General Keer (a retired Indian officer in Her Majesty's Army), offered at her own expense to visit our work in India. We gladly agreed, and she has just returned to England after spending some six months in that country, travelling from village to village, living in the native huts and prying behind the scenes into the everyday life of our officers and their converts.

I shall be glad to forward her pamphlet to any of your readers. Speaking of the Travancore work, where she spent three weeks, Mrs. Keer says:—"I have only one thing to say about the movement here, and that is that it is purely Pentecostal and beyond all human understanding...The whole village is converted...The barracks stands on the site of the late idol temple...Who after seeing and hearing all this could doubt the reality of the work?...How unutterably glad I am that I came!...When I reached the mud hut that night I positively loved it. By this time I utterly and for ever had decided that this was the way to do, if you wanted to get at the people.... I would advise anyone with any money, at once give largely to the Army, endorsing its native methods." Space forbids that I should multiply the quotations from these racy and interesting letters.

2. In regard to Mr. Allan's statement that "no cases are known there," of entire villages having been converted to Christ, besides the one above referred to, and personally visited by Mrs. Keer, I have a letter from S. C. Jackson who has been for two years in charge of a district in Travancore, in which he says:—"I had amongst my villages three in which with the exception of one person all were Salvationists....I do not think Mr. Allan has ever attended any of our meetings. I never knew him to do so. I had corps of 250, 200, 150, and 100 soldiers (members), and no corps had much less than 100."

Major (Miss) Case, a lady of culture, who has at much personal sacrifice spent seven years in our Indian field, sends us the following incident:—"In a village where only part of the people had been converted, a dispute arose regarding a piece of land which was given us for a barracks. It was stated by our opponents that there were no Salvationists in the village. A district magistrate was sent to inquire into the matter on the spot. No less than 100 persons came forward claiming to be Salvationists. Standing in a ringaround the magistrate they gave one after another the most striking testimonies of the change wrought in their homes and lives through the Army. The magistrate was thoroughly convinced, and gave a verdict in our favour."

Brigadier Musa Bhai, himself a Tamil, now on a visit to this country, in speaking of the conversion of several entire villages, says that is emphatically true, and continues: "When visiting there three months ago I conducted an open-air meeting, commencing at 8.30 p.m., and lasting till after midnight, when some 3500 people were present, and of these at least 1500 were our soldiers. The earnest way they pleaded with God for the conversion of their heathen friends would have done credit to any European community of saved people.....I had the joy of praying personally and conversing with ex-devil-dancers and ex-heathen headmen, who are now our sergeants, and I presented one with a Bible."

Miss Lucy Booth writes:—"If no village has entirely changed its faith, why have seventeen heathen temples been handed over to the Salvation Army, and why were the idols and sacrificial weapons, etc., presented to me by a uniformed soldier on my recent visit to Cape Comorin (these articles are to be seen at our headquarters)."

Yours for the salvation of India,

F. de L. Booth-Tucker.

(To be concluded next week.)

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Sir George Williams, who is on a visit to Lynton, has been successful in establishing a branch there.

Mr. Wm. Henderson, jun., Scottish assistant travelling secretary, is at present visiting the associations in the Ayr district with much acceptance.

The Tokyo Association has a fine home, built with money collected in the United States by Mr. J. T. Swift. The building is large, and well adapted to its purpose.

Representatives of the Croydon Y.M.C.A. Cycling Mission Band, including the secretary, Mr. Morris, visited Ipswich on Saturday, August 18, and spent the following Sunday with the Association there. Earnest addresses were given at the Sunday afternoon Bible-class, which numbered sixty young fellows, and the Ladies' committee gave a "Sunday evening at home," at which nearly a hundred members and associates were present. Mr. Morris and Mr. Hammond gave addresses at this gathering.

The report of the Glasgow Association for the year ending June 30, is an encouraging document. It tells of patient, earnest work in every department of association activity, and of an increase of 590 in the membership. The members now reach the grand total of 9954. The income met the expenditure of £4694, and left a balance of £1 13s. 7d. Of this large sum only about £400 was "public" subscriptions, and even that sum was to a large extent received from members and ex-members, honorary and ordinary. The Glasgow Association is one of the largest evangelistic agencies carrying on work in any town.

At a recent meeting of the Berlin Association, the delegates to the Jubilee celebration in London reported on the event. Y.M.C.A. work in Germany is a comparatively new thing, the Berlin Association being only thirteen years old. It is doing a grand work, impressing upon young men the need of a living, active religion, in place of the formal relationship that answers for religion with so many. The association has a membership of about 1200 in the city, and within the last five years has had a fine association building presented to it. In Germany as a whole there are only about a dozen regularly organised associations.

The attendance at the Scottish National Union Conference, convened for Galashiels from September 11 to 13, promises to be very good. The Conference will deal with the representative association duties of the members in public and private life; also how the Fellowship Unions can be more extensively used in Gospel work among young men and women. Rev. Professor Lindsay (Glasgow), Dr. John Smith (Edinburgh), and Messrs. Hugh Macpherson (Falkirk), W. A. Campbell (Glasgow), Archd. Colvill (Dunfermline), Provost Brown, and Alexr. L. Brown, ex-M.P. (Galashiels), are expected to take part in the proceedings. The excursions will include a visit to Abbotsford.

Eleven association men have taken part in a caravan tour through the famous Peak of Derbyshire, organised by the Derby Y.M.C.A., and visiting, among other spots of interest, Bakewell, Lathkill Dale, Haddon Hall, Chatsworth, Eyam, Hathersage, Castleton, Edale, Millers Dale, Buxton, Hartington, Dovedale, and Ashbourne. Some of the celebrated mines and caverns of Castleton were descended, and one or two of the lofty mountains of the Peak climbed. Three tents were erected on each camping ground; one, a small marquee, being used as a living room, and the other two for sleeping in. The weather was most unfavourable, but notwithstanding this, the tour was, in every respect, most enjoyable. The greatest kindness was received at the hands of the inhabitants of the many towns and villages visited. The whole cost, including the purchase of two tents, hire of a third, hire of man, horse, and caravan, board and incidentals, only cost £2 10s. each. The experiment will probably be repeated on a larger scale next summer.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The annual general meeting of the Rossie and Longforgan branches of the Y.W.C.A. was held last week at Rossie Priory. The company, to the number of over 100, assembled at two o'clock, and after spending a pleasant afternoon adjourned to a large marquee, where a sumptuous tea was provided by Lord Kinnaird. After outdoor amusements by the younger members, the company repaired to the picture gallery for the purpose of transacting business. The principal feature in the proceedings was the distribution of a large number of valuable prizes, generously given by Mrs. Armitstead, of Castle Huntly, and awarded for proficiency in knitting and needlework, and knowledge of the Epistle to the Hebrews, shown by an examination recently conducted.

IRISH NOTES.

Rev. W. Wallace, who has been labouring under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society in North India for the past four years, is at present invalided home.

Colportage is being used at present much more extensively than formerly as a means of evangelising the people of Ireland. The Methodists in the Sligo and Enniskillen districts, following the example of those in Portadown, have resolved to employ an agent in that kind of work.

All the money required to defray the costs incurred lately by Rev. Thos. Connellan in defending his character when it was so grossly aspersed has been subscribed, and even a balance is left which will be devoted to carrying on the important mission work in which Mr. Connellan is engaged.

Rev. Samuel Patton, minister of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Londonderry, has been appointed Presbyterian Chaplain of the Derry Prison in succession to the late Rev. Dr. Ross. This is the first time that a minister not belonging to the General Assembly has been appointed to this position.

As the Limerick contingent to the amnesty meeting in Cork, on Sunday last, was passing through South Mall, headed by four bands, they observed the street preachers at Sutton's Corner, and made a rush upon the Evangelists, whom they kicked in a most brutal fashion. Eventually the police came on the scene, and the amnesty demonstrators proceeded to their meeting, cheering loudly.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The friends of work among lepers are desired to note that the address of Mr. Wellesley Bailey, of the Mission to Lepers, is now 17, Greenhill-place, Edinburgh.

The Gorbals Tabernacle (Glasgow) congregation have agreed to give a call to Rev. David Mitchell, Kirkend, who is well-known as an active evangelistic worker.

Rev. John Anderson, D.D., Kinnoul, Perth, and Rev. Mr. Fraser, minister of the parish of Colvend and Southwick, have each attained their ministerial jubilee.

Mr. Wm. Burnside, evangelist in connection with Pray and Trust magazine, has had a time of much blessing, with many conversions, at Downfield, near Dundee, during the summer months.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, Belfast, will be one of the speakers at the Dundee Christian Convention the third week of September. He is also to conduct a series of meetings under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A.

The congregation at Trinity Free Church, Glasgow, have formulated a unanimous call to Rev. H. Montgomery, Belfast, and have appointed a strong deputation to plead their claims at the Belfast Presbytery.

The Glasgow Workmen's Dwellings Company has proved a success. A bonus of two weeks' rent at each of the holiday times, in January and July, is given to all tenants who keep the rules and pay promptly.

The Dundee Christian Conference will be held on September 18-20. The general subject is "Revival," and the various points dealt with will include the need of revival, hindrances, methods, and instances of remarkable awakenings at home and abroad. Such a programme ought to evoke deep and widespread interest.

The privations among the families of the miners who have now been nine weeks out on strike are getting to be very serious; in many towns on Saturday afternoon and evening the men were parading the streets with collecting boxes. Hundreds have contributed their pennies, but this is, after all, but a precarious means for obtaining a livelihood. Feeling is becoming intensified, and the references in the pulpit to the strike are becoming more frequent and pointed.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. Dennis Osborne has recently conducted a special mission in Rangoon, where much blessing attended the presentation of the truth.

Mr. J. Shawcross has conducted a fortnight's mission in St. Paul's Mission-room, Darlington. Large numbers attended, and the results were cheering.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has visited Blackpool. Meetings in the Prince of Wales's Theatre and Adelaide-street Wesleyan Chapel were largely attended, and the Word spoken was accompanied by much heart-searching.

Ireland.—A successful series of Gospel meetings has been held in one of the Irish Evangelisation Society's tents at Mountnorris, co. Armagh, during the past few weeks by Mr. McKimmin. The attendance has been good, and the results very encouraging. The locality is spiritually a needy one.

Rev. G. Soltau, who has recently returned from a mission tour in Southern India, has been holding a Gospel mission in Maldon, Australia, which has been well attended. In all the meetings there have been manifestations of the presence and power of the living Lord. Mr. Soltau is devoting his time and labours to this kind of work.

Mr. Charles Gellatly, of the Evangelisation Society, has finished a tent mission at Dundee. There has been a deep and widespread interest throughout the district, and the meetings have been well attended. A goodly number have given in their names and addresses in testimony of having received saving blessing during the mission.

Padstow.—The Good News Gospel ship has again visited Padstow on her homeward journey. During the three days' mission six services were held, and the presence of God was manifest. Many were the regrets that a longer stay could not be made. The closing service was a very impressive one, various workers in the place uniting in appeals to the unsaved. Many hearty prayers follow the Good News that the efforts of those on board may result in a rich harvest of souls.

Edinburgh Castle.—During the month of August Messrs. Weaver Brothers have been holding services at the Edinburgh Castle, Dr. Barnardo's Mission Church, Limehouse, and a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit has attended their labours. It would seem as if the whole locality is being moved. Backsliders have been restored, scores of anxious souls have crowded the inquiry rooms and professed to find rest through faith in Christ, and God's people have been quickened and blessed. Messrs. Weaver have, at the urgent request of Dr. Barnardo, arranged to remain for September. S. E. B.

A Successful Village Tent Mission has been concluded in the village of Ratcliffe Culery, Leicestershire. The two evangelists were Mr. Robt. Ley Wood, of Cheltenham, and Mr. Colin Taylor, of Rickmansworth. The evangelists lived in the tent, doing their own cooking and making the platform their bedstead at night. House-to-house visiting was conducted methodically, and large quantities of illustrated tracts used. The villagers seated the tent themselves, each cottager and farmer contributing his or her quota of chairs, forms, or planks. The meetings were well attended each night, the Sunday evenings being crowded. There were many happy cases of conversion, and the whole village was evangelised. People walked for five miles to the services, all strangers being invited to stay to tea on Sunday afternoon. Where a tent can be procured this is a feasible and inexpensive method of combining rest and change with work for the Master.

Rev. F. C. Spurr's Missions in London are as follows:—Sept. 5-16, New Southgate; Sept. 19—Oct. 1, Catford; Oct. 6-15, Borough-road Chapel; Oct. 20-29, Forest Gate (men only); Nov. 3-13, West End Chapel, Hammersmith; Nov. 17-25, Denmark-place, Camberwell.

JERUSALEM.—A telegram from Constantinople states that the Ministry of Public Works has decided to reconstruct the aqueduct which supplied Jerusalem with water in the time of King Solomon. The work will entail an expenditure of about 2,000,000fr., and will necessitate the making of a tunnel 3870 yards long.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. Gipsy Smith held large meetings in Sydney, while on a brief visit to that city en route for America.

Mr. Gladstone will contribute to the September number of The Nineteenth Century an article on "True and False Conceptions of the Atonement."

Mr. William Lethaby, formerly of Kerak, Moab, has accepted the charge of the Bible Society's depôt at the Camp, Aden, and will be joined there shortly by Mrs. Lethaby.

Mrs. Mary Stuart, an American lady, who died in December, 1891, left nearly four million dollars to various objects, including many educational and charitable institutions.

Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost is announced to preach in the Broadway church, Norwich, Conn., on the last two Sundays of August, and in Dr. John Hall's church, New York, for the first three Sundays in September.

Mr. A. W. Prautch will be accompanied to England by Mr. S. C. Kanaga Ratnam, B.A., of Belgaum. Mr. Kanaga Ratnam gave evidence before the Opium Commission. He is a teacher in the L.M.S. High School at Belgaum, and founded the Young Men's Christian Association in that city.

Rev. Silas K. Hocking, of Southport, drew very large congregations at the City Temple last Sunday, to hear him preach. In the morning he uttered a strong protest against the pessimistic literature of the time, and extolled the dignity and glory of human life in its Christian aspects and relations.

Rev. H. J. Pope, Ex-President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, sailed for New York by the s.s. Lucania on Saturday last. Mr. Pope goes as representative of the English Wesleyan Conference to the general Conference of the Canadian Methodist Church, which meets at London, Ontario, September 9.

Mr. W. David Newton, who has been carrying on the work of the Protestant Deaconesses' Institute, Tottenham, during the ill-health of the late Dr. Laseron, has been elected to succeed him. Prayer is asked that God's blessing may crown the efforts put forward, both at home and abroad, by this institution to extend his kingdom.

Rev. T. B. Pandian, who has for some time been pleading in this country the cause of Indian pariahs, was met at Victoria Station by a number of friends on his leaving for India last week, and was presented with an address. Through his visit a society has been formed, entitled "The British Society for the Elevation of Pariahs;" the secretary is Rev. P. Reynolds, Albury, Ardilaun-road, Highbury, N.

Dr. L. W. Munhall, the American evangelist, has been paying a visit to Europe with his family. In the early part of July they reached this side of the Atlantic, and, after a short stay in England, visited in succession parts of Germany, Switzerland, Italy, France, and Belgium. Dr. Munhall spoke at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday. He returns to the States from Liverpool on Wednesday next.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, it is reported, has agreed to serve as stated supply for one year for the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Albany, N.Y. He is, however, to have leave of absence for several weeks during the year to meet any engagements for evangelistic services which have been already made. The engagement does not continue longer than for one year, when it is probable that Mr. Mills will return to his work as an evangelist.—N.Y. Independent.

Rev. W. Moore, D.D., who presided over the Missionary College at Puerto, Spain, attended the recent quarterly meeting of the Irish Assembly's Continental Mission Committee in Belfast. Dr. Moore, who is now in fairly good health, reported that their little college had equipped and sent forth ten men as evangelists; that at least twenty more could be put in the field at once did funds permit; and that in the ten schools under his superintendence there are from 800 to 1000 children who are taught in the Scriptures and the Shorter Catechism.

Mr. Spencer Walton and Mrs. Walton will say farewell to friends at a public meeting next Wednesday in Exeter Hall. On the following Saturday they sail for South Africa in the Grantully Castle. For a year they have been engaged in deputation work, visiting America, and not only stirring up interest in their work but enlisting fresh missionaries for the field. The South African General Mission has now sixty-eight at work, and during the next three months ten more, some from furlough and others as recruits, will be added to the number. Mr. Walton will be able at the public meeting to report signal blessing from God upon the work of the mission.

THE LIVERPOOL MAGISTRATES have decided not to grant licences to any publicans who do not agree to close the backdoors of their houses leading into occupied courts.

OBITUARY.

DR. JAMES STRONG, MADISON, N.J.

The death is announced of Dr. James Strong, widely known as one of the most eminent scholars of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who died on Aug. 7 after a short illness. He was a member of the Anglo-American Commission for the revision of the English Version of the Bible, and was connected with Dr. McClintock in the editorship of the Encyclopedia known as McClintock and Strong's. He had also recently completed the Exhaustive Concordance to the Bible. For many years he was Professor of Exegetical Theology in Drew Seminary at Madison, New Jersey. He was in his seventy-second year; and was a man of large conceptions and extensive acquaintance with men and things.

THE BISHOP OF COVENTRY.

Dr. Henry Bond Bowlby, Bishop Suffragan of Coventry, died on Monday night at Edinburgh. Dr. Bowlby, who was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral rather less than three years ago, had seen nearly fifty years of clerical work. His connection with the Diocese of Worcester has been a long one. It was in 1850 that he was appointed Vicar of Oldbury, which place he left in 1868 to become Vicar of Dartford, Kent. Here he laboured zealously for seven years, and in 1875 returned to Birmingham, as rector of St. Philip's. He became in succession surrogate and proctor of the diocese, holding the latter office until 1892. Formerly a Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford, he was the author of a series of lectures on "The Resurrection of the Flesh."

REV. W. HOPE DAVISON.

The death took place on Saturday, at Plymouth, from paralysis, of Rev. W. Hope Davison, who at one time occupied a prominent position as a Congregational minister. He was ordained in 1852, after leaving Cheshunt College, and for more than twenty years was minister of St. George's-road Church, Bolton, being also district secretary for the Lancashire Congregational Union. In 1873 he came south, and first filled a pastorate at Chatham, and subsequently one at Pentonville. In 1885 he retired to Newport, Isle of Wight, and a few years ago, through failing health, relinquished the pastoral office. He published some theological volumes, compiled a church hymnal, and edited several religious periodicals, including the Christian Age. His son, Rev. W. Hope Davison, M.A, of Edinburgh, is secretary of the Congregational Union of Scotland.

REV. DR. FLETT, PAISLEY.

This eminent minister died suddenly of apoplexy on Monday week, in Arran, where he was spending a few days with friends. He was in his sixty-fifth year, and apparently in good health, having recently returned from his holiday, which he always spent at his native place, Sanday, one of the Orkney Islands. In 1860, he received a call to the Storie-street Baptist Church, Paisley, to which congregation he ministered till his death. He was not what is called a popular preacher, but his pulpit prelections were practical, expository, and edifying. He gave up much of his time and strength to pastoral visitation and work among the young, his Bible class, which was attended by between two and three hundred young men and young women, getting much of his attention. He was a warm friend of evangelistic work, throwing himself with great energy into the special movements that were headed by Mr. Moody, and reaping much fruit. The church in Storie-street, where he laboured, was a small, unpretending building; but a few months ago his congregation removed to the magnificent Memorial Church in High-street, which was built by the family of the late Mr. Thomas Coats of Ferguslie.

MRS. JAMES PATON, TILLICOULTRY, N.B.

This devoted lady has passed away at the advanced age of eighty years. She and her greatly-esteemed husband, the late Mr. James Paton, of Lethangie, who died about eight or nine years ago, had been closely associated with the evangelistic movement for well nigh forty years. At their own expense they held annually Gospel meetings at the towns of Tillicoultry, Kinross, and Milnathort, which were addressed by well-known ministers and others—some of them from a distance—and at which many were blessed. Those summer and autumn gatherings were delightful, blessed times, and can never be forgotten by those who took part in them. Mrs. Paton was in a sense the soul of these gatherings, from morning to night attending to the comfort of the guests or taking steps to secure the success of the public meetings. Her genial kindly influence was felt in all things. She conducted large Bible-classes of factory girls, and other kinds of women's meetings in Tillicoultry, with decided success. Nor did Mr. and Mrs. Paton confine themselves to work under their immediate care; they took a deep interest in Christ's cause all over the world, and contributed frequently and liberally towards its advancement.

After her husband's death Mrs. Paton carried on the work so far as she was able. Bright, strong, and happy in her Christian faith, there was an air of goodness all around her. Many will think of her as their spiritual mother, or as their benefactor in temporal things. She rather sought to be useful than to be known. She was the last of three well-known persons who were powers for good in central Scotland—herself, her husband, and his brother, Mr. David Paton, who also did splendid work, spending a large fortune in the interests of religion and philanthropy. W. F. G.

REV. J. A. WYLIE, CHINA.

Deep regret has been felt in Scotland and elsewhere by the news of the death by violence of Rev. J. A. Wylie, labouring at Liao-Yang, China, in connection with the U.P. Missionary Society. The murder was committed in the main street of Liao-Yang in broad daylight. Mr. Wylie was walking towards his house when he saw a detachment of Chinese soldiers approaching. Seeing the men were in an excited condition he stood aside to let them pass. On catching sight of the missionary some of the soldiers began to jeer at him, while others abused him in filthy language. Mr. Wylie tried to move away, whereupon one of the soldiers struck him, and this was taken as a signal by the others, who threw themselves furiously upon the defenceless man. As he lay upon the ground Mr. Wylie was stabbed and hacked at with knives, beaten in a frightful manner with musket stocks and clubs, and kicked unmercifully about the head and body. The officers in charge of the soldiers did not attempt to restrain them, but simply marched them off when the missionary's life had been apparently battered out of him. Mr. Wylie was carried to his home, where he received tender and careful treatment. From the first little hope could be entertained of his recovery, and he died within a few hours of the attack.

Mr. Wylie was born at Hamilton, October 5, 1863. Early in life he expressed his determination to become a missionary, and from that resolution he never wavered. He offered his services to the United Presbyterian Church for mission work in China in February, 1887. To further qualify himself for missionary labours he attended medical classes. He sailed from Liverpool on January 21, 1888, and was first engaged at Shanghai along with the late Dr. Williamson; thence he proceeded to Newchwang, in Southern China, and subsequently to Liao-Yang, in the same district. His labours, which have been followed with interest by all who knew him, have been eminently successful, and his friends were looking forward to his return on furlough in the course of next year. The tidings of his untimely and tragical end have cast a gloom over the Hamilton district, and the profoundest sympathy is felt for his parents, Provost and Mrs. Wylie, in their great bereavement.

EMIGRATION FOR WOMEN.

Dear Sir,—The letter you were so good as to insert in the spring, telling of our need of outfits for young women, especially serge dresses for the voyage, brought forth some very useful parcels. As some of them were anonymous, may I thank the donors? The present deficiency in the stores I superintend is chiefly in young women's underclothing. I only hope some busy needles may be plied in our behalf, for our work increases greatly. Yesterday we saw off forty-nine young women, bound for Western Australia, from the South London Docks, all going of their own free will, several to join sisters already there. I never saw a more promising group of girls. They are so carefully selected that we may well hope that they will prove centres of Christian influence in the new world. We try to infuse into them the new missionary spirit.

At present the passage-money to Canada is unusually low (it will not last), only £2 including kit, and a party is being sent out September 15, under charge of a matron. Full information can be obtained at the office of the Women's Emigration Association, the Imperial Institute, Kensington. Parcels of clothing should be sent to me.—Yours faithfully, Adelaide Ross.

JOYS AND SORROWS.—As the rose-tree is composed of the sweetest flowers and the sharpest thorns; as the heavens are sometimes overcast, alternately tempestuous and serene; so is the life of man intermingled with hopes and fears, with joys and sorrows, with pleasures and with pains.—Burton.

"IF CHRIST CAME TO CHICAGO."—A shilling edition of W. T. Stead's book has been issued. The book has now gone into the 120th thousand. The only way in which the cheaper edition differs from that at half-a-crown is that it is in paper covers and lacks the coloured plan frontispiece—an omission which by many is regarded as an improvement rather than otherwise.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The Belfast Union numbers 900 members, showing an advance for the year of thirteen societies and 586 members.

Rev. S. T. Nicholson, Methodist New Connexion, has commenced a Christian Endeavour Society at Bury, with between forty and fifty members.

An Australian society makes a practice of sending to absent friends every week letters made up of brief notes that are handed to the social committee.

The Christian Pictorial for last week gave an account of Endeavour work at Bath, with a portrait of Rev. T. R. Dann, president of the Bath and District Union.

The society in the First Church at Sioux City, Io., arranged what they named an "absent members' meeting." The exercises included the reading of letters from members scattered throughout the country.

Christian Endeavour is taking hold upon the United Methodist Free churches, and societies are being formed in all parts of the denomination. Rev. E. Abbott, of Birmingham, has taken charge of the movement, and is pushing it with energy.

The society in the Tabernacle Church in Chicago carries on a "children's outing society." The twenty members that constitute the outing society are divided into ten couples, each of whom take a number of poor children with them for an afternoon's outing.

A West Virginia society has a committee whose duty it is to keep a record of the birthday of each member of the society. At each meeting the names are given of those whose birthdays will come during the next week, so that those members may be especially remembered in prayer by the others.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

At the Bradford Brewster Sessions a considerable decrease of drunkenness in the borough was reported, also a reduction of 290 licences in the course of the past twelve years.

A Glasgow correspondent writes:—"No one has any idea of the enormous consumption of antipyrin. Fashionable ladies and gentlemen get knocked up through too much eating and drinking, and then they call upon a druggist for a 'reviver.' The day was when the fashionable narcotic was chloral, but now the drug sold under the æsthetic name of antipyrin has taken its place."

A new edition of the Temperance Bible Commentary, by Dr. F. R. Lees and Dr. Dawson Burns, will shortly be issued. The fifth edition has long been out of print. The new edition will contain the Revised Version renderings of many important texts. As a considerable portion of the forthcoming edition is already bespoken, orders should be at once forwarded to the National Temperance Publishing Depôt, 33, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Dr. Cuyler, writing in The New York Evangelist on his continental tour, says: "The French are a gay, cheerful people, fond of out-door life and easily amused. Their consumption of wine is enormous; and the use of ardent spirits and of absinthe is on the increase. I found also in Geneva that Scotch and Irish whisky was exposed for sale in large quantities. One compensation for the poverty of the lower classes is that they cannot afford to buy the costlier imported alcoholic drinks."

A correspondent of The Manchester Guardian says:—"No one has invented a cyclists' drink that is really palatable to the majority of riders. (I am excluding all alcoholic liquors for obvious reasons.) Cold tea is indubitably nasty, though it may be thirst-quenching. Oatmeal water is insipid and raw-tasting. Lemonade and its various gassy relations are delusions in every way; soda-and-milk is disagreeable to many; temperance beers and porters taste like the washings of old casks; and so on ad infinitum. The perfect cycling drink is yet to come, and when it does appear its inventor will make a fortune."

Dr. Norman Kerr, speaking a few days ago at a meeting of the Society for the Study of Inebriety, said there could be little doubt that a substantial number of drunkards had been incited to their excess by having been given an alcoholic intoxicant as a remedy in illness. But this alcoholic medication was often unjustly ascribed to the doctor. In not a few cases the prescription was maternal, as in the case of young girls suffering from natural pain. When the prescriber did not happen to be the mother, she was often a relative. In confinement cases, the nurse was frequently the offender. He had again and again discovered the administration of liquor by the nurse surreptitiously and against his distinct orders. In intelligent medical circles the routine prescription of alcoholic drinks was rapidly going out of fashion.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A brewery at Hebburn, Durham, has been turned into a church for a new parish.

The Bishop of Adelaide, Bishop-designate of Bath and Wells, expects to reach England in five or six weeks' time.

Rev. Alfred Allen, head master of the Kentish Town High School for Boys, has accepted charge of the parish of St. Stephen's, Spitalfields.

Rev. F. Wallis, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, has been nominated to the Bishopric of Wellington, New Zealand.

Rev. Dr. Wright has been the means of greatly increasing the attendance at St. John's, Liverpool, which, prior to his settlement, was pointed to as one of the empty Corporation churches.

St. Peter's Church, Eaton-square, is to be closed for some weeks, while an installation of the electric light takes place. Another improvement is also to be made during the autumn in the form of a side chapel for the daily service.

A new hymnal is being prepared by a committee of the four Welsh dioceses, under the direction of the Bishop of Bangor. It will contain not less than 600 hymns with tunes, a special section of about 150 being devoted to Sunday-schools, and a number of carols and metrical litanies.

The Vicar of Islington has appointed Rev. J. A. Faithful, vicar of Holy Trinity, Scarborough, to the vicarage of the new district of St. Mary Magdalene (formerly the Chapel of Ease), Islington. The appointment will, the Record says, give great satisfaction to Evangelical men, and will considerably strengthen the Church in North London.

At a Church Pastoral Aid Society meeting at Swansea, the Archdeacon of Llandaff spoke of whole districts in Wales, containing many thousands of the working classes, where, half a century ago, for fifteen or twenty miles at a stretch, there was not even a mission in connection with the Episcopal Church. "Was it strange," he asked, "that under such circumstances the working classes should have become alienated?"

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. T. Forsyth, M.A., who is staying in Scotland, is improving in health. He will not be able to begin his ministry at Cambridge before September 16.

Mr. W. G. Morris, of Cheshunt College, received recognition as a missionary at a meeting held in Tabernacle Chapel, Llanelly. He is designated for work in China.

Two children's demonstrations on behalf of the missionary ship and the L.M.S. centenary have been held on Lowestoft beach, Revs. S. B. Driver and W. J. Cole presiding. Rev. A. E. Claxton delivered an address at each meeting. A local committee has been formed.

The "Hundredth Report" of the London Missionary Society has made its appearance. The staff is composed of 192 English missionaries, sixty-eight female missionaries and 1476 native ministers. There are 94,192 church members, and 125,984 children in the mission schools.

A promising career has been cut short by the death, at the age of thirty, of Miss Annie Wardlaw Jagannadham, L.R.C.P.E., house-surgeon at the Cama Hospital, Bombay, and daughter of a L.M.S. native pastor at Vizagapatam. Miss Jagannadham was the first native of India to enter the Women's Medical School at Edinburgh.

Rev. Andrew Mearns has issued a pamphlet showing what has been done and is being done in London in response to the "Bitter Cry" which he sent forth ten years ago. In Mr. E. Wilson Gates he has an admirable co-worker, in whom he has every confidence, and by whom most genuine work is being accomplished among the outcasts of London. This work knows nothing of denominationalism, while those associated with it exercise the greatest caution in dealing with the cases that come before them. Proof of this is seen at once from the fact that of all those who have been helped to emigrate—and they include some hundreds—not a single unsatisfactory case has so far been reported.

Calls.—Rev. David Aitken, of Glasgow Theological Hall, to the E. U. Church, at Muirkirk; Rev. James Neil, of Forres, to Salford.

BAPTIST.

Rev. D. P. M'Pherson, B.D., will enter upon his new pastorate at Exeter next month.

Mr. Pinnock, a missionary in the Yoruba country, West Africa, in connection with the Southern Baptist Convention, U.S.A., has departed for Lagos, after several months' furlough in this country.

A crèche has been founded in connection with Portslade Church (Rev. H. J. Dyer), where children up to four years of age are taken care of on Sunday evenings, while their parents attend Divine service.

The church at Peebles, founded five years ago, has encountered not a few difficulties, but is steadily increasing in usefulness. The meetings have been held in the Lower Temperance Hall, and it is now proposed to erect a chapel which shall provide better accommodation.

Rev. F. Harmon, Mrs. Harmon, and family have sailed from Southampton by the s.s. Darmstadt, North German Lloyd line, for China. During his stay in this country, Mr. Harmon has visited a large number of churches, and many friends will follow his return to his work in Shantung with much interest. Miss Tetley, daughter of Rev. J. P. Tetley, of Taunton, going out to marry Rev. E. B. Burt, M.A., one of the China missionaries, was also of the party.

Calls.—Mr. Archibald Kerr, of Edinburgh, to Irvine; Rev. J. H. Brooksbank, of Bury, to Workington.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan is taking a much-needed rest at Shanklin, and has already derived great benefit from the change. He will return to his pulpit on September 9.

"Christianity and Modern Thought" will be one of the subjects discussed at an autumn conference of the four Northern Presbyteries, to be held at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. George Kilgour Green, M.A., has been ordained to the ministry in Kendal. As it is thirty-five years since a Presbyterian ordination took place in the town, much interest was manifested in the proceedings.

Dr. Lorimer, who has been preaching at Marylebone, recently mentioned that Dr. Pentecost was baptized by him, with about forty others, in the River Ohio. The day was one of the very coldest, and the ice had to be broken for the ceremony.

At a meeting of the managing committee of the Forward Movement of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, held at Cardiff, a communication was received from the London Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church of England, asking for the services of Rev. John Pugh, to conduct evangelistic meetings in London, and to visit the English churches and speak upon the aggressive work carried on in Wales. It was decided that permission be given to Mr. Pugh to visit London in October for a fortnight. A similar request came from Colwyn Bay, which was granted.

METHODIST.

The Fernley lecturer for 1896 will be Rev. T. G. Selby.

Mr. Thomas Protheroe, of the Central China Methodist Lay Mission, is at present in this country on vacation.

Ninety-nine per cent. of the Methodist ministers in Ireland are teetotallers, and not a man among them is a smoker.

Rev. Dr. Townsend, of Birmingham, has been invited to the superintendency of the Sunderland Circuit (Methodist New Connexion) for next year.

At Argyle-street, Hull, the foundations have been laid of a new Wesleyan chapel to seat 600. The building, which will be in the style of the Renaissance, is estimated to cost £3300.

Mr. William Beckworth, of Leeds, has offered to give £1000 to the funds of the Cardigan-road Primitive Methodist Chapel in that town, on condition that the whole of the debt is paid off.

A site has been acquired from the Duke of Portland for the erection of a new Primitive Methodist chapel at Hucknall Torkard. The present inadequate buildings, which were erected in 1850, are to be sold.

News has been received from China of the sudden death of Rev. John Walley. Mr. Walley went to China eleven years ago as a missionary of the Methodist New Connexion, and while there transferred his services to the American Episcopal Church.

On Sunday in several hundred chapels connected with the Wesleyan Methodist denomination farewell discourses were delivered by circuit ministers who, in accordance with the decisions of the recent conference at Birmingham, will this week remove to new spheres of labour. With the first week of September the new Connexional year of ministerial service begins.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Gigantic meetings are being held on the Kimberley Diamond Fields; great things are being done.

The General's farewell meeting before his departure for the United States is fixed for Monday, September 10.

The address of the new Piccadilly outpost in connection with Mrs. Bramwell Booth's Rescue Work is 57, Warwick-street, Regent-street, W.

A number of prisoners in the jail at Rockland, U.S.A., have professed conversion through the instrumentality of the Salvation Army, and the jailer testifies to the improvement in their lives.

A system of police-court visitation has been launched in connection with the City Colony institutions. All the officers in charge of these have attended the various courts in their districts for the past two weeks, and have been well received.

At the Mansion House and Guildhall the magistrates have sanctioned the Social Wing putting up a notice in court to the effect that it receives prisoners on discharge and provides them with board and lodging in return for work done, also that it renders them assistance in obtaining work, and helps them in every way to retrieve their characters and former positions. Except in special cases, the men so befriended pass through the ex-prisoners' Home at King's Cross.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Preston, Mr. E. Dean, J.P., a prominent and valued member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.—At Pickering, Mr. Joseph Tyas, for forty-six years a Wesleyan class leader, and for forty years Sunday-school superintendent.—At Fairlie, Rev. George Greig, of the E.U. Church, one of the oldest ministers in Scotland.—At Shincliffe, Durham, Mr. John George Russell, well known in commercial circles, and highly respected as an active Methodist.—At Colwyn Bay, Mrs. W. Hughes, the beloved wife of the director of the Congo Training Institute.—At East Mansfield, Mass., U.S.A., on July 27, Mrs. Betsey Davis, aged 101, for half a century member of the Mansfield Baptist Church, and even earlier connected with a church at Foxboro.—At Oxford, Rev. John Hill, pastor of Deddington Congregational Church.—At Elloughton, Mr. Alexander Meek, deacon of the Congregational Church, aged 52.—At Northwich, Mr. W. Alcock, for fifty years a member of the U.M.F.C.—At Tunbridge Wells, Mr. E. C. Nye, deacon of the Congregational Church, and superintendent of the Sunday-school.—At Tenbury, Pastor James Evans, of the Baptist Church, for many years pastor of Rock-lane Mission Chapel, Ludlow, and a faithful witness for the Lord.—At Workington, Rev. Henry Curwen, for fifty-seven years rector of the parish, aged 82.—At Moore Hall, Warrington, Rev. George Heron, Hon. Canon of Chester, and formerly Perpetual Curate of Carrington, Cheshire, probably the oldest clergyman in the county.

THE LATE MR. J. M. SCROGGIE.

Sir,—Many of your readers have had the privilege of the co-operation in Christian work of Mr. John M. Scroggie. Many more have heard the Gospel preached by him, and have themselves received true help or rejoiced over dear ones won to the Lord through him.

That true and most devoted evangelist has gone to his rest and reward, literally worn out in the Master's service. After a time of specially trying yet blessed work in Chicago, followed by an attack of influenza, he persevered in his labours until health completely gave way, and he most truly gave his last drop of blood in his Master's service, dying of anæmia on August 1.

On the last visit I paid him I found the only anxiety on his mind was for his beloved wife and three youngest children. He had done what he could to provide for them, yet felt it was insufficient.

I now venture to lay before the readers of your widely-circulated paper this last desire of the servant of God. He cast this burden on the Lord, and it rests with us to have the privilege of helping her who gave up so much in sending forth her beloved husband while she bore the burden of home cares and the upbringing of the family. I am confident many will deem it a privilege to send thank-offerings in the shape of practical sympathy.—I am,

Meriown House, N.B. Polwarth.

Contributions will be received by Mr. C. Dodds, Commercial Bank, Haddington.

THE BLACKBURN MAGISTRATES last year were hard on the licences, and this year they have followed the same policy. Four applications for new licences were refused, two beerhouses in low parts of the town were deprived of their licences, and five licences were voluntarily surrendered, so that the number of licensed houses has been reduced by thirty-three in two years.

Notes and Comments.

We have pleasure in announcing that small parcels of back numbers of The Christian can be obtained gratuitously, on application to our publishers, for careful and judicious distribution. Many Christian workers, in the towns and villages of our country, will, we feel sure, be glad to co-operate with us in making still wider our circle of readers.

Mrs. Annie Besant has published her autobiography, which has already passed into a second edition. (Fisher Unwin. 6s.) It is, in the words of Mr. Gladstone,

"a spiritual itinerary, and shows with how much at least of intellectual ease, and with what unquestioning assumptions of being right, vast spaces of mental travelling may be performed." "An ordinary mind would suppose that modesty was the one lesson which she could not have failed to learn from her extraordinary permutations"; of this, however, there is not a trace. "In all her different phases of thought, that place in the mind where the sense of sin should be, appears to have remained, all through the shifting scenes of her mental history, an absolute blank."

Nevertheless, we cannot read this autobiography without the prayer and hope that she may come out of the darkness of Theosophy, as she has come out of the darkness of Atheism (if, indeed, there is any substantial difference between these two regions of darkness), into "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." She is at least an intense and earnest thinker, and He who says that a living dog is better than a dead lion, and who would that we were cold or hot rather than lukewarm, may find something in such a soul which He does not find in those who, professing to be Christians, have never had an hour's agonising exercise of conscience concerning truths which they claim to hold.

Mr. Gladstone has an article in The Nineteenth Century on "True and False Conceptions of the Atonement," in reply to one special difficulty in Mrs. Besant's mind, which Mr. Gladstone meets exhaustively. It is a timely and valuable manifesto, the propositions of which, says the writer, "are meant to be, and I hope may be, conformable to the established doctrine of Scripture and the Church at large." We think that in the main they answer this description, and we hope they may convince Mrs. Besant that her objection "is naught."

We would draw the attention of our readers to two communications in this issue respecting the open-air disturbances in the south and west of Ireland. The writer of "The Outlook in Ireland" (p. 15), and the treasurer of the Open-air Mission for Ireland (p. 17), while at one as to the outrageous behaviour of the mob, differ as to the probable outcome of the street-preaching campaign. The former finds an ally in the editor of The Christian Irishman, who says in his current issue:—

Time will tell whether this is the best way of going about Christian work in a country like Ireland. That some individuals have been influenced for good by these services, we are quite prepared to believe; but for every one who has been influenced favourably, thousands or tens of thousands have been bitterly and perhaps permanently alienated.

Dr. Alex. Robertson, of Venice, says, in an article published in Evangelical Christendom, that the Church of Rome has now few friends in the land of Italy.

Twenty years of Italian unity and independence under a constitutional government, marked by a condition of material, intellectual, and moral progress unknown under the Papal sway, has brought home to the mind of the Italians the fact that the worst enemy of their bodies, of their minds, and of their spirit, with which they have to contend, is the Church of Rome.

Dr. Robertson thinks that the people have not ceased to be religious, but are now only beginning to be religious; they have not ceased to be Catholic, but only to be Papists. As a rule, all men of culture, and position, and intelligence, are outside the pale of Rome. Among the few who remain with her there is discontent on account of the tyranny of the Jesuits. Very few young Italians join the Roman clergy; and "of those who do enter their ranks, only a very few know more than how to say their offices." Now, as ever, Rome looks best at a distance.

The balance between teaching and worship in our Churches is not easy to maintain. The Roman Catholic system degenerated into nothing better than a pagan temple, by discouraging teaching on the one hand, and by fostering what she called worship on the other hand. The Reformation was the reinstatement of teaching from the Bible. That teaching may, in some cases, have been unduly exalted, we are willing to admit; it has sometimes become an arid dealing with words and terms, just as worship has sometimes declined to a superstition. This is a result on either hand which can be obviated by making teaching the ground and inspiration of worship, and worship the quickening spirit and elevating power of teaching. To go and hear such and such a preacher is not the object which should draw a congregation to the house of God, but neither should they come for an ornate service, mostly rendered by a paid choir and organist, and then as soon as the sermon is to be preached walk away. This is to turn service and worship into amusement.

The Bible Education Council for the London School Board Election has issued a manifesto signed by several influential members of all Evangelical Churches, which pleads for the retention of the compromise of 1871 on the subject of Bible instruction. The document appears to us to be fair in tone, well reasoned, and a safe guide for all electors to follow who wish our Board School children on the one hand to be saved from the influence of a High Church and Romanist clique, and on the other to be taught in a natural way the truths of Scripture. We quote a few sentences:—

The great peril is that if one section persist in their attempt to impose definitions on the teachers, this will lead to a political revulsion which would deprive the children of Bible teaching altogether. If only there be general agreement to act together on the common basis of the Bible, Christian teaching will be assured in the London Board Schools, and the Board cannot be captured for any denomination whatever... We hold that the words of our Divine Lord and his Prophets and Apostles contain all things necessary for a full belief. In our own churches and Sunday-schools we can add what definitions we please. But we maintain that under the guidance of the Holy Spirit the words of Scripture are able to make wise unto salvation. It is better to use the actual words and phrases of the Bible than definitions which from the circumstances and conditions of the London School Board must necessarily be imperfect and unsatisfactory.

Mrs. Frederic Harrison discusses in The Nineteenth Century the question of whether women should smoke, and, for the following reasons, decides that they should not:—

Smoking, as a mere self-indulgence, is opposed to the higher morality. Who can suppose nicotine to be a useful preparation for the young life to be launched into the world? And for the nursing mother with a cigarette, what can we say? The reserve force of the race must be stored up by women, and smoking uses up that force. Woman is bound to so many artificial wants already that she ought not to cultivate another.

We agree with every one of these reasons, but we hold that they apply to men quite as much as to women. There is no dual standard of morality, a lower for men and a higher for women. Fathers impart physical conditions and qualities to their offspring as well as mothers, and are so far responsible for their children's health and strength. Men have too many artificial wants, and would do well to curtail them.

Certain kinds of the modern novel come in for severe condemnation from very different quarters. Rev. Silas K. Hocking, himself a voluminous writer of fiction, spoke in strong terms against the pessimism of such books as Olive Schreiner's in a sermon he preached in the City Temple. Captain Jack Crawford, "the poet scout" from the far West, has given a piece of testimony as to the evils of some novels of adventure, which deserves careful attention from parents and guardians of youth. To a newspaper interviewer, who asked for "something exciting," he replied:—

I have never figured as a hero of fiction, and have refused to allow my name to be associated with that kind of literature which has ruined thousands of boys in the States, causing them to run away from home, sometimes robbing their parents, and becoming worthless outcasts or desperadoes on the frontier.

This statement from one who is evidently not over particular on some points on which many Christians feel deeply, but who feels deeply himself on this point, should have great weight.

Then, again, Mrs. L. T. Meade has, to a representative of The Sunday Magazine, expressed herself strongly against the realistic novel, which she does not think gives true pictures of life. Realistic novelists, she thinks, produce work that is as ill-balanced as it is harmful.

Those who write about the miseries of life as if life were a misery show their own weakness of character. They have not been strong enough to master circumstances. Happiness in this world is the prize of conquest; it is the crown of life, and such writers tell plainly that they at least have not won it. Unfortunately they give the idea that it is not to be won. In this result there is no difference between the illiterate grumblings of a pessimistic charwoman and the cultivated effusions of a pessimistic author.

The Arbitrator says that Mr. Cremer, M.P., has, by personal canvass, obtained the signatures of no less than three hundred and twenty-five members of the House of Commons, of all parties, to the memorial in favour of a Treaty of Arbitration with America. This appears to be the most numerously-signed memorial to which members of Parliament have given their support. But The Arbitrator proceeds:—

If we were at liberty to divulge the information in our possession, and the source from which we have obtained it, every friend of peace on both sides of the Atlantic would have cause to "rejoice with exceeding great joy." But for the present secresy and silence are imposed upon us. We can, therefore, only say, "Courage, the day of victory is at hand."

We sincerely trust that this exultant hope may meet with no disappointment. There can be no doubt that firm, peaceful relations between the two countries cannot fail to have a steadying influence on the whole world.

Professor Jebb, in a thoughtful address delivered to the journalists who visited Cambridge, said that while a newspaper was a commercial concern, and must be conducted on principles commercially sound, which certainly included a regard for the tastes of its readers, it should be observed that experience showed that newspapers could improve the tastes of their readers by simply giving them better things. Judged by this standard, the daily press might surely begin by reducing the quantity of sporting news, and filling up the space with better material. It is painfully significant of present taste that papers which profess to be for "the people" make such conspicuous use of racing and sporting news of all kinds. We are as pained by the countenance the people give to these sheets as by the arrangements the contributors of the papers make to produce this sort of copy. These papers are educating the people in gambling.

The moral world moves much by reaction. In Germany, where militarism has thrown up an extreme Socialism, a miners' congress has been held for establishing a Christian miners' organisation for the Dortmund mining district. By a unanimous vote it was decided to establish a labour organisation of the Christian miners of the Lower Rhine and Westphalian coalfields. It was resolved that every member should sign a declaration condemning the aims of the Social Democrats, that no part should be taken in the polemics of religious or political bodies; and that it should be the object of the organisation to bring about the payment of a fair wage, corresponding to the value of the labour done and to the hardship inseparable from a miner's calling. This may seem a somewhat self-contradictory programme from an English point of view, but the significance of the affirmation of a Christian foundation for the union of these toilers can hardly be over estimated.

Mr. Otto E. Ehlers, a German traveller, who has recently spent a month in the Andaman Islands, gives an encouraging account of the condition of the convicts there. He admits that he had a very different idea of a criminal colony from the one he found realised among these convicts from India. "I thought of the rattle of chains, of poorly-fed prisoners carefully guarded by soldiers with bayonets, and warders with the cat-o'-nine tails; and, instead, I found these prisoners happy-looking, clean, enjoying perfect liberty, employed in the offices as clerks or store-keepers, or in the houses of the Europeans as cooks, gardeners, night watchmen, and, indeed, following all sorts of occupations." This high state of advantage has to be earned by good conduct. Escape from the islands is almost impossible. In 1891 there were 12,197 convicts, of whom 8075 were murderers, forty-four poison-mixers, 1841 robbers, 502 burglars, and the rest evil-doers of many varieties. Mr. Ehlers says that in this settlement something has been done with English money and energy which can allow itself to be seen.

The British and Foreign Bible Society says that Spain afforded one of its most promising and striking fields of labour last year. For more than twenty years the quiet and inconspicuous work of the colporteurs has been carried on, but now another kind of work is also required. Mr. Jameson says:—

The work of the colporteurs has been largely to prepare for yet higher work, and for a higher class of workers. But this class has now been furnished, and we already begin to see the results—meetings attended by hundreds of people, educated men being brought into contact with educated evangelical thought, and fresh interest in the Scriptures awakened in many places. To crown all, in Madrid—the very centre of the religious and political and literary life of the country—there has been opened a new Bible house which men of education and importance are able to visit, and where they admire the linguistic achievements of the Society and praise its generosity. The circumstances of the time favour greatly this new departure. There is a most manifest movement towards something better and higher; several popular writers have been emphasising the need of a purer morality and a more spiritual religion; they appear unconsciously to be stretching out their hands towards the Society, and asking to be led further on. A rising politician has given strong expression to the view that a most unmistakable reaction is manifesting itself in a religious sense. Twenty-five years ago the leaders of thought declared that the people could do without religion, but experience has shown that is an impossibility. The most advanced thinkers and eager politicians are pointing to the countries where the Divine Book has proved itself the power of God unto salvation.

The co-working of the Word of God, and of the sense of the ineffectiveness of human agencies to raise men, may soon produce, even in Spain, a mighty change for good. "The Anarchist Peril," a new book which has been translated into English, comes opportunely. The information it contains will surprise many. Thus the organisation of Anarchism is really no organisation at all:—

It is contrary to the rules to pass resolutions of any kind. To do so would be to interfere with that absolute liberty of action which is the corner-stone of the Anarchist creed. No one binds himself in any way, but is free under all circumstances to do what he thinks fit. This absence of any guiding, not to say commanding, influence, which characterises the constitution of the group, is an essential feature of the organisation of the party as a whole. The party is without leaders as it is without rank and file.

One of the correspondents who has taken part in a discussion in The Daily News on "Humanity in the Slaughter House," suggests that if the English system of slaughter is to be maintained, there ought to be some special qualification made necessary. He says:—

I understand that horse slaughterers are licensed. Why should not the same regulation apply to butchers? The Jewish method of slaughter I have myself seen performed. The internal and external carotids on both sides are cut simultaneously, and the total pain inflicted is the primary incision of the skin, insensibility follows in a few seconds, almost before one has had time to realise that the cut has been given. That Jewish or Kosher meat is superior in gastronomic virtues is a fact that only requires a trial to convince the most prejudiced person. I speak as one totally unconnected with the Jewish race and religion.

The humanitarianism of the Mosaic law, so remarkable when the date of its promulgation is remembered, and all the good effects which flow from the observance of it, have not yet received the recognition which they deserve. Here is a case in point.

Dr. Denney has some remarks in his commentary on the Second Epistle to the Corinthians on the eternal weight of glory, which are very appropriate to the times in which we live, and the influences which surround us. He says:—

Distrust of the supernatural, insistance on the present and the practical, and the pride of a self-styled common sense, have done much to rob modern Christianity of this vast horizon, to blind it to this heavenly vision. But wherever the life of Jesus is being manifested in mortal flesh—wherever in his service and for his sake men and women die daily, wearing out nature, but with spirit ceaselessly renewed—there the unseen becomes real again. Such people know that what they do is not for one dead but for One who lives; they know that the daily inspirations they receive, the hopes, the deliverances, are wrought in them, not by themselves, but by One who has all power in heaven and on earth....A worldly and selfish career does not work out an exceeding and eternal weight of glory, and therefore to the worldly and selfish man heaven is for ever an unpractical, incredible thing.

As by personal renewal, through offering our body, soul, and spirit as a sacrifice to God, we come to prove that his will is holy, and just and good, so by living the Divine life in the flesh we attain to a knowledge of the certainty of the heavenly life.

PREACHING TO SWISS TOURISTS.

By DR. NEWMAN HALL.

Two thousand feet above Zermatt, just within the precincts of a grand old forest of rugged stone-pines, is a capacious hotel crowded with some two hundred visitors. Many of these come year by year, and some remain several weeks. In front, rising direct from the valley of Zermatt and the great glaciers of Mount Rosa, rises the majestic form of the Matterhorn. Other giants of the Alps lift up their stern precipices and glittering glaciers around. Close to the hotel is the picturesque little English church. It was built chiefly by the exertions of Dean Lefroy, of Norwich. He seems to know the ice-world around as well as any native guide, and he is most kind in rendering aid in conducting visitors across glacier seas and over mountain peaks. But especially is his guidance welcomed on Sunday. His reading of the lessons makes the Bible to many hearers a new book, so vividly are its pictures presented to the mind by appropriate emphasis and devout feeling. His preaching sustains the influence of his reading. Extemporaneous in delivery, the sermon is full of well-thought-out argument and illustration.

One of the discourses I heard was on the fundamental doctrine of Atonement, from the words, "O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come." Prayer was natural, necessary, and reasonable, as addressed to an actually existing personal God. But then arises an obstacle in consciousness of sin. "Iniquities prevail against me." Guilt separates from God, makes us afraid to approach, and renders us unwilling and unfit. We say with Peter, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man." How can the difficulty be removed? Not by ourselves—only by God. "As for our transgressions thou shalt purge them away." How? In the person of his Son He honours the law of righteousness, shows his condemnation of sin, reveals his love for the sinner, and pardons all who repent and trust in Jesus in such a way that justice and mercy are alike revealed. So that there is no hindrance to the return of his prodigal children, who are now invited to come with boldness to the throne of grace that they may obtain mercy.

The Dean was evidently distressed in administering a faithful rebuke in reference to the offertory. The congregation entirely consists of visitors at the one hotel, which is of high order, and frequented by people in good circumstances. The church was built and is maintained entirely for them. A special appeal had been made for the Colonial and Continental Society, which maintains this and other chaplaincies all over Europe and the Colonies. The Dean said with sorrowful emphasis, that the majority of the coins in the offertory the preceding Sunday were five-cent pieces, each worth two farthings. This is too much the case in places of holiday resort. Some who are daily spending many shillings in recreation consider pence a sufficient contribution to Christian ordinances.

The following Sunday I had the privilege of listening to two equally faithful Evangelical sermons at Zermatt, from Rev. Foster Pegg, of St. Leonards. The Gospel could not be preached with greater force and fidelity.

REV. HENRY MONTGOMERY, of Belfast, on the recommendation of his Presbytery, has declined the call to Trinity Free Church, Glasgow.

An Old-World Story, With a Present-day Application.

By Rev. W. Crosbie, M.A., LL.B., Nottingham.

"Ye have compassed this mountain long enough; turn you northward" (Deuteronomy ii. 3).

At a very important juncture the summons came to Moses. For well-nigh forty years Israel had been in the wilderness, bearing the penalty of their unbelief, and learning lessons it was needful for them to know. The appointed period of their wanderings was now drawing to a close. The time was at hand for them to enter "the land of promise." The Divine purpose of their long detention in the wilderness was at length fulfilled.

For many and many a day their encampments had been at the base of Mount Seir. When they moved their tents it was only to take up a position in some neighbourhood adjacent to the mountain. There was no real progress. There was no break, or very little, in the monotony. The mountain was always there. It was a weary life through its very sameness, yet having its meanings and its salutary uses for Israel.

But at last the march was "Forward." The tents were struck, to be pitched no more under the shadow of Mount Seir. What seemed aimless wanderings had now direction and goal and end. The fiery cloudy pillar had risen, and was moving straight towards the land of Canaan. The Divine summons, addressed to Moses, passed as a glad and inspiring watchword through all the host: "Ye have compassed this mountain long enough; turn you northward."

A similar summons God is addressing to his Church to-day: Advance: go up, and claim, and conquer, and possess the land of promise—the splendid covenanted inheritance.

There is striking analogy between the position of the Church and that of the people of Israel. The Church, it may with truth be said, is in the wilderness, and has been for long, going round and round, as the Israelites did, and coming back pretty much to the same point; learning important lessons, no doubt, and undergoing a process of humbling and discipline and preparation; but taking no marked and decided steps in advance; accomplishing the circuit of the mountain—never getting beyond the mountain really—making no clear and measurable approaches towards the grand conquests, and enfranchisements, and enlargements, and privileges, and life of Canaan.

But there are signs that the wilderness-phase of the Church's history is terminating. In the camp there are stirrings and girdings as if for some new journey, and there are whisperings of the words: "Arise, and depart"—"Ye have compassed this mountain long enough; turn you northward." And there are tokens in the Heavens. The pillar of cloud and of fire has moved, and is set in a distinctly forward direction. Mount Seir, grown so familiar to the eyes of the Church, and all the surrounding wastes, will, in a little while, be left behind; and the hosts of God, in their march, will come to vine-clad hills, and fertile vales, and far-stretching verdant plains; and instead of the "manna" there will be the "corn of the land," and instead of the "tabernacle" the "temple" of spiritual truth.

But the glorious advancement will be the result of new manifestations of God—new and mightier effusions of his Spirit. And there are those who are supplying the conditions; and the number will increase. It is increasing rapidly. There is a growing and deepening sense of the need of God's Holy Spirit, and the feeling will extend; and presently we shall have a comprehensive compact and covenant among God's people, irrespective altogether of ecclesiastical name and relationship, a vast catholic Prayer Union, whose one simple object will be to wait upon God until He equips and qualifies us for our world-mission and testimony, filling us with the fulness of his life and power.

The times that are passing over us are certainly very remarkable. They are in a special sense transitionary. We seem somehow on the eve of new births and new epochs. Other things are closing and coming to an end besides this nineteenth century. Is the dispensation nearing its fulfilment? Turn which way we will, we see changes, waxings old and vanishings-away, and strange prognostics, and wide and ever-widening opportunities; and we hear from every quarter voices uttering with significant emphasis the ancient charge: "Ye have compassed this mountain long enough; turn you northward!" Oh, that there were a deep and a general awakening in the churches, and a clearer discernment of "the signs of the times," and a rising to the occasion in a united and urgent coming to God for the needed preparation for the last advance, and the universal evangelisation. Denominational gatherings and congresses spend time in all kinds of discussions—elaborate trifling, alas! a good deal of it, having little useful result—a sort of "fiddling," if one may say so, "while Rome is burning." The supreme duty is turning from everything to God, and waiting upon Him until there is renewal of Pentecost in the churches. The organised churches and denominations and missionary societies are on their trial, and unless spiritual revival comes to them they will be superseded, left high and dry, and God will accomplish his work of salvation by other and better agencies.

DR. PARROTT IN CHINA.

In a letter dated Lao Ho Kow, June 8, Dr. A. G. Parrott writes:—

"It is now a matter of history that we have at last found and purchased a suitable house outside one of the east gates of the city. We pulled down part on the north side and have put up a small hall to seat 250 to 300 people. This we shall use as a waiting-room for the patients, where they will hear the Gospel. Next door to the hall is a room to be used as consulting room, etc.; there is also a smaller hall for women's work, with a large yard behind it. These buildings are for out-patients, or dispensary and preaching work.

"Another quarter of the compound is for in-patients, and the remainder is our own house and garden, with separate entrance. I do not see how we can take in women patients until we can build some rooms at one side of our present premises. If funds were forthcoming I would start the workmen upon this as soon as they finish their present work. Yesterday I was called to see a poor woman suffering with cancer of the breast; an operation might save her; a month's careful nursing would be necessary. Another case is that of a girl with knee-joint disease needing operation and daily attention. Cases are frequently turned away, simply because we have no accommodation."

Writing on June 12, Mrs. Parrott says:—"On Sunday last we opened our Women's Hall to the public, and in the afternoon had our first evangelistic service. About forty women and children and forty men and boys came. They had only half-an-hour's notice, and the men were busy in the harvest fields ploughing them up for the second crop. The doctor spoke, telling them we had come to try to do them good. One boy, Kiven-Shan, preached very nicely indeed. His life during the past few months has been a bright testimony, and we thank God for him."

Degraded Literature.

Repeatedly during months past our attention has been drawn, by personal observation as well as by communications from others, to the corruption of our literature. A definite stage in its descent was reached when the Institute of Journalists fêted M. Zola, for the issue of translations of whose books a publisher had previously been imprisoned. Yet a prominent picture in the Summer Number of one of our "high-class" illustrated papers represents, over the title of "Forbidden Fruit," a bright young English girl discovered in the library surreptitiously reading "Zola."

The following is a communication we have recently received:—

Sir,—I do not write this in reference to Mr. Samuel Smith's criticism of Prof. Drummond's "Ascent of Man," but to call attention to his remark on page 12, August 23, on the immense increase of bestial and filthy literature, with obscene and lewd illustrations, which are flooding our country every week. Mr. Smith justly says, "As the reading of a nation deteriorates, so do its morals," etc. This being so, I think it is high time the Christian Press, the Church, and Christian men generally (especially those in Parliament), united to stop the issue of such pernicious publications. It is not necessary to name them; a glance at most of our bookstalls and newsvendors' counters will prove, without doubt or controversy, what ought to be suppressed. In addition to the decidedly lewd and immoral, must be mentioned the gambling and betting news, all of which are making for the moral destruction of our youth; and it is in their name, and for their sakes, that I plead for steps to be taken to suppress the issues of what is fraught with such frightful danger.

—Yours, etc., C. O. Unwin.

The transference to the railway stall of a large proportion of the bookselling trade is an important feature of the new era which set in with travelling by steam. It was supposed that books requiring thought could not be read on a railway journey, and the tone of railway literature has steadily declined. The supply of light, then questionable, then defiling literature has created a demand, and by the law of reaction demand has created supply.

A correspondent deeply interested in the circulation of pure literature writes:—

The following are a few instances of my experiences. One day an elderly lady and two younger ones entered the same carriage as myself. One of the latter had a novelette in her hand, which she looked at for a few moments, then laid down. "What is that?" asked the other. "I don't know; I got it at the bookstall as I wanted something to read; but I don't like it." "Let me see it," said her companion, and she was soon absorbed in it, but her guilty look even while reading it showed her feelings, and when after awhile she raised her eyes and they met mine, a blush of shame overspread her face. Evidently she was just beginning to imbibe the poison.

While waiting for a train at a large station in the West, I sauntered up to the bookstall, where was displayed a most indecent picture, which I need not describe. I told the stall-keeper it was a downright shame to have such a picture exposed there. He said it was the supplement to one of the sixpenny weeklies, and was a copy of an Academy picture. Of course, those who think that "art" sanctions impurity would not agree with me, but some Academy pictures are very shameful. After a little talk the attendant acknowledged that these things did much harm, but said all the magazines did the same; it was business, and that week he had sold more than double the number of the paper in consequence of this picture.

At a northern railway-station the bookstall-keeper was telling me what magazines he principally sold, and said that the worse they were the better they sold, and he often saw ladies, when they purchased one, tear off the covers, so that people in the train might not know what they were reading.

But there is a deeper depth, of which we know not how to write. The removal of a neighbour's landmarks was prohibited of God. But the landmarks of earthly possessions are of slight importance compared with those of virtue and purity. The art of photography is being prostituted in a way that curdles one's blood to think of, and an art and literature are being secretly introduced which out-pagans paganism in its corruptest form. Herod's massacre of the innocents was merciful, passing the children through the fire to Moloch was compassionate, in comparison with the murder of the souls of little children. An underground and atrocious trade is being carried on, an idea of which may be gathered from the following announcement from the Continent :—

To Our American Customers.

We beg to say that we can supply you with books, photographs, etc., which it is well-nigh impossible to obtain in the United States or in Canada. The reason that we alone can supply you is, that both the sale and transmission in the mails of this class of matter is allowed in our country, and being sealed its nature is not known among the enormous amount of mails going to the States.

It is to our interest to please our customers, as our business is intended to encourage largely renewed orders.

The merchandise thus surreptitiously promulgated in England and America is unnatural and criminal in the deepest degree. It would disgrace demons. It is cruel beyond words. But the degradation of our literature tends so to demoralise our people that this foul disease may come to be propagated without question. Facilis descensus Averni.

MISS KRIKORIAN'S MISSION.

Miss Krikorian writes: "The evangelistic and temperance work is getting on very well indeed. It is stronger and more encouraging, and I am every day more deeply interested in it, so that it seems to me like life and death to think of leaving it and devoting myself entirely to the practice of midwifery. By making the change I should earn money enough for my support, and perhaps be pretty well off in a few years.

"No one working in England can imagine how difficult the work is for a young woman in Turkey, particularly in dealing with men. I will give you the latest example. B——, for whose conversion I have shed many tears, has been away from home for about eight years. He returned a week ago today. When I saw him I fell on his neck to kiss him, as any sister would do after such long separation, but he pushed me away from him, saying, 'Get away; don't touch me, don't kiss me,' etc., etc. He dealt so harshly with me that I asked my sister-in law, who was with him, if he had gone out of his mind. She smiled, and said, 'Of course not, the only reason is that you speak to men and try to convert them.' Of course, my heart was very broken, and I shed many tears, but the Great Comforter comforted me in his Word, Phil. i. 29. We are the children of the same father, who has, such a sweet Christian spirit, but, wonderful to say the greater the trials and the persecution the stronger my desire becomes for the work.

"I cannot go on as I am doing without someone to help me. I want, if possible, to find a helper, one willing to sacrifice life and comfort for Christ and Turkey. The means for our support is, however, still to be found. How we need a building in which to hold all sorts of meetings in connection with the extended work! Private houses can no longer accommodate us. We now meet in the largest of our Protestant schools, which is too small for such gatherings."

Miss Krikorian's work is carried out under the direction of a committee at Aintab, comprising Rev. Dr. Fuller, Dr. Shepard, and Professor Krikorian, her brother, all of the Central Turkey College, and also her father, Rev. K. Krikorian. Dr. and Mrs. Shepard were in London lately, and spoke in the highest terms of Miss Krikorian's labours. Communications may be addressed to Mr. J. M'Donald, Southville, Wimbledon, S.W.

ST. CRISCHONA.—Seventeen students, who have concluded their course at this excellent institution, near Bâle, were recently set apart for mission work. Four of the party will labour in Switzerland, seven in Germany, three in Texas, and one each in Hungary, Slavonia, and Africa.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

HIDDEN, BUT RADIANT!

Jeremiah xxxvi. 26.

Be still and strong,
O Man, my Brother! hold thy sobbing breath,
And keep thy soul's large window pure from wrong!
That so, as life's appointment issueth,
Thy vision may be clear to watch along
The sunset consummation-lights of death!
E. B. Browning.

After Jehoiakim had deliberately cut in pieces the prophet's roll, and so rejected his warnings and expostulations; and when in addition to this he had threatened the lives of God's faithful servants, it became clear that no further good could be gained by reiterating his messages: and the prophet's voice was hushed, apparently for the remainder of the reign of this bad and infatuated king. This is one of those principles of the Divine government, which is as certain in its operation to-day as ever, that after a certain time the Divine voice, being unheeded, ceases to speak; and those who will not retain God in their knowledge are given up to the workings of their corrupt minds, to work all uncleanness with greediness. We recall those ominous words, written as an epitaph on the grave of the first king of Israel: "Samuel came no more to see Saul until the day of his death," and the no less awful words of the Apostle of love: "There is a sin unto death; not concerning this do I say that he should make request" (1 John v. 16, R.V.).

Into that new and splendid palace of Jehoiakim, whose spacious halls were ceiled with cedar from Lebanon, lighted by wide windows, and painted with bright colours, the one presence never entered which at that time would have saved the ship of state—as the timely arrival of a pilot may save an ocean steamer from the fatal ignorance of an incompetent captain. The false prophets might beguile the ears of king and people with predictions, bred in the falsehood of their own nature. The strong Egyptian partisans might urge on the king reliance on Pharaoh as the certain cure for the difficulties of their position. But Jeremiah's voice, during the dark and troublous days that succeeded that scene in the palace, and until Jehoiakim's body was cast forth, unburied and unwept, was still. How did it fare with Jeremiah, and what engaged him during those eventful years?

I.—THE LORD HID HIM.

What that precisely means it is impossible to say. Was there a John of Gaunt for this Wycliff, an Elector of Saxony for this Luther? Did Ahikam, who had before interposed on his behalf, or his sons—Gemariah, who lent Jeremiah his room in the Temple for the reading of his roll, and Gedaliah, who became Governor of Judah after Zedekiah's deportation—take the prophet under their care? Or was this hiding something more Divine and blessed still? In any case, whether through the intervention of second causes or directly, Jeremiah was hidden in the covert of the Divine presence from the plottings of man, and was kept secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues. In his first alarm he had said, "I am cut off from before thine eyes." Nevertheless, God had heard the voice of his supplication, and had preserved his faithful servant.

These Divine hidings are needed by us all. We must obey the voice that cries to us, as it did to Elijah, "Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and hide thyself." We are too prominent, too self-important, too conscious of ourselves. Our shadows fall too much in front of us, and we see them on the sand, clear-cut and defined. We need to keep our faces ever sunward, that our shadow may be well out of sight. And thus it is that God must sometimes hide us in the sick-chamber, the valley of shadow, the cleft of the rock. He calls us to Zarephath, or Carmel, the privacy of obscurity, or of solitude. It is only when self is hidden in the darkness of the grave that the true light shines upon our hearts, or the power of the true life emanates from our acts.

How often has some timid nature sheltered and hidden itself in a stronger personality to which it was devotedly attached, so that it could bear unmoved the stare of indifference, the affectation of superiority, the sarcastic taunt, the injurious act! So when the one passion of our nature is Godward, when his smile is our sufficient reward, when we have no aim than to be well-pleasing in his sight, we are hidden; and from our retreat in the burning glory of his light, we can look out with equanimity on the scenes of dreaded evils as they pass us by.

There is a literal sense also, O tried and tempted believer, in which God will hide you. It is stated that on one occasion when the dragoons of Claverhouse were scouring the mountains of Scotland in search of the Covenanters, a little party of these godly folk, gathered on the hillside for prayer, must have fallen into their hands, had not a cloud suddenly settled down, effectually concealing them from their pursuers. Thus the Son of God still interposes for his own. Live to Him alone. Be a polished shaft, hidden in the hollow of his hand. Abide in Him. Hark! He says to thee, as David to Abiathar, "Abide thou with Me; fear not! for he that seeketh my life seeketh thy life; for with Me thou shalt be in safeguard."

II.—HE RE-EDITED HIS PROPHECIES.

To this period we may refer the Divine injunction: "Thus speaketh the Lord, the God of Israel, saying, 'Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book'" (xxx. 1, 2). It may be that throughout this period Baruch continued to act as his faithful amanuensis and scribe. He, at least, was certainly included in the Divine hidings (xxxvi. 26-32). It was at great cost to his earthly prospects. He came of a good family, his brother being Seraiah, who held high office under King Zedekiah, and he cherished the ambition of distinguishing himself amongst his compeers. "He sought great things for himself." And he was only reconciled to the lot of suffering and sorrow to which his close identification with Jeremiah led him, by a special revelation assuring him of the speedy overthrow of the State; and that, in the general chaos, the most to be expected by any would be to escape with life (xlv.).

By the aid of this faithful friend, Jeremiah gathered together the prophecies which he had uttered on various occasions, and put them in order, specially elaborating the predictions given in the fourth year of Jehoiakim against the surrounding nations. The Word of the Lord came to him concerning the Philistines, and Moab, and the children of Ammon and Edom, Damascus and Kedar. And the devout student may well pause to read again the marvellous paragraphs, which foretell the fate of these nations, beneath the all-desolating incursions of Nebuchadnezzar and his ruthless soldiers. "Thou art my battle-axe and weapons of war," said the prophet, addressing the great king in Jehovah's name; "with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms." (See chapters xlvii. to xlix. 33).

This time of Jeremiah's seclusion was therefore not lost to the world. It was fruitful as Bunyan's in Bedford Gaol, Luther's in the Wartburg, Madame Guyon's in the Bastille. Unseen, the prophet busied himself, as the night settled down on his country, in kindling the sure light of prophecy, that should cast its radiant beams over the dark waters of time until the day dawn, and the day-star glimmer out in the Eastern sky. Yield your whole nature to God, and be sure that He will bring all of it, and every moment, under his productive cultivation; so that it shall become like one of the old-fashioned wall-enclosed country gardens, every square inch of which yields some produce to the skilful hand of its owner.

III.—HE MADE A DOUBLE JOURNEY TO BABYLON.

To this period we must refer the incident of the Linen Girdle, because the discourse founded on it was delivered during the three months reign of Jehoiachin, which was altogether too brief to admit of so long a journey as was necessary for the purposes on which the prophet was set (xiii.; notably v. 18).

The Israelite was extremely particular as to cleanliness, and especially of linen. It was therefore significant that Jeremiah should, at a certain period, wear a newly-purchased linen girdle without washing it. When it was soiled and filthy, he was directed to take it to the river Euphrates, and there bury it in a hole of the rock. Some have thought that this is the description of a vision; or that some place nearer than the Euphrates, which was two hundred and fifty miles distant, is intended. But there seems no good reason for questioning the literal interpretation of the narrative, as given by the prophet. There was no special demand for his presence in Jerusalem, but the reverse. Time was no object in comparison with the vividness of the impression that would be produced. Besides, large purposes were served by his becoming familiarised with the condition of the exiles in Babylon, and with the drift of events there. In the prophecies which he delivered afterwards, on the fall of Babylon, there are touches of description so minute and accurate that they could hardly have been given by any one who was not familiar with the city from personal observation.

After his return from Babylon, "many days" passed. Indeed, his second journey, to recover his marred girdle, may have been so timed by Almighty Providence as to secure his absence from the city during the last scene of Jehoiakim's sad and tragic history; and to bring him thither again as Jehoiachin began his brief reign. But that rotted piece of linen, held up before the eyes of his people, told its own sad story. Judah and Jerusalem might have been to Jehovah for a name, a praise, and a glory; and He would have caused them to cleave unto Him; but they would not hear; they went after other gods, to serve and worship them. Therefore they would be cast aside as worthless and unprofitable.

The lesson of this double journey, which must have meant about a thousand miles on foot, teaches us that no exertion on our part is to be considered excessive, if we can execute the commissions of our King. Long before, when a comparative child, Jeremiah had been summoned to perform God's errands for Him (i. 7): and it was not for him to complain if any special errand took him far afield, or involved journeying under scorching suns, and sleeping in the night dews. When Jesus bids us go into all the world, He means it; and we may not plead before Him the distance and hardships of the way. It is enough if He has said, "Go to Euphrates." When once we are sure of this, we must imitate the prophet, who says, with charming simplicity, "So I went to Euphrates."

IV.—HE HAD VISIONS OF THE NEW COVENANT.

There is much reason for supposing that it was in this time of seclusion that Jeremiah's eyes were opened to see a spiritual truth, which was far in advance of any contemporary revelation, and was destined to become the mould into which some of the richest ore of Gospel truth should be poured. It was not to be the last time when mortal eyes would have to be closed in order to see; shielded from the glare of this world that they might behold the light that never shone on sea or shore. The blind Milton sang of Paradise lost and regained.

The exquisite poem to which we must now turn is contained in chapters xxx. and xxxi., and consists of some seven stanzas. The prophet is no longer concerned with Judah alone; his thought embraces the ten tribes also—Israel he calls them, or Ephraim, which one hundred and seventy years before had been carried away captive to Nineveh. But his heart exults as he anticipates the return of the entire people from the land of the north, baptised through suffering into a purer, nobler life.

On many of the exquisite thoughts and phrases of this joyful outburst, we might long and profitably dwell. We can only cull a few flowerets, and leave them to tell the wealth of the garden from which they come:—

"Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord, neither be dismayed, O Israel; for lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity."

"I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord."

"Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore, with loving-kindness have I drawn thee. Again will I build thee, and thou shall be built, O virgin of Israel; thou shalt be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry."

"My people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the Lord."

Transported by words like these, as he lay in prophetic trance, it is not wonderful that Jeremiah experienced, after a spiritual sort, the ecstatic joy which visits the soul, when, between sleeping and waking, it realises that its dearest hopes have been fulfilled. "Upon this I awaked and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me" (xxxi. 26).

But the more stupendous revelation was to follow. There was no guarantee against the perpetual backsliding of the people. The dread commands of Moses, the forms of Temple-ritual, the pleadings of Deuteronomy, enforced as they were by the words of contemporary prophets, had all failed to withhold the people from backsliding. What hope was there that the distant future would not repeat the bitter story of the past? But God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, shined into his heart, and unveiled the glory of the new covenant, which was to be sealed by the Blood of the Cross—"the New Testament in My Blood," as Jesus called it. A covenant which would no longer depend on man's obedience to "Thou shalt," and "Thou shalt not"; but would glisten with the seven times repeated, I will of God (xxxi. 31-34; Luke xxii. 20; Heb. viii. 8-12).

That the law of God should not be without as a precept, but within, as though inwrought into the very structure of the heart and will; that religion should consist primarily in what God was to his child, rather in what the child said or did towards Him; that neither priest nor Levite should be needed any more, since each soul would possess the right of direct intercourse with its Lord; that sin should be so completely forgiven, as if it had never been. This was the vision that shone in on the prophet's heart, which has been realised in Christ and all who belong to Him by faith, and which is yet to gather Israel within its provisions.

It is a serious question how far that covenant has been fulfilled in our experience. We are disposed to be enamoured with the life that it foreshadows, and sometimes we think that our inward parts and hearts do bear its sacred inscriptions, as did the stone slabs of Sinai the writing of the decalogue. But then there is some overwhelming irruption of covetousness, envy, pride, and wrath; as though a sewer were to pour forth its filth over the mosaic work of some splendid pavement.

Such experiences stagger, but they should not discourage us. They probably show, not that God has not commenced his Divine work, but that we have momentarily turned aside from Him to make some effort of our own, or to pride ourselves on what has been accomplished. Let us turn back to Him. Let us open our hearts and inward parts to his finger. Let us in meek humility wait for Him to grave even more deeply and legibly his secret thoughts upon us. Let us believe that He is doing it. Let us reckon on Him to perfect the legend, and to keep it clear and clean.

Then we shall know God. The dead past will bury its dead. The sins and iniquities of former days will be strewn on the shore, like the corpses of the Egyptians from whom Israel had got free. Then shall our heart go out in the dance, for our mourning will be turned into joy; our soul shall be as a watered garden, and God will comfort us, making us rejoice from our sorrow (xxxi. 10-14).

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN MEERUT.

In a letter from this missionary post in the N.W. Provinces of India, Rev. J. W. Hall, of the C.M.S., writes:—

"While thinking and praying over plans for future work, a Christian doctor, who had already suffered much for the name of Jesus Christ, was introduced to our notice. He was most anxious to use his talents for the glory of Christ, and the conversion of souls. A small house being available in the centre of the bazaar, he secured it as a preaching hall and dispensary. In a very few days we were crowded out, and now, morning by morning, about one hundred patients are treated and taught about the Great Physician; the Gospel is preached to constantly changing crowds outside, and books are sold or tracts distributed to those who are able to read.

"We now have our eyes upon a larger building, splendidly situated in the city. We can secure it now, but if we delay we shall most certainly lose it. But we are very short of means to pay for the house and supply sufficient medicine. We want at least £100 to pay for a sufficient quantity of medicines for a year, as well as for instruments and pay of the native doctor. Perhaps some Christian firm might make us a present of sufficient drugs to last us for a few months. We need them at once, for the stock I purchased at a heavy cost in India is slowly running out, and we shall be in absolute want not many days hence.

"Above all we need a medical missionary. I believe I am right in saying that the C.M.S has no medical mission in the N.W.P., and yet I know of no agency more Scriptural or more effectual than medical mission work. I earnestly plead for a medical missionary for this city, with its 100,000 souls in darkness, and ignorance, and sin."

REV. J. McNEILL AT MELBOURNE.

The Melbourne newspapers report "enormous attendances" at the meetings which are being held in that city by Rev. John McNeill and Mr. J. A. Burke. Writing of a meeting in the Congregational Church on July 23, The Argus said:—"Even the scores of the people who had scaled the outer walls, and hung like so many limpets to the window-sills at no small risk of broken bones, felt rewarded for their inconvenience, the more so as they could look down on to the disappointed crowds who still thronged about all the doors in the despairing hope that by some unlooked-for stroke of fortune they might manage, if only for a minute, to catch a glimpse of the evangelist."

In an address on the restoration of sight to blind Bartimeus, Mr. McNeill presented his points thus: Firstly, be in earnest; secondly, be in earnest; thirdly, be in earnest; and fortiethly, if you like it, be in earnest. Continuing, he remarked: You say, "I don't like excitement, I don't like sensation." My friends, if the devil has palmed off on you a religion without sensation, throw it off, and start all over again. You must have excitement; you couldn't live without it. How excited you grow over politics! How you go off your little heads about a bazaar!

Many charged Bartimeus that he should hold his peace. The very people in the crowd leagued themselves against Bartimeus. Many people to-day are like that. They are satisfied with being in the crowd. Don't let anybody interfere with you. Be blind—be stone blind. Be deaf—stone deaf. Your own mother may gag your mouth if you get in earnest about personal salvation, although she'll let you go to church or sit in a choir. Bartimeus was a beggar; there was nothing æsthetic about his cry, but there was a fine earnestness that redeemed it from all vulgarity. There were many little pedants who called all earnestness vulgar. But it was worse than all vulgarity to have a dainty dapper little soul that did not believe in Jesus. Bartimeus' earnestness swung the crowd round, and the very same people who had told him to hold his peace called out "Cry out, Bartimeus." "Rise up, Bartimeus," "Be of good cheer, Bartimeus."

It was rather a wonder that Bartimeus rose to the occasion. If he had been a little better than he was, and had philosophy and science and other fashionable things, such as "doubts about the supernatural," he would have said, "Oh Lord, give me half an eye to begin with, and perhaps evolution will do the rest." But evolution wouldn't. There was no evolution out of a pit, although there was plenty of revolution along the bottom. It was a dead lift. Not the deserving poor, but the undeserving poor usually made the most successful beggars. When a man flung himself at your head, he usually didn't miss. And that was how we should beg from Jesus.

Meetings for business men have been largely attended. Our Melbourne correspondent reports an accident which recently befel Mr. McNeill:—"Since he left the old country, and while in South Africa, Mr. McNeill has learned to ride a horse, so he frequently takes exercise along with Mr. Burke and some friendly guide on horseback. On Tuesday, July 24, he found out how to fall off a horse, for, while cantering briskly along Burke-road, Kew, he turned his horse rather sharply, and made a rapid descent to the ground, falling on his head. He was somewhat stunned and confused for a moment, but soon got up, fortunately not very much the worse for the new experience. He was able to take the meetings that day as usual, though one eye was suspiciously dark, and had a curious little mark over it where his felt hat was crushed against his temple in the fall. He was soon all right again, and we are very thankful the result was not more serious." The evangelists have been the guests of Rev. D. S. McEachran, of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Carlton. As the church and manse are just opposite one end of the Exhibition building, it has proved a most suitable home for them. The Melbourne press has been stirred, and excellent reports have appeared in most of the local newspapers.

HOMES FOR AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND, 69 to 77, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N.—Rev. Henry and Mrs. Bright, hon. superintendents of these Homes, write:—"With our eighty-two inmates, twenty-four of whom are between eighty and ninety-six years of age, we are confident that if the Christian public knew our absolute need they would come to our help."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY SEPTEMBER 9.—HOSEA XI.

God's unmerited Love (1-4).—These words were true of Israel, the nation (Ex. iv. 22), then of our Lord (Matt. ii. 15), and there is a sense in which we have all been redeemed and called out of the Egypt-world. And this is due to the grace of God, whose reason we cannot discover. (2) "They" here must refer to the messengers sent with exhortations to repent. How often we too have persisted against the Divine remonstrances. (3) Yet! (R.V.) Ah, what tenderness! God did not deal with them after their sins. The mother gently bears with a fractious child, teaches it to walk, and carries it when weary. Let God teach you to walk in his ways. (4) God does not drive till He has tried to draw. How often He draws through a mother's love, a friend's influence. As the farmer takes the bit from his horse's mouth, and supplies it with food, so God relieved his people from Egyptian slavery, and He often relieves us from the pressure of life, that He may feed us.

God's Patience (5-9).—Israel had revolted from Assyria, and gone for help to Egypt (ch. vii. 11; 2 Kings xvii. 4). God here asserts that in spite of all, he shall yet serve Assyria. (6) "Bars" (R.V.) may refer to the bulwarks of human leaders or of strong fortresses. (7) Though the prophets called on Israel to return to the Holy God, none would exalt Him to the throne of their hearts. (8) Admah and Zeboim were overwhelmed with Sodom and Gomorrah; and God's heart prompted Him to withhold such a fate from his people. Backsliding children of God may be chastened sore, but not put utterly away. (9) God's love and patience are not easily exhausted like man's. We must not measure Him by human standards; his love and patience, like his wisdom and power, are as high above ours as heaven above earth. He says He will not enter the city in wrath (9 R.V., marg.), as when his angels entered Sodom.

God's Success (10-12).—Love conquers, and in these words we have a description of the issue of God's gracious dealings with his people. They return to Him, who roars as a lion against their foes. His people are said to come from the west. Is not this an anticipation of their future return from all parts of the civilised world, Europe and America? The trembling may refer to their eager haste. (11) The fluttering motion of the dove. (12) This verse should be joined to the following chapter; as in R.V.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10.—HOSEA XII.

The Example of Jacob (1-6).—There was a strong contrast between Ephraim, which worshipped Jehovah under the form of calves, and Judah, which maintained its supremacy among surrounding nations by its faithfulness. The east wind was the simoom, dry and thirst-giving. This prophecy was uttered when Israel was seeking the aid of Pharaoh, and breaking their covenant with Assyria. (2) Judah, under Ahaz, was yielding to idolatry, and God could not pass it without punishment; how much less the lapse of the ten tribes! (3) The example of Jacob is brought forward for imitation—his earnestness in taking hold of blessing, and prevailing with the angel. He prevailed in weakness and tears; his strength came when he clung; his success when he was vanquished. Most of us are too strong for God; He has to reduce us to confess our weakness and helplessness before He gives us the blessing which enriches us for ever. (6) We are to turn to God and lean on Him; this only will bring us rest and safety, and make us Israels indeed.

Ephraim's Deceit (7-14.)—Merchant or trafficker, using the latter word in the sense of cheating, are denoted by the same Hebrew word. This vein in their ancestor's character pervaded his children's, who were disposed to argue that their success in commerce indicated that they were guiltless in their dealings. On the other hand, God would show them that they had come grievously short of his high standard. Success is not a guarantee of character. (11) Gilead was in the far west, and Gilgal on the east of Jordan; indicating that the whole land was infected with sin. Idol altars were as numerous as heaps of stones cleared out of a field. (12) What a contrast between the poverty of their ancestor and the opulence of his descendants! (13) In the early stages of Jewish history, the prophet's voice (Moses') had been sufficient to check and keep them; no such influence, however, sufficed in those degenerate days. Let us be sure that God has no controversy with us, in the way either of business or idols. If there be aught, let us ask Him to bring us to the Jordan ford and deal with us there, till we cling to Him in humble faith, and win the Israel blessing.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11.—HOSEA XIII.

They sin more and more (1-3).—In former days when Ephraim spoke, his enemies trembled; but as soon as Baal worship intruded in the national life, all its influence ceased. Ah, the weakness of sin! (2) Sin always grows more and more. Let us not lean to our own understanding. (3) The sinner lacks permanence; he passes quickly away, leaving no trace.

Yet I am the Lord (4-11).—In spite of Israel's sin Jehovah could not forget his covenant relationship from the days of the Red Sea and the wilderness. Note how He still speaks as their Saviour. He could not abandon them though they had forgotten Him. (6) The image is that of the heifer, wanton because overfed. (7) Before God's love can get its way with some of us, He must show the evil of sin and punish it. (8) The caul is the pericardium. (9) O sinner, to be in opposition to God is destruction from which nothing can deliver thee.

I will ransom thee (12-16).—Often our iniquity is not punished at once, it is bound up, laid in store. (13) It is always bad when the soul struggles against the new birth and refuses God's gift of eternal life. (14) These splendid words apply primarily to the deliverance of the people from Assyria, but ultimately, as St. Paul shows, to Christ's premillennial advent (1 Cor. xv. 55). (15) Though ultimately deliverance would come, yet the Assyrian would come down on Israel as the sirocco breath of the wilderness, and Samaria would have to bear her guilt. God's ultimate redemption of his people is consistent with allowing them to reap the natural consequences of their sin.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12.—HOSEA XIV.

A tender Appeal to Return (1-9).—This chapter is inimitable for its tenderness and beauty. (1) We must always confess that our sin is our own, and that we have fallen by our own act. (2) The words of confession are prepared for sinners' lips. God wants no bullocks; the confession of contrite hearts is the best sacrifice. (3) We must abandon all creature confidence, and cast ourselves absolutely on God's help. (4) Let those that are fickle ask God to heal their backslidings, that the disease may no longer afflict them. God's love is free; thy sins are no barrier. Thou needest bring no price in thy hand. (5) God's reviving influences steal on men as dew on parched herbage; the results are the beauty of the lily without its frailty; the roots of Lebanon are its mountain spurs. (6, 7) See how nature is laid under contribution by its varied imagery to describe the beauty and blessedness of those who dwell under God's protection! (8) Hearken to this colloquy: Ephraim speaks twice, and God twice. God will never let us forget that our fruitfulness is derived from Him. (9) Let us ask for Divine wisdom and understanding, that we may perceive the goodness and the rightness of God's dealings.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13.—JOEL I.

The Plague of Locusts (1-4).—These predictions were probably uttered in the reign of Joash. As R.V. suggests, the four names given here probably refer to the locust in different stages of its growth. They are the gnawing, the swarming, the licking, and the consuming locust. The Jews were accustomed to think that they referred to Assyria, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. There was doubtless a primary reference to the literal locust; but the Holy Spirit had an ulterior design in giving this prophecy through Joel. They have been also taken to represent the lust that crawls, pride which leaps, gluttony, and anger.

The Wail of the Drunkards (5-10).—Palestine was famous for its vineyards, but the locusts would waste the vines and bark the fig-trees. The appearance of the trees, after a visitation of locusts, would be just as here described, white and bare. With every sacrifice there were drink-offerings; the priests were, therefore, unable to maintain the Temple rites.

The Lament of the Husbandmen (11, 12).—Throughout the harvest-fields and the orchards the same wasting would ensue, until the whole land would be filled with mourning and lamentation.

The Mourning of the Priests (13, 14).—It was not enough for the servants of God to lament the failure of the temple rites; it was necessary for them to lead a general repentance on the part of the people. These sufferings, which reach populations and individuals, should lead to searching self-examination, that we may know why the chastening hand of God lies heavily upon us.

The Prayer of the Prophet (15-20).—When the servant of God has done his best in appealing to his fellows, he turned with eagerness to God. On the one hand, he is sure that destruction is the inevitable result of sin; on the other he is heart-broken because of the desolations which leave their permanent mark. How sad it is to hear the groan of animate and dumb creation suffering for human sin! Beasts, cattle, even the sheep, which could content themselves with scantier and hardier fare, were suffering. (20) At such times, the beasts look to heaven and low plaintively, setting an example to sinful obstinate men.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 14.—JOEL II.

Impending Judgment (1-11).—In these terrific words the prophet announces, primarily, a locust plague, to which every item in his description corresponds; but, secondarily, the invasion of the Assyrians. Probably the prophecy has a yet further reference to that great combination against the Son of God which shall mark the close of the present dispensation. It is necessary to compare Rev. ix. with this prophecy. (2) The flight of the locusts often darkens the sun. (4) The locust's head closely resembles that of a horse. (5) Referring to the whirring sound of locusts in motion.

An urgent Call to Repent (12-17).—Even though judgment was on its way, it might be averted. In the eleventh hour the sinner may return. And God would secure that the fields should still yield meat and drink offerings; and if so, the usual produce of the fields. (16) The whole nation had sinned, and, therefore, the call to repent must go to all; no age, no rank could be excepted; no claim for exemption could be admitted. (17) In pleading with God, let us quote his holy name, and his credit, his character, and his covenant. All of these are summed up in the name of Jesus.

Deliverance (18-27).—What a glad vision of the reversal of judgment! The locusts would be swept away into the sea. The stench from their corrupting bodies has often bred a pestilence. In this instance it would witness to their entire destruction. It was thus that God dealt with Sennacherib (compare Ezekiel xxxix. 11, etc.) (23) The children of Zion are successively addressed and congratulated. Rain is used generically. The former came in the middle of October, the latter in March. The course of nature would be resumed. Moderately, i.e. in due measure. (25) The reverse order to ch. i. 4, indicates that God would completely undo all the evil the locusts had wrought. It is a very precious thought that God can restore the lost and wasted years, so that they shall be as though we had filled them with holy living.

The Promise of the Spirit (28-32).—Deliverance is only part of God's gracious work for his people. He proposes to work an inward change on their hearts. This gracious promise was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, as Peter indicated in his sermon; but it awaits all whom the Lord our God shall call (Acts ii. 39). Prophecy, dreams, and visions, were the methods by which God revealed Himself in Old Testament days to the loftiest souls. They were now to be common to all. (30) These words predict great changes and revolutions in governments and empires (Matt. xxiv. 29; Luke xxi. 25). But for those who trust in God's promises, and call on Him, there is always blessed deliverance. The fulfilment of these words is probably not complete. When the Jews return to their own land at the completion of the present age, we shall probably witness a further mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15.—JOEL III.

Nothing in the history of the world has fulfilled these words, which evidently await the consummation of the present age. It is parallel to Zech. xiv. 2, 3, 4.

Divine Judgment of the Nations (1-16).—This valley lies between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives. There Jehoshaphat overthrew the great confederacy; so will God one day overthrow the heathen who have wasted his people. (3) Such had been the wanton cruelty, that the enemies of the Jews had sold them for the merest trifles. (4) The meaning is that if the heathen desired to show their hate to Jehovah by their maltreatment of his people, He would soon repay them in their own coin. (8) After the capture of Tyre, 30,000 Tyrians, and after the capture of Gaza, multitudes of Philistines, were sold as slaves. But the meaning is probably general, that the positions of victor and vanquished should be completely reversed. (10) A reversal of the days of the Messiah, indicating how eagerly every means would be employed to swell and equip the ranks against Jehovah. (13) Imagery borrowed from the harvest field and the wine-press. (14) The valley where the multitudes were to await their doom. (16) The destruction of the heathen, who are finally impenitent, and have refused all invitations to repent, will be very terrible. As we anticipate it, we can only feel that the Judge is the Lamb, and that He must do right. Happy they who know Him as their refuge!

The Millennium (17-21).—This is a vision of the New Jerusalem, the Holy City. A time of peace, and joy, and blessing shall yet visit our earth, and shall be associated with the restored Jews to their own land. From them holy influences shall proceed as streams of water. Shittim was on the border of Moab, from which we learn the far-extending and blessed influences of that new metropolis of salvation. (19) All opposition to godliness will be at an end. (21) And sins which had remained long uncleansed shall be forgiven. Oh, blessed age! The Lord hasten it!

POLITENESS IN CHINA.—A Chinese Christian was asked what was needed in missionaries in order to greater success in work among the Celestials. He replied "More prayer." What besides? "More humility." Anything else? "More politeness."

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.
Jesus at Jacob's Well.—John iv. 9-26.
Golden Text.—Verse 14.

This chapter records what may be described as one of the greatest miracles of grace. It tells how a woman passed in one day through all the stages of a thoughtless sinner, an interested listener, a rejoicing believer, and a successful witness.

The scene of the narrative is "Sychar" (5), a portion of the ancient Shechem, and now identified with the village Aschar. The well of Jacob, which exists still, is "situated thirty-five minutes to the east of Nablous, at the place where the road from south to north turns abruptly to the west to enter the valley of Shechem, between Ebal and Gerizim. It is hollowed out in the rock, and is 9 feet in diameter."—Godet.

How did the meeting come about? Jesus chose the way through Samaria, not only because it was most direct, but because it was needful (4) for his purpose of salvation. The hour of mid-day (6) was an unusual one. Evening was the time for drawing water; but if she had come at that time this interview could not have taken place. Why had she chosen such an unusual hour? If she did not know God did. How solemnly important little things become when we see God's hand in them.

The conversation is most suggestive. Note (1) the zeal of the Saviour. He was wearied (6), thirsty (7), and hungry (8). Yet when there was a soul to be saved He forgot his need in thinking of hers. He laboured thus patiently to win one soul. The best fitness for speaking to the multitude is the willingness and the ability to speak to the individual. He overcame formidable obstacles. No Jewish Rabbi would have wasted time in teaching a woman—especially a Samaritan woman—and one of such disreputable character. Even his disciples marvelled (27). Teachers could not have a better model.

(2) Note his tact. There was no better mode of commencing the conversation than by asking a favour of the woman (7). Then with the water as his text He began to deal with this woman's need. His first message (10) hinted at three things—his own dignity, the value of the gift He had to bestow, and the loss the woman suffered through not knowing Him. "Gift of God" is the cry of the Eastern water-carrier. Jesus suggested that He had another gift to bestow more worthy of the title. What is that gift? See iii. 16; Rom. vi. 23.

(3) His message (13, 14).—Comparisons between Himself and Jacob would only turn the woman's thought from the great theme. The first part of his message is obvious enough (13); but was it not intended to apply to other water than that of Jacob's well? The woman had been drinking of the waters of sinful pleasure, and she knew how terribly true the words were. Others have had to learn the same painful lesson. Byron had learned it, when on his thirty-fourth birthday he wrote:—

> My days are in the yellow leaf,
> The flower and fruit of love are gone;
> The worm, the canker, and the grief,
> Are mine alone.

Over every earthly pleasure this verse might be written. In contrast with this our Lord promises water that shall ever satisfy, and that shall abide in a man as an ever-springing well. The salvation He gives meets every part of man's nature; and, as it consists of a change within a man's heart, it places him above the need of sinful pleasures. The better joy displaces the worse. This is Christ's message to everyone. He does not ask us to leave sin without promising something better by far.

Then the woman becomes a suppliant (15). She does not know all her prayer means; but there was in it an expression of her heart's longing for something better than she has yet found. And the Lord takes the only way possible of answering her prayer. The reference to her husband (16) recalled her sin; and this was followed by a statement (17, 18) which showed her whole life to be laid bare before Him. To know our sin is the first condition of receiving the life Jesus gives. The prodigal cannot be restored until he comes to himself. The woman's response (19, 20) was not a mere attempt to evade a painful subject. Perhaps this prophet can set at rest a long controversy. How can she find God if she does not know where to worship Him? Two things are emphasised in our Lord's reply (21-24). First, concerning the object, and next concerning the character of true worship. It was a wondrous revelation to this sinful woman that God was to be approached as Father. This He is to all who are in Christ (Gal. iii. 26). And as Spirit, He cannot be confined either to Jerusalem or to Gerizim. To every one who worships in spirit and in truth, place is indifferent. It is strange that the fullest and clearest declaration of his Messiahship should be made to this one woman (25, 26).

See how her thought of Him has advanced, "Jew" (9), "sir" (11, 15), "prophet" (19), and "Messiah" (26).

The result of the interview to the woman was overflowing joy (28), and to the Lord rest and satisfaction (32-34).

THE LESSONS OF THE FLOWER.

Shall I tell you about a beautiful plant that sits in my window? It often speaks to me, and it may have a little word for you also. It was given me in the springtime by a friend. It promised fair even then, but now, as I look upon it, I think how it has more than fulfilled my highest expectations. Its leaves are fresh and green, and it is laden with most lovely blossoms. It is "a thing of beauty"; I wish you could see it.

What made my flower what it is? I will tell you.

First, I set it in the sunshine. Not away in some dark, dingy corner, but in the warm, beautiful sunshine, and it loved to be there. I often think as I look at it—how sweet it is to be early set in the sunshine of God's love, and to stay there. That will make your lives beautiful, and that alone. Jesus carries the lambs in his bosom, and I am certain, if, as a little child, you come to this Good Shepherd and get into his bosom, it will make all the difference to your life. You will never forget that early experience. Did not Jesus know this when He said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me."

Of course, Satan will tell you that is not true, but don't you believe him. "He is a liar from the beginning." Get into the sunshine of the love of God, and abide there, and what a lovely life you will have down here, and by-and-by up there in the sunshine of heaven!

The next thing I did for my plant was to water it. It wanted a great deal of water, and it got it. God says about his plants that He will water them "every moment." I think by this He means his word; and if you are a young Christian, I trust you desire and love the Word of God. You cannot have too much of it. He says "every moment:" "Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom" (Col. iii. 16). Don't let the reading of other books take the place of the Bible. Always put it first, and you will get to love it very much, and you will "grow thereby." Ask God to make it very precious to you, and help you to understand it. He will teach you, though you are but a child, and make you very wise, like little Samuel, who knew more than all the great men in Israel—"He hath hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hath revealed them unto babes" (Luke x. 21). It is not so much having the head stored as having the heart stored with the precious words of God. This early rain will cover your whole life with blessings (Ps. lxxxiv. 6. R.V.).

What more did I do for my flower? I kept it. There were many enemies seeking its destruction, and they would have succeeded if I had not bestowed upon it a watchful care. God has promised, if we are his, that He will keep us "night and day, lest any hurt us" (Isa. xxvii. 3). He knows how many enemies we have—Satan, with a whole host of temptations ready to ensnare us. We cannot keep ourselves. We need to ask God both to take and keep our hearts for Himself. He will do it. He loves to be trusted.

> They that wholly trust Him
> Find Him wholly true.

I was told a story long years ago, when I was a child, which I have never forgotten. Perhaps you know it. A little Scotch boy, who was considered not very wise, was asked by a minister, "Have you a soul, Jamie?" "No," said the boy. "Poor Jamie," said the minister, pityingly; "you know very little." "I ance had ane," said Jamie, "but I was na' able to keep it, so I gave it to the Lord Jesus." Ah, don't you think he was a wise little boy, after all; wiser than many a man and woman, who think they can keep themselves, and find out their sad mistake when it is too late? Won't you be like Jamie? Give yourselves right away to the Lord Jesus, and He will never, never disappoint you. What a holy, happy, useful life you will have! You can't think how glad Jesus will make you.

I have read of a little girl who had come to Jesus, and He had so filled her heart with joy that she could not keep from singing all the day long. "What makes you sing?" asked a lady one day. "Oh," said the little girl, "I keep the Happy in my heart" (meaning Jesus, you know). "Alas!" thought the lady, "I have no Happy in my heart," and the child's song was the means of leading her to the Saviour.

Let Jesus have you now! Do not wait until you are big or old—you will miss so much. Remember, the sheep He puts on his shoulder, but the lambs in his bosom. And He will not carry you a bit and then put you down again. An earthly friend may do that, but not the Heavenly One! He will bear you all the way to his own bright home above.

> Who, who are these beside the chilly wave,
> Just on the borders of the silent grave,
> Shouting Jesus' power to save,
> Washed in the blood of the Lamb?
> These, these are they who in their youthful days,
> Found Jesus early, and in wisdom's ways
> Proved the fulness of his grace,
> Washed in the blood of the Lamb.

SOUTH ARCOT MISSION.

We have had two baptisms since my return. One is a man named Veeran, a relation of David's—our first adult convert—and from his village, sixteen miles from here. He has come from time to time here the past two years, but during my absence in England Mr. Samuel Subha Rao, who was in charge of the Mission, went out to the village with David and one or two others, and thus apparently clenched the matter, and he was baptized at his own earnest request by the name of Asirvatham, which means "blessing." His wife is a very nice woman, but quite ignorant, and both are from the non-castes. They have two children, and we are looking forward to her being baptized and the children dedicated very soon.

The second baptism was the fruit after many days of our Malapulium Poor Day School. The young man, whose name was Govindu, after one of the favourite gods of the land, attended it as a young boy; and as he showed signs of more than usual intelligence, I arranged for him to attend school in the morning and come over to learn some work at the Mission in the afternoon. When I was in England, Mr. Hoskings, an elderly missionary from Singapore and the hills, visited the Mission, and thought the boy showed evident signs of grace. He has had many ups and down in spiritual experience. However, at last he seemed to grow so thoughtful and earnest, and being able to give a reason of the hope that was in him, he was baptized at his own request by the name of Devasagayam (God's help), by Mr. Subha Rao. As this was the first baptism conducted by the latter since he was set apart for the Lord's work, it was, of course, of peculiar interest to me. Devasagayam, according to the custom of the country, was married in early youth. His wife is but a child, comparatively. Prayer is asked that she may be truly converted, and join him in becoming a Christian.

The young Brahmin student, to whose baptism I had looked forward when in England, is, I fear, not yet prepared to forsake all for Christ. People in England, I think, little realise what this "forsaking all" in India means to a Brahmin, and they therefore little realise how differently missionaries are circumstanced here as regards reaping to workers at home. It needs "long patience," and we dare not press decision as we are able to do in England. As to general results I cannot say much; the ground is very hard, especially since the ground-nut trade has become so flourishing. The people seem to have grown so sordid, their one idea being money-getting. Still, I cannot despair. I look for a harvest ingathering some day, but perhaps, as in the Telugu field, we may have to wait long for it.

CHRIST'S YOKE AND REST.

CONDENSED NOTES OF AN ADDRESS AT KESWICK.

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

Some years ago I was called to speak to a very large audience of clergy on the subduing power of Christ. At the close of the service a sainted chairman gave a verdict on my statement. I had said that though there was a perfect Christ, and no other man could be perfect, it was clearly God's will that we should be saved from the power of sin. He considered rather that sin must exist to show God's power. I challenge you now with these two questions:—Can it be for the glory of God that you should fall into sin in order that God should save you? Can there be any circumstances so peculiar that God shall be powerless to keep you from falling? Some think their circumstances very, very, very peculiar, but for them there is a very, very, very peculiar Saviour; only remember the perfectness must be in Christ, not in you. You can only take a part. I may have a very wealthy Father, but I can't spend all his income.

The message laid upon me, prepared, of course, as all ministers' messages should be, is the ease of Christ's yoke. You must have a yoke. You cannot have a jovial Christianity all at once. Why should we refuse our God's share of suffering: to enter into our Master's affliction for a moment? When you see it in its true light you will thank God for all that He has sent you. We look into your faces, and see a want of that calm, restful condition of soul that reflects itself in every action. We want no spiritual giggle; we want joy and peace.

You have acknowledged that Christ cannot lie. I suppose that none of you think you know any passage better than the last three verses of Matthew xi., but I do not think that many of us have even taken up the whole chapter as one, to see what really brought about these words. To me they seem to contain the lesson that so faithful a messenger as John, then in prison, could be in doubt of the wisdom of God's dealings. Then the Saviour was sad to see how the world would neither take John nor his Messiah.

He compares the world to grumbling and dissatisfied children. So the Church to-day is dissatisfied with this and that teacher, wrangling and disputing among themselves. They object to both the stern and gentle. Have you been doing this, and refusing the message? What would God say to-day in the midst of this land, were He to upbraid us as He upbraided those cities of Palestine: "Woe unto thee Keswick, woe unto thee Penrith,* woe unto thee Barrow, woe unto thee London, great London." Indeed, it will be more tolerable for what you and I call the damned cities of the old time, than for you.

But it is a beautiful fact that when Christ had uttered his hardest words, He suddenly broke out, meditating, methinks, of God's providence, with these wonderful words of love. Oh, come to Him and try his yoke, his burden. Christ was teaching, as He loved to do, Old Testament truths. Turn to Isaiah xxviii. 9-12. Why, Christ has got the Old Testament by heart, and goes on quoting Isaiah, the words inspired of God: "Come babes, and I will give you rest." The Master takes the stammering lips and the fools of the world, the poor helpless ones. "Come all ye that are weary." You had better be as babes, for ye are wanting milk. What shall it be? You must have a yoke; you must have a burden. But He will make it so easy, and so light, that you will thank Him for it.

Some of you are in prison, and are angry because you think you are kept there by God. You wise children wrangling in the market place! Won't you listen? It is the Master's voice that bids you cease disputing among yourselves, and come to Him. You cannot see such a weary lot of people anywhere as the people of "Society"—the tired worldlings. Few in this world are more really miserable than those who ride in the parks.

There is one thing we are all wanting: we want rest. We are tired—tired out. We have been working, and working, for what? God looks at your faces to-night and asks, "Are you never going to stop? You are very weary. Come to me. Take my yoke upon you." All the learning won't bless you, and give you rest, to-night or any other night; no, it won't.

Have you ever thought over Christ's "rests"? In this first verse we have the rest of salvation. You will never get rest by puzzling over the addresses, or by taking notes. You must take up Christ's yoke, for "I am meek." But this is the only time Christ praises Himself, and He had to do it, for men could not understand Him otherwise.

There is also the rest of service—"My yoke, which is easy." Some of us have learned to believe that the 4th of Hebrews is meant for this life: the rest of God's land of provision and satisfaction. God never leaves his servants without supplies. But you must not wait till you enter into Heaven. God's rest of plenty and conscious joy begins on earth. You may enter into it now. If not, when did Moses and Aaron enter into their rest? You may cross into Canaan to-day. God has provided milk and honey for us, with fruits. When city walls fall before us we shall have houses to dwell in—many mansions.

Do not continue eating manna; it is very good, if not dry. But there is something better. Eat the fat and drink the sweet that the Lord has prepared for you.

Then there is the rest of dying. Will it be dreadful? What a foolish thought! Live well and you will die well. Blessed be God, it is a long Sabbath. It is we human creatures who have broken the Sabbath of God, which began when Creation ended.

Those rests are God's offer in Christ, on three conditions: Come, take, learn. The Greek word for Come in this place means rather, Attention! That is all. Here is Christ before your very soul's door. Are you going to receive Him? He is waiting to bless you. Christ took up the babes and He took up the cross, and He will bear your daily life henceforth if you let Him, as He bore your past sins on Calvary.

The yoke is submission to the will of the Master; it does not hurt; it is only useful exercise when the creature submits and it fits. It is a great mistake to think of Christ's yoke as some trial, some hardship. It is our natural use. It is what we were intended for. It is not the burden and yoke laid upon us by Christ which can gall and weary, but the burden and yoke of sins from which He is waiting to deliver us, as He asks us in exchange to take his.

His yoke is easy because it is God's. It is ten times harder to kick against the pricks than to yield. We have come here because God has taught us a blessed truth which we want to share. Will you take it? Come, babes! Put off your wisdom and come unto Christ, to take his yoke and his rest together.

* This address was delivered when there was a large number of local excursionists in Keswick.

HARVEST HYMN.

"I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between Me and the earth."—Gen. ix. 13.

O'er earth's scenes the bow, in beauty,
Shed its bright prismatic sheen,
And the Voice declared from heaven
What that radiant bow should mean:
"Never more should earth be deluged,
Covenant and lasting peace,
Seedtime, summer, harvest, winter,
Day and night, should never cease."

Ages pass; the bow continueth,
And Jehovah's word remains;
His the power and his the goodness
Which the universe sustains.
He it is who gives the seedtime,
And the sun's maturing rays;
He it is who gives the harvest,
Good and kind are all his ways.

Beauteous bow! we gaze upon it,
And remembrance thrills the soul!
Seen from earth, and seen from heaven
As the ages onward roll.
God is faithful to his promise,
Seasons come and seasons go,
He Himself unchanged remaining,
Wisely ordering all below.

Albert Midlane.

THE POPPY CROP in Benares and Behar, says The Homeward Mail, like the wheat crop in the Central Provinces, has turned out a miserable disappointment after promising splendidly. Early in the season the yield bid fair to be above the average, but the effects of a fatal visitation of the poppy blight, a mysterious disease almost identical with the potato blight, are now becoming manifest. The outturn of opium for this season will be one of the worst on record.

NOTES FROM NORTHFIELD.

There is not much to narrate which would interest the general readers of The Christian: I only wish to record my thankfulness for the abundant way in which God has answered many prayers which have been ascending on our behalf. When the Convention closed, of course a large number left Northfield for their homes and churches, but a larger number stayed than on any previous occasion, so that the spacious hotel and some of the large boarding-houses have been kept full for ten days or a fortnight, as it will be at the end of the present week. This means, amongst other things, that the young people, who are striving to pay for their college course by their earnings during the season, will be able to do better for themselves than they had hoped.

We have had some very happy and memorable gatherings. Day after day ministers and people have come with their Bibles and note-books prepared to get all possible help from the Bible readings. God has met many of them. It was only yesterday that a minister knelt sobbing beside me at my bedside, as he confessed that he had been preaching one thing and living another; but there he gave himself to be the bond-slave of the Lord Jesus. Another told me that he went away with entirely new conceptions of the treasures of truth, contained in Scripture, from which he intended to draw in his future ministry. It had been his previous habit to attract the attention of people by sensational topics, and had actually preached a course of eight sermons on "Suicide." It seems almost ludicrous that a herald of eternal life should be so hard pressed for subjects! Another minister, about to enter on a new charge, had considered the advisability of making an impression by a course of sermons on "Fulfilled and Unfulfilled Prophecy," of which he confessed he knew next to nothing.

Of course I would not for a moment infer that these are fair specimens of the ministers of God in this country, but I am persuaded that numbers of well-meaning men have been led away by the thought that the people can only be interested by sensational and topical sermons, dealing with the questions of the hour, and vieing with the Sunday newspaper with its startling headings. They do not realise that the religious and moral nature of man is everywhere and always the same, needing that truth which our God has so richly stored in Scripture.

We are receiving from every quarter tidings of blessing which has resulted from the recent meeting, and surely a stream of influence will pass in ever-increasing volume through this land. Too often the pastors of churches who find their work declining send for the evangelist to assist them to pull things together, much as the extra horse is supplied to the tram car when it comes to the hill: instead of realising that the revival can only begin in a revived church, and the evangelist's vocation is not so much with the Church, as to lead her devoted and quickened life into fresh channels of influence and usefulness to the unsaved. This mistake, however, is common to us all.

Mr. Moody is enjoying a little much-needed rest. His daughter and her husband are staying with him. His eldest son is to be married to Miss May Whittle next week, and will then take up his residence near Mount Hermon, to superintend that branch of this great work. Each of the young couples is deservedly popular and will carry into their new life the earnest goodwill of all who know them.

This certainly is one of the most favoured spots in the world. There is enough salt here to keep a moderately-sized city pure. The houses of the saints are scattered in every direction, showing taste in the selection of position and architecture. The following have residences here, amongst others:—Mr. Sankey, Dr. Mabie, Dr. Pierson, Mr. Geo. Needham, Dr. Pentecost (who has just arrived), and others. Mr. Moody's home is, however, the centre around which all other luminaries revolve, and it is an attractive spectacle to see him in the evening after tea surrounded by children and friends in the porch of his home, reciting the thrilling and interesting episodes of his marvellous career.

This is my last letter from Northfield, as I hope to sail next week for home, after holding a few meetings in New York, so as to resume my ministry on the second Sunday in September. I have suffered from the heat wave, as most have; but I am better, and thankful that God has prospered my way.

MR. W. SPENCER WALTON,

DIRECTOR OF THE SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.

WITHIN recent years vast fields have been opened up in Africa for the labours of the missionary and the evangelist; and we may surely trace the finger of God in providing for South Africa's increasing spiritual needs by calling into existence, among other agencies, an aggressive undenominational mission at the very time when such a mission was most urgently needed. The mission to which we refer is the "South Africa General Mission"—formerly known as the Cape General Mission—of which the subject of the present sketch is the Director. A brief reference to Mr. Spencer Walton's earlier life and work will not be without interest.

Born at Tulse Hill in 1850, Mr. Walton was converted to God at the age of twenty-two, through attending a revival service in a mission-hall at Brixton, to which he had been invited by his brother, Mr. Eliot Walton, the founder of the Railway Mission. In the year 1881, while staying with a well-known clergyman, whose teaching on the subject of Christian holiness has been blessed to many, Mr. Walton received what he describes as "a filling of the Spirit." This prepared him for the work of an evangelist, and in the following year he joined the Church Parochial Mission Society, under whose auspices he laboured for two years.

A sermon by the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon on the text, "The Lord will provide," led him to leave the Society and to embark, in 1884, on undenominational and independent evangelistic work, in which he continued to labour, with signal blessing, till 1887. In this year he became acquainted with Mrs. Osborn (now Mrs. Osborn-Howe), who had been toiling at Cape Town since 1880. The blessing of God rested on her efforts. Overwork necessitated her return to England in 1887, in order to recruit her health and plead for South Africa, and then God met and answered the desires of her heart. Having met Mr. Walton when he was conducting a mission at Leamington, she earnestly entreated him to take up Gospel work in South Africa. He was led to accept her invitation, and nine months later, on June 5, 1888, sailed for South Africa, in order to undertake an evangelistic mission tour in Cape Colony. He was met on arrival by Rev. Andrew Murray, who had become acquainted with him at the Keswick Convention of 1882, and had then invited him to South Africa. The way, however, was not made plain at that time.

Much blessing followed Mr. Walton's labours in South Africa, and at the close of the tour Mrs. Osborn felt led to offer him her work there as a basis on which to start an unsectarian mission. Rev. Andrew Murray having agreed to become president of the new Mission, Mr. Walton returned to England and threw all his energies into the organisation of the Cape General Mission. Farewell meetings were held in Exeter Hall and at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. On August 15, 1889, a little band of six, consisting of Mr. Spencer Walton and his newly married wife, Mr. Dudley Kidd, Mr. Wilfred Malcomson, Mr. Michael Coates, and Mr. Walklett, set sail for the Cape, followed by the prayers of many who had been led to care for that corner of the field.

Two of that little band, Mrs. Spencer Walton and Mr. Malcomson, were called up higher not many months after their arrival in South Africa. Though difficulties, sorrows and trials beset the Mission from its commencement, and have marked its progress throughout, the workers are able to exclaim, on looking back over the past five years, "What hath God wrought!" The Mission has enjoyed the sympathy and help of the Lord's people in all denominations, and has been privileged to send out workers whose praise has been in all churches, and who are now living "wholly for God" in the Mission field.

On June 20th, 1893, Mr. Spencer Walton was married to Miss Lena Gibson, an earnest Christian worker, and daughter of Mr. James Gibson, of Kelvinside, Glasgow; shortly afterwards he returned to England with his bride, and thence to America, where they were most kindly received by Christian friends in the States. In Canada many new friends were made; Toronto has become quite a centre of help, and will, it is hoped, be the means not only of extending the knowledge of South Africa's needs, but also of furnishing missionary candidates, three of whom have already offered and been accepted by the Council.

Since its amalgamation with the S. E. African Evangelistic Mission (formerly conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Howe), the South African General Mission has lengthened its cords and strengthened its stakes. It now consists of a band of about seventy missionaries, workers, and native evangelists, stationed in Cape Colony and the Transkei, Natal and Zululand, the Transvaal, Swazieland, Basutoland, Vryheid and Pondoland. Many and encouraging are the testimonies that God is blessing the work and workers in the conversion of souls, and in deepening the spiritual life of the churches.

Want of space prevents our giving any detailed account of the work now being carried on by the Mission, or of the many open doors which are still waiting to be entered; but this will be found in a booklet by Mr. Walton, entitled "The History of the South Africa General Mission," which has recently been published. Other works by Mr. Walton are, "Rest and Victory," "The Palace of the King," and "Consecration—What is it?" A series of Bible-readings on the book of Ruth, which first appeared in the pages of The South African Pioneer from the pen of Mr. Walton, are about to be published in book form.

Meetings to bid farewell to Mr. and Mrs. Walton, Mr. G. B. Howe, and a party of seven new workers, were to be held in the Lower Exeter Hall yesterday, September 5. The missionaries embark in the Grantully Castle, which leaves Southampton on September 8.

THE SABBATH IN WALES.—A correspondent writes: "The railways and steamboats plying on summer Sundays between places in England and the Welsh seaside resorts, together with cycling, have greatly marred the quietude and the sacredness of the Lord's Day enjoyed years ago in Wales. The Sunday closing of public-houses continues to be a great blessing in the Principality, but intoxicants can be obtained at the railway refreshment-rooms by persons showing tickets for their departure or arrival."

Who Are Israel?—1.

A REPLY.

BY REV. DAVID BARON.

At great cost, after centuries of darkness, as a result of the great Reformation movement, which liberated the Word of God from the chains of tradition and scholasticism, the Church of Christ has at last, within this century, arrived at a certain amount of what is called "Dispensational" or "Prophetic Truth." But when the vague "spiritualising" or phantomising system of interpreting the prophetic Scriptures gave way to what is in truth a more spiritual and at the same time rational principle, by which the primary literal, or what may be called concrete basis of Scripture, is first ascertained before it is used for the manifold application of which it is capable, it followed as a natural consequence that the true position of the Jewish people in the revealed purpose of God should be recognised and acknowledged. I am, I think, within the limits of fact when I state that the revival of evangelical interest in, and love for the Jew within this century, has had its origin and has been chiefly sustained in what Dr. Chalmers approvingly called, "the literalities" of Scripture.

Within this century especially, continuous and persevering efforts, rich in results and also in reflex blessing to the Church herself, have been made for the evangelisation of Israel, but it is a notorious fact that those who have thus prayed and wept and toiled for the salvation of the Jew were, and are generally, those who not only believed thoroughly and without reservation that the Bible from Genesis to Revelation is the Word of God, but also that Israel is still God's nation, and that although set aside for a time, that nation has still a future before it, and that the Lord Jesus Christ was made "a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God," neither to annul nor to transfer, but "to confirm the promises given to the fathers."

In fact, it was the acceptance of this principle of "literalities" in interpreting Scripture which fitted Evangelical Christians of this century for the work of evangelising the Jews. Dr. Andrew Bonar and Robert Murray McCheyne, on their return from the famous "Mission of Inquiry to the Jews," stated in their report to the General Assembly, that "anyone undertaking work among the Jews ought to be well grounded in prophecy, and should be one who fully and thoroughly adopts the principles of literal interpretation, both in order to give him hope and perseverance, and to fit him for reasoning with Jews." The Jews feel their dispersion to be literal, and therefore if you explain unfulfilled prophecy by saying it is spiritual, they reckon you a kind of infidel. If you say a wolf does not mean a wolf but a bad man, that "Zion" means the Church, and "redeeming Israel," not redeeming Israel but something else, and yet try to convince them of the truth of Christianity from the Bible, they think that you yourself do not believe the Bible.

Apart from all other grounds and justification for the literal handling of Scripture, which recognises Israel as still the centre of God's purpose in relation to the nations of the earth, the blessing which has been graciously vouchsafed by God on the work of Jewish evangelisation, which, as I have said, is so bound up with this principle of interpretation, seems to me a mark of God's good pleasure upon it.

In certain circles, however, there has always existed an undercurrent of dissatisfaction at the position thus claimed for the Jews. Even brethren otherwise well instructed in the oracles of God, and using such expressions as "Dispensational Truth," etc., under the mistaken notion that to concede the position of the Jew in the economy of God claimed by this principle of interpretation, "is to rob the Christian of his heritage in the Old Testament," have from time to time tried to show that the name "Israel" does not belong to Israel at all, but to believers, and that practically the promises made to the nation are transferred to the Church. "The truth is," says Mr. H. D. Brown, "we are not Gentiles at all, but Israelites (i.e., we believers in the Lord Jesus Christ all over the world); we are the real Israel of God, not merely a kind of spiritual Israel with a separate position, separate privileges," etc.

His grounds for this statement are briefly these—(a) Rom. ix. 6-8, "For they are not all Israel who are of Israel, neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children, but in Isaac shall thy seed be called—that is, they that are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God, but the children of promise, these are counted for the seed"; (b) The Lord's words, "The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof," and again, "If ye were Abraham's children ye would do the works of Abraham"; (c) The words of John the Baptist, "Think not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham to our father, for I say unto you that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." "Thus," Mr. Brown sums up triumphantly, "prophet, apostle, and our Lord Himself distinctly declare that those who were only 'the children of the flesh'—that is, the Jewish race—were not counted for the seed, but as Paul by the Holy Spirit declares "unto the churches of Galatia [Gentile churches they would now be called], 'If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs.'"

Instead of dealing specifically with these statements, which seem to carry with them a certain amount of plausibility on a mere superficial acquaintance with the subject, I want to elucidate one or two points which will be helpful to a proper understanding of the subject.

I. From the beginning of the history of the "apostate Jewish race," there has never lacked within it a faithful "Remnant," the inheritors of the unconditional covenants and promises made to the fathers. The line of faith in Israel was never broken. Sometimes it was very thin: "Except Jehovah of Hosts had left unto us a very small remnant," says Isaiah, "we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah." At times out of the whole nation there may only be found, as in Elijah's time, 7000 men "reserved" by God for Himself, and kept by his grace from bowing their knees to Baal; but still that little handful was "the Israel of God," handers-on of the promises to those that should follow them, and themselves constituting a pledge of the fulfilment of the larger promise in a time yet to come, when "Thy people shall be all righteous, and inherit the land for ever," or, to use New Testament language, when "all Israel shall be saved." It was no new doctrine, or language likely to be misunderstood by Israelites, when Paul reminded them that "They are not all Israel which are of Israel, neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children, but in Isaac shall thy seed be called."

This truth is proclaimed with equal force by all the Old Testament prophets, who no more confound the Israel of God with the "apostate Jewish race" to which they belonged, than the Apostles confound the Church of God with the apostate Gentile nations to which her members may happen variously to belong. Here is a striking instance from Isaiah: "And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains, and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there. But ye are they that forsake the Lord, that forget my holy mountains; therefore will I number you to the sword," etc.

BRIGHTON.—In connection with the Evangelistic Mission, General Sir Robert Phayre, G.C.B., has for the past month been delivering a series of lectures on "Modern Infidelity and Primitive Christianity" in the Athenæum Hall. Large audiences have attended the meetings, and great interest has been manifest throughout. Mr. Mallinson, of Windsor, takes the services during September. EDWARD HURDITCH.

MR. TELFORD AT MILE END.

June, July, and August are the most trying months in the year for evangelistic work in the East of London. Yet Mr. and Mrs. Telford have just finished one of the most successful missions of three months ever held in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. It is the first time in the history of the mission that any evangelist has taken thirteen weeks consecutively. Mr. Telford has been wonderfully used of God in the conversion of hundreds; and, humanly speaking, his success is to be attributed to his earnest appeals for immediate decision for Christ after his preaching by asking those in his congregation to stand up and publicly declare their determination to follow the Master. No human power could persuade men and women thus to testify, but scores have done so during the past three months. Not only have sinners been saved, but a large number of backsliders have been restored, and God's people have been encouraged, refreshed, and blessed.

A new departure was made by Mr. Telford, which proved a great blessing. Meetings were held in the vestibule of the hall, a large octagon holding 600 persons, which forms the lobby to the great hall. These late hour meetings, as they were called, have been a decided feature of the work. These meetings were inaugurated on the first night of Mr. Telford's mission and continued throughout with very great interest and blessing.

Immediately after the first service, about 9.15 p.m., Mr. Telford would leave the large hall with those of the congregation that remained, and take up his position on a stand provided for speakers in the lobby, Mrs. Telford presiding at the harmonium, assisted by several ladies and gentlemen with violins. The sound of the music caught the ear of the multitude that can always be seen passing and repassing the Great Assembly Hall, and scores are attracted into the vestibule, till the crowd inside are standing closely packed, the audience stretching down the wide passage right out on to the pavement of the street.

Mr. Telford, from his stand, would call for men and women to give the story of their conversion and compress it if possible into three minutes. One after another came forward and from the stand told in a simple natural, and yet with power, the way in which it pleased God to call them to Himself.

Mr. Telford received help at these meetings from Lord Radstock, Hon. Mary Waldegrave, Hon. Elizabeth Waldegrave, Captain Mandeville, R.N., Captain Hamilton, and several American ministers and evangelists. Mr. Charrington, who returned from Australia in the midst of the meetings, has given some very powerful talks on several occasions. On the 6700th night of consecutive services in the Great Hall, Mr. Telford brought his three months' mission to a close. The area of the Great Hall was filled, and a number had to stand at the back. Many came at great inconvenience to bid farewell to the man who had been instrumental in leading them to Christ.

IMPERIAL MISSION HALL, HANLEY.

DEAR SIR,—For twelve years this work has been carried on in the centre of the Potteries District. God has blessed and used it. Scores of saved souls have gone home to glory, attributing their conversion to its means. Hundreds, now attached to other communions, here and in many parts of the globe, were dealt with as inquirers in its meetings.

This present year has witnessed thousands of domiciliary visits for invitation and prayer, hundreds of open-air services, and dozens of cottage meetings, with many personal decisions. All this, in addition to the usual and incessant efforts in the way of Gospel services of all sorts, day by day, in both halls of the Mission. For the better part of the year, besides morning and afternoon Sabbath-school, a children's special service has been conducted in the smaller hall, simultaneously with the adult mission service in the large hall. Nor has social effort been neglected, and, to the full extent possible, rescue cases (all too prevalent hereabouts) have been dealt with.

A movement is on foot to organise the rescue work more thoroughly and to establish Rescue Homes, so that the blood of a crowd of lost girls may not lie at our door. Meanwhile, the immediately pressing need is the fund in connection with the twelfth anniversary of the Mission. A considerable sum is required.—Yours most faithfully,

LANCELOT MIDDLETON, Superintendent.

THE OUTLOOK IN IRELAND.

(From a Correspondent.)

The brutal ferocity displayed towards the open-air evangelists must have puzzled many who are not familiar with Ireland's past and present history. Open-air preaching is attended with difficulty and danger in all Roman Catholic countries. Men trained from their earliest years to regard an ordained ministry as an essential to Christian work will regard the preaching of the Gospel by "laymen" as an impertinence and a profanation. Besides, Roman Catholics regard a consecrated place of worship as the only place in which the great question of religion may be reverentially discussed. Some of the daily papers have remarked the blank astonishment depicted on the faces of the crowd when they discovered that the preachers were a band of young laymen.

Then it must not be forgotten that the Pope has in Ireland a standing army of about five thousand priests. When the mot d'ordre has come from the Bishop that wolves meditate a descent upon the Papal fold, every priest goes to work in a systematic fashion. He has the Confessional at his command, and will not fail to use it. In each parish confraternities of men and women are carefully organised and maintained. One of their rules is the obligation of weekly or fortnightly confession. Each band of male and female devotees is marshalled by a leader or head. Records of confessions, communions, attendance at meetings, payment of subscriptions, and private addresses of the members are kept, so that the priest is able to see at a glance the weak or the strong points in the organisation. Hence, when a band of young evangelists set about open-air work, they, especially if Englishmen, have not the faintest conception of the strength and quality of the forces arrayed against them. There is usually a preliminary meeting in some central town, and as much publicity as possible is given to the project. It is to be war against Babylon, and she seems so quiet that victory is a foregone conclusion. But Babylon is watching with keenest vision all the time. It is like an invading army penetrating a hostile country. There is no enemy to be seen. Neither scout nor smoke of watch-fire is visible, and victory seems a certainty. But, suddenly, as at the whistle of Roderick Dhu, the whole land seems instinct with life. Enemies appear like a cloud of Eastern locusts. Raw recruits are struck with panic, and even trained veterans deem discretion the better part of valour.

But by far the most important factor in the opposition to open-air preaching in Ireland is the deep and bitter anti-English feeling almost universal among the native Irish. When the evangelists appeared on their usual preaching ground the other day in Cork, an excursion party from Limerick happened to pass by. With the cry, "Remember Limerick," they set upon the evangelists, hitting right and left, some hundreds of infuriated men sweeping before them half-a-dozen inoffensive young Christians.

Now this battle-cry, "Remember Limerick," affords a key to the Irish problem. In the wars between William of Orange and James II. Limerick was the last stronghold of the Jacobite army. It fell, and the Irish troops, who took service under Louis XIV., went into every battle with the war-cry, "Remember Limerick," on their lips. In the dark days since that time the Church of Rome in Ireland has cunningly confused religion and patriotism in the minds of her followers here. When her supremacy was attacked she fanned anew the dying embers of religious and racial hate. "England has robbed you of your nationality," she screamed. "Now she tries to rob you of your faith." She acts in the same way to-day. She conveniently ignores the very plain historical truth that it was Adrian IV., by the aid of Henry II., who robbed Ireland of the comparatively pure and evangelical religion preached to the Irish by St. Patrick, and introduced Roman supremacy.

Except as an assertion of a legal right, it is doubtful if any good result has followed the preaching of the Gospel in the Irish streets. There are some instances in which opposition has been warned off by orders from the Romish bishop, but every door of access had been previously barred. The preachers are permitted a free hand because outrages upon them were estranging English political sympathies, but, as far as visible results are concerned, they might as well be preaching in Tadmor in the wilderness. Then all the existing organisations are paralysed. Inquiring Roman Catholics are frightened back into Rome and compelled to cut all connection with Protestant friends. Doors hitherto open to the visitor and colporteur are shut, so that shrewd observers are constrained to admit that open-air preaching is a veritable blessing to the priests.

Nevertheless, there is ample room for energy and sanctified enthusiasm in the Irish mission field. Illiteracy and prejudice are formidable foes, but Irish Christian workers are not discouraged. The various agencies are perfecting their preparations for renewed and increased energy during the winter. Among other evidences of an advance movement we find that Rev. Thomas Connellan has engaged the large hall of the Christian Union Buildings for evangelistic meetings, specially intended for Roman Catholics, during the months of October, November, and December. Mr. Connellan will speak each Sunday at the four o'clock afternoon meeting in the large hall, and will again conduct a prayer and inquiry meeting in the same building at eight o'clock each evening. He is also arranging for meetings in the principal towns in the South and West, and earnestly begs for the prayers of all God's children upon the movement. Several converted Roman Catholic workers are ready and anxious to go among their late co-religionists and tell what marvellous things God has done for them. Let us pray that God may abundantly bless a movement for which much prayer is daily offered from Irish lips.

The Irish Church Missions, the Colportage Societies, the Scripture Readers' and Evangelisation Societies, the Dublin Medical Mission, and many kindred organisations are all preparing for fresh endeavour. Let the seed be sown broadcast, so that, even should one-fourth only ever ripen to harvest, the result will still be a mighty ingathering for the Master.

TENT MISSION AT HARROGATE.

Mr. S. McCracken, assisted by three missionary students from Dr. Guinness's Institute, Harley House, has conducted a Tent Mission here with manifest blessing to visitors and residents alike. The Mission was organised by Christians of all denominations, who united with whole-hearted earnestness under the presidency of Sir Matthew Dodsworth, Bart., to make the necessary arrangements. By the kind permission of the Town Council, a splendid site was secured.

The tent, which would hold from 400 to 500 people, was filled the first day (Sunday, August 5), afternoon and evening, and this attendance continued night after night during the three weeks of the Mission. Mr. McCracken's addresses were characterised by unflinching faithfulness and tender, loving sympathy. There was no attempt to tabulate results, but the number of inquirers' cards asked for gave some idea of the extent of the blessing received.

In addition to the evening meetings, a united prayer-meeting was held each morning, and Bible-classes on most afternoons. One evening meeting was specially for men, and one for women (the latter addressed by Miss Bright, of Bristol). Children's meetings were conducted by the students, who also helped much by house-to-house visitation.

The Mission closed with an enthusiastic foreign missionary meeting, when Mr. McCracken gave interesting details of the lines on which the Harley Institute Training College for Foreign Missionaries is conducted, revealing to a crowded audience the universality of its work, embracing in the students received members of every Christian Church, and sending forth workers in the foreign field to every Protestant denomination. INNS FOR WORKING MEN.—The provision of inns for working men has not entered largely into the schemes of English philanthropists. The practice in Germany is described by The Sunday at Home, in one of a series of papers on "Religious Life" in that country. One most useful branch of Christian work appears to be that by which it is sought to cover the empire with a network of inns for working men (Herberge zur Heimath), in which good but cheap accommodation is offered, and opportunity afforded for religious and intellectual instruction, although it is a rule that the lessons and duties of religion shall not be forced on the guests. Spirits and gambling are of course absolutely prohibited. At the present time there are 1100 or 1200 stations offering food to men who are willing to do some work —wood-chopping, stone-breaking, etc. Thus by means of Herbergen stations and colonies, it is hoped that gradually vagabondage will be stamped out, and working men properly cared for on their wanderings in search of work.

AN OBJECT LESSON.

I feel entrusted with a plea from the Master himself, to-day, on behalf of the "Children's Country Holiday Fund," which I received through an object lesson I can never forget. A friend and I were recently sitting in a railway-carriage at a small country station in Sussex, waiting further progression on our journey, till the up-train to London should arrive, and thus clear the way for ours to proceed, as the line is a single one just there.

We had noticed, as our train stopped, that there was an unusual noise in some of the carriages near us, and very soon the reason manifested itself, by the general turn-out on to the platform of a number of small children, boys and girls, with their leader. Our first remark was, "a school treat," but no, for the children were all, more or less-laden with brown-paper parcels, bundles, etc., and some of them looked so pale and sickly (one even with her head tightly bandaged), that we felt we must be mistaken in our first surmise.

Just opposite our carriage was a rosebush covered with flowers, in various stages of perfection. Our interest deepened, as one of the boys, having discovered it, went and fetched the others to "come and look." It was pathetic to see that little wondering crowd, so curious, and so interested. One small hand was almost immediately stretched out to pick "a beauty," but others caught hold of the uplifted arm and drew it back. Some of the petals, however, had fallen upon the ground, and these were carefully gathered up, and appropriated. I saw one boy in the little group, touch very tenderly an opening bud and examine it minutely all round.

Now was our chance (as the children were so near us) to ask who they were and what they were going to do. One little fellow pointed to a pink ticket he was wearing, and said they had been sent down to stay in the country by "The Holiday Fund!" How glad we were that those poor little white faces would soon be rosy and sunburnt, and that their advent into the country had taken place on a lovely day!

But our interest increased still further as we suddenly discovered there was another band of little ones on the opposite platform, although we knew they could not belong to the same as on our side, for they were waiting for the London train. Besides, though they had bundles, they had flowers too; their brown hands and arms were full of them; and they had rosy cheeks instead of pale ones. One dear little man was triumphantly carrying a tiny sheaf of corn, and they all looked so happy with their treasures!

Soon the London train came up, and we saw the little company (under the watchful care of a kind-faced woman) making their way into it, anxious, no doubt, for the moment when they should put their trophies into "mother's" hands. So we were able to read plainly the meaning of this side of the picture too; namely, that these children were a return party of the same "Holiday Fund" going home, in order that the other little company might take its place.

Does not this object lesson speak more conclusively than many words of the untold good the various Country Holiday Funds are doing for many a City home, and shall we each not give something at least to one of the many branches of this same work? Charlotte Murray.

AN AFRICAN PRINCE ON AFRICAN MISSIONS.—A few evenings ago, a crowded public meeting was held in the Wesleyan Church, Plaistow, to hear an address from Prince Ademuyiwa, of Jebu Remo. The Prince, although heir to a kingdom, is a Gospel preacher, and has been for twenty years. He was the founder and supporter of the mission to the Krumen on the coast, and also of the mission in his own country. Rev. Bryan Roe, chairman of the Lagos district, West African Wesleyan Mission, having given some account of the work in Africa, Prince Ademuyiwa delivered a stirring address. The English, he said, had done well for Africa. They had sent the Bible to raise Africa to take her place among the nations of the earth; but they had brought the fire-water in the other hand. Fire-water was ruining his country. Let the people of England move Parliament to set a heavy duty on it. Let them make a demonstration, and he was perfectly sure Sir Wilfrid Lawson would lead the procession. He hoped they would be moved to cry down the liquor traffic, which was hindering Christianity in his land.

NOTES FROM LOWESTOFT.

Sojourners at this popular seaside resort have found no lack of active Christian service to engage their interest during the past month. The presence in the town of the venerable Dr. Ryle, Bishop of Liverpool, has afforded opportunity to many hundreds of visitors to hear the powerful utterances of this staunch upholder of evangelical truth. He has preached in St. John's Church (Rev. H. S. Hume, vicar), also in the parish church of Pakefield—a village rather less than two miles distant, of which the rector is Rev. Lewis Price, a veritable father of his people.

The Children's Special Service Mission is in full swing, under the direction of Mr. E. Arrowsmith, aided by some University men. Not the children only, but the parents, too, find in the daily services food for reflection and for edification; and while the amphitheatre of banked-up sand is well filled with little hearers, the esplanade above, being within easy earshot, boasts a goodly crowd of adults, who listen to the very direct utterances of Mr. Arrowsmith and his fellow-helpers. Games in the afternoons, and occasional lantern processions in the evenings, add zest to the gatherings from the juvenile point of view. One afternoon Rev. H. S. Hume kindly gave the use of the vicarage garden for a meeting of parents and friends, to whom Bishop Ryle, who presided, Mr. Arrowsmith, and other speakers indicated the purpose of the Mission, and described some of the results which had encouraged the workers in many parts of the world. Attention was drawn to the important fact that some of the ablest workers now in the foreign field (under the C.M.S. and other societies) received much of their early training for Gospel work in connection with the C.S.S.M.

Another feature of interest here is the work among the fishermen, who in great numbers make Lowestoft their headquarters. In the Sailors' Bethel, Mr. Johnson has laboured for nearly forty years, during which period multitudes have arisen to call him blessed. The Sunday evening service is full of brightness and vigour, and the singing—well, converted fishermen can sing. Special services have recently been held by Mr. J. Albinson (late of the Theatrical Mission), a young evangelist, full of promise in the work of the Lord, who, with his devoted wife, had the joy of leading several to Christ. Last Sunday Mr. T. B. Miller, Director of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, was here to conduct the meeting, at which glad testimony to the power of the Lord to heal was borne by some of the fishermen present. At 8 p.m. a similar service was held on board the Queen Victoria, the hospital ship of the Mission, which is in harbour just now on an evangelistic tour round the coast (as noted in last week's issue). On Tuesday and Wednesday a bazaar in aid of the work was held on board, opened by Bishop Ryle, in the absence through bereavement of the Mayor of Lowestoft. The fish market in the early forenoon is one of the sights of the town, and brings home to the beholder a sense of the obligation placed upon him by these brave fellows who go out with their lives in their hands to supply the material needs of the community. Very rough some of them are in their natural state, but they make grand Christians when their hearts are softened by the influence of the Holy Spirit. Mr. G. A. Hutchison, editor of Toilers of the Deep, is on board to show visitors over the ship, as she visits various ports on the south and west coasts; and local friends will do well to obtain an insight into the work of this important Mission.

The Salvation Army and the various places of worship appear to be well alive to the opportunities open to them in providing for the spiritual necessities of residents and visitors, and several out-door bands are busy on Sabbath and week nights declaring the unsearchable riches of Christ to all who pass by.

JEWS IN MILE END.—Mr. Neugewirtz, of the London City Mission, whose centre of work is at Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, writes: "The most important branch is the house to house visitation. This was at first very difficult, for the Jews looked upon me more as a spy than a friend, but many of them now give one a hearty welcome. I find a great deal of distress, and many look for help, which occasionally, by the kindness of friends, I have been enabled to bestow." Communications to the missionary should be addressed, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E.

The Book World.

The Royal Mail Picture Book (1s. Sunday School Union) will delight young folks. The pictures are bright, and the story of the postal service is admirably told in rhyme.

Truth: Daily Precepts for a Year. By G. M. Coxeter. (1s. G. Stoneman.) A compilation of terse sayings, setting forth various phases of truth and obedience thereto. As a daily companion it cannot but prove helpful and instructive.

A Christmas Tale and other Poems. By E. E. Gillett. (E. Stock.) Verses of varied merit, many of them pleasing and tuneful. The singer has gone to swell the choir above, and her sons have collected her pieces as a loving tribute to her memory.

Autumn Leaves from the Banks of the Severn. By A. L. Westcombe. (2s. 6d. E. Hicks, jun.) A collection of songs and poems on varied themes, many being inspired by the beauties of nature, and not a few of them very pleasing in tone and feeling.

The Christian Alliance Birthday Book. (4s. Snow & Co.) Miss Shephard has culled from the writings of Rev. A. B. Simpson pointed sentences and sayings for a year's meditations. Many doubtless will value these. The book is prettily bound.

Stories of Medical Missions. By G. Saunders, M.D., C.B. (6d. Partridge.) From the experience of a lifetime in such service, this veteran has gleaned a number of telling incidents likely to stir fresh interest in the work of medical missions. We trust they will be widely read.

Gilead Guards. By Mrs. O. W. Scott. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) A charming story, simple yet telling, of war-times in a New England town. Cecil Wilford (2s.), by E. M. Edwards, is a pleasant story of a soldier's son, a little fellow who goes the right way and leads others to follow.

The Discipline of the Soul: Some of its Aims and Methods. By R. Waddy Moss. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly) This addition to the "Life Indeed" series contains fourteen discourses on subjects of supreme practical importance. Mr. Moss is a teacher as well as a counsellor; he opens up God's Word, and winningly urges its application to life and experience.

Our Bubble.—The September part of this magazine, of which Dr. Barnardo is the editor, is bright and instructive. There are many articles of general interest and attractiveness, and the artistic merit of the illustrations, whether in colours or in black and white, is not the least of its striking features. (weekly 1d., monthly 6d. Offices, 279, Strand, W.C.)

Our Blue Jackets. By Sophia G. Wintz (Hodder & Stoughton). A new and enlarged edition of a book which has met with much acceptance, and has won many friends for Miss Weston's noble work among the men and boys of the Royal Navy. We wish it, as it deserves, continued usefulness and success. The story of the Mission is brought down to date.

The Credibility of the Christian Religion. By Samuel Smith, M.P. (Marshall Brothers). A new edition of a little work which long ago gained a footing as "a plain, practical, and popular answer to the rationalistic objections to Christianity now so common." It ought to be studied by all who have to meet such difficulties, while it may profitably be placed in the hands of young men tossed and tempted by doubts.

Recitations for Little People. By Mrs. L. Shorey. (1s. George Stoneman.) In nursery and home, as well as schools and bands of hope, these pieces, from a well-known pen, will be very welcome. Such verses carry instruction as well as brightness into the minds of the young. The fact that the book has been placed upon the requisition list of the London School Board, should certainly commend it to parents and educationalists in general.

Illustrations from the Sermons of Alexander Maclaren, D.D., edited and selected by James Henry Martyn. (3s. 6d. Alexander & Shepheard.). This is a volume of gems of thought, such as abound in Dr. Maclaren's discourses. While calculated to instruct all who read it, the book will prove of special service to preachers and teachers, in quest of illustrative points and incidental embellishments. Full indexes add to the value of this welcome selection.

Half-Hours with Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress is a work of sterling value, by Canon Burbidge, of Liverpool. In form it is a series of lectures, thirty-one in number; in substance it is an outline and exposition of Bunyan's matchless allegory. Loyal to Evangelical religion, and full of earnest purpose, these "Half-Hours" will have charms for young and old alike; while for ministers and others who may wish to delineate Christian's pilgrimage the book will prove of real service. The work has our hearty commendation. (5s. Nisbet & Co.)

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. are issuing a new series of Fourpenny stories for the young, bound in cloth and nicely illustrated. None need lack pleasing yet cheap gift books for scholars when these are to be had. The set before us includes: The Crab's Umbrella, Robert's Trust, The Woodman, Barrington Boys, Two Lillies, and Sunnyside Cottage. We have also a set of Sixpenny Toy books, in bright colours and attractive pictures, for the tiny folk. These are: Holiday A.B.C., Pet Animals A.B.C., Bible Pictures, and Book of Toys.

Messrs. Partridge & Co. issue, tastefully printed on a neat card, Sarah Doudney's well-known hymn, The Christian's "Good Night."

Three Lights; and "Alone . . . Yet Not Alone." (Partridge.) Two helpful booklets by Lady Beaujolois Dent, full of suggestive thoughts and comforting reminders for tried Christians.

God's Sheep, by C. Willson, is a booklet containing many thoughts of a comforting and encouraging character, reprinted from our columns. (1d. From the Author, Ridley House Y.W.C.A., Swanage.)

Mr. H. R. Allenson announces the second volume of the Myrtle-street Pulpit. (3s. 6d.) He has also just issued an address to business men by the late Bishop Phillips Brooks, entitled, "The Life with God." (6d.)

The latest monthly letter of the Protestant Alliance is entitled Popes not Successors of Peter, and its pages are an armoury of weapons for such as are engaged in the conflict with Romanism. (1d. Protestant Alliance, 9, Strand, W.C.)

Mr. G. W. McKane, of Keswick, publishes a sixpenny packet of twelve assorted Messages from the Tent, by Lady Hope. They are printed on tinted paper, envelope size; the titles are striking, and the contents pointed and of sterling interest.

Broad Norfolk, a companion to Messrs. Jarrold's sixpenny guide-books to East Anglia, contains a number of interesting articles and letters on the dialect of Norfolk, reprinted from The Eastern Daily Press. The little book is entertaining and instructive.

The new issue of Emily Headland's "Brief Sketches of C.M.S. Workers" is devoted to The Right Rev. Samuel Gobat, D.D., Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem, and C.M.S. missionary from 1825 to 1845. This little work is worthy of the excellent series to which it belongs. (2d. Nisbet & Co.)

A fourth edition is in the press of My Lord and I, a melody dedicated by permission to the Duchess of York, and sold for the benefit of the Dutch Church Orphanage in Cape Town. The words are by Mrs. Shorey; and they have been set to an old Huguenot melody. (1s. 3d. Weekes & Co., Hanover-street, Regent-street.)

MESSRS. WEAVER AT THE EDINBURGH CASTLE.

Our souls are filled with praise at the continued favour and presence of God in these meetings. The last week has been one of happy reaping night by night, many souls confessing to have received salvation. Sunday was the commencement of the young evangelists' second month amongst us. The morning meeting was a most inspiring season spent in the Master's presence. A simple straight powerful address on soul-winning founded in Matthew iv. 19. At night over 3000 souls gathered together. Mr. Frank Weaver sang "Oh, what shall I do to be saved?" and "It was for me that Jesus died." The address by Mr. Bewley Weaver was founded on Galatians vi. 7. When the invitation was given the inquiry rooms were soon filled with men and women.

Samuel E. Burrow, Secretary.

A HOME FOR AGED CHRISTIANS.—Miss F Weatherley writes from Highfield House, near Royston, Cambs:—"My sister, Mrs. Roland, and myself have taken a farmhouse down here, with the view of making it a Home for aged saints, who may be in need of a quiet residence and care. The terms will be low, so as to meet the needs of the poor. While waiting for further guidance on points of detail, we are prepared to receive motherless girls or young children into the Home."

SAILORS IN DUNKIRK.—Friends of sailors have often pointed out in our columns the deadly traps set for British seamen in continental ports on their arrival after long voyages. It is most satisfactory to learn that the Board of Trade has sent an agent to Dunkirk to meet the new arrivals, and to send them home without delay, making their wages payable in London. The Dunkirk Journal describes the scene as dreadful when the crimps saw the crew of the first ship thus treated beyond their power. The confusion and excitement of the gang were worth seeing; they were howling in all sorts of jargons. The same journal warmly congratulates the British consul at Dunkirk, to whose pressing solicitations in official circles is due this much-needed reform.

MRS. SPURGEON'S BOOK FUND.—In September 1 issue of The Sword and Trowel, Mrs. Spurgeon says: "The Lord is still approving the service by making it a constant blessing to his servants, and the fruits of its gracious ministry are as real and abundant as ever. Only those who have suffered as 'bookless ministers' can understand the rapturous delight with which a parcel of precious volumes is received by them; or how rich a poor pastor feels when the helps to the study of God's Word, which he has coveted so long and so earnestly, at length lie ready to his hand. The books are rejoiced over as 'great spoil,' knees are bent in thankfulness, tears sometimes drop on the bindings, and many a grateful song of praise goes up to God that He, in his mercy, has enabled me to provide for them in just the way their deep necessity required."

Letters to the Editor.

RITUALISM.

SIR,—In reply, permit me to say—(1) It is quite possible that an unconverted "Ritualist" may use ritual to teach "deadly sacramentarian superstitions." All I maintained was that the chief cause of the revival among converted Ritualists was their adoption of Evangelical preaching.

(2) If the Church Army evangelist is working in a High Church parish, he is expected to lead his converts to attend the parish church, and surely these churches need the simple Gospel preaching and living quite as much as the Low churches. None but an earnest vicar would invite our devoted evangelists and mission nurses.

(3) I submit that the true "Evangelical" preaches Jesus, crucified and risen, as a present and full Saviour, rather than argues and defines with minute exactness the atonement, and justification by faith. The letter may kill, but the spirit, through a loving Christ, is bound to give life.

(4) I implore my Evangelical brethren to beware lest they hand over to the Ritualists the kernel, and retain but the shell.—Yours faithfully,

W. CARLILE,
Hon. Chief Sec., Church Army.

[We give space to Mr. Carlile's reply, which, as will be seen, does not at all meet various points raised in the correspondence. A number of other letters on this subject have reached us, but we have not space for further discussion.—ED.]

SCHISM AND UNION.

DEAR SIR,—There is much in the article on "Heresy, Schism, and Reunion," by J. P. G., in your number of August 23rd, deserving careful consideration. There is a union to be earnestly cultivated, as being according to the revealed mind of God, and there is a union in which appears little of such spirituality.

One source of confusion of thought is the lack of definition of terms. The word Church is used in many senses, not all Scriptural, sometimes without warning, in the same paper, or by the same writer. One of these very common uses of the word should be avoided and even protested against; for it partakes, however unintentionally, of the assumption of those who boasted (1 Cor. i. 12), "I am of Christ," and it quite as much "divides the Christ." It seems to say, "I am a churchman and speak to churchmen; all you others are something else." May one ask, what else? Is it too much to ask some of your contributors, for the one Lord's sake, to avoid this confusion?

The very word "churchman" has no Scriptural warrant, and in these difficult times, when we have to walk so circumspectly, it is not enough to say that what one means is quite understood. Is there other churchmanship than union as a member in the body of Christ? Is there anyone thus united to his body who is not a churchman? J. G. HALLIDAY.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

DEAR SIR,—In the article on Dr. Dowkontt in your issue of August 30, the position and aims of medical missionary training institutions in Britain are referred to in a manner which I fear is likely to mislead some of your many readers as to the work which these institutions are nobly carrying on.

For many years the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, which was founded in 1841, has supplied the various missionary societies with fully-trained medical missionaries, both regarding their medical and their missionary training. Taking, first, their medical training, the Society provides its students with the entire five years' medical curriculum taken by the students at the Edinburgh University or the Royal College of Physicians, and enables them to gain the legal diplomas to practise medicine and surgery before leaving the Institution. As regards missionary training, we have a Home Medical Mission in the Cowgate of Edinburgh, where last year over 10,000 individual patients were seen, and where the students, working under the superintendent, are entirely responsible for the evangelistic work carried on in connection therewith. This includes daily Gospel addresses to the patients, a Children's Church, Arab Sunday School, Adult Bible Class, Evangelistic Meetings, Lodging House work, Young Men's Association, Christian Endeavour Society, District Medical visiting by the senior students resident in the Institution, etc.

Every session, also, various leading ministers of the city are in the habit of giving our students short courses of lectures on theological and Scriptural subjects, so that in every way they are fitted to become, not pastors of churches, but missionary evangelists, who can also skilfully deal with the bodily diseases and ailments of those to whom they are sent.

The Society is perfectly unsectarian, having on its directorate and amongst its students men from all the Protestant Churches. It has supplied the Church Missionary Society, the London Missionary Society, the various Presbyterian Missionary Societies, etc., with some of their very best medical missionaries.

I may add that my friend Dr. James L. Maxwell has a somewhat similar institution in London.—Yours sincerely, E. SARGOOD FRY, M.B.,
Secretary and Superintendent Edinburgh
Medical Missionary Society.

NURSERY GOVERNESSES.

DEAR SIR,—As a former nursery governess of many years' experience, I would like most heartily to endorse the plea of "M. S." in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN. On one point especially I would earnestly solicit the consideration of those of your readers who have in their employ a "nursery governess" or "mother's help." To very many of these, Sunday is, in name only, the "day of rest."

I speak from sad experience in saying that in truly Christian households I have had occasion to dread the Sabbath Day, which brought a more wearisome task than any other day in the week. The requirements on that day were to prepare the children for morning service, and take them there and back, to keep them quiet and happy the afternoon long, and, very often, to stay in with them from evening service. The children, in the company of the governess the whole week long, are less easily interested and occupied by her than by the fresher hand of a mother or father, who seem strangely forgetful of the intense strain on the weary governess.

Will not our Christian parents bear this in mind next Sabbath Day, and let the weary employée rest an hour or two?—Yours truly, DORA RIDGEWAY.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.—II.

DEAR SIR,—In regard to our work in Travancore, I spoke advisedly, though inexactly, when I said it had been in existence two years. In was in May, 1892, that our first organised attack was made upon the country, some 2000 persons professing conversion in the course of three weeks. Three years previously to this we had established an isolated outpost at Olivers, an estate some seventeen miles from Nagercoil, belonging to Mr. John Cox, a Christian planter and ex-missionary of the L.M. Society. A number of the coolies had been converted, and the work had thus spread to some of the neighbouring villages, but until "two years ago" we had steadily refused invitations of the most pressing character. So far back as 1889 a number of native Christians from Nagercoil travelled forty miles by road to present to me personally a petition signed, so far as I can recollect, by at least fifty leading persons.

Versified and couched in the most touching terms it was recited in the presence of a large native audience. This was followed by further appeals and telegrams. But beyond sending Brigadier Musa Bhai on a flying visit of inquiry we did not see our way to making a combined attack till the time already referred to. Besides this petition from the native Christians of Mr. Allan's own station, we have received and are continually receiving numerous petitions from heathen villages all round. It will thus be seen how completely in the dark Mr. Allan has been regarding the true facts in saying that the only appeals received by us were from Mr. Cox and from "a few malcontents in our L.M. Mission."

With reference to Nagercoil itself, we have, in deference to the feelings of the Mission, abstained from erecting any barracks there up to the present, and have simply occupied it for our headqnarters, owing to its postal and other conveniences. Mrs. Keer in her pamphlet remarks, "the Army have no work proper in Nagercoil, because it is the seat of the London Mission." On the occasion of Miss Booth's visit a meeting was held there, but the pandal was specially constructed for the occasion by the native Christians, amongst whom we have many warm friends.

Regarding the Major's bungalow, Miss Booth writes: "I can't help smiling! I wonder if Mr. Allan has ever been inside it? Of all the old patched-up shanties, that headquarters is one! It has literally what you might call 'no inside'! When I last visited it there were a dozen people living there.'

Referring to the same Brigadier, Musa Bhai writes, "The reason why we engage such a large house (the rent is fifteen rupees—i.e., less than £1 per month) is, first, because it is a divisional centre, where our now more than 100 officers can be gathered for meetings among themselves, and secondly because we have to accommodate visitors, or officers coming to and from other parts of India."

Staff Captain Jackson writes:—"The last house my wife and self and the officers with us had for district headquarters cost a rupee and a half per month (about 1s. 9d. English money). The largest houses in Nagarcoil are those of Mr. Allan and Mr. Duthie" (the L.M. missionaries).

But, of course, the underlying principle in the question of bungalows is not merely their size, nor even their furniture, but the use to which they are put. For headquarters, training homes, resting places for the sick, schools, and other similar purposes, we have no hesitation in engaging large buildings where these may seem necessary or advisable. Occasionally, for reasons of economy, these are used for residential purposes as well, but when we do so no distinction is made between our native and European officers. There is obviously a wide difference between a furnished bungalow inhabited by a single European family, while the natives, Christian or otherwise, are consigned to huts in the compound, and a building where a European Major occupies a bare unfurnished room and is surrounded by a houseful of natives and Europeans wearing the native clothes, eating the native food, and living on a footing of perfect equality.

Regarding the ponies, Staff Captain Jackson writes that the three of them together cost less than £5. As admitted by Mr. Allan himself, they were necessary, there being no railway in Travancore and each district being about fifteen miles in length. The most significant fact, however, is that which is mentioned by Mr. Allan himself that our native officers use them as frequently as the Europeans. We have, of course, no more objection to riding on a horse than we have to riding in a train, especially when it is in such a third-class fashion.

Mr. Allan's caricature of our "boom marches" is based as is apparently so much of his other "truth," on the purest hearsay, and reminds one strongly of the descriptions given by some clergymen of the excitement and so-called "objectionable features" of the revival services held by Mr. Moody and other Evangelists. Mr. Allan speaks with the authority of an eyewitness, but he is careful not to say that he was present at any of the meetings. It is evident that Mr. Allan knew nothing of the prayer and laborious preparation, extending usually over several months, by which such boom marches are invariably preceded, and almost deliberate appears his attempt to throw dust in the eyes of your readers by leading them to suppose that we regard as members those who seek salvation in such meetings. It is true that we believe in sudden conversion, and in the power of Christ to immediately transform the worst of sinners into saints. We have proved the cleansing efficacy of his blood in thousands of instances among these villagers, as well as the enlightening and sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost. But the "boom march" lasts only for some three weeks, and is followed invariably by organised and continuous effort in the villages where the break has occurred, the area attacked being limited according to the number of officers we are able to plant down among the converts in groups of two or more villages.

It is obviously impossible for me within the limits of this letter to deal with the more petty charges brought forward by Mr. Allan, but I would point out that they are evidently founded on the merest hearsay. The story about the illegal marriages is palpably of this character, the usual notice being always posted on our barracks doors. Still more incredible is the tale of the offer of sixty rupees for land, which was eventually sold to the Mission for forty-five. Mr. Allan was evidently the victim of a fraud with which we are not unfamiliar in countries nearer home than India.

As for the alleged offer of a larger salary from us to one of Mr. Allan's agents, it is difficult to credit this story. I have frequently heard of such offers being made to our people, there being at the present time at least twenty of our European officers in the employ of various Missions with salaries averaging at least ten times what they received from us.

Perhaps, however, the best answer I can give to the charge is in the fact that while the L.M.S. paid during the year to their sixty-three European missionaries in South India salaries and allowances to the amount of £12,462, we paid during the same period to our more than forty Travancore officers (European and native, married and single) less than the single salary of one of Mr. Allan's married missionaries. (Our present staff of officers is largely increased, but the proportionate cost is even less.)

In conclusion, I am constrained to say that I exceedingly regret the spirit manifested by Mr. Allan in his letters, and am convinced that the authorities of his Society cannot approve of his action in attacking a friendly and Christ-following organisation in so bitter and unscrupulous a manner,—Yours, for the salvation of India,

F. DE L. BOOTH-TUCKER.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

DEAR SIR,—Doubtless there are difficulties in dealing with juvenile offenders, and I am convinced that no prison will be beneficial to them unless it is a place specially set apart for their reception. In bygone days a separate prison was set apart for City apprentices, where there was not the slightest fear of the juveniles becoming criminally contaminated. I refer to Bridewell; and I hope the day is not far distant when we shall have the first prison for first offenders, whether they be young or old in years, such prison being of sufficient size to allow of the internal separation of the young offenders from those of riper years.

My reason for referring again to this matter is its pressing public importance, and that there is need for reform will, I think, be admitted when the following case is considered:—

Alfred Cook is a boy who, if he lives until May next, will then have reached the advanced age of eleven years. He has lived (or I should say existed) in the neighbourhood of Kentish Town. This morning I found him in Pentonville Prison. He had been sentenced to seven days' imprisonment (or a fine of 12s.), by the magistrate sitting at Hampstead, who so dealt with him after he had twice remanded him for a week to the workhouse.

The boy's father is out of work, and is absent from home all day seeking re-employment. The mother has work and is absent at it all day so that she may pay rent (3s. 6d. per week), and provide some sort of home and food when possible for her family of five little boys.

Evidently the whole family understand well what it is to go short of food, and the child whom I found in prison, having had no breakfast on a certain morning, and feeling very hungry, went and stole eight apples, which were lying on the ground under an apple tree. He did not have time to eat even one of them, but was immediately caught with the property, which was restored to its owner.

Of course the child did wrong, and his conduct may seem especially reprehensible to those who have never known hunger, and who are continually surrounded by every comfort, but those of us who know by long experience how the poor live can understand the fearful force of the temptation to which he gave way. Common sense surely shows that the punishment was altogether out of proportion to the offence.

No one is more anxious than I am to prevent crime, and to save boys from wrongdoing, but I am positively convinced that crime is not prevented by sending children to prison, with all its dangers and contamination. Therefore I paid the fine of 12s., which the learned magistrate had thought proper to impose, and brought the child away from the prison, and have him here with a view of assisting him.—Yours faithfully,

WM. WHEATLEY, Superintendent,
St. Giles' Christian Mission.

OPEN-AIR MISSION FOR IRELAND.

SIR,—Referring to your article of to-day which throws doubt upon the wisdom of our proceedings, and cold water on our enthusiasm, I beg to make a few remarks.

Your article was certainly written without sufficient knowledge of Ireland and the Irish character. We, a committee of Irishmen, including the old and the young, clerical and lay, Irish Churchmen and Nonconformists, are unanimously of opinion that the time and opportunity have come when the Lord, by the power of a simple Gospel, will beat down Satan under our feet, and save many a soul of our beloved fellow-countrymen; hence the rage of the "old malicious foe." All the tumult comes from a small section like the Jews of old, who contradicted and blasphemed when St. Paul presumed to teach this same Gospel, as his habit was, "in the markets publicly," "so that all who dwelt in Asia heard the Word of the Lord."

It is futile to say that our Lord's commands to the seventy disciples was intended for the guidance of his evangelists for all time, when we know that after the apostles had preached in the open air at Jerusalem, and upset the whole city, they continued there permanently. St. Paul was for years at Ephesus and Corinth, where he "had much people," and he (St. Paul) returned to each place where tumults were made, even where he had been stoned. It is quite absurd to say that Christ's religion ever could have spread, if men had turned back or shut themselves up in rooms; it must be well known that in Greece and Rome all such public teaching was carried on in porticoes, gardens, market-places, and open spaces. The town clerk at Ephesus was responsible for the peace of the city, just as the police are in Ireland. St. Paul did not ask the town clerk to interfere, it was simply his duty.

St. Patrick, when he first came to Ireland, was received in my county of Wicklow with a volley of stones. Nevertheless, he persisted in landing elsewhere, and penetrating this then savage country, and sowing the seed of the Gospel of Jesus; this seed is not yet dead, and we are the sowers.

Let your readers clearly understand we do not want to make men simply Protestants, many of whom are a sorry lot, who would and do boycott our preachers, and will not give them a lodging, or allow a foot of open space to be let to us. We want living Christians, especially those who will not be afraid or ashamed to tell others the glad tidings, men who will sing "Hold the fort," and hold it; and "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and will not go backward.

Our committee have with one voice determined to hold Cork, Limerick, Athlone, and Galway against all odds. The victory is half won; volunteers have offered, and with five men and many more who will hazard their lives the work is to go on now. If we yielded our place every town in Ireland (except in the north) would be shut against the Light.

You can help the cause, instead of discouraging it, by publishing this letter and opening a subscription list in your columns, and inviting men and women to join our Prayer Union. Every penny given will go straight to preaching the Gospel. Most of the office work is voluntary. Let us have your prayers, your money, and volunteers. If we had 300 men "who lapped," the Lord might do great things.

The Irish are too generous and brave to strike innocent high-minded men, who will not strike again. There are, of course, "rowdies" everywhere. Since the disturbances in Galway there is already a reaction there, and volunteers for the post of honour have offered themselves.—Yours faithfully,

James Price, M. Inst. C.E. of England,
Treasurer to Open-air Mission for Ireland.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A branch of the Children's Band of Mercy has been established in Aberdeen.

Rev. John Millar, of Methven U.P. Church, has attained his ministerial jubilee.

Messrs. Jenner, the large Edinburgh drapers, and others, have placed moveable seats behind the counters so that their young female assistants may rest when not serving.

Rev. W. P. Paterson, of Crieff Parish Church, has been appointed Professor of Systematic Theology in Aberdeen University. The new professor is only thirty-four years of age.

The Sustentation Fund of the Free Church shows an increase of £676 for the first three months of the current ecclesiastical year as compared with the corresponding period of 1893.

Principal Brown, of the Free Church College, Aberdeen, has celebrated his ninety-first birthday. Dr. Brown is still hale and active; his sight is weak, but he can write very readily still.

A correspondent of The Inverness Courier, in describing a communion service in the Highlands, says: "There is no doubt that the Secession is a great blessing to many of the parishes in the West and in the North; for thereby a door of entrance has been opened for Evangelical and enlightened ministers to preach to the people the Gospel of peace and goodwill. The people themselves see that through the exclusive spirit which prevailed for years past, the best ministers were debarred from preaching to them. Now they want to judge for themselves. The pulpits are open, and we verily believe that in all this we see already the dawn of a better day for the Highlands."

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Missionary meetings, at least for Nonconforming communities, are not often held at the Mansion House. But the Lord Mayor has made an exception for the London Missionary Society, which was formed not far from the Mansion House on November 4, 1794. As the hundredth anniversary of that day falls on a Sunday, the centenary celebration will be held on the previous day, Saturday, November 3.

THE JEWISH CHILDREN OF WHITECHAPEL have sincere friends in Mr. and Mrs. Ehrlich, of the Hebrew Conference Hall, Montague-street, E., and they seem to know it. Some 300 of them recently spent a happy day at Chingford; the only pity being that arrangements could not be made to take hundreds more, who would gladly have left the cheerless side streets to see what the country is like, and enjoy some of the kindness of the missionary and his good wife. The Whitechapel Band of Hope is an institution of much promise, and as the outing was in connection therewith, temperance as well as Gospel songs were heartily rendered en route and at Chingford. Christian workers among Jews and Gentiles accompanied the party, and a very happy day was spent.

IRISH NOTES.

A branch of the Women's Temperance Union has been formed in Newry under hopeful auspices.

A meeting to bid farewell to Mr. Thos. A. S. Robinson, who is going out as a missionary to China in connection with the China Inland Mission, was held last Friday night in Percy-street Hall, Belfast. Rev. H. Montgomery presided, and there was a large attendance.

During his holiday in Ireland, Dr. Job Ball, of New York, is in great request for special sermons and addresses. Last Sunday he preached to overflowing congregations in St. Enoch's, Belfast, and next Sunday he preaches in the First Presbyterian Church, Markethill, near to which he was born.

The attacks on the evangelists who are attempting to preach in the open air in Galway and Athlone continue as violent as ever. An English gentleman who witnessed one of the assaults in Athlone from the windows of the hotel where he was staying, says that even the waiters in the hotel joined in it, and that it was the most brutal and cowardly thing he ever witnessed. No description could give an idea of its ferocity.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

The week of universal prayer for young men will be observed by Y.M.C.A.'s throughout the world from November 11 to 18.

Mr. Charles Fermaud, secretary of the International Committee, whose headquarters are at Geneva, will make a tour of the Scottish Association in October next.

Largely owing to the efforts of Mr. Robert McCann, and the general secretary, Mr. T. A. Bailey, the debt on the Cork buildings has been reduced from £1400 to £700.

Mr. Cephas Brainerd, member of a prominent firm of solicitors in New York, and who was for twenty-five years chairman of the American Y.M.C.A. Executive, is visiting Great Britain.

The Y.M.C.A. Bible Reading Union, which was adopted some months ago in Bombay, has now a branch in Madras. Lincoln branch of the Union has now eighty-five members, Burton-on-Trent over fifty, and branches are being formed in Germany and elsewhere on the Continent.

The work of the Bombay City Association, comprising agencies for European and native young men at some four or five centres, has so developed that the appointment of an efficient general secretary has become necessary. The English National Council is desirous of learning of a qualified agent for the post.

Considerable sanitary improvements are being effected at Exeter Hall. The appliances throughout the building have been reconstructed upon the newest principles; and it is hoped the work, which extends both to the ventilating and heating departments, will be completed before the end of this month.

The year 1893-4 was the best in the career of the Y.M.C.A. Training School at Chicago. The department for equipping secretaries is one of the most prominent, and Bible study occupies first position in the curriculum. Particulars may be had from the hon. sec., Mr. J. W. Hansel, 709, Association-buildings, Chicago.

At the general conference at Buffalo, N.Y., of the German branches of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. Carl Otto Schoenrich, of Baltimore, read a paper on gymnastic exercises, maintaining, however, that common welfare demands not merely muscles, athletes, and acrobats, but well-balanced, hardy, courageous men, frisch, fromm, froh, frei (fresh, pious, merry, free). Adapted to the English associations, the alliterative motto stands, "frank, fresh, frisk, free!" The conference was a great success, papers being read on many important subjects. Dr. John Oerter, of New York, speaking on the Bible as the book for young men, took occasion to remark that the socialistic and anarchistic spirit can never arise in the heart of a young man who is learning at the feet of Jesus, for He will refer every wrong and oppression to the vindication of the day of the Lord.

THE Y.W.C.A.—Articles of furniture, pictures, texts, needlework, etc., will be gratefully received by the hon. sec. of the Y.W.C.A., at Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, W., towards the furnishing of two sitting-rooms in a Y.W.C.A. boarding house, to be opened in London. Particulars will be gladly forwarded on application.

PEACE CONGRESS.—At the second sitting of the International Peace Congress, held in Antwerp, a resolution was carried recommending the conclusion of a permanent arbitration treaty among European nations on the model of that subsisting between Switzerland and the United States. The International Bureau was charged to approach the various Governments of Europe with a view to the re-establishment of peace between China and Japan.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

There are now 1658 branches in Great Britain.

Useful work and cheering progress is reported from Jaffna, Ceylon.

In India the constitution has been translated into six languages, and it is being rendered into Canarese.

Endeavourers in Texas have a missionary of their own, whose work it is to visit needy parts of the State with the Gospel.

The Liverpool and District Union now embraces thirty-nine societies, seventeen of which were affiliated during the past year.

The Society at Paignton held a flower and fruit service. After the meeting the gifts were taken to twenty poor sick persons.

A new feature in Christian Endeavour is the organisation of mothers' societies, to co-operate with the juniors, having the motto, "For Christ, the church, and the children."

A committee appointed by the local union of Massillon, O., to protest against Sunday baseball games there, secured from the authorities a promise that the law should be enforced.

I have been round the world with my husband promoting Christian Endeavour. I do not think we visited one country without finding at least one Society. We found that the young people of Christian Endeavour in some of the darkest lands are among the finest Christians I have ever seen.—Fanny E. Clark.

The Floating Society of Christian Endeavour is a branch adapted to use on shipboard; the pledge, constitution, covenant and introduction card varying slightly from model forms. It is not for one ocean, one grade of service, but for all who "go down to the sea in ships," whether in man-of-war, ocean steamship, merchantman, coaster, or fisherman.

The interest of Endeavourers in missionary enterprise having been called in question, the treasurer of the (American) Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions writes:—"I am thankful to say that there is no exaggeration at all in the statement. The Christian Endeavour Societies have taken hold of the foreign work with great zeal, and they are actually supporting thirty foreign missionaries through this Board."

The Golden Rule for August 23 gave a picture of the delegates at the first convention of the United Society for China, held at Shanghai. Endeavour work in China began in 1885, and the first member, Mr. Ling, of Foochow, attended the convention. The movement has proved a great blessing, and the missionaries are helping it on heartily. There are in all thirty-eight societies, with a membership of more than a thousand.

Birkenhead has formed a union of its own. In the report the committee say they "rejoice that a considerable measure of success has attended their efforts to strengthen the various societies and extend the movement." During the year, deputations visited ten local churches in the interests of the Y.P.S.C.E. movement, nine of which formed societies of their own. These are reported to be doing good work for Christ and the Church. A new item of work undertaken by the Union has been the holding of a series of Gospel services.

THE N.E.L. GOSPEL MISSION.

With gladness of heart the workers of this Mission report progress in their work for the Master. Our hearts have been cheered to witness fruit in conversion at both outdoor and indoor service. Many have been taken to the breezy hills or the sea-coast to enjoy a day of glad relief from weariness and toil. In our sea-side homes there are just now about ninety children and mothers, and others enjoying a more lengthened stay.

We thankfully record the interest awakened by the visit of our Bible van to towns and villages in the South and Home Counties. The meetings have been large, and a spirit of hearing has been present, while the seed has been sown with a diligent hand. We bespeak the prayerful interest of your readers.

W. Chorley.

6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N.

A "QUIET DAY" for ministers and missionaries will be held at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, on Tuesday next, September 11. The following is the programme:—11.30—12. Opportunity for assembling and exchange of greetings. 12—1.30. Devotional meeting. Addresses by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor (Notting Hill Presbyterian Church), and Rev. E. R. Barrett (Norwood Congregational Church, Liverpool). 3—5. Devotion and conference. Addresses by Rev. C. W. Vick (of Brondesbury) and others. 6—7. Communion service, with address by Rev. Dr. J. A. Spurgeon. Rev. F. B. Meyer will preside throughout the meetings.

OBITUARY.

MR. THOMAS WICKHAM.

THE Christian Church has sustained a great loss by the sudden death, on Friday last, of Mr. Thomas Wickham, of Leytonstone. His name has been a household one, both at Mile End and Leytonstone, where his deeds of kindness and Christian charity were best known. Although a Congregationalist, he was at all times ready and willing to help any cause that had the glory of Christ at heart. Perhaps the work that had the largest place in his heart, was the Royal Hospital for Incurables. With Dr. Andrew Reed he took a great part in its foundation, and has ever since looked after its interests. His loss will be greatly felt by a large circle of friends.

MRS. HENRY DYKE, BASUTOLAND.

When leaving England a few months ago, Rev. R. Henry Dyke and wife carried with them the prayerful wishes of many friends that God would long bless their labours in Basutoland. No sooner had they arrived at Morija, than Rev. A. Mabille died, to the sincere grief of all the workers and the keen sorrow of the natives generally. Now Mrs. Dyke has been called away; she died on August 2nd, aged 38. Death occurred a few days after confinement, and the end was all faith and perfect peace. The mourning husband writes: "Her messages to friends were most touching, and not a word of regret passed her lips. All was committed to the Lord, and left there."

MR. W. GIBSON, PARIS.

The death is announced of Rev. William Gibson, B.A., who for a number of years has superintended the Wesleyan Methodist Mission in Paris. Mr. Gibson attended the Birmingham Conference, and then visited Scotland collecting money for the French work. When he returned to the house of his brother-in-law (Mr. Alex. McArthur) at Hemel Hempsted he was suffering from overwork, but no serious fears were entertained. On Sunday morning last week, he became suddenly worse, and passed peacefully away. Mr. Gibson entered the ministry in 1852, and had charge of the work in Paris for eleven years. In 1891 he was elected a member of the Legal Hundred of the Wesleyan Church.

MR. JOHN ORR.

City missionaries do not occupy a prominent place in the Church, but they are often greatly respected and beloved for their work's sake. One of these has been recently taken to his rest, Mr. John Orr, who for over fifty years carried on mission work in the High-street of Edinburgh. A true friend of the poor, and an untiring visitor, his bright and happy face was a welcome sight in the homes of many a destitute and sorrowing family. The Penny Bank in South Gray's-close, the largest of the kind in the city, owes its existence to his strenuous exertions in cultivating habits of saving among the poor. He was in his eighty-first year when he died, and had long been an elder in Palmerston U.P. Church, of which Mr. Hastings is minister.

REV. R. M. GRIER, HEDNESFORD.

THE death of Prebendary Grier, vicar of Hednesford, Staffs., removes a clergyman whose influence was by no means confined to the county in which his work mainly lay. He was a High Churchman, but associated with many undertakings connected with reform. The Record remarks: "He was universally respected for the whole-hearted devotion with which he applied himself to the relief of sorrow and suffering. He was an enthusiast in the cause of temperance, and he rarely spoke in public without referring to one phase or other of the question. He was the originator of the clerical memorial to the Archbishops and Bishops urging them to make a strenuous effort to secure the support of both clergy and laity for the temperance movement. This memorial contained 13,584 signatures."

REV. J. F. BURDITT.

The Telugu Mission of the American Baptist Missionary Union has lost one of its most devoted workers by the death of Rev. J. F. Burditt, who succumbed to typhoid fever at Bangalore on August 4. Mr. Burditt was a son of the late Rev. T. Burditt, who, through a period of forty years filled various pastorates in this country, and was for some time a classical tutor of the Baptist College, Haverfordwest. He left England as a youth and settled in New Brunswick, where, after engaging in commercial pursuits, he entered Fredericton University, and, after graduation, took a course of theological training at Newton Centre, near Boston.

In 1880, he married one who ever after was a true helpmeet. After fulfilling with much acceptance the duties of Pastor to the church at Kingston, Mass., for about a year, Mr. Burditt offered himself in 1881 to the American Baptist Missionary Union, and the same autumn proceeded to India to take up work among the Telugus. Here he laboured faithfully and successfully for ten years. A year of furlough was spent in the States, with a short stay in England. Returning to India in the end of 1892, full of purpose for another lengthened period of service, he was stationed at Narsarabupetta, a large and important field of labour, where he found the work extremely difficult, and the discouragement great. Nevertheless he was in labours more abundant.

In June last, a fellow-missionary returning from the Hills to his own station called on Mr. and Mrs. Burditt. The former complained of being unwell, and it was soon discovered that he had contracted typhoid fever. He was moved to the hospital at Bangalore, and seemed for a time to rally, but a relapse quickly followed, and internal hæmorrhage set in, which proved too much for his exhausted strength, and in a few days he passed peacefully away. His devoted wife was with him to the last, and by her gentle and loving ministrations was able in a great measure to soothe his passage through the valley of the shadow.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. Champness is slowly recovering from his illness, and has been able to fulfil some of his engagements.

Dr. Barrett, Chairman of the Congregational Union, has started for a holiday in Norway, and will not return to Norwich until the end of September.

Mr. John Shrimpton, we regret to say, is making very little improvement in his painful and wearisome illness, and his present state of health causes much anxiety.

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer and Man Sukh Lal are on their way to England, with Mr. Arthur W. Prautch and Mr. S. C. Kanaga Ratnam, to conduct a winter anti-opium campaign.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon left Paddington on Monday morning, for Plymouth, en route for Cornwall. He will be absent from the Metropolitan Tabernacle for three or four weeks.

Rev. J. Paterson Smyth, of Kingstown, Ireland, the author of well-known works on the integrity and authenticity of Holy Scripture, has been seriously ill. Many will pray for his speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morrison, by a £1000 cheque for the Special Fund of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, have raised their total contributions to the Society to £8200.

Rev. A. Ben-Oliel and Mrs. Ben-Oliel hope to start for Jerusalem about September 21. Mr. Ben-Oliel hopes soon to have a native helper, and his wife desires to open a day nursery. Communications to them may be addressed to the care of Mr. A. Seeley, The Ferns, Onslow-road, Richmond Hill, Surrey.

Pastor Chiniquy has forwarded to us some copies for distribution of a pamphlet in which he addresses Senator Tassé, of Montreal, and the Archbishop of Toronto, repelling defamatory charges brought against him by Roman Catholics. We shall be glad to send a copy to any friend interested in the pastor's work, on receipt of a penny stamp for postage.

Mr. T. S. Heley, of Wing, Leighton Buzzard, whose village mission work is known in many counties, recently met with a serious accident. While driving quietly near his home, he was overtaken by another vehicle in charge of a drunken man, and was thrown with great force out of his trap. Though sustaining a serious injury to his head, Mr. Heley has made speedy recovery, and hopes soon to be at work in Worcestershire.

Miss Larssen and Miss Rasmussen, of the Scandinavian Alliance Mission, who were turned back by the police during their recent journey in Sikkim, and ordered to leave that country, have now, after some correspondence with the Government of Bengal, received passports which will enable them to resume their interrupted tour. They will return to the Lachen Valley to carry on medical missionary work among the Tibetan settlers there.

Sir Richard Webster.—To no man in either House of Parliament (says the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children) is the Society under such a deep obligation as to Sir Richard Webster. The triumph of the claims of justice to needy children is due wholly to his trouble, patience, and skill. No Government could have been served with more fidelity and ability by its Attorney-General than the suffering children of the land have been served by Sir Richard.

Miss Blandford, one of the missionaries of the C.E.Z.M.S., is coming to England on furlough. By the end of next April, says India's Women, Miss Blandford will have completed thirty-three years and seven months of missionary service; she has worked at Trevandrum for ten years and four months since her last taking leave of absence. It is her intention to spend three months in the Bombay Presidency, where Marathi is spoken, with a view to passing an examination in that language.

Dr. James Spurgeon completes, in October next, the twenty-fifth year of his pastorate at West Croydon. The deacons and members of the church propose to testify their loving appreciation of Dr. Spurgeon's ministry; and a fund has been started, which it is hoped may grow into a sum worthy of his acceptance, and of the event which it is desired to celebrate. The treasurer of the testimonial fund is Mr. R. V. Barrow, M.P., Engadine, Croydon. Dr. Spurgeon has consented to accept the proposed testimonial, on condition of being allowed to hand over the amount in its entirety to enterprises in connection with the church.

Dr. G. D. Dowkontt, of New York, whose portrait and brief biography we gave last week, writes to us from Moville, on board the s.s. Ethiopia, that he had an agreeable surprise in finding on the vessel Rev. Jacob Chamberlain, M.D., who has laboured in India since 1859, Rev. W. W. Scudder, D.D., who has been in India since 1850, and Rev. C. B. Ward, of Yellandu, India, where he and his wife have toiled for the last eighteen years. All these are returning to America. On Tuesday, last week, Dr. Dowkontt spoke a few stirring words at the Aldersgate-street prayer meeting. On the Wednesday he was at the Liverpool noon meeting, and on the Thursday at the Glasgow meeting, prior to sailing the same day.

Mrs. Bishop accomplished the first part of her Corean journey without serious illness or disaster. She spent five weeks in exploring both branches of the Han River, and succeeded in getting her boat up forty-six rapids to within forty miles of the Sea of Japan. Unfortunately, many of her notes and photographs were lost in an accident in the rapids. It was only on reaching Chemulpo that she learned the serious position of Corean affairs. The settlement, when she arrived on June 21, was occupied by 3200 Japanese troops, and the Chinese inhabitants had fled or were flying. The same evening Mrs. Bishop and two other English ladies were ordered on board a steamer sailing for Chinese ports in the Gulf of Pechili by the British Vice-Consul, and she arrived a week later at Newchwang in Manchuria, penniless, and with only a winter travelling dress. When last heard of, she was purposing to go to Moukden, the Manchurian capital, to wait the development of events in Corea.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Henry Smith has been delivering Gospel addresses in Hanley and district during the summer, in a tent belonging to the London Evangelisation Society, which has been crowded night after night. Many have professed to receive blessing.

Mr. J. J. Sims, of Canada, has just closed a seven weeks' mission at the tent in Upton-lane, Forest Gate, E. It has been full of blessing, not a single meeting being barren of good. Mr. Sims is now labouring at Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall.

Mr. Varley's recent visit to Malvern is remembered with peculiar interest. A correspondent writes:—"The result is an increase of life in all the churches, and I believe this result will prove lasting. We have a larger, clearer, grander conception of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Cleethorpes.—Messrs. F. Saunders and H. A. Hall, from Chesterfield, have once more, for the sixth season, visited this seaside resort, carrying on throughout August, colportage and mission work on the sands. Bibles, text-books, and tracts have been sold to visitors; every opportunity, as the people were drawn together by the singing, was seized to present to them the Gospel of God's grace, and the claims of Jesus Christ.

Mr. Herbert Veasey, of Devonshire, will commence an eight days' special mission at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, on Sunday, September 9; subject, "The Tabernacle in the Wilderness," illustrated by large diagrams.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a second visit to Coventry by Mr. H. Varley, on September 13 and 14.

CHILDHOOD has its last hour. Childhood is the great sowing time of life. Seed then should be sown in the tender soil, seeds that will grow up into beautiful things in the after years. This is the parents' opportunity.—J. R. Miller, D.D.

EMIGRANTS TO CANADA.—Last Thursday morning a party of 109 trained boys and lads from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, being the third similar party for the current year, left Euston for Liverpool en route to Canada, where they are to be placed out partly on the Industrial Farm of 10,000 acres in Manitoba in connection with the homes, and partly in situations with farmers throughout Ontario. Including these, the institutions have now sent out to Canada and the colonies 7029 boys and girls, all of them tested and trained and of approved character for honesty, decency, and industry. Of these, less than 2 per cent. have failed to conduct themselves satisfactorily beyond the seas. The lads in question sailed by the Allan liner Laurentian.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Eighteen new lady missionaries are going out this autumn for the C.E.Z.M.S.

The foundation-stone has been laid of a new church at Felixstowe, to accommodate 688 worshippers. The cost is estimated at £4,500.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, M.A., of Blackheath, has accepted the living of Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, in succession to the late Canon Hoare.

The curacy of St. Clement's, Greenheys, Manchester, has been accepted by Rev. R. Kidd, who has spent four years in the Yoruba country, West Africa, as colleague of Bishop Tugwell.

The Bishop of Liverpool recently preached to a crowded congregation at Lowestoft Parish Church, on behalf of the church schools. His lordship has also addressed a men's meeting in the Y.M.C.A. Hall.

A proposal to confer the title of Archbishop on the Bishop of Cape Town at the next Synod is causing considerable discussion. The Low Churchmen object strongly, but an influential clerical requisition has been signed in favour of the step.

A branch of the Protestant League is about to be formed in connection with St. Clement's, Windsor. The incumbent of this church is Rev. W. M. Barrow, and all the sittings are occupied. Regular services, conducted by the Scripture reader, are also held in the mission-hall, where about 400 of the poor parishioners are drawn together on Sunday evenings.

A Church Defence Union, with headquarters at Washington, U.S.A., has recently been formed. Its object (says The Times) is said to be "to maintain the distinctive character of the Churches of the Anglican Communion as represented in the finished work of the Reformation, and at the same time to vindicate the Apostolic character and historic continuity of the Church."

The Church Missionary Society asks that prayer may be constantly made in behalf of China and Japan at this time, that the horrors of war may be averted and cause the present complications to "fall out rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel." A similar appeal has been issued by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, which has several missionaries in Corea working under Bishop Corfe.

A life-size image of the Saviour, in the act of dying on the cross, with other attendant images, having been erected in the newly-built church of St. Peter, Staines, Capt. Cobham, chairman of the Church Association, wrote to the Bishop of London, appealing to him to refuse to consecrate the church unless the "idols" were removed. The church was, however, consecrated, and Capt. Cobham received a letter from the bishop stating that he had inquired into the law bearing on the offending sculptures, and found that as they represented an historical event they were on the same footing as the Exeter Cathedral reredos, sanctioned by the Privy Council in the case of Philpotts v. Boyd, and were not therefore, contrary to law.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A Welsh hymn-book has been issued, the first ever brought out under the auspices of the denomination.

In September Rev. A. Turner will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of his pastorate at Ashford, Kent.

Rev. William Roberts, B.A., of Notting Hill, has been appointed successor to the late Rev. Joshua C. Harrison on the "Coward Trust."

Arrangements are in progress to hold several district meetings in connection with the forthcoming Autumnal Assembly in Liverpool.

The Congregationalists of Cam, Glos., have decided upon extensive additions to their church premises by enlarging the main school building and erecting seven commodious class-rooms and a new minister's vestry.

The centenary movement of the L.M.S. is to be inaugurated by a great demonstration in Liverpool, in connection with the Autumnal Assembly of the Congregational Union. Mr. Horne is writing the history of the Society for young people, and Mr. Lovett is preparing the larger history.

Some French papers are denouncing the Queen of Madagascar, who, accompanied by her court and a large military staff, visited the London Missionary Society Church at Antsampanimahazo. La Liberté says: "The Queen has thus signified her esteem for the enemies of France, for in Madagascar whoever is Catholic is French."

The L.M.S. lugger Mary has been wrecked at Kerema, about 200 miles west from Port Moresby, New Guinea. She had on board Revs. A. Pearse, F. W. Walker, and Mr. C. Walker as passengers, intending to visit the society's stations in Torres Straits and at the mouth of the Fly River. The passengers, cargo, and stores were all landed with the willing assistance of the natives. The Administrator at once put the Government schooner Lokohu at the service of the mission, to bring away the shipwrecked party.

Calls.—Rev. J. T. Davis, of Wymondham, to Bethnal Green-road Church, E.; Rev. C. N. Barham, of Nottingham, to Chesham.

Resignation.—Rev. A. H. Sayers, of Aspatria Church, Carlisle; Rev. C. Waring, of the church at Clitheroe.

BAPTIST.

The Russian Baptist Association has ninety ministers and missionaries, and 17,000 members. The work goes on in spite of oppression and persecution.

The Baptist states that Dr. Culross, Principal of Bristol College, has been invited to become Principal of the Gospel Training College, Dunoon. Mr. McGregor needs, it seems, a colleague in the college.

A site has been secured on which to build a Baptist-Congregational Chapel (pastor the Rev. G. H. Lemon), in Huntspill-road, Highbridge, and it is intended to commence the work of building without delay.

The Singhalese Church at Byamville is not only self-supporting, but making satisfactory progress. The pastor is enabled to take part in mission tours in districts where the Gospel is not regularly preached.

Rev. H. E. Crudgington being about to return with his wife and family to missionary labour in Delhi, India, after a lengthened sojourned in Abingdon, an interesting farewell meeting has been held in the Baptist Church there.

Dr. Philip Bickel, of Hamburg, who has recently visited the Hungarian churches, reports that in 1891 Baptists numbered about 1500; in 1892, 2088; last year 999 were baptized, and the reports for the present year show further progress.

There are 116 churches in connection with the German Baptist Union, having 25,000 members, 162 preachers and elders, and sixty-five missionaries and colporteurs. The stations at which work is carried on number 761, and there are 367 Sunday-schools with 1462 teachers, and 17,076 scholars.

A tablet has been placed in Bethesda Chapel, Swansea, "the mother church of all the Strict Baptist Churches in Wales," recording the organisation of the church at Ilsbon in 1649, its removal to Swansea in 1689, and the names of the pastors up to the present time. The church has only had twelve ministers in 245 years.

Rev. C. E. and Mrs. Shipley were last week at Gorselane Church, Swansea, welcomed home from their honeymoon. Mrs. Shipley is the daughter of Rev. E. G. Gange, of Regent's Park Chapel. Neighbouring ministers took part in a happy meeting, at which Christian love was shown by testimonial and presentation.

According to the most recent intelligence from the Congo, the missionaries are in good health. The printing office at Lukolelo is full of business. Some important medical treatises dealing with African fevers, written by Dr. Sims, of the American Society, are being printed. A translation of the Gospel of Mark in the Bobangi language will shortly be published. The safe arrival of Revs. G. Cameron and G. D. Brown, at Underhill, is reported.

To meet inquiries as to the expenditure of the funds of the Baptist Missionary Society, a statement has been published, showing that for every pound expended the proportion in support of the missionaries and their work is 17s. 9½d., and that applied to the collection of funds and administration 2s. 2½d. The foreign expenditure is therefore 88·86 per cent. and the home 11·14 per cent., 7s. 3d. of the pound going to India, 4s. 4d. to Africa, and 2s. 8d. to China.

Calls.—Rev. D. P. Parker, of Wigan, to Durham-road Church, Gateshead; Rev. F. J. Flatt, of Dunstable, to Boxmoor; Rev. B. Thomas, of Commercial-road Church, Newport, to Harlesden.

Resignations.—Rev. J. E. Cracknell, Arthur-street Chapel, King's Cross; Rev. G. W. Wilkinson, Wainsgate, Hebden Bridge.

METHODIST.

A Joyful News Mission has been established at Distington, under the oversight of Miss Butler, of Oxford, and Miss Harrison.

Further news has been received from the Primitive Methodist Zambesi Mission party. Messrs. Buckenham and Baldwin are well, and are proceeding with the building of huts for their homes, whilst the health of Mrs. Buckenham is in a somewhat unsatisfactory state.

The Pirie-street Church, Adelaide, has passed a resolution expressing gratitude for the work done in the mission just concluded by Rev. T. Cook, which has resulted in the addition of 2000 to the church. Even since Mr. Cook's departure for Melbourne, the work has continued. Great success attends the work of Mr. Cook and Gipsy Smith, who have been working together at Melbourne.

During the ministry of Rev. Cæsar Caine at Munster Park Wesleyan Chapel, Fulham, a number of adherents of the Church of England have attended, with more or less regularity, the Sunday morning Liturgical service. A few days ago these friends forwarded to Mr. Caine an expression of their appreciation of his varied labours in the district, and of the helpful and instructive character of his preaching.

Mr. Hudson, Joyful News evangelist, has died at his home at Uttoxeter. He recently returned from China, where he worked successfully for five years, and was a companion of the late Mr. W. Argent. His death is a sad blow to the Mission, and the third which has occurred in trying to give light to China. Mr. Champness has other evangelists working in China, including his eldest son, and he is hoping to send more.

The Primitive Methodist Pastoral shows the membership of the connexion to stand at 195,639. There are 61,742 Sunday-school teachers, and 1300 catechumen classes. The churches number 4596, not to mention preaching-rooms and cottages. "We have," says the pastoral, "the workshops, the machinery; let us actively wait for 'the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon us.' Let us has ten to our closets, and shut the doors, and by private prayer gain power for public use."

The annual report of the Wesleyan Sunday-school Union states that the numerical returns are very satisfactory. The number of both teachers and scholars who are church members is steadily advancing year by year. The increase within the past decade of scholars in society classes, etc., is 52,330. The most gratifying increase, next to that of scholars in church fellowship, is that of scholars above fifteen years of age. The total number of schools is 7051; of officers and teachers, 129,457; of scholars, 948,508.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A monument of grey granite is being erected over the grave of the late Dr. Donald Fraser in the old chapel-yard burying ground at Inverness.

The Maestog centre of the Calvinistic Methodist Forward Movement has been opened by Rev. John Pugh, Mrs. Ray, Rev. David Philips, and Evangelist Evans. The Town Hall was crowded on Monday evening, and meetings were held in the various Calvinistic Chapels. There are now nineteen centres in Wales under the supervision of Mr. Pugh.

Under the will of the late Mrs. Stuart, £44,000 each has been paid to the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, to the Board of Home Missions, to the Presbyterian Hospital in New York, to the trustees of the Lenox Library, to the Board of Church Erection of the Presbyterian Church, and to the trustees of the Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church at Princeton. Smaller amounts have been distributed to other institutions.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The annual thanksgiving of the rescue work of the Army will be held at 259, Mare-street, Hackney, on Sept. 12 and 13, and not on the dates earlier arranged.

A special farewell meeting will be held on Monday evening next, 10th inst., at the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., to say farewell to General Booth, who is about to visit the United States and Canada. It is five years since the General made his last tour of inspection in the States, and some of the largest and best known buildings have this time been secured for his meetings. The General sails from Liverpool on the 11th inst., by the s.s. Carthaginian.

Commander Booth recently laid the corner-stone of the new national headquarters for America, on Fourteenth-street, between Sixth and Seventh Avenues, New York. While, seven years ago, on the first arrival of Commander Booth, there were 650 commissioned officers, now there are 1880, and the number of corps has increased from 387 to 604. A three-thousand dollar cheque, subscribed by members of the Army, was placed upon the stone; and Mrs. Booth stated that she had secured nine thousand dollars towards the enterprise. The new building is to be eight stories in height and fireproof. There will be castellated battlements, and the general architectural style will be that of the feudal times, the whole giving the appearance of a great fortress. The cost is expected to amount to about 350,000 dols.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Oxford, Mrs. Kingerlee, wife of the Sheriff of the city, a warm friend of Congregationalist work.—At Sunderland, aged eighty-eight, Mr. R. Brown, one of the oldest solicitors in the kingdom, and an active member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.—At Coventry, aged eighty-five, Mr. Thomas Berry, J.P., a useful member of St. Michael's Baptist Church.—At Liverpool, Rev. A. C. Grieve, pastor of Queen's-road Presbyterian Church, and formerly Free Church missionary in Bombay.—At Loggeshall, aged eighty-nine, the widow of the late Professor McAll, of Hackney College.—At Belfast, Mr. Hugh Archibald, Congregational minister, late of Longridge, Preston, aged sixty-nine years.—At Armagh, Mr. D. P. Martin, an earnest Christian worker in connection with the Presbyterian church.—At Frontstown, co. Kildare, Rev. R. Bagot, LL.D., rector of Frontstown and Canon of Christ Church, Dublin, an earnest advocate of industrial reform, who devoted his life to the good of the people, regardless of creed or class.—At Colne, Mr. John Pickles, manufacturer, well known on 'Change in Bradford and Manchester, and highly respected as a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion.

SUNDAY EXCURSIONS AND SUNDAY LABOUR.

A letter is being issued by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association which states that one of the most alarming signs of the times is the growing tendency to make the Lord's Day a day for Sunday excursions and pleasure trips. Certain railway companies entice and tempt the people in every possible way to buy their tickets and spend their Sabbath Days in these trips. The writer had before him a list of twenty-five separate Sunday excursions in August and September, arranged on various railways and steamboats, to more than 100 different places.

The irreligious influence of these excursions is very great. They stimulate Sunday labour in many trades, they disturb the quiet rest of the Lord's Day wherever they go. Engine drivers, stokers, guards, porters, ticket clerks, collectors, signalmen, station-masters, tramway and 'bus men, boatmen, barmaids and barmen, waiters, and many other classes of toilers, who labour excessively long hours on weekdays, are by these Sunday excursions still required to toil on the Lord's Day.

SCOTTISH CONFERENCES.

Several important conventions of Christians will be held in Scotland during the next few weeks. The Scottish National Annual Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations and Fellowship Unions will be held at Galashiels from September 11 to 13. A large number of delegates are advised from all parts of the country. Subjects bearing on the duties of members in the Associations, and as members of them in public and private life and in aggressive Christian work will be discussed. Among the names on the programme are those of Professor T. M. Lindsay, Glasgow, Dr. John Smith, Edinburgh, Mr. W. A. Campbell and Mr. David Dreghorn, Glasgow.

On the same dates the long-established Perth Conference will hold its sessions, being the thirty-second successive conference. The general subject of conference will be "The Glory of God," viewed in various practical aspects. Among the expected speakers are Professor Blaikie, Revs. Marcus Rainsford, J. B. Figgis, James Sumerville, Egerton R. Young, etc. The local hon. sec. is Rev. Dr. Bannerman, Free St. Leonards, Perth.

As intimated last week, the Dundee Conference is fixed for the succeeding week, September 18-20. The important topic of "Revival" will be the main theme, considered in the following aspects:—

The need of revival (a) in the individual and family, (b) in the church; Hindrances to Revival; methods to be used in the work of revival, (a) prevailing prayer, (b) aggressive effort; personal dealing with the careless; remarkable awakenings in Christian lands and among the heathen; the missionary revival of the century, etc.

Among the speakers expected are Rev, Dr. Black (Inverness), Rev. W. Ross (Glasgow), Rev. Henry Montgomery (Belfast), Rev. W. Fullerton (Leicester), etc.

THE PERSECUTION AT ORDOU.

The sharp persecution of the Greek Evangelical congregation at Ordou (province of Trebizond) in Turkey, and the forcible suppression, during more than two years, of its religious services at the instance of Greek ecclesiastics, are known to all who follow the action of the Evangelical Alliance. The only means by which this congregation can recover the right of meeting for worship appears to be the erection of a church edifice, since, aside from the prohibited parsonage, it possesses and can obtain no building capable of seating the 350 or 400 persons composing this sorely-abused body. The congregation has therefore decided to attempt the execution of its long-cherished plan of building a church. It appears certain that the Ottoman Government will accord the necessary permission, since several of the Powers have called its attention to the necessity of allowing the community to meet for worship.

Meanwhile the prohibition of the Evangelical worship, and the indifference of the police authorities to the continual stoning and spitting upon Protestants, and the reviling of their faith in Ordou, are giving rise to the impression in a large region of country that the religious rights of Protestants are no longer admitted by the Government. If the Evangelical Greeks of Ordou are obliged to refrain from meeting for religious services until they have succeeded in building the church by their own unaided efforts, the effect on the religious liberty question will be grave. The humiliating spectacle of a congregation forbidden to hold religious services during so prolonged a period, has placed in jeopardy other Protestant congregations in all that region. Already the idea is diligently propagated among the common people that this prohibition of worship proves the Protestants to be classed as outlaws. Under these circumstances the vindication of the honour and the rights of Protestants in Turkey, demands the construction of the church at Ordou at the earliest possible moment.

Friends of religious liberty are therefore besought to come to the aid of the congregation which is in such desperate straits. The object can be secured by a contribution of £300. This sum is all that is needed to begin and render habitable at once a church building in Ordou. The essentials being thus provided, the people can resume their religious services, and can finish the building as they themselves are able to contribute.

Henry O. Dwight, Hon. Sec. Constantinople Branch of the Evangelical Alliance.

Notes and Comments.

Referring to one of our "Notes" in a recent issue, Mr. Lindsay Robertson, a member of the Bombay bar, writes to us vindicating the action of Lord Harris in the appointment of Mr. Sanders Slater to the post of Acting Chief Magistrate to the Bombay Presidency.

A striking exposition of Rome's interpretation of current events is afforded by Cardinal Vaughan's address on Monday, at Preston, at the annual conference of the Roman Catholic Truth Society. He has evidently followed closely the various movements towards reunion, and so far as these appear to him to serve the aggrandisement of his system he is content, but the reunion he contemplates is really absorption into Rome. Any other union he repudiates as "dishonest and mechanical."

The Cardinal's closing words were pregnant with meaning to those who fail, as yet, to understand the goal of sacerdotalism. According to The Daily News:—

Cardinal Vaughan referred to many changes, particularly in Ritual, which had been made in the Church of England, as evidence of its remarkable movement towards the Church of Rome, and remarked that the change in this direction within half a century had been truly marvellous. In conclusion, he said their hope of reunion was partly based upon an evident conversion to many of the doctrines and practices of the Roman Catholic Church.

To be forewarned is to be forearmed. Once more the leading representative of Rome in this country frankly avows the hopefulness with which he regards the Ritualistic movement. The true line of defence against Romish aggression lies in the earnest inculcation of Evangelical principles and practice.

Nearly a century ago a remarkable vision was seen by an American Quaker minister, named Joseph Hoag, of which one great part was fulfilled when the Civil War ended. Hoag was an honest, hard-working farmer, the father of a large family, all of whom became ministers of the Gospel, and stood high in the esteem of his friends and neighbours. "The vision," says The Herald of Peace, "has for several generations been familiarly known to many of the Friends, and there is no doubt as to its promulgation long before the great Civil War of 1861-65, which it predicted." Hoag thus opens his narrative:—

In the autumn of the year 1803 I was one day alone in the field, and observed that the sun shone clear, but a mist eclipsed its brightness.

As I reflected upon the singularity of the event, my mind was struck into a silence, the most solemn I ever remembered to have witnessed; for all my faculties were brought into deep silence. I said to myself: "What can all this mean? I do not recollect ever before to have been sensible of such feelings."

And I heard a voice from heaven, saying: "This which thou seest is a sign of the coming times. I took the forefathers of this country from a land of oppression; I placed them here among the people of the forest; I sustained them, and while they were humble I blessed them and fed them, and they became a numerous people. But they have now become proud, and have forgotten Me, who nourished them and protected them in the wilderness; and they are running into every abomination and evil practice of which the old countries are guilty, and have taken quietude from the land and caused a dividing spirit to come among them; lift up thine eyes and behold."

Then he describes the angry divisions which he saw begin in the churches, and finally enter politics throughout the United States, and which did not stop until it produced a civil war. "An abundance of blood was shed in the course of the combat; the Southern States lost their power, and slavery was annihilated from their borders." All this, of course, we know, took place. Quite unlikely in 1803, but an accomplished fact sixty years later.

The remainder of this vision seems more unlikely still from one point of view, but not unlikely from another point of view. He says:—

Then a Monarchical Power sprang up, took the Government of the States, established a National Religion, and made all Societies tributary to support its expenses. I saw them take property from Friends.

I was amazed at beholding all this; and I heard a voice proclaiming: "This Power shall not always stand; but with it I will chastise my Church, until they return to the faithfulness of their forefathers. Thou seest what is coming on thy native country, for their iniquities and the blood of Africa: the remembrance of which has come up before Me."

This Vision is yet for many days. I had no idea of writing it for many years, until it became such a burden that, for my own relief, I have written it.

The present tension in the States, which is largely caused by the constitution, to which all parties have to bend, cannot continue for an indefinite time. If the constitution cannot be quietly adapted to the needs of the times, the living forces of the times will rend it asunder. The love of monarchy is by no means dead in the States, and the Church of Rome is not inactive. What if a Roman Catholic prince, or a Roman Catholic President invested with arbitrary powers, should come to reign over the land of the Pilgrim Fathers? It is not impossible unless sin be repented of.

The Church Times is most anxious that the approaching harvest festivals should be used by clergymen for the introduction of incense into church services. It remarks that soon the provincial papers will teem with reports of "Harvest Decorations, in which our Low Church and Dissenting brethren will compete in carrot and turnip rivalry on the one holy day which they jointly observe." While there may be difference of views as to the taste of some of the decorations, we cannot see why there should be this jibe at the turnips and carrots for which the thanksgiving is being offered. But that is a small matter. The serious point is in these words:—

The British harvest festival-goer will think everything right on harvest festival day, and thus he can be taught not only at a solemn Eucharist, but at solemn Matins, as well as at solemn Evensong, what a beautiful, as well as what a Scriptural thing, the offering of incense is; and how much more general it ought to be, especially in our country churches.

Thus goes forward the process, covered over by the doings of a festival at which the average Englishman is too busy with his eyes and ears to do much thinking, of Romanising the most numerous and most powerful church in the land.

Rev. J. W. Horsley, who, as prison chaplain, once had much to do with cases of attempted suicide, has given, in The Church Times, the results of his experience. After giving his views of the guilt of self-murder, he deals with the main causes of it in England, which he thinks are eight in number: 1. The atmosphere of violent language in which thousands of the children of our slums are reared. 2. The light sentences which are generally passed upon offenders for the crime of attempted self-destruction. 3. The lack of definite instruction on the sinfulness of this deed. Too many preachers and teachers are in fault here. 4. The false sentiment, or rather sentimentality, that is talked about the question, and the spurious glamour thrown over it by some poets and novelists. 5. "The general neglect of the discipline of the Church whereby the use of the ordinary burial service is forbidden over the bodies of those who have laid violent hands upon themselves—albeit neither in this case nor in that of the unbaptized is there any prohibition of the use of some prayer or ceremony." 6. "The vagueness, if not entire absence, of definite teaching on the intermediate state and the permanence of character and the continuity of life therein." 7. The increase of infidelity.

Nearly all these causes may be touched by religious teachers, and so also may the eighth and greatest cause of all—intemperance. To this Mr. Horsley attributes one half of our suicides. Sweden, it seems, has for long been the classic ground of alcoholism, and, before the last restrictive laws, also for suicides, owing to that cause. The proportion was 65·5 per cent. in 1855; after the passing of the temperance law it fell to 18·2, and in the next quinquennial period to only 11·2. Out of 300 consecutive cases of attempted suicides that came under Mr. Horsley's own notice and care, he found 145 were directly, and twenty-seven more indirectly, attributable to intemperance. In one July, out of twenty-eight cases, he found only three which were not apparently in any way caused by drink. Surely Mr. Horsley in justified in drawing this moral, viz., "Those who are not in some way actively promoting temperance and combating intemperance have more blood-guiltiness than others in regard to the suicides of their locality and their land." A solemn reflection.

A correspondent of The Daily News gives his experience as a coachman out of work, in order that Christians may consider whether their treatment of such as himself is according to the Gospel. He puts his case thus:—

"Why," says a friend, "I saw ever so many places advertised in your line. I am surprised you have not got anything yet, more especially with your good character." "Yes, my friend, you see we are supposed to live in a Christian country, but what a different colour is put on Christianity when they advertise for their men servants; they require married men with 'no encumbrance.' We are to starve because we have a few children, or possibly we are too heavy or too tall. The excuses are dreadful to hear when you are in every want, and yet I believe that those who employ us know perfectly well that coachman and men servants endeavour to regulate their family in hopes of following up their calling as domestic servants. What I want to do is to draw those concerned to a better feeling, not only of Christianity towards their servants, but to ask of them not to despise them because they have a few children to keep. I ask of the clergy of all shades to help in this work, and not drive all working classes into the fold of Anarchy."

Mr. Airy, one of the inspectors of the schools in the East Central division of Birmingham, who has seen eighteen years of Birmingham school life, says that he finds it difficult to believe that the most unfortunate children are of the same class as those whom he found eighteen years ago, so greatly are they changed for the better. He reports that the very poorest wastrel class, the children of thieves and of abandoned women, and the sleepers under carts and in coalyards, receive as much attention as their more fortunate comrades, until they are able to take their places with the latter; whilst existence is rendered more tolerable to them through the Cheap Dinner and Protection of Young Children Societies. No doubt there is enough room for work, but it is a great encouragement to find that past work has borne so good a harvest.

The trial of the Egyptian pashas for their slave-owning cannot fail to produce a good result. It will show that England looks with disfavour upon this wrong of slavery, by whomsoever committed, and that, so far as her authority reaches, she will deal out equal measure to rich and poor, to seller and buyer. It will begin to create a new and purer public opinion on the subject, which cannot fail to be some measure of protection for the poor Soudanese girls. To punish not only the trade in them, but owning them, will make it unprofitable, dishonourable, and unsafe, and hence it will die.

Some preachers and teachers hold that the experience of the Christian, gained possibly through the Gospels to begin with, is such as to have made him independent of them altogether, so that, even on the supposition of the records being lost, their experience could give us back our Christ. Rev. D. Purves refutes this view in The United Presbyterian Magazine in a very efficient manner. With great force he asks: "Where would that living Christianity be if you were suddenly to discover that the Gospels which you took to be historical were not so? I admit that it is by faith in Christ that men are saved, not by belief that Matthew wrote the first Gospel. . . . Let a doubt come into my mind, from whatever source, whether the Gospels are historical—that in Matthew, Mark, and Luke I am in the region of romance; or tell me that criticism has taken away my Lord, and has left me no means of knowing Him through the Gospels, and I am not prepared to believe that my faith in what is called the living Christ will survive that loss." We fancy that Mr. Purves has put the case of the majority of believers.

Rev. T. Cameron Wilson has a helpful article in The Thinker on "The two kinds of burden-bearing of Galatians vi. 2, 5." He would prefer to translate v. 2 by "loads," and v. 5 by "burden." "Burden" is something obligatory, something that belongs to a man in the nature of things, something he cannot escape from, just because he is what he is. What would a soldier be, marching to the front, without his kit? What would the Christian be without the blessed yoke of Christ's service? Phortion, "burden," regards man as an answerable being, and every man must bear his individual responsibility; he cannot shirk that, nor shift it on to other men's shoulders. Baros, "load" (v. 2), is what is burdensome in our sense of the word. It is something galling and grievous—something not inevitable in the nature of things.

The practical use of Paul's advice to the Galatians thus appears. He appeals to them to act as brethren. "They were not only to avoid vainglory, provocation, and envy, but also to show a tender and ungrudging spirit in dealing with the weaknesses and offences of others. These faults of others were a grief and sorrow to them, a galling and grievous load. Let them not add to that load by a hard, censorious spirit, but rather let them, in a forgiving and loving way, help them to correct and overcome these failings by restoring and reinstating them, remembering their own frailty, that they were not free from responsibilities themselves which they had to bear, and for which they would have to render account. Thus they would bear the galling loads of others, whilst they carried each his appointed burdens."

When walking with a friend he pointed out to us the vital connection there is between the practical exhortations in Philippians iv. and the declaration in chapter iii., that our citizenship is in heaven, "from whence, also, we wait for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation." To be conscious and assured of our citizenship is the only power that can make us stand fast and rejoice and be gentle, without anxiety, and full of peace. Privilege before duty always; to be blessed is the way to have the power to bless. The most difficult services are dependent on the enjoyment of the richest mercies of God in Christ. Things which are utterly beyond the flesh become easy when we walk in the Spirit and abide in Christ.

Our Industrial Army.

We can only comment with entire satisfaction on the moral aspects of the address given by the president of the Trade Union Congress. He was obviously right in saying that there is no longer any room to doubt whether there is a social question. Not only in this country and its colonies, but in America and in every country in Europe, "the social question is the vital issue upon the solution of which the future of nations and peoples seem to depend." While admitting that in different countries the conflict assumed different forms, and that "methods must be determined by political and other conditions, there was only one open and avowed method which they—the trade unionists—perhaps should be united in utterly repudiating, that was the cruel and vicious use of gunpowder, dagger, and dynamite. They relied on wise, independent political action and trade unionism for the redress of the wrongs under which they laboured." This emphatic disapproval of violence by the spokesman of the organised labour of our country cannot, one would think, but have a healthy effect upon the minds of the toilers in all lands.

The Trade Union President was as wise in his references to the worst dangers of his class. He had the courage to say that in his opinion they had more to fear from drinking and gambling than from all the capitalists put together. He added that there was also much to fear from a spirit of militarism, and that there was reason to redouble their labours in promoting international labour solidarity, which he regarded as the only safeguard against war. If the President means a sense of oneness based upon men's relations to God and to Christ we agree with him; but an economic solidarity is not a safe thing to trust to. Prudence and even self-interest are broken through like a piece of thread when once the spirit of pride and wrath has been aroused in a nation. The only restraining power in a nation, as in an individual, is the fear of God. We are thankful for every indication of the presence and power of it among our fellow-countrymen.

The Westminster Gazette is nobly pleading the cause of the platelayers on our railways. Scarcely a week passes but one of these men is killed while doing his work. It is contended that these accidents are not inevitable; the great majority of them might be prevented at a small cost to the railway companies. No doubt some are caused by the men's own carelessness, but this ought not to exonerate employers from the responsibility of taking every reasonable precaution to guard every life. It seems that most of these deaths take place either where a sharp curve or an intervening bridge has hidden the approaching train from sight, or where two trains come up from opposite directions at the same time, and the men, in trying to avoid one of them, run into the way of the other. "We do not," says our contemporary, "point out these facts for the information of railway companies. They are well enough aware of them. All these years this slaughter has been going on; and their own sense of responsibility and feeling of humanity have not been strong enough to overcome their reluctance to spend the necessary money to stop it." It is to be hoped that such indifference may soon cease.

If the owners of factories are compelled to fence in dangerous machinery, there ought to be a law to compel railway companies to safeguard the men who are working on their lines exposed to rushing trains. The plan suggested is that the companies should keep a supply of electric bells with connecting cords attached to small standards, which standards could be fixed upon the lines a few hundred yards above and below the spot at which a gang was working, and by means of the cord the bell could be placed alongside the men. In this way every train approaching from either side would give automatic warning of its approach. The small cost of such an arrangement is as nothing against the saving of of life and the prevention of poverty and misery.

GENERAL BOOTH'S FAREWELL.

At a crowded gathering of members and friends of the Salvation Army in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on Monday evening, General Booth was bidden an enthusiastic farewell, previous to his departure on a six months' tour in Canada and the United States.

General Booth delivered a long address, first of all giving an outline of his proposed tour. He goes first to Newfoundland, thence to Halifax and New York, and across the States to San Francisco, and back through Canada to Toronto, holding meetings at the rate of two each day. He asked that everybody would join in fervent prayer that his mission might be of service in promoting the kingdom of God and the welfare of men. His tour is being undertaken with the distinct object of winning souls for Christ, and for taking counsel with the officers in America to improve their methods.

After referring to the difficulties which the Army has had to encounter in Canada and the United States, he mentioned that they have now in Canada 236 stations, with 650 officers and 10,000 soldiers, and in the States 532 stations, with 1800 officers, besides food and shelter depôts, rescue-homes, slum outposts, and two schooners and a yacht for work up and down the great rivers.

In closing, he spoke some rousing practical words of exhortation, giving as his parting message the watchword, "Fight." Speaking of the many evils that there are to be fought—intemperance, impurity, gambling, luxury, Phariseeism—he called upon all who had enrolled themselves under Christ's banner to go forward, and fight with more desperation, and greater determination, and stronger faith in God than ever before. "If you believe in Christ, you must believe that the people around you are perishing, or what did He die to save them from? And if you believe they are perishing, you cannot be comfortable and take your ease. You must fight, you must rescue them. Oh, keep on fighting, and God help you!"

The General sailed on Tuesday in the s.s. Carthaginian, and is expected to return to London about the middle of March next.

The Lord's Supper.

BY A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER.

IN his Bampton Lecture the late Canon Liddon asserts that "the body and blood of Christ are indeed taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper"; also he adds: "The divinity of Christ warrants the realities of sacramental grace as truly as it warrants the cleansing virtue of the atoning blood." Canon Liddon further asserts that Evangelicals do not have true faith in Christ because they do not believe that He is personally present in the sacrament during its celebration in a multitude of places.

Now, it is an absolute mistake to say that the divinity of Christ alone "warrants the cleansing virtue of his blood." To us men the value of it depends entirely on the Word of God. It is owing to the teaching we receive in the prophecies of the Old Testament which went before, and the statements of the New Testament regarding its meaning and efficacy, that we receive with adoring gratitude the wondrous fact that "on Him was laid the iniquity of us all," and that "Christ died for our sins." Had it not been for the teaching of Scripture regarding his life and death and resurrection, Christ would have died in vain for us, even though we had been perfectly assured of his eternal Godhead.

Let it be supposed that Christ had come and that all men had been assured that He was both Son of Man and Son of God, but that no Scripture had gone before to herald his coming; that even as Prophet and Psalmist were silent, so neither Apostle nor Evangelist had recorded his sayings or explained his actions, yet that the awful death at Calvary had taken place; while the whole world knew that this sufferer was God equal with the Father, the fact of his divinity would not have saved or comforted a single soul. Nay, it would have added an untold gloom to the spiritual darkness. It would have increased the perplexity of every thoughtful mind, heaping up misery and despair. It is to the Scripture that we owe deliverance from this state of unspeakable horror; through it alone, and not merely through acquaintance with his divinity, we owe the knowledge of the value, joy, and triumph, of our Lord's atoning death.

So also is it with the sacraments. What they teach, or warrant, we do not learn from the fact of Christ's divinity, but from the statements of Scripture regarding them. They are of Divine institution and authority because of his appointment; but what they mean to us, what they do for us, we learn from the Scriptures alone. To the law and to the testimony; we seek not in human theories but in the words of the Divine Book how we are to use, and what we are to expect from, the sacraments which Christ has appointed.

If it were granted (which it is not) that at the Last Supper our Lord did Himself change the bread into his flesh, the Romanisers would not be any nearer proof of their claim. There is not a hint in Scripture that such power was to be given to his apostles. But there are strong statements pointing in an opposite direction. It is denied (Heb. x. 25) that "He should offer himself often." It is asserted that "after He had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, He sat down on the right hand of God. "By one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." In the Christian Church there has not been made any provision for such an offering. There were apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers (Eph. iv. 11) but no priests. The lower office of the priesthood was done away and the higher order of the Christian ministry established. The priest stood for the people to represent them to God, but the Christian minister stands on the higher position of an ambassador of God, the messenger of the Great King to represent Him to the people. He does not bear in his hands an offering from the people, but he proclaims the message of Jehovah.

The Apostles were witnesses for Christ, not sacramentarians. Paul evidently knew nothing of sacramental grace, or he would not have thanked God that he had baptized none of the Corinthians except Crispus and Gaius. He plainly teaches the same church (1 Cor. xi. 26) the bodily absence of Christ from the Lord's Supper: "As oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till He come." Not presence is taught, but remembrance of the absent Lord; when He returns the Supper will cease to be celebrated. When ministers cease from the vain theories of an apostate church, and as ambassadors proclaim the message of their King, then shall multitudes be added to the Lord of such as shall be saved.

The statement made by Canon Liddon that Evangelicals do not have faith in Christ because they do not believe He is personally present in the sacrament, is an amazing instance of verbal confusion. We do not for a moment doubt the power of Christ infinitely to distribute Himself. But we deny the truth of this heresy, which sprang up in the ninth century, that Christ is personally present in any sense or degree in the bread and wine of the Supper. Christ's power as Creator to extend a small piece of bread so that it can serve for multitudes of professing Christians at one and the same time, may not be questioned. I firmly believe much more than Canon Liddon puts as a difficulty. I believe that the Lord Christ can, if He wills, take a crumb of bread and so extend or multiply it that it could feed to satisfaction all the uncounted millions of men, women, and children in this world; but there is not the shadow of connection between belief in this power and belief in his personal presence as God-man in a piece of bread offered as an atoning sacrifice. He has Himself placed the barrier of a twofold impossibility on this presence.

There is a creation impossibility in the nature of man. He cannot remember that which is present. There is a redemption impossibility arising from the arrangements of the Godhead revealed to us.

Christ, the Creator of all worlds and of man, framed that marvellous instrument the human mind. He has arranged its functions, and He guards the laws which rule its action with jealous care. For example, in so great a matter as the offer of salvation, Christ does not break down the freedom of the human will. To those who reject Him He says sorrowfully, "Ye will not come unto Me," but He does not compel. Now, the Lord has so made man that he does not and cannot remember anything that is actually present. Man knows the present, but remembers the absent. If, then, our Lord intended to be personally present in the Supper, when He calls on his people to remember Him in it, He asks for that which by his own creative power was made impossible for them. To such a hideous conclusion are we brought by the Romanizers' theory.

There is a redemption impossibility arising from the arrangements of the Godhead. The reason of these arrangements is hidden from us, though the fact is revealed by our Lord Himself. The flaming sword still sweeps every way, preventing presumptuous approach to the Tree of Life. Yet there is given in Scripture a clear intimation of the mind of God, and of the privileges of believers. Our Saviour expressly and repeatedly warned the disciples that He was going from them—that He went before to prepare a place for them—that if He went not away the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, would not come. He lifted the veil from a part of the Divine arrangements in redemption, to show them and us that the presiding work in the Church and in the hearts of believers was to pass unto the great eternal Spirit, the third Person in the ever-glorious Trinity. He further condescended to explain that, while the Spirit was thus with them (see John xiv., xv., xvi.), He himself could not be personally present. Thus was there raised a second barrier to the personal presence of Christ in the sacrament.

I repeat, it is a twofold Divine impossibility.

SANDWICH MEN.

ON a recent visit to a hospitable home in the North of Ireland, I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Keates, manager of the Bessbrook Home for Sandwich Men, 39, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, London. He had a thrilling tale to tell of work accomplished by God's grace among the fifty men living in this Home, most of whom have fallen far below their original position in life through the power of sin. By Christian love and through the hearty meetings held several nights in the week (at which the attendance is optional), the men's hearts have been touched, and over twenty during the ten months have professed conversion and shown evidence of it in their changed lives. Sad confessions have followed; some had deserted their wives; some had disgraced respectable families, and some had forfeited good positions.

One of these, formerly a lawyer's clerk in a town near my friend's house, had commissioned Mr. Keates to carry in person the tidings of his conversion to God to an aged mother whose tears fell fast as news of her lost son reached her ears. One of the first men to enter the home has taken his wife out of the workhouse infirmary to begin life anew, with their little children around them. Another has gone to the Cape to reoccupy, it is hoped, a good situation, while another has walked to Scotland to rejoin his friends; others are in Canada, Norfolk, Wales, etc., doing well.

Immediately one such converted man leaves the home, his place is eagerly sought for by another fallen brother. Scores have heard the sad words, "There is no room." Unlike an ordinary London lodging-house, they find help, love, and comfort in the home. Mrs. Keates is known as "mother," and the children are quite a feature of interest in the men's lives, some of these poor rough fellows showing to the little ones a tender care and regard.

The object of my writing is to ask, on behalf of these men, the co-operation of all agencies that are engaged in advertising through sandwich boards, letter-copying, envelope-addressing, or circular folding and delivering. This is a dull season of the year, and some even of the converts are a little downhearted from want of employment. As it may be supposed, left-off clothing is most welcome. Mr. George Maynard, 1, Palace Gardens-terrace, Kensington, has started and is directing the work.

TRAVELLER.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—The monthly meeting of workers was held last Friday evening. An interesting address was given by Mr. H. D. Brown on "Who are Israel?" Mr. Isaac, the secretary, made an earnest appeal for helpers in the work at the Rest, especially for the German and Scandinavian sailors.

EMPRESS-DOWAGER OF CHINA.—An interesting volume is in course of preparation at the Shanghai Presbyterian Mission Press: the copy of the New Testament which it is intended to present to the Empress-Dowager on her sixtieth birthday. It is to be printed from the largest size of movable type on foreign paper, with border of gold. The page will be 9½ by 13½ inches, and every care is being taken to make the work attractive and suitable.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE MINISTRY OF DESTRUCTION.

(Chapters xxvii.—xxix.)

Ours the shame to understand
That the world prefers the lie;
That, with medicine in her hand,
She will sink and choose to die!
Ours the agonising sense,
Of the heaven this earth might be,
If, from their blank indifference,
Men woke one hour and felt as we!

Houghton.

When Jeremiah was first summoned to the work of prophet, it was summarised under six distinct divisions. He was set over nations and kingdoms to pluck up, and to break down, and to destroy, and to overthrow; to build and to plant (i. 10). Two-thirds of his work was therefore in the direction of destruction. It is not pleasant or easy work. No one would choose to stand amid the choking dust of the crumbling brickwork, which is being destroyed to make way for some palatial structure to be erected on the site. Vested interests, long-established abuses, lucrative wrongs, cry out loudly against any attempt to interfere with their existence. But Elijah must precede Elisha; and John the Baptist must prepare the way for Christ. Before the seed-sowing, the plough; before the outburst of the spring, the stern disintegration of winter, rubbing the soil to powder in its mighty hands. Such was the work that fell to the lot of Jeremiah.

I.—THE WORK OF DEMOLITION.

(1) Jehoiakim.—When Josiah died the whole land mourned. Each citizen felt personally bereaved, and appropriated the plaintive cries of professional mourners, saying, "Ah, my brother!" and "Ah, sister!" The air was full of the words, "Ah, Lord!" "Ah, the glory of Israel!" But Jeremiah foretold that at the death of Jehoiakim there should be no such expression. "He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem." And again, somewhat later, when the king in impious defiance had burnt the roll, the prophet said, "He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David; and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, in the night to the frost" (ch. xxii. 13-19; xxxvi. 29-31).

The words of the prophet carried with them the imprimatur of Jehovah. They pronounced the inevitable sentence which He executed. And therefore, though we have no certain record of the manner of it, it is more than probable that on his return from his second journey to Babylon, Jeremiah received the tidings of the death of his inveterate foe. There are several traditions as to his death—one that he was assassinated in the streets of Jerusalem; another that he fell in a skirmish with raiders, who had been incited by Nebuchadnezzar to desolate the neighbourhood of Jerusalem; another that he was enticed to the camp of the King of Babylon, and there treacherously murdered; but he died as he lived, dishonourably and miserably.

(2) Jeconiah.—His was a reign, like Napoleon's after his return from Elba, of 100 days. He was eighteen when he was called to the throne, and he occupied it for three months and ten days (2 Chron. xxxvi. 9); but in that brief time he was able to show the drift of his character. "He did evil in the sight of the Lord." His mother, Nehushta, daughter of Elnathan, whose hands had been imbrued in the murder of Urijah, and the strong heathen party who dominated the policy of the Court, between them moulded the young monarch to their will.

Jeremiah uttered words of awful significance. Passing through the streets, he showed the marred linen girdle, and foretold the doom of the king and queen-mother. "Sit down," he cried, "in the dust; for the crown of royalty shall be rolled from your brow to the ground. The cities in the south country, the beautiful flock of towns and villages, are already in the hands of the invader; and the whole land shall shortly be carried into captivity, because of the abominations, the pollution, the idolatries that have been perpetrated on the hills of the field." Then, coming to closer dealings with the royal pair, he said that Coniah should be given into the hands of them that sought his life, and of those of whom he was afraid; that Jehovah would cast his mother and himself, like a despised broken vessel, into another country, where they were not born; that there they should die; and that there should be no return to the land they loved (xiii. 18-21; xxii. 28-30).

Thus, too, it befel. Such was the bitter fierceness of the Chaldeans, that nothing would appease them but the surrender of the persons of the king and his mother. There was no alternative; and so, Josephus tells us, a sad procession was formed, and through a gateway which afterwards bore the king's name, but was bricked up so that none might pass by a path which had been the scene of such a disaster, the king, his mother, the nobles and officials, went forth to the Chaldean camp, and sat down on the ground, their persons robed in black, and their faces veiled. By this time Nebuchadnezzar had returned from fighting against Pharaoh-necho, who had marched to the relief of his ally, but had been finally quelled; and he received in person the submission of the royal fugitives (2 Kings xxiv. 7).

The spoliation of the city followed. The Temple was stripped of its gold and treasures. All the princes, and the mighty men of valour, the craftsmen and the smiths, the king's harem and Court officials, were manacled in long lines, and torn from their beloved country, which the majority of them were never again to behold. Ezekiel was one of that sad procession; and it seemed as though a pitiful wail arose from the whole country—from Lebanon, and Bashan, and Abarim—as the exiles wended their way to their distant destination. And the prophet wept sore, his eye ran down with tears, because the Lord's flock was taken captive.

(3) The Prophets.—The prophets were a large and influential class. Dating from the days of Samuel, their schools had poured forth a succession of men, who occupied a unique position in the land, as the representatives of God. But in the degenerate days of which we are now writing, when the kingdom of Judah was rapidly tottering to its fall, they seem to have been deeply infected by the prevailing vices of their time. They were, as Isaiah says, "dumb dogs which could not bark." Greedy and drunken, lazy and dissolute, dreaming, lying down, and loving to slumber, they denied the Lord, and said, when Jeremiah spoke, "It is not He." They had become wind, and the word of God was not in them (Isa. lvi. 9-12; Jer. v. 12, 13).

It must have been very painful for Jeremiah to oppose them, and counteract their influence on the people; but he had no alternative. His heart was broken, and his bones shook; he was in a stupor like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine had overcome, for both prophet and priest were profane; and in God's own house wickedness was rife. Listen to these terrible words, spoken in the name of Jehovah, "In the prophets of Jerusalem I have seen a horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies; they strengthen also the hands of evil-doers, that none doth return from his wickedness; they are all of them unto me as Sodom, and the inhabitants itself as Gomorrah" (ch. xxiii. 9-14).

Jeremiah entreated his people not to hearken to these men, who spoke the vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord. Their fatal crime was to encourage even those who walked in the stubbornness of their hearts, by assuring them that no evil should come on them. They deliberately set themselves to lessen the power of Jeremiah's appeals and protestations by the promulgation of their own lying dreams; as though they, and not he, were in Jehovah's secrets.

Matters came to a pass shortly after the deportation of Jeconiah; Hananiah, of Gibeon, which was one of the priestly settlements, rose up and publicly contradicted Jeremiah when he was speaking in the temple, in the presence of the priests and of all the people. Using the holy name of Jehovah, he declared it had been divinely revealed to him that in two years Jeconiah, and all the captives, and all the sacred vessels, which Nebuchadnezzar had taken away, would come again. Instantly Jeremiah spoke up from amid the crowd. "Amen," he cried, "would that it might be so; would that Jehovah might bring again the captivity: but it shall not be; nay, it could not be, without cancelling words that have been uttered by Him through the prophets before me, and of old."

Not content, however, with his words, the false prophet snatched from Jeremiah's shoulders the wooden yoke which he carried for the purpose of perpetually reminding his people and the neighbouring nations that they must serve the king of Babylon until the appointed time had gone. He broke it in twain, saying, that similarly God within two years would break Nebuchadnezzar's yoke. Jeremiah did not prolong the altercation, but privately told Hananiah that the yoke of wood would be replaced by one of iron, and that he was causing the people to trust a lie. "This year thou shalt die," he said, as he turned away; and two months after the false prophet was a corpse.

(4) The Surrounding Nations.—On two occasions Jeremiah protested against a combination of the surrounding nations to resist the growing power of Babylon; and this without doubt was fostered by the neighbouring power of Egypt. On the first occasion he said that they would have to drink the cup of the Lord's fury; and on the second, that they must bear the yoke of Babylon. "Now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Babylon, my servant; and all the nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the time of his own land come" (Jer. xxv. and xxvii.).

It must have laid the prophet open to the charge of the want of patriotism; his words weakened the people of the land; his influence withheld them from joining a great league of emancipation. But he had no alternative. It seemed as though he must be spokesman of that great word of Jehovah, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn."

(5) The Exiles.—The false prophets had suffered the fate of their nation, and were with the rest in captivity; they at once set to work to raise the hopes of the exiles by prophesying a speedy return. "It is of no use," they said in effect, "to build houses, or plant gardens, or enter into marriage relations. In a short time we shall be back again in Jerusalem." The ringleaders were Zedekiah and Ahab, men of grossly immoral life, who were made an example of by being roasted alive (xxix. 21-23). Still the ferment continued, and the people refused to settle down into contentment with the conditions of their captivity.

Jeremiah therefore wrote a letter, which was entrusted to two men of high rank, who were friendly to him, and whom Zedekiah, the successor of Jeconiah, his nephew, sent to Babylon to give assurance of his fidelity. "Yield to the will of God" was the burden of the letter. "Build, plant, settle." "Seek the peace of the city whither God has caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace." When Shemaiah, one of these false prophets, heard this letter, he wrote off in hot haste to Zephaniah, who was now high priest, and demanded that the prophet should be put into the stocks, and his head into the collar, as a madman. The high priest, however, contented himself with simply reading the letter to Jeremiah, who replied by sending a second letter to the exiles, assuring them that God would punish Shemaiah and his seed, so that he should not have a son to perpetuate his name, and should not see the good which could come at the end of the predestined time (ch. xxix.).

These denunciations were terrible indeed, and also the fate which befel these men. It might be said, "Surely they were patriots, eager for the deliverance of their people. They were fanatical enthusiasts, not intentional criminals. They mistook their hopes for revelations." But it should be remembered that they were also convicted of immoral and evil lives. Their sins had blunted their perceptions of the Divine voice, whilst their words pandered to their people's sins, and encouraged them in their lewd idolatries. It was as vicious and fallen men, as well as false prophets, that they incurred the awful woes which befel them, both from the lip of the prophet and the hand of the Almighty.

II.—HIS COADJUTOR.

Whilst Jeremiah was pursuing this awful course, in utter loneliness and isolation, his heart must have often misgiven him. Remember that he loved his country with all the passionate patriotism of which the Jewish nature was capable, and which expresses itself so plaintively in the Book of Lamentations. Matthew Henry says, "It is not easy to preach Christ crucified in a crucified spirit, but Jeremiah did a harder thing." Though for forty years he was constantly in antagonism with the sins and vices of the people, the fountain of tears within his soul seems never to have frozen over; and he preached the terrors of Sinai with the pathos of Calvary.

It was just because he loved so much, that he suffered so keenly. And this may comfort others in their dark sorrow and despair for their fellows. They say that their natures are too tender and affectionate, and they feel everything too keenly; as though to infer that they would wish to have been clothed in tougher skin, and cast in a rougher mould. But surely it would be a fatal mistake to barter a tender heart with its faculty of suffering for a callous one without that liability. "Our sorrow," says Carlyle, "is the inverted image of our nobleness. The depth of our despair measures what capability and height of claim we have to hope. Black smoke, as of Tophet, filling all your universe, it can yet by true heart energy become flame and brilliancy of Heaven. Courage!"

You fear to love, lest you may have to suffer; but, ah, how infinitely you lose! You may have an immunity from one sort of pain; but you certainly incur the pain of a selfish, mean, and miserly soul. You miss the valleys of shadow but you also miss the heights of transfiguration. You save your life; but you lose it. Suppose that Jeremiah had put away the Heavenly summons, and had lived in the sequestered ease of Anathoth: he might have secured a respectable and peaceable life, but Jehovah would never have spoken to him; the Unseen and Eternal would never have unfolded to his vision; he had never felt the supreme satisfaction of knowing that he had done his best; he would never have shone like a star amid the darkening clouds of Jerusalem's fall; he would have missed the hero's crown, the Master's "well done," and the exceeding great reward.

In mercy God sent him an ally and comrade. In the heart of the exiles, Ezekiel arose, uttering the same messages, though clothed in the superb imagery of his gorgeous imagination. He too denounced his people's sins; advised them to settle in the land of exile; and spoke of the certain doom of the people and city. In the mouth of these two witnesses every word was established. Like well-attuned instruments, they symphonised, as our Lord said kindred souls must, when they ask concerning some heavenly gift. They were like the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks, standing before the Lord of the earth. They had power with God and man; shutting the heaven, turning the waters into blood, and smiting the earth with a curse. So the beast made war with them, as he always will. Theirs was no easy task; for they were hated by those whom their words tormented. But God has called them to his throne, and they stand in the foremost rank of those who, having fulfilled the will of God, have received his welcome and reward.

III.—THE NEED OF THIS MINISTRY.

It must be fulfilled with the unconverted. For lack of it much Gospel effort fails. Of what use are appeals to come to Jesus until the sinner has been led to see the awful peril which he has incurred? Of what avail to extol the balm of Gilead until the soul has heard and accepted the diagnosis of its fatal condition? Of what advantage to offer a seat in the lifeboat, so long as the sailor is full of confidence in his ship, and is unaware of its crazy and unseaworthy condition? One of the most important ministries of the servant of God is to destroy false confidence, to pull down refuges of lies, and to show the utter futility of venturing on the sea of eternity in any other craft than that which Christ launched from the cross of Calvary.

It is a great mistake to heal the wound of the heart too lightly. The consolations of the Gospel are very well; but they must be withheld until men have seen their state before God, and have been held over the mouth of the bottomless pit of their own sin. The greatest revivals always begin in a thorough preaching of the Law, holding it right up before the eyes of sinners. Nor is it enough to dwell in general denunciation; we must particularise, till conscience cries, "Thou art the man!"

It must be fulfilled with those who lack assurance. When men say that they cannot believe, it is probably because they are harbouring some evil thing in their hearts, or are conscious of some unrepaired wrong in their lives. This must be dealt with. There must be the righting, so far as possible, of ancient injuries; the restitution of ill-gotten gains; the seeking of forgiveness; the adjustment of wrong. The fixed purpose to do this, when an opportunity presents itself, will be sufficient to remove the stumbling-block to faith, which will gush out with the sparkle and song of an imprisoned brook. The inability to realise acceptance with God very often points to something that is grieving the Spirit, and at such times the searching ministry of probing and testing and demolition is invaluable.

It must be fulfilled in the higher attainments of the Divine life. As our obedience grows, our light will grow. And in the growing dawn, we shall become aware of evils that had passed without our notice. The Holy Spirit will lead us to discriminate between the wrong and the right, and reveal what may be hindering us. Then as He destroys one subterfuge after another, ploughs up the fallow ground, disinters the buried secrets, reveals us to ourselves, we may gratefully accept his ministry, which destroys to build, which overthrows to plant, which leads us through the grave, that He may minister eternal life. Nor must we overlook the responsibility of exhorting one another, nor the value of such exhortation.

FRONTIER EVANGELISTS.

"The minute man on the frontier"—the missionary to the pioneers in the Far West—forms the subject of a series of graphic sketches in The Chautauquan, by Rev. W. G. Puddefoot. A few incidents may be cited:—

A minute man in another part of the country finds a town given up to wickedness. He gets his frugal lunch in a saloon, the only place for him.

"Are you a preacher?"

"Yes."

"Thought so. You want to preach?"

"I don't know where I can get a hall."

"Oh, stranger, I'll give ye my dance hall, jest the thing, and I tell you we need preaching here bad."

"Good, I will preach."

The saloon man stretches a large piece of cotton across his bar and writes—

"Divine service in this place from 10 a.m. to 12 to-morrow. No drinks served during service."

It is a strange crowd: there are University men and men who never saw a school. With some little trembling the minute man begins, and as he speaks he feels more freedom and courage. At the conclusion the host seizes his big hat, and with a revolver commences to take up a collection, remarking that they had had some pretty straight slugging.

Sometimes the minute man has a harder time. A scholarly man, who now holds a high position in New England, was a short time since in a mountain town, where he preached in the morning to a few people in an empty saloon, and announced that there would be service in the same place in the evening. But he had reckoned without his host. By evening it was a saloon again in full blast. Nothing daunted, he began outside.

The men lighted a tar barrel, and began to raffle off a mule. Just then a noted bravo of the camps came down, and quick as a flash his shooting irons were out, and with a voice like a lion he said:

"Boys, I drop the first one that interferes with this service." Thus under guard from unexpected quarters, the preacher spoke.

Strapping a bundle of books on his shoulders, this minute man starts out on a mule trail. If he meets the train he must step off and climb back. He reaches the distant camp, and finds the boys by the dozen gambling in an immense saloon. He steps up to the bar and requests the liberty of singing a few hymns. The man answers surlily:

"Ye ken if ye like, but the boys won't stand it."

The next minute a rich baritone begins, "What a friend we have in Jesus," and twenty heads are lifted. He then says:

"Boys, take a hand, here are some books," and in less than ten minutes he has a male choir of many voices. One says, "Pard, sing number so-and-so"—and another, "Sing number so-and-so." By this time the saloon keeper is growling; but it is no use, the minister has the boys, and starts his work.

In some camps a very different reception awaits him, as, for instance, the following. At his appearance a wild-looking Buffalo Bill type of man greeted him with an oath and a pistol levelled at him.

"Don't yer know thar's no luck in camp with a preacher? We are going to kill ye."

"Don't you know," said the minute man, "a minister can draw a bead as quick as any man?" The boys gave a loud laugh, for they love grit; and the rough slunk away. But a harder trial followed.

"Glad to see ye, pard, but ye'll have to set 'em up 'fore ye commence—rule of the camp, ye know"—but before our man could frame an answer the hardest drinker in the crowd said, "Boys, he is the fust minister as has had the sand to come up here, and I'll stand treat for him." It is a great pleasure to add that the man who did this is to-day a Christian.

SAILORS AT HOME.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

Springfield, Miss Child's Forest Home for sailors, is just the place to get a seafarer to whom the surroundings of London are a temptation. It gives them a peep at country life, which is not too familiar to sea-going men. One such declared that he had not seen trees in leaf for nine years. But perhaps the sick appreciate this leafy bower more than any. One who has long been suffering, writing to the monthly meeting of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew," said:—"My health has greatly improved. Please remember me in your prayers to-morrow. It is only suffering ones that can fully realise what a blessing this quiet and peaceful Home really is. It has been, by the mercy of God, the means of restoring me to a measure of health and buoyancy of spirit that, humanly speaking, I could not have attained if this door had not been opened to me."

At the "Welcome Home," Ratcliff Highway, in the shadows of the dark prison-suggesting docks, closer work is done. The following incident of the free suppers to poor sailors is copied from the "log" at the Home:—Christmas was approaching, but to the out-of-luck seamen it offered little attraction, save in the prospect of a free meal, etc., given by the followers of Jesus. After a supper of this kind, two men were listening most attentively to the story of Christ, the Lover and Saviour of the lost. They sat next to each other, but were almost as great a contrast as Epping's grassy slopes and a Whitechapel alley.

One was respectably dressed, with clean collar and gentlemanly bearing; the other showed a weather-beaten face, much cut about, and had a careless, uncivilised appearance—a picture of sin and misery. The one had been paid off only the day before, after a long voyage, and, intent upon going home to Scotland for the holidays, had provided himself with a good suit of clothes, and all the addenda that make a man look respectable. He had only intended staying in London a day or two, but such a fine gentleman did not long escape the eager eyes of watchful landsharks, and short as the hours had been, he had lost all the rest of his hard-earned cash, and the hope of spending Christmas with the loved ones who were doubtless expecting him with joy. In this shipwrecked condition he had been picked up by Miss Child's helpers, and they had the joy of helping him safe into the "lifeboat" of salvation.

The other man had been ashore some time, and had led a rough life ever since he first went to sea. In every port he had entered, if money could be got, he spent it in drink, with the result that he never had any tidy clothes. Consequently, he had lost all self-respect, and had become a perfectly pitiable object. "Praise God," wrote a worker who spoke with this man, "he was not too bad to be saved, and he, too, accepted Jesus, after he found that true friends and, above all, the Friend of friends, even Jesus, longed to see him saved." Both these men were helped until they went to sea together in the same ship. Such cases often occur at the free suppers given as funds during winter permit.

A minister, preaching about the good ship "Zion," once said that she would at last carry all her passengers safely to the heavenly port. Another, who heard the words, said to him, "Brother, the ship Zion does not carry passengers, she only carries a crew." Miss Child believes in this assertion, and has formed the Christian sailors into a "Lifeboat Crew," the first of the kind, to take meetings, give their experiences, etc., at any halls to which they are invited. In this blessed work rich and poor unite—the Queen of Sweden and many Swedish sailors having joined. That the hearts of the men are in this work may be gathered from the fact that after a voyage, and perhaps forty-eight hours without rest, they will hurry off to a meeting, sometimes not staying for tea or a change.

Christmas is coming! who will help to swell the cargo of woollens for the "Christmas Boat"? Your prayers are needed for all departments of the work, and any help you can give will be greatly valued. If you can, pay a visit to Miss Child at her "Welcome Home," 173, Ratcliff Highway, E.

THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS, a temperance auxiliary of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, held its monthly meeting on Thursday at the Chapel, St. George's-street, E., when a good audience assembled. Amongst the speakers were Messrs. Schlenker, Beckett, and Wells.

SACRIFICE.

By Pastor LEVI PALMER.

The cross of Christ is God's answer to the sin of man. There proceeds from it something more than a moral influence. It is not a tragedy got up for the purpose of affecting man's feelings; it is an atonement which God makes for human guilt. Even amongst heathen nations, where sin has abounded, sacrifices have always abounded. Tribes have been discovered whose language has had no word for forgiveness, but none have yet been found with no word for sacrifice. Vengeance has been found when mercy has been absent, but mercy has never been found in the absence of vengeance. Since the days of Abel the cry of the universal conscience has been, "without the shedding of blood is no remission."

The doctrine of expediency, also, as advocated by Caiaphas, falls far short of the Divine meaning of the Cross. Many things are expedient which are not lawful. It may have been expedient for Christ to die for the people—but unless guilt could be imputed to Him, so that he could die as a substitute, it would not have been lawful. A guilty person may be executed as a warning to the guilty, but to hang an innocent man for the good of the community would be an atrocity, but not a sacrifice. If Christ, who knew no sin, had not been made sin for us—the dagger of the assassin might have stabbed him, but the sword of justice would never have awaked against him. It was because He clothed his soul with our sin, that "it pleased the Lord to bruise him." His holiness qualified him for assuming sin; his righteousness remained after the sin was slain. It was not the innocence of Christ that heaven frowned at; it was the dark mantle of human guilt that drew the thunderbolt of Divine wrath.

In the death of Christ some have seen only the operation of a law that pervades every realm of nature. Vicarious sacrifice is everywhere, we are told. In the bloom of the flower and the fruit of the tree, we see life through death. In the frolic of the lamb and the leap of the stag, we see the buoyancy of a life that has been derived from the death of clover and grass. Even in the case of man, the viands that constitute his feast and sustain his life, remind of the shambles and slaughter-house. When the vegetable dies that the animal may live, the lower dies for the higher. In the cross we see the death of the highest for the lowest. Moreover, in creation there is nothing voluntary. The higher captures and exacts the life of the lower. The vegetable draws from the soil its virtue, the animal destroys the vegetable, and man captures the animal, and exacts its life to feed his own.

Not so in the sacrifice of Jesus. His life was spontaneously laid upon the altar. "Lo! I come," He said, "I delight to do thy will." Of his life He said, "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." It was not man who sought Him, it was He who sought man. No cords of a mere man could have bound Him to the cross, but the cords of his own love bound Him there. If we scan every realm of nature, we shall find no record of a death analogous to the death of Christ. The universe has but one such cross. It will never see another. "Once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the death of Himself."

Jesus did not die as an example. A hospital needs a physician, and not a mere specimen of what health should be. Jesus did not come to reveal the law, but so to live and die that he might be the end of the law for righteousness to all that believe. Socrates died as an example, and his death is barren of all great results. Christ died as a substitute, and the ransomed of the Lord are now returning to Zion.

Now, in the cross of Christ we see a moral satisfaction for sin. We have there that full-orbed obedience to the law described as perfect love to God, and perfect love to man. It is the obedience blended with the suffering that makes it a propitiation to God and a ransom for man. The obedience gives virtue to the suffering—and the suffering gives efficacy to the obedience. Thus through all his suffering—even in its culmination upon the Cross—the deep pulse of an infinite love to God and to man kept beating. It is because in this sacrifice we have the loving obedience of heart, soul, mind, and might, that it fulfils all righteousness. Thus Paul calls it the one righteousness for many offences. In the Fall, righteousness was shattered into countless fragments. In the life and death of Christ, we have all gathered into one perfect whole and gloriously presented to God. Thus his satisfaction is infinite. Truth is infinite. One truth is greater than a thousand lies. Love is infinite. One moment of pure, perfect, passionate love is more mighty than centuries of revenge. Justice is infinite. For justice to triumph for one second as it did in Calvary surpasses a universe of human woe. We have all this infinitude of righteousness in the sacrifice of Christ. Justice and mercy meet together—righteousness and peace kiss each other. We can dispense with the ledger theory which balances one virtue with one sin, and one groan of Christ with one pang his elect must have endured. In man's stead he has brought in everlasting righteousness. His work is one perfect whole. He has established truth, equity, love, mercy, and justice. He has magnified the law and restored it to its full-orbed splendour. This must have been done if only one soul was to be saved. Now that it is done, there is atonement for the sin of the world.

MY START IN BUSINESS.

An Extract from the Autobiography of Dr. G. D. DOWKONTT.

After some months our family removed to another part of London. The struggle up hill went on for some time; now things would brighten, and again the clouds would gather. One day, breakfast being finished, with it ended all supplies, actual and probable, giving rise to the oft-repeated question, "Where is the next to come from?" A mother's prayers again ascended for help to Him who never turned a deaf ear to any earnest seeker for aid, and again the cry, "Lord, help me," was answered. True, the answer seemed long in coming, but it came at last.

The boy of twelve years left home that morning, fully determined to bring back something before night. All that day he wandered up and down the streets of that great city, his clothes being too shabby, as he felt, to make it worth his while to apply for a place in some of the large and stylish shops.

It was nearly dark, when hungry and footsore, and ready to despair of securing anything, his ears caught the sound of a horse's hoofs close to him, causing him to turn around, at the same time the voice of the rider accosted him with "Here, boy, will you hold my horse?" "Yes, sir," was the ready response, as the bridle was grasped. As the writer stood there on Regent Street, holding that horse, he believes the first real prayer for help arose to God from his heart, and it was answered.

Among the many things projected in his boyish mind was that of starting in the news business, not in any large way, of course, at first. He had often noticed the boys at Charing Cross and elsewhere selling the daily papers, and after thinking the matter over, had concluded that, although it would be very hard for him to become a "newsboy," and humbling as it might be to run the risk of meeting some of the friends of "better days," still it was better to do that than nothing to earn an honest living, and his prayer took shape accordingly. If he could but get sixpence, he could and would start business next day, and this was what he needed and sought.

An hour passed before the owner of the horse came out of the house he had entered. As he sprang into the saddle, he dropped something into the hand of the writer, saying, "Here you are, boy; sorry to have kept you so long," and off he galloped. It had become too dark to see what kind of coin he had given, which, by its size seemed too large for a sixpence and too small for a halfpenny. Taking it to a shop window, the light revealed a shilling, of which I was the sole possessor. How much larger a coin appears when set in the frame of poverty and need!

The question now arose as to how to dispose of this important sum, but this was quickly settled and acted upon. Entering a shop near by, the shilling was exchanged for two sixpences, one of which was invested in a loaf of bread, a small amount of tea and sugar, and a candle, the other was carefully placed aside to commence business with next day. What joy that shilling caused! A supper for six, with light to eat it by, and enough left to start in business. Truly if necessity is the mother of invention, poverty must be the father.

On the following morning the writer crept out of his bed on the floor, from the side of the other children, and stole out of the house unobserved just after the church clock struck four.

He had spent a considerable portion of the night practising, at least mentally, and at times half aloud, the various titles of the papers he hoped to sell. Arriving near Temple Bar, in the Strand, the sixpence was quickly exchanged for eight penny papers, which were soon sold and others bought. At this time there was a great demand for news, as the Crimean war was raging.

By ten o'clock home was reached, and the consternation, anxiety, and hunger of the family relieved by the production of two shillings, into which sum the sixpence had grown in six hours. General rejoicing followed the announcement made by the business man of twelve summers to the effect that, "Want shall be no more."

The following morning the writer was standing near Charing Cross trying to sell his papers, when a gentleman accosted him, asking how long he had been in that business, and accompanied his question by what perhaps seemed to be a reflection upon his manner of conducting it, viz., the statement that he did not think he had been at it long.

After asking several questions regarding my home and parents, he handed me his card, on which was inscribed "Captain J. A. Sykes, H.M. 94th Regt.," and below which he wrote his address, saying, "Call there at nine o'clock to-morrow morning, my boy, and I think I can give you some clothing, which your mother may alter for you."

When the recipient of the card called there the following morning, he was astounded at the heap of things the captain gave him. It was almost impossible for him to carry them away, but he succeeded, and, after several rests by the way, he finally reached home very tired, and had to obtain the help of his father to carry the bundle upstairs.

When it was opened there appeared all sorts of clothing, the value of which was not less than £10. A mother's fears led to close but kindly questioning, mingled with expressions of astonishment as to what could make an entire stranger so act towards a poor boy. The only explanation was in one word—God

WORLD-WIDE REVIVAL.

Dear Sir,—Some time ago one of your friends (I think Mr. Radcliffe) spoke of the hope that the next great Revival would be world-wide. How many of God's children throughout the world may be moved with similar desires? It is refreshing to find recently in a young Chinese Christian the same spirit of aspiration, especially for this country, which is a world in itself.

The friend I refer to last year was deeply stirred by the news from India of the ingathering of many thousand of souls in different localities. He seemed to regard such news as an incentive to us to expect and attempt great things. Again, his desire took the form of concern that all native Christians should have it laid on their heart to win those nearest to them, and he reckoned the great numbers to be gained if every one brought a few to the Saviour.

He is strong in the greatness of the Divine promises, and feels that they are for present fulfilment. The need of times of refreshing seems to impress him very much, as Mr. Finney was impressed when he gave his lectures on revivals. I pointed out to our friend that here and there great success was granted, but he replied to the effect that he found no success to be more than partial.

I invited him to pray. His heart was greatly opened. Over and over again in his pleading he referred to the wonderful ease with which God could work. This joyous assurance was truly inspiring. There is much in China that is depressing. Some whom we know when travailing in soul for greater things are quietly told to expect disappointment. Yet nothing is impossible with God; and to find a Chinese brother deeply moved in soul with a great God-honouring faith is one of the choicest tokens of loving kindness granted by our Heavenly Father. May the many take up the same evangel, and may overpowering strength be given to cope with and overcome all hindrances.

If any of your readers are led to bless God and encourage greater expectations from the above facts, then my having troubled you will not be in vain.—Yours faithfully, J. Sadler.

"ETERNITY! WHERE?"

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

The brilliant boarding-house was full of life and stir, as the visitors turned in from diverse wanderings and pleasure seeking, to recruit themselves and prepare for the amusements offered by various institutions for the early darkening evenings. Strains of music came from the drawing-rooms, and laughter and merriment told how the pleasure of "the common round" had been lifted by the exhilarating air and freedom from daily cares.

Imagining herself unheard, as she glided swiftly down the broad stairs, Doreen Wilston was delighting herself in giving utterance to the refrain that had lingered about her since she heard a gentle-looking invalid on the beach singing, and the two words, with their solemn interrogative, came with force over and over again, and thus impelled, she, at that moment, sang out in clear and resonant notes, "Eternity! Where? Eternity! Where?" Soft and low, yet rich and penetrating, were the notes, and once having escaped her lips, she had not sight so "keen and strong that it could follow the flight of song," and wafted by the Spirit's power and guided by the unerring hand, the cadences formed a lodgement in the heart of one who was, in the full meaning of the term, a man of the world.

Eric Trelman, craving supremely the gains of this life, with all its flattering favours, had gone there with his fashionable wife to enjoy the whirl of pleasures, and was passing at that moment along the upper corridor, prepared to enter the carriage that was to convey them to "the play." Strong man in combating men of business, bold in asserting his rights in fierce competition—yet arrested suddenly by the sound of a voice that carried a pointed arrow on its wings, and directed it to a vulnerable place in his world-encased heart. Drawing back, he paused, seeing not the singer, and wishing not to be seen, but listening, as in softer solemnity the last echo floated by, "Eternity! Where?" and no more the voice was heard; the one who could not restrain her song had gone to her company—and he was about to go to his.

The bright hall light displayed the flash of evening dress as he escorted his friends to the door, and lively chatter occupied his attention. The excitement was intense, at one time weird and harrowing, at another enchanting into wild delirium, checked and relieved by the falling of the curtain. "But why," asked Eric Trelman of himself, "should that interval give pause for him to hear a faint sound, as of a warning or a call, and why on the blank stage did his eyes, and his alone, read out those simple words, 'Eternity! Where?'?"

Yet it was a fact, too stubborn to gainsay; he heard it, saw it, every time, and it seemed to say, "Eric Trelman, some day the play of life will end, and the curtain fall over the dazzling falsity of earth, and the question must be answered then, if not before—'Eternity! Where?'"

Glad in heart, Doreen Wilston could sing that question and answer it with unfaltering voice. The very words sent a throb of glorious expectation through her soul, though she was content to wait, work, and enjoy with gratitude all the brightest and innocent joys of life, such as the worldling never knows, and had she guessed the rankling her song had caused she could not have left that place without a prayer for the one to whom she had not been introduced; but God can use our actions and our influence, while we are hidden by the shadow of his hand.

She had gone to that place for reinvigoration, in her heart determining to conquer her natural reserve, and say and do something for the souls of those she would mingle with, but the last day had come, and in every attempt she seemed to have been baffled. "Eugenie," she said to the young French girl who had accompanied her, "I am dispirited to-night; I came here with bright thoughts and plans, and I have done nothing worthy of a Christian, and now we leave to-morrow, and no one will be the better for my presence here."

"Doreen, you do contradict yourself. Once you said to me, 'Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass'; and you said this meant 'in everything,' and now you are saying your plans were best, and you are sad because you have not just carried them out."

"You are right to remind me, but I think I did leave it with God, and yet——"

"Ah, see, you do leave it with Him, and yet want to hold the reins in your own hands. He does not promise to show you all the way He works to answer prayer; and the words do come fresh to me, 'that they may see your good works, glorify your Father which is in heaven.' A life that shines does more than words. Come, cheer your heart, and trust the Lord you taught me to love."

The words thus uttered gave new force to the passage Doreen read that night, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." And again she said, "Oh! use me Lord; use even me, just as thou wilt, and when, and where. Only, Lord, increase my faith."

The summer days gave way to winter's frosts. The visitors had returned to their homes, but Eric Trelman had never lost the sound of those two words he heard sung on the stairs during his summer holiday, and although they seemed but as a pleasant sound, at times he halted to listen to the words, quickly dismissing them as not compatible with his course of life, yet unable to obliterate their memory. No one knew of it; it was not worth a mention in his estimation. And thus lightly he could treat that on which the God whose ways are not our ways would make to hang his soul's salvation.

There was consternation one evening in the large house where he dwelt, and after the carriage of a noted physician had driven away, servants and friends alike were anxious to hear the result of the consultation. That morning when preparing to go out, he had been seized with a violent fit, and until evening lay unconscious. "Very doubtful; critical case," such were the rumours passing from one to another. His inconsolable wife sat beside him, waiting, hoping, longing for some sign of recognition, and minutes seemed hours, and hours as days. But when he spoke, she thought he knew her, "Where?" he asked, and quickly answering "Here, Eric," she listened for his reply.

For ten minutes there was silence, then he said suddenly, "Eternity, Where? Where? Where?"

To so strange a question, she could give him no answer, but when full power of thought returned, he did not cease to allude to it, nor would he rest till some effort had been made to find out who sang those words, and sent them so effectually aimed at his heart.

"It must be, his mind is weakening," said his wife, "for he has not spoken of this before, and now it looks absurd to ask who sang just two words, and so long ago."

Enquiries were made through an acquaintance living at the watering place, to the effect that only one person could have been likely to sing that kind of song at the boarding-house—"for she was a Christian anyone could tell," said the attendant—and so a name and address were obtained as a surmise; and Eric Trelman (held for a time between life and death) was not easily to put aside his wish to see the one who had given him such unaccountable distress.

Hence it happened one morning Doreen Wilston stood by her window reading, a second time, a short note in strange handwriting, as follows:—

"Dear Madam,—How I have obtained your address shall be explained, but I beseech you, if you possibly can, to call and see my husband. He is dying, and words of yours, he believes, are causing him untold anguish of mind," etc.

"Words of mine!" she said to the friend who lived with her and her aged father, "words of mine! Eugenie."

"See! the letter says it was when we were at that boarding-house," said Eugenie. "Ah! I do remember you committed yourself and your way unto the Lord then, and had great fear He could not manage such a trust; you shall see my friend—you go."

The distance was short to the other part of London, and Doreen felt herself being led in a way she had not known; she could not recall any words she had spoken likely to trouble or hurt anyone, and the whole thing was shrouded in mystery.

Too much in earnest, with approaching death almost in sight, Eric Trelman received the announcement of her arrival without any cowardly fear of telling the whole truth, and begged his wife to take her to his room.

It was a solemn responsibility, a peculiar ordeal, but when Doreen saw the distinguished face of the man bolstered up on the couch, she recognised it, but she was sure of never having spoken to him, and began to think it was some mistake. He was weak, and Mrs. Trelman repeated what he had told her of the incident.

"I might have spoken of it to some, who could tell me all I want to know, but I felt I must go to one who so sang that I could never lose the song—never rest after hearing it. Will you tell me why you sang those words then, and there; had you a reason?"

"I did not know anyone heard," said Doreen. "I was full of joy at the glorious thought of eternity, and I sang those words almost unconsciously, but God, 'in whose hand my breath is, and whose are all my ways,' knew why I was to sing them then, and I see now."

"Where can such a worldling such as I have been speed Eternity. O God, this is awful!" he exclaimed.

But guided by the indwelling Spirit, she became a messenger of God to the convicted soul, and brought him face to face with his Saviour. When leaving him, he pleaded she would go again, but before that was possible another messenger entered his room and would not leave without him, and Eric Trelman, though late, knew where, as he stepped into Eternity. The day after Doreen called and received his dying message. It was, "Tell her to sing, speak, act, and be everything in the spirit in which she acted when she sang on those stairs, 'Eternity! Where?'"

He liveth long who liveth well;
All other life is short and vain;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of living most for heavenly gain.

He liveth long who liveth well;
All else is being flung away;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day.

REV. J. McNEILL AT MELBOURNE.

[From a Correspondent.]

The mission which Rev. John McNeill and Mr. Burke are conducting in Melbourne, is now in full swing. The business men's meeting, from 1 to 2 o'clock daily in the Town Hall, has simply been splendid. The hall seats about the same number as the Mildmay Conference Hall, London, 2,500. At first the floor of the building only was reserved for men. But daily the crowds increased, and the past few days only the gallery and one side balcony have been open to ladies; and probably next week, as Mr. McNeill intimated, "the ladies will have to go—somewhere else."

"Daniel in the lions' den," "David in the dumps," "Three men who came to Jesus," and "The Pharisee and the Publican," have been topics from which Mr. McNeill has discoursed. Many a one in the toils and worries of city life, or down in the dumps owing to "the depression," which Mr. McNeill thinks is about the main thing Melbourne has at present, has had a word of cheer and encouragement. The scathing denunciations against pride, the drink curse, and everything standing in the way of true humility and godliness, have caused many a one to wince. He has spared none; ministers, preachers, and teachers, all have their turn, as well as ordinary church members and outsiders.

The Mayor of Melbourne has shown his appreciation of the work by granting the use of the Town Hall for another week—this time without charge. All ranks and classes are attending these gatherings. The evening meetings in the Exhibition Building have been crowded with audiences, evidently largely composed of Christians; still, very many, in the second meetings, have "stood up" for Jesus for the first time; and, although we are considered hard to move, we have been moved, and the results are cheering. Sunday was the great day. Monday, about 3,000 attended; nightly the crowd increased, till Thursday and Friday saw well on 5,000 packed in each night.

Mr. Burke has sung to great advantage in the Town Hall. Already there is talk of the future movements of the evangelists. Probably Geelong will have a turn of them for a week, after which they will return to Melbourne, then go to Ballarat and Bendigo. In due course South Australia, Queensland, New South Wales, and New Zealand will be favoured by a visit from them before they wend their homeward way.

Melbourne, Aug. 4.

THEATRICAL EMPLOYEES.—On Friday afternoon a number of ladies of the ballet, chorus ladies and dressers employed in different West-end music-halls, assembled for tea at the Buckingham Temperance Hotel. About seventy were present. Mr. Wm. Forbes said a few words of welcome, and a short address was given by Mrs. Maynard.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.—AMOS I.

The Introduction (1-2).—The earthquake took place in Uzziah's reign; it is mentioned by Zechariah (xiv. 5). God uses the weak things of the world to confound the mighty. The imagery of this book is suggested by the surroundings of a peasant's life. Tekoa lay six miles S.E. from Bethlehem, and twelve miles from Jerusalem.

The Judgment of Damascus (3-5).—Amos begins with predictions against neighbouring peoples, that Israel may be led to appreciate her guilt, and fear the approach of God's judgments (Luke xii. 47). The formula, for three transgressions and for four, means that their iniquities had reached their full measure; seven being the perfect number. Gilead was east of Jordan, and her inhabitants had been cast beneath the threshing-sledges, which had torn their bodies (2 Kings x. 32, 33; xiii. 7; 2 Sam. xii. 31). (5) The "bar" is gate. Aven, a pleasant valley near Damascus. Kir was near the Caspian. This was fulfilled when Tiglath-pileser carried the Syrians captive (2 Kings xvi. 9).

The Judgment of Philistia (6-8).—Reference is probably made to the desolating raids of the Philistines on Judah (2 Chron. xxvi. 6; xxviii. 18). Edom was the inveterate foe of Judah. (7) This fire was lit by Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii. 8). (8) The destruction of Philistia was executed by Nebuchadnezzar, then by Alexander.

The Judgment of Tyre (9-10).—The covenant was between Hiram and David. Tyre suffered grievously under Nebuchadnezzar, and was destroyed by Alexander the Great.

The Judgment of Edom (11-12).—Edom was akin to Israel, but was its inveterate foe, from the days of the Exodus to the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar (Psa. cxxxvii. 7, 8). (12) Teman was a city of Edom, named after Esau's grandson (Gen. xxxvi. 11), Bozrah (Is. lxiii. 1).

The Judgment of Ammon (13-15). Rabbah was their capital city. There was enmity between the two peoples in the days of Saul, which flamed out throughout their history (Jer. xlix. 1, and Hos. xiii. 16). Each of these terrible indictments reminds us that there is a judgment of nations, wherein each stands before the bar of God. Nebuchadnezzar carried Ammon into captivity.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 17.—AMOS II.

The Judgment of Moab (1-3).—It is supposed that the King of Moab took vengeance on the King of Edom for his alliance with Jehoram and Jehoshaphat (2 Kings iii. 27) by burning him alive after his allies had retired.

The Judgment of Judah (4-5).—There is a change here. The prophet does not so much deal with sins against man as with those against God. We are judged according to the greater light or higher standard we possess. When we put away God's truth we are misled by lies, and God surrenders us to them. (5) This fire was Nebuchadnezzar and his Chaldeans.

The Judgment of Israel (6-16).—We have first an enumeration of their sins (6-8). Injustice to the poor was the first charge. They could not rest till they had reduced the poor to such abject need as to make them lie on the ground or put dust on their heads. Then unchastity. Lastly, feasts in idol temples, amid the pledges of the poor unjustly detained and confiscated. Then an enumeration of God's benefits (9-16). The Amorite was the most powerful of the Canaanites, and is therefore put for all. (11) It was more likely that Israel would be reached by men raised from her own people; therefore the Nazarites were their own young men. (12) But Israel had refused and choked their voices. (13) Ah! the pressure of sin on God. As the cart groans beneath its heavy load, so He. (15) When God is against us there is no hope of being able to withstand or escape Him. The old Latin motto says, "If thou wouldst fly from God, fly to Him."

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18.—AMOS III.

The Warrant for the Prophet's Warning (1-8).—The closer our relationship and identification with God, the more certain our chastisement if we turn aside from Him. The sins in us, which might in others pass without notice, are rigorously dealt with by Him who loves us too well to permit our life to be permanently injured by sinful indulgences. It is because a child stands in such near proximity to its father that the father takes so much care to remedy any malformation in its person. (3) We can only have fellowship with God so long as we are agreed with Him. (4) The roarings of God's voice through the prophets indicated that there was serious injury at work in Israel's heart. There would not be such warnings without due cause. (5) The Assyrian invasion was not a chance occurrence, but was a snare deliberately laid and permitted to be laid; and God would not remove them till they had performed his purpose. Similarly, our trials have all a specific lesson, purpose, and meaning. (6) The people of a city would be alarmed by a trumpet, but Israel was not moved by the warnings of the prophets. We should seriously consider the messages which sorrow brings in its hand. (7) Those who love God are entrusted with his secrets. (John xv. 15; xvii. 25, 26.) (8) As the roar of the lion necessarily produces fear, so the movements of God in the souls of his children necessarily lead to utterance in speech. Amos and his brethren had no alternative but to speak out. (Acts v. 29).

Impending Disasters (9-15).—The nobles of Philistia and Egypt are summoned to view the sins of Israel, and to adjudge that their sufferings and punishments have been deserved. (11) From all sides the invader would descend on the sinful land (2 Kings xvii. 5). (12) The shepherd rescues but a small piece from the savage beast, and only a fragment of Israel would escape. The couch and bed, here mentioned, probably refer to the luxury which characterised both Israel and Syria about this time. (14) Bethel's golden calf was the beginning of Israel's apostasy, and would be the first to be demolished (1 Kings xii. 32; xiii. 2; 2 Kings xxiii. 15). (15) Winter-houses were situated to get all the warmth, summer-houses to escape the heat. Their multiplication, together with the excessive adornments of the buildings, were indicative of the growing luxury and self-indulgence of the people.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19.—AMOS IV.

The Nobles of Israel (1-3).—Bashan was famous for its rich pasture lands. Its cattle are here used as a metaphor for the princes of Israel. Lords or masters must refer to the king and the royal family, who were solicited to drink with them. (2) But there is a higher Lord than any earthly sovereign who had sworn their destruction. It was the awful custom of the Assyrians and Babylonians to lead off their subject races with hooks in their noses. (3) There would be no need to go out by the gates, because the walls would be broken down. They would cast themselves into the palace. This clause is not clear; the R.V. says that the text is corrupt.

Successive Judgments (4-13).—This section opens ironically. The people are bidden betake themselves to their idols, since God has given them up. They will find how futile idolatry is! It is a terrible thing when God abandons us to our heart's lusts, and says, practically, Do as you like. (6) Jehovah details the various chastisements which had been inflicted with the view of changing their evil courses, but all had been in vain. At the close of each item he adds the sad refrain, Yet have ye not returned to Me. There had been famine (2 Kings viii. 1). When there is nothing to eat, the teeth are clean indeed. (7) No rain (1 Kings xvii. 1). The partialness of the drought proved that there was a Divine intention and meaning in it. (9) Locusts and the blasting of the east wind had been permitted. (10) And pestilence, like that formerly sent on Egypt (Ex. ix. 3; Deut. xxviii. 27). (11) Some terrible volcanic convulsion is here alluded to. (12) God would proceed to still worse judgments. In the meanwhile Israel is summoned to stand before Him. At his bar the nation must render an account. So must each soul. Whether we choose or not, everyone must face the Judge, either as Christians to have the award of our life-work, or as sinners to hear our sentence. Prepare, my soul, to meet him. (13) How sublime this description. How great God must be who made the mountains! How penetrating and mysterious, who made the wind! How omniscient, who knows our thoughts! How sublime, who calls up the thunderstorm! How mighty, who subjects all high things beneath his tread! Who will dare to stand before such a God, apart from the righteousness of Jesus?

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20.—AMOS V.

Invitations to seek God (1-9).—The prophet breaks out into lamentation, as he anticipates the fulfilment of his predictions. (2) Hitherto Jerusalem had been unconquered, hence the virgin daughter. She lieth forsaken on her land. How well it is for those who are called to announce the Divine judgments to do so with lamentation and tears. (4) There was still hope if Israel would turn to Jehovah. Gilgal (Hosea iv. 15; ix. 19), Beersheba, in the south of Judah, was also the scene of idolatrous abominations. (6) None of Bethel's idols would be able to arrest God's judgments when they befel. (7) Even the worst sinners are invited to repent. They who had made judgment as wormwood bitterness to the poor. (8) Another magnificent description of Jehovah! These stars would be familiar to a shepherd, Pleiades presaging the spring, Orion the storm. This is alternative to iv. 13. The waters answer God's call, though man is obdurate. (9) Note R.V.: "sudden destruction upon the strong, so that destruction cometh upon the fortress." Oh, soul, what a God is thine! Thy springs and storms await his word; He can turn thy darkest shadows into morning dawn; all nature awaits his bidding. Salvation for thee, destruction to thy foes.

Offers of Grace (10-15).—Men always hate those that rebuke their sins. (11) God takes as sin against Himself all trampling on the poor, and exactions of any kind. (13) The times were so bad, that it seemed an act of prudence to keep from meddling with public affairs. (14) It had been their boast, that God cared for them as his people, and they should indeed find it so. (15) The proud tribes of Joseph were much diminished from what they had been, but God would be gracious to them, and restore them to their former glory.

Wailings (16-27).—It seemed as if the prophet foresaw that the people would not need, and he goes on to foretell their inevitable anguish. So great would be the sorrow that the inexperienced peasant would be called in to perform the functions of the professional mourner. (18) In mockery of the prophets, the people often said, Let the day of the Lord come; but when it came, it would be heavy with retribution. (19) Bad as their present condition was, it would be infinitely worse when the day of the Lord really did arrive, as though a man fled from a lion and met a bear, which is crueller; or fleeing from danger without, was stung by a scorpion concealed in a hole of the house-wall. (21) Mere rites, apart from heart-obedience, are obnoxious to God (Isa. i. 15). (25) This is a question involving the answer, yes. But all the time there had been an undercurrent of idolatry. They had secretly worshipped and carried about the tabernacle of Moloch their king. (26) These idols were connected with the ancient worship of heavenly bodies; Moloch, for instance, was Saturn.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 21.—AMOS VI.

The Luxury of the two Nations (1-7).—Zion is included with Samaria in this prophecy. The nobles are specially designated, to whom the people were accustomed to go for the decision of controversies. Let us see to it that we are not at ease in Zion, without the rest of God on the one hand or love for man on the other. (2) Calneh on the Tigris had been recently subdued by Assyria. Hamath had suffered the same fate. Gath had been conquered by Uzziah. If they had not been able to stand, how much less the weaker peoples of Canaan! (3) Men always postpone the date of judgment. (4-6) The interior of a Jewish nobleman's palace; the sumptuous couch, the dainty appetite, the frivolous song, the large bowls of wine, and contrasted with these, indifference to the national affliction. So Joseph's brethren ate their food whilst their brother was in the pit. It is the sign of a decadent state when the palaces are full of festive riot, and the poor rot in neglect.

Judgment (8-14).—God had loved Zion, but now his favour is turned into abhorrence. (9) The plague would sweep away the people. It would be so virulent that all the men of a house, though they were ten in number, would die. (10) A man's uncle would have to bury him, because all the nearer relatives would have died. This distant relative calls to the survivor within the house, asking if he alone is left of his family, and on hearing that there is none other, he bids the sickly man refrain from acknowledging his thanks to God, because he too will soon follow the fate of the rest. (11) The great house was probably Israel, the small one Judah; the one shall be irretrievably destroyed, the other, though injured, would still survive. (12) The people acted as perversely with respect to judgment and righteousness, as though a man tried to plough a rock with horses or oxen. (13) The horn is the symbol of strength, and the people vaunted their own. (14) Hamath was in the north, the gate of Palestine by which the Assyrian would enter the land. The river of the wilderness may refer to the Nile, and if so, all Israel was included in the scope of this prediction.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22.—AMOS VII.

Three Visions (1-9).—There is great similarity in these. (1) Grasshoppers, rather, locusts in the caterpillar state. The king's mowings were those exacted as royal tribute. The intercession of the righteous man avails much. In the mention of Jacob, God is reminded of his covenant. The overthrow of Israel was postponed to give further opportunity to repent. (4) The fire may refer to drought or war; and perhaps anticipates the invasions of Assyria in the reigns of Menahem and Pekah. They did not complete the downfall of Israel, owing to this intercessory prayer. (7) The plumbline was used for purposes of destruction, as well as of edification. God pulls down only according to rigorous justice. Israel had exhausted its day of grace, and Amos was withheld from intercession. Pray for the ungodly as long as you can.

The Interference of Amaziah (10-17).—He was chief priest at the idolatrous shrine. The people were profoundly moved by the words of the prophet, and it may be were ceasing to frequent the idol temple. (11) This was an exaggeration, as the prophet had said nothing about Jeroboam. (14) There was great simplicity and dignity in this reply. Amos had no choice in the matter than to utter the sacred oracles with which he had been entrusted.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SEPTEMBER 23.

DANIEL'S ABSTINENCE (Dan. i. 8-20).

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 8.

THE scene of this story is Babylon, the greatest city in the world of that day, and the metropolis of the Babylonian empire. Picture it as a city four-square, with walls 300 feet high and 80 feet wide, mounted by numerous towers, and each side of the square having twenty-five gates of solid brass. Within the city the magnificence baffles description, with its bridge connecting the palaces on either side of the river, its gorgeous temples, its hanging gardens, and the royal palace of Nebuchadnezzar, which was one of the wonders of the world.

What can interest us in this idolatrous city? It is now the scene of the captivity of Judah (verses 1, 2). Among the captives are Daniel and his three companions. Of their previous history we know nothing, but their names and their conduct in Babylon suggest that they had been well and carefully trained. The name of God is compounded with each of these four names (6). Daniel means God is my judge; Hananiah, God is gracious; Mishael, This is as God; and Azariah, God is a helper. From the fact that Daniel lived through the whole of the seventy years' captivity, we conclude that he was at this time only about fourteen years of age.

Their first temptation, and the manner in which it was overcome, is the story of this lesson. Their captivity opened to all of them the way to distinction (3, 4). It was no mean honour to be in close attendance upon a monarch to whom God had committed government in its most absolute form. But their very privilege brings with it a danger. There were several reasons why they could not, as Jews, partake of the king's dainties. (1) They might contain meat such as the law of God forbade (Lev. xi.); (2) the flesh may not have been cleansed from blood as the law required (Deut. xii. 23-25); and (3) according to heathen custom, a portion of the meat and wine had been first offered in honour of their idol.

Daniel's victory over such a temptation is most suggestive and helpful as an example to young people to-day.

(1) It occurred at the beginning of his career in Babylon. This is more important than at first appears. What his future will be depends in great measure upon this. The different parts of our life are related to one another. The second action not only follows the first, but its character is determined by it. Apply this to the youth who enters a new situation, who comes under new influences, who forms new acquaintances. Meet the first temptation with bold resistance, and your stand is taken. Many a lad has fallen because he did not give an unhesitating "No" to the first suggestion of evil.

(2) It occurred while he was yet only a boy. Might he not excuse himself on the ground of his youth? How should such a child set himself against his seniors? But though a child in years he showed himself a man in principle and conduct. For true manliness does not consist in the foolish imitation of the vices of men, but in a firm resolute heart purpose (8) to resist evil. Daniel's splendid old age was the result of his character as a boy. Dare to imitate him.

(3) It was about a matter of eating and drinking. Do not conclude therefore that it was a mere trifle. It is by an appeal to natural appetite that Satan gains his first victory over many. He succeeded thus with our first parents, and he tried it again with our Lord. Has not the intoxicating cup proved the ruin of many? Daniel stood the temptation (12). "Pulse," probably meaning peas or lentils, was a poor substitute for the king's dainties. But Daniel did not ask "what do I like?" but "what is right?" When a man's appetite becomes his master his ruin is sure.

(4) His circumstances made resistance difficult.—First, he was in an idolatrous country. The too popular proverb says, "When one is in Rome he must do as Rome does." There are no persons so contemptible as those who can be devout or worldly, according to the company they are in. Though the king had changed Daniel's name into Belteshazzar (7) (meaning favoured by Bel, the Babylonian deity), in hope that the youth would forget his own country and his God, yet Daniel is as true to God in Babylon as in Judah. Next, there were the possible consequences of his conduct to himself and to the prince of the eunuchs (10). He might be willing to stand in his own light, but can he bring the life of another into peril? Daniel did right and left consequences with God. Did he suffer? See the result of the test (13-20). The four youths were better physically, intellectually, morally, for their abstinence. They acted because they had confidence in God. Does not God always honour those who honour Him (9-17)? Let every youth trust Him as revealed in Christ, and the result will be the same.

For the Young.

"IT'S CATCHING!"

THOUGH many of you are now by the sea and in the country, many are also at home in London and the cities of our kingdom. At home! The two little words, linked so together, are beautiful. And how glad one is to return home after a visit, however kind one's friends have been! Each familiar face seems to have grown dearer; each well-remembered nook and thing has surely increased in value to our fond eyes. Truly is it said:—

Be it never so humble,
There is no place like home!

And yet I am going to take you this holiday-time away to a little village in Cornwall, not far from the beautiful town of Penzance, and where I will keep you so short a time that you will not regret having travelled so far, knowing all the time that you are safely housed between the walls of your own dear home.

Two women met in the village street, the one was young and the other was old, very old. The old one—she was called "Old Mary"—banteringly accosted the younger woman.

"Why, Jenny, it's three days since I set eyes upon 'ee! and I declare I don't know thee, lass, now. What's a done wi' thyself? Has thy Robert found a gold mine?"

"Guess again," said the one called Jenny. "It's better than that—a sight better than that, and it's like the fever, it's catching!"

"Catching, is it?" soliloquised Mary, "then 'tisn't a gold mine. Now, I'm as poor as poor, and I declare I can't think o' nothing that 'ud be so good as being a bit richer. I give it up!"

"I can't tell 'ee just what 'tis," said Jen; "but do thou just come home with me, and I tell 'ee thee'll see it."

The two women passed up the street—at the top was Jen's cottage, it had been the untidiest, dirtiest cottage in the place; and at the door stood Robert, holding in his arms his second baby. Robert had been the idlest man in the village—he was a fisherman, but had always preferred the beery bar of the "Fisher's Haven" to employment in the fisheries. But now the whole aspect of Jen's cottage and Jen's husband was changed; the cottage was beautifully clean, inside and out—there were two or three pots of geranium flourishing in the window; all the broken panes were mended, and a white curtain added the finishing touch to the whole. But the greatest change was in Robert. He was sober, to begin with, and he wore a fisherman's working dress, without either rent or patch. He laughed loudly—

"Eh, you're a bit startled, aren't you, Mary, to see such a change? It's none of our doing, I tell 'ee; if 'twas I should not much believe in it—I been so fair disappointed in myself such a many times!"

"What's it all mean?" asked Old Mary, bewildered.

"Robert and me's got our hearts changed," said Jen, quietly. "The little Miss that stays at home in the big house at Penzance, she's the one that's done it."

"Done what?" asked Old Mary. "You 'maze me, talking so."

"I been working at the big house," said Jen, "and little Miss told me she had been praying for me and Robert ever so long. She says her back keeps her lying down all day, and she's not allowed to do anything, so she prays for her friends, she says. I say she's too good for this earth," continued Jen. "She got me to go to her pa's mission hall the first night I was there; and I can't tell 'ee how it all happened, Mary, but I came out of that hall a new creature. The minister did show us Jesus so clear that I saw Him as my Saviour, and I knew the first thing I had to do was to make things different at home, and to let Robert see as I was changed."

"Ay, Mary," Robert joined in with, "goodness is catching, it's like a fever, ye can't be with them as has got it without catching it! I've caught it from Jen."

"Yes," said Jen. "Robert came over with the fish, and he saw the difference, and I got him to go with me that evening, and he saw it all as plain as I did."

"Well, little Miss 'at stays at home did speak to me so sweet. 'Oh, Robert,' she says, 'I can't do anything but lie here and pray; but if I could pray you to God,' she says, 'how his heart would rejoice, and what a different man you'd be!' So I went to meeting with Jen that night, and we made up our minds together as we'd take young Miss's advice, and I wouldn't drink myself silly, and I would work, and Jen, she's got so heartened up, I don't know her, and I don't know this place, and I hardly know myself. And it's God Himself we've got to praise for it all," said Robert, with feeling.

"Well, well, it's good news, anyhow," said Old Mary, "and you say it's catching. Well, so 'tis, for I'm beginning to need it."

And she was not the only one who felt this need. As time went on, Jen and Robert's example stirred up so many that Alice Barlow, the "little Miss that stayed at home," was praying for, and thus helping to lead, very many of the humble fisher-folk to Christ.

Robert's saying, "It's catching," was certainly true—nearly all his neighbours are now earnest Christians, and he and Jenny are living examples of the power of God's love to change the heart of the most idle and careless.

You may be a "young Miss that stays at home" these holidays. Is there anybody you know who especially needs your prayers? Or do you need to pray more earnestly than you have done for yourself? Think, and perhaps my question may stir your prayers into fervour and action. And do not forget your influence, for "Goodness is catching."

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

A MISSION was conducted at Carnoustie, N.B., from August 14 to 31, by Mr. Livingstone-Learmonth, and three others. From the beginning the Lord showed his power, and before the meetings were over many children had professed to give themselves to Jesus. The attendance on the beach on several occasions exceeded 400. In the Chinese Lantern Service there was a muster of 145 lanterns. The athletic sports, cricket, and object meeting were very successful. We praise the Lord for having brought so many to Himself, and for having encouraged and refreshed many who were already serving Him. T. G. B.

A SONG IN PRISON.

BY ALFRED S. DYER.

THE sweet deep calm within my breast,
No outer storm of life can reach;
A sheltered, placid bay of rest,
With scarce a ripple on its beach.

Oh, peace of God, serenely pure,
A heaven amid the raging blast!
By promise of my Lord secure,
Till every storm be overpast.

'Tis rapture only stirs the calm,
A bliss of Holy Presence wrought—
The Master of my soul is here,
The Sacred Teacher with the taught.

Be brave, my soul! the path Divine
The spotless Saviour trod for me,
Bespeaks my consecrated whole—
Through dark'ning tempests true to be!

Not outward calm, but inward peace,
Dear Lord, my every lot attend,
Till earthly foes and conflicts cease
In cloudless calm to never end!

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.—The latest chronicle of the doings of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children says:—"The new Bill the Society introduced into Parliament to amend the Children's Charter is now the law of the land. The new powers of the Act being difficult of interpretation through its being necessary to read them in connection with the old Act, on the suggestion of Lord Salisbury, accepted by the Lord Chancellor, it was agreed that they should not come into force until there had been time to consolidate the old Act and the amending Act in one. It is now done, and the two Acts are one, and that one is now the law of the land."

God The Holy Ghost.

A BIBLE READING AT KESWICK.

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

Will you turn to James iv. 5: "Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain, the Spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?" There are other renderings of these words, and it is perhaps essential to notice what are brought before us as alternative readings in the Revised Version and its margin. There is no doubt that it is a very difficult passage to render. The Revised Version gives no fewer than three renderings, of which I only propose to mention two. It is very difficult to give the exact force of the language, which is certainly not clearly expressed in our Authorised Version. Let us take the Revised Version: "Think ye that the Scripture speaketh in vain? Doth the spirit which He made to dwell in us long unto envying?" In the margin of the Revised Version there is another rendering which, to my own mind, expresses more clearly the exact force of the passage. The first part is the same: "Think ye that the Scripture speaketh in vain? The Spirit which He made to dwell in us yearneth" [the Revisers introduce the words "for us," but they are better left out] "even unto jealous envy."

It is quite essential, as you will at once understand, that we should seek for some better rendering than that in the Authorised Version, because there is no passage of Scripture that gives these exact words; and yet our Authorised Version says: "Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain, The Spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?" There is no passage in God's Word in these exact terms, whether we take the reading of the Authorised or the alternative readings of the Revised Version. Where, then, are we to look for the utterance of Scripture in this particular form? Everywhere.

THE WHOLE BIBLE RINGS WITH THESE WORDS, whether we take them in one form or the other; but understanding them concerning God the Holy Ghost, and not concerning the evil spirit that may be working in any particular man. "The Spirit which He made to dwell in us yearneth for us unto envious jealousy and longing."

It is a remarkable statement, and one that needs explanation, which I dare this morning to offer you in the form of what is called a Bible Reading, to show how God the Holy Ghost is longing for all that He has a right to claim for Himself; and which, when He can claim it, He passes on to the Son, that the Son may pass it to the Father. God the Holy Ghost can never be satisfied until He receives what is his own right and belongings in this world, and then glorifies the Son by giving them to Him, who in turn will glorify the Father by passing them to Him. In the Trinity in unity that we worship there is a marvellous abnegation in each particular Person; and it is to bring out the abnegation of God the Holy Ghost that I desire to speak to you this morning. I am not aware that in any Christian work, theological or experimental, or in any address, I ever heard any commentator bring out the thought I desire to expound this morning, which is upon the subject of God the Holy Ghost. I am not daring to call it a comprehensive view which I wish to give, because it is impossible for any man to give this, at any rate in the short space of time at our command this morning. I would call it a consecutive survey of the workings of the Spirit as revealed to us in the Word of God, and throughout the whole, in every department of his working. In every page of the Scriptures, I myself humbly find the yearnings of God the Holy Ghost; jealously yearning over the works of creation, that He may pass them back through Christ to God the Father, for the glory of the Godhead.

As we begin at the very outset of Scripture, it is very striking to find that creation was never called into existence without the operation of God the Holy Ghost. There is no work accomplished in the creation since the time that God called it into existence that is not to be definitely traced to the Holy Spirit Himself. This is very remarkable. And yet it is not sufficiently pondered, I think.

The purpose of my remarks will, of course, come at the close. We shall find then, if God enables me to speak as I desire, that our subject is practical enough, and that no man can well evade the grand responsibility laid on him of fulfilling the desires of God the Holy Spirit, who yearneth jealously and enviously over every one of us. Remember, as we consider these words, that the jealous longing spoken of is a yearning which can never have been satisfied yet with regard to the whole of creation, however much it may have been satisfied with regard to any one particular part of creation; else it would not have been said in the Scripture that He is still jealously longing in the definite way in which it is.

THERE ARE THREE DISPENSATIONS

of which we have to speak in regard to the workings of God the Holy Ghost. There is what is known as the Old Testament Dispensation, and there is what I would call, for the sake of euphony, the Mid Dispensation, during the lifetime of Christ; then there is the New Testament Dispensation, dating from the advent of God the Holy Ghost at Pentecost. In each of these I see not only a continuity of operation by God the Holy Ghost, but an exact conformity of his working on one particular line. And while there is a very marked and remarkable progress in each of the three dispensations, with one purpose, one intent, one operation, they are yet diverse in their manner of manifestation to bring about the same one great end.

If we commence at the very outset of God's history in this Book, as I have said, it is remarkable to find that creation owes its existence to God the Holy Ghost. In Job xxvi. 13 we read, "By his Spirit He hath garnished the heavens"; in chapter xxvii. 3, Job says of himself, "The Spirit of God is in my nostrils"; in chap. xxxiii. 4, "The Spirit of God," saith Elihu, "hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life." In Psalm civ. 30, "Thou sendest forth thy Spirit, they are created"—speaking of the whole of the material works of creation. I know we are accustomed to speak of creation as an outcome of the fiat or utterance of God. But God speaks through the Spirit always. Every word uttered by Him in this world owes its existence to God the Holy Ghost.

The creation having been called into existence by the operation of God the Holy Ghost, we may term it, without any irreverence toward God the Father, the creation of the Spirit. The moment we open the Scriptures we read that "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." Wheresoever there is chaos in any sense—an absence of beauty, and order, and glory, and life-power—there God the Holy Ghost will be found brooding like a bird: always as a dove over the chaos, that He may bring order out of chaos, light out of darkness, life out of death, and blessing out of ruin. It is the essential ideal of the Holy Spirit's work to produce these results. And as He brooded we find that God speaks; and the word calls into existence all that we now term the things of creation in this world.

Again the Spirit is seen at work, for we find in Genesis vi. that man has provoked God, and God said, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." And immediately destruction results wherever the Spirit ceases to strive with man. But the Holy Ghost continues to work; and it is remarkable how, through the whole of the Old Testament dispensation, you have this one great idea: the Spirit of God is the originator of every power, blessing, and benefit that ever comes to man, and of every work that man is ever able to accomplish. In the Old Testament Scriptures you have the expression, "The Spirit of the Lord" twenty-five times, and the phrase, "The Spirit of God" four times; whereas in the New Testament you have, strange to say, "The Spirit of the Lord" only thirteen times, and "The Spirit of God" fifteen times. I wonder if we have any comprehension of the meaning of that. I humbly think it is for this reason: "The Spirit of God" expresses always the idea of creative, legislative, and perfecting action or faculty, whereas "The Spirit of the Lord" expresses always the covenant relationship of God towards his creatures, when He has voluntarily and perfectly entered into covenant with them. As the Old Testament Scriptures are almost entirely confined to the one covenant people that sprang from Abraham, you have "The Spirit of the Lord" occurring twenty-five times, and only thirteen times in the New Testament. But in the Old Testament you have "The Spirit of God" four times, and in the New Testament fifteen times, because the covenant of the Old Testament was limited to Israel, while the covenant of the New Testament is for the world at large. The covenant of the Old Testament was through one man towards his descendants, and he was limited as a poor sinner must be; but the covenant of the New Testament is through the one perfect Man Christ Jesus towards all the world.

As we watch the workings of the Old Testament dispensation, we are struck with this: that the Holy Ghost comes upon certain men, selecting them out of the world at large, and out of the covenant people for special purposes; and that the Holy Ghost, working upon them rather than in them, enables them for service, for victory, for the glorifying of God; at the expense of their fellow-men in one sense, until the times of the prophets, when we are told the Spirit of the Lord spake in them: as Peter says, "Searching what, or what manner of time, the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify" (1 Peter i. 12). He seems to say that the Spirit of the Lord is the Spirit of Christ speaking in the prophets, who did not understand the things which He enabled them to utter.

At last there comes this sad conclusion, that through the Old Testament the Spirit is working, but working almost in vain, apparently; so that at the close of the Old Testament revelation what is the last word we read concerning the Spirit? In Malachi ii. 15, it is written, "And did not He make one? Yet had He the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? That He might seek a godly seed." I do not know if I may dare to apply it to the whole working of the Spirit in that dispensation of 4000 years; but we have not a more sad and plaintive utterance than this. God the Holy Ghost had been coming to one man after another who would accept Him, and striving with sinners through the prophets and through the great judges and deliverers; yet all is apparently in vain, for God could not get a godly seed. It was the one thing that God was longing for, and that the Spirit worked for to give through man glory to God; but he could not get it.

I begin at this point to enforce what I want to enforce throughout the whole Reading—of God the Holy Ghost. We have oftentimes spoken about God the Father, in his tender patience and love, sending Jesus Christ to die. We have oftentimes spoken of the marvellous love of the Son in giving Himself; in having lived thirty-three years among sinners on earth, to be crucified by them at last; and we have said, "Oh, the depth of the riches both of the love and the goodness of God!" But I do not know that I ever heard anyone yet—I may be mistaken—say how marvellous the tenderness, the patience, and the long-suffering of God the Holy Ghost have been in his yearnings over men; first, for 4000 years of disappointment under the Old Testament dispensation; and amid the hardness of men's hearts under the New Testament dispensation. We speak of Christ "seeing of the travail of his soul, and being satisfied." Have you ever thought what it will be for God the Holy Ghost to see of the travail of his Spirit-life and be satisfied? I do not think we sufficiently remember how He is said, in this very text, and all through the Scriptures, to be yearning enviously, jealously—longing to see of the travail of his Spirit and be satisfied.

THE MAGNIFICENT PATIENCE AND LONG-SUFFERING

Yet watch his working for a moment, and see the marvellous beauty of the scheme which He constructed as the revelation of his purpose. We begin with the oldest books known, Job and Genesis. We read there always of the work of the Holy Ghost as creative, constructive, legislative, and executive. We pass on to the times of Israel, and we find the Holy Spirit to be working, in the historical books concerning Israel, as an ennobling and conquering power, and as the Keeper of those that walk godly before Him. We come to the Psalms, and there we find the Holy Spirit working in individual souls, uplifting them into direct fellowship with God the Father, so that the Spirit always works in the Psalm writer as One that draws him up to God for personal enjoyment. We pass to the prophets, and we find the Spirit reveals, first, the grand evangelical scheme of God's mercy in Isaiah. Then the marvellous purposes of God are unfolded in Ezekiel, Daniel, Zechariah, etc.—the grand revelation of the dispensation that has not yet arrived. It is progressive all through the Old Testament; yet ending after 4000 years of mercy, goodness, and love, in absolute disappointment.

SWEDEN.—Workers among sailors at Helsingborg, Stockholm, and Sundsvsall, report great interest, and many indications of genuine conversion in connection with the work among seamen.

THE LATE MR. JOHN M. SCROGGIE, EVANGELIST.

This well-known and much-loved evangelist entered the rest of God on the morning of August 1, 1894. Born in a small rural village in the North of Scotland on November 15, 1838, he had, when he fell asleep, entered upon his fifty-sixth year, the greater part of his life having been spent in most earnest, devoted, soul-winning work.

He was well taught in the Word of God from his childhood, as in those days most Scotch children were; the consequence of which was that he never could recall a time when he was not more or less exercised about the salvation of his soul. The crisis of his life, however, which soon after led to his conversion and devoted service, was reached when he was a very young man, serving his apprenticeship as a blacksmith in a small Aberdeenshire town. At that time, though not what would now be called a "wild youth," he was very careless, and, as he often said, "most thoroughly godless," full of high spirit and greatly given to frolic and all sorts of foolish pranks. It was while leading this life that a young servant-maid in the house of the master-blacksmith rebuked him for his careless ways, and spoke earnestly to him about salvation. The effect of her faithful words was the deepest conviction of sin. This continued for some time, during which, he used often, when telling this, to say he would have been so glad to meet with anyone who, Philip like, could have explained to him the way of peace through the Blood of the Lamb.

Though suffering sometimes a very agony in his awakened conscience, the reserve about all such things common to him with all Scotchmen—a sort of quasi-reverence which keeps them from speaking on such topics to their most intimate friends even—led to the fighting out of this great battle in the secret of his own heart in the presence of God alone. Thus it came to pass that the light broke upon him direct from heaven, while prayerfully reading the Word of God; and he could ever say that, like Paul and many others who have become bright and bold witnesses for Christ, the "Gospel came to me not by man, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ" (Gal. i. 12).

We know not where that young servant-maid who so faithfully did her part in this great work is to-day; but what a precious crown waits for her in the hand of her Lord, to be given on that glorious "Crowning Day." And what an encouragement is this to the weakest and humblest instrument, whose word, like hers, may, spoken to some careless youth, be linked on with a work where, by the grace of God, thousands upon thousands of men and women have been saved from perdition and brought to Christ!

From the moment of his conversion, Mr. Scroggie began not merely to read but earnestly to study his Bible. From the first he could say, "Thy Word was found and I did eat it, and it was to me the joy and rejoicing of my heart." He did not, like many, rush into work without a God-given message. From the first the Bible was the Divine message to him; and in this confidence he greedily fed upon it till he became indeed a man of God and of the Word of God. Thus it was, too, that he became broad enough for his place in the Church, a man given of God to the whole Church of Christ. It was in these early days of prayerful study that he was brought into contact with Lord Polwarth—to whose courteous kindness we owe much help in the gathering up of information needed for this short sketch. An acquaintance which ripened into a friendship of more than thirty years was formed. In the course of his evangelistic labours, and in the very wide sphere of usefulness given to him, the Lord gave Mr. Scroggie many such friends among the rich and noble. But for the grace of God this might well have been a snare. He was at home with all classes and conditions of men. Mr. Moody, with whom he often had the privilege of working, used to say, "Thousands here among the working classes go to hear him, for he knows them and their ways, but all the same the rich merchants of Glasgow delight in listening to his words." Indeed, it has seldom been our lot to meet with a more thorough "all-round" evangelist.

From Aberdeenshire he went in 1864 as journeyman blacksmith to large ironworks at Birkenhead, where for some time he witnessed for Christ among his fellow-workers in a difficult field, "enduring hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ," and "adding to his faith courage" which served him well in the broad sphere of evangelistic life in after days. Here also he constantly, after many a long, hard day's toil, spent his evenings in open-air work, and won by the preaching of the Gospel many souls.

For a short time he then laboured as missionary among the poor, appointed to this work by the Hamilton Free Church congregation at Birkenhead. It was at this time that during a severe epidemic of smallpox he visited and ministered to large numbers of the sick and dying fearlessly and gladly in the service of his Lord. In 1872, at Lord Polwarth's solicitation, he went to reside at Haddington, the home of his family, and his own headquarters ever since. Soon after settling there he began to evangelise neighbouring towns, and in the course of his work was brought into contact with Mr. W. D. Dunn. The friendship thus begun led to united work for nearly ten years in the towns and villages of the South of Scotland and North of England. So great was the blessing that God made to follow this united work that the names of "Scroggie and Dunn" are a household word in hundreds of places and thousands of homes till this day.

When Mr. Moody first came to this country, with the Spirit-given discernment which is one of that great evangelist's special gifts, he very soon picked out Mr. Scroggie as a preacher and worker of no ordinary calibre, and made use of him accordingly. In Scotland he conducted many of Mr. Moody's overflow meetings, working under Mr. Moody's superintendence in Glasgow and neighbourhood for five months, along with Mr. Dunn and Mr. R. Hill, at the instance of the Glasgow Evangelistic Association. He had special charge of what was known as "The Circus Work" during this movement, and his wonderful success in this work was much spoken of. On the occasion of Mr. Moody's long London campaign he sent for Mr. Scroggie to help in his overflow work, which he did with great patience and much blessing. This led to frequent visits to London and other very large towns in England and Ireland, and now the long-continued strain began to tell upon him. Though his frame was naturally one of iron, and his constitution splendid, even these could not stand such a strain of continuous labour. A real idle holiday he never knew. He began to suffer from dyspepsia of a severe character, and subsequently an anæmic condition of the system, with a distressing sense of weakness, appeared.

(From Photograph by Mr. D. T. Nettleton, 16, Cookridge Street, Leeds.)

At this time Mr. Moody was engaged in organising a great work in connection with the World's Fair at Chicago, and Mr. Scroggie thought that if he had the opportunity of going, the voyage across the Atlantic would benefit him. This was soon after given him in an invitation from Mr. Moody, and he wrote at once to Mr. Richard Hill, with whom he had frequently shared a mission, asking him to accompany. But even during the voyage he could not rest from his hard work. In Chicago he held many meetings during a most distressing time of heat. After his engagement had been fulfilled he went to the North-west to visit some relations, and there, too, he held a series of meetings. Can it be wondered at that he did not seem so well on the homeward voyage? He ought to have had a complete and prolonged rest, but he had promised to conduct a month's services in East London, and he would not break his promise. In this work, however, he so far broke down that he consented to put himself under medical care, and rest for a week at Blackheath, where his cheerful ways and happy face, notwithstanding great weakness and suffering, will long be remembered. He was so far restored that he insisted, though against the wishes of all his friends, upon completing his engagement at the Great Assembly Hall.

From London he went to Inverness and Cullen; at the latter place he was obliged to cease his labours, and went home to die. "During the last two months of his illness," writes Lord Polwarth, "I saw him often, and felt how good it was to be with him, and to behold how the same grace which made him able to work like a lion, made him in suffering gentle and submissive as a lamb. Lying patiently for seven months, he was a spectacle to men and angels, accepting the will of the Lord in suffering and helplessness, as truly as in toil and labour."

Mr. Scroggie has left a widow and seven, of a family, three of whom are very young and still at home. It was his great joy to know that all had been led to give themselves to Christ, and to see his eldest son engaged heartily in the work of soul-winning, and longing earnestly to follow in his beloved father's footsteps.

LETTER TO A STRUGGLING SINNER.

Extract of a letter from an eminent minister of Christ (Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken) to one who, sinking under the weight of a besetting sin, had applied to him for advice. This person carried the letter about for years until it had almost become illegible, and now thinks that it should be published, hoping that it will be a blessing to others as it has been to him.

"Is He, or is He not, able to fulfil his own name, Jesus? Will He, or will He not, save his people from their sins? You have prayed and struggled, but failed. Then give it up. Tell our Lord that you are lost, sinking into hell, and cannot save yourself; but just because you have reached despair point throw yourself on Him to save you. See your sins crucified in his death—your lack of reality and sincerity in your religious life, and all else that you have to charge yourself with. Believe that because He died representing your sin, God is content to leave your sin there, and account it dead in his death, if you will consent unto its death. Consent unto its death, and then trust Him to be your new life, committing yourself, without fear or reserve, altogether into his hands.

"To be definite in this matter of life and death, for such indeed it is:—

"1. Don't make a resolution against, but renounce, forsake, turn your back on your besetting sin, whatever it is. 'Great God, I do give it up altogether, along with all that leads up to it; if Thou wilt save me from it, I am willing to be saved.'

"2. Cast yourself on Christ by faith. 'Son of God, Thou art able and willing to save me, and hast the right to do so. I trust Thee to do it; with all my heart I trust Thee.'

"3. Having put yourself into Christ's hands, leave yourself there, and don't entertain a fear but that He can and will save you and keep you safe.

"4. Watch against the beginning of evil, and take it to Christ at once if it arises. Fling from you a degrading thought, trusting to Christ to keep you. Now trust Christ to save you and He will. Reckon yourself dead to sin, and live out and out for God, in close communion with Him."

REV. EDWIN HALL, of Burnley, preached the annual sermons of the Gospel Teetotal Mission. He stated that four-fifths of the expulsions from the ministry were caused by drink.

Who Are Israel?—2.

A REPLY.

By Rev. DAVID BARON.

Certain brethren are so much absorbed with the terrible fact of the present national apostasy of the Jews that they forget that the line of the Israel of God within the nation continues, for what is the aim and scope of the whole grand parenthesis in the epistle to the Romans (ix.-xi.) but to prove that, "Even so at this present time" (as in the time of the prophets whom he quotes to show the analogy) "there is a remnant according to the election of grace," and that while Israel as a whole hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, "the election hath obtained it, while the rest were hardened" (Rom. xi. 7)? And this remnant, as was the case in Old Testament times, still constitutes the pledge of God's faithfulness to the nation as a whole. Therein lies the force in the Apostle's words, "I say then, 'hath God cast away his people?' God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin." "It is true, the nation, as such, has rejected Christ, but there is still, as in olden times, 'the Remnant' of whom I, Paul, a true Israelite, of the tribe of Benjamin, am a representative."

Thus the teaching of the ix., x., and xi. of Romans is not that because "all Israel" has not as yet entered into the possession of the wonderful promises made to the nation, they have therefore been transferred to the Church. This would be a contradiction of the whole argument of the Apostle, the aim of which is to show that "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance," and that at all hazard "the purpose of God according to election might stand," but rather that, even now, throughout this dispensation, the line of "the Israel of God" is continued in "the Remnant according to the election of grace," and that they are in possession of the promises from which the nation, as such, has debarred itself for a time owing to its rejection of Christ in whom they are now safely vested.

But even the national hardness is not final, for when the fulness of the Gentiles shall have come in and the Redeemer shall return to Zion, "all Israel shall be saved, as it is written" in Old Testament prophecy which Paul by Divine inspiration still interprets of the Jewish nation as such. Hitherto not all the natural descendants of Israel have been the true "Israel of God" or inheritors of the promises made to the fathers, but that is quite a different thing from the assertion that Gentile believers are Israel. There would be almost as much logic in the statement that because there are Englishmen who are not worthy of the name of Englishmen, that therefore Frenchmen are Englishmen.

Before I pass on to the next point, I must note one statement which illustrates the method of handling Scripture to which these brethren are obliged to resort in justification of their theory that "the promises" no longer belong to the Jewish nation but to the Church. Mr. Brown says, "In Romans ix. the inspired Apostle begins by expressing his great sorrow of heart for his 'kinsmen according to the flesh,' the Jewish nation, who are Israelites, to whom pertaineth the adoption and the glory and the covenants and the giving of the law and the service of God and the promises; but who, because of their rejection of the Messiah and Saviour, were about to lose their high position as the Lord Himself had said, 'The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.'" Surely the most superficial acquaintance with Romans ix., x., and xi. is sufficient to convince anyone that the Apostle uses the title Israel of, and ascribes the wonderful privileges enumerated to, the Jewish people as such, after its rejection of Christ, else why his continual sorrow and heaviness of heart so that he could wish himself "accursed" for their sakes? Else how could it be in keeping with, and what force would there be in, the Apostle's argument in the whole three chapters, which, as I have shown, are aimed to prove that "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance," and that the purpose of God in the election of the nation (ix. 10, 11) still stands, although "at this present time" it is only realised in the "Remnant," and that in spite of the present apostasy of the Jews, Jehovah, because He is God and not man, abideth faithful?

Mr. Brown bases his assertion upon the words of the Lord, "Therefore I say unto you the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." True, when Israel rejected their lawful king, "the kingdom" departed from them, and during this present time "the fruits of the kingdom," the characteristics of true subjects of that heavenly kingdom, are found in "the chosen generation and royal priesthood," i.e., all believers who, in the sight of God, constitute a true brotherhood, "a holy nation," whose kingdom is not of this world, because their King is in heaven; but when the Lord thus departed from Israel saying, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate," did He leave no glimmer of hope that He, the King, would return to his own nation? Did He not add, "For I say unto you ye shall not see Me henceforth until ye shall say, Blessed be He that cometh in the name of the Lord"? And the fact that Israel as a nation will yet welcome their King back with shouts of "Hosannah! Blessed be He that cometh in the name of Jehovah," is a proof that there are promises still to be fulfilled in the nation, and that with their King, the kingdom, too, in its visible form shall return to Israel. When the Apostle Paul wrote the Epistle to the Romans, "the kingdom" was already taken from the Jewish people, but the Apostles knew that it would return, and therefore immediately before their Master's ascension they asked, "Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"

The Lord's answer was that it was not for them to speculate about times or seasons "which the Father hath put in his own power," but to receive the power of the Holy Spirit coming upon them so as to be efficient witnesses unto Him "both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth," for this Gospel of the kingdom must first be preached as a witness to all nations before the end of this dispensation can come, and the kingdom return to Israel, according to the word of the prophet Micah, in a prophecy concerning the "last days" (Mic. iv. 1-8), which is admittedly future: "And thou O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come even the first dominion, the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Zion!"

Another point which I think it important to be borne in mind in connection with this subject, is that there is a great difference between the scriptural use of the term "Israel," and the expression "Abraham's seed." The use of the former is restricted, even in the New Testament, to the Jewish people as a whole, or to "the Remnant." The latter term includes all who have the same faith as Father Abraham, or "the seed of Abraham by faith." Mr. Brown confounds Rom. iv., which shows the inclusion, or share, of all those "who are of faith," in the original, unconditional Abrahamic covenant, with Rom. ix., which, as I have shown, accounts for the fact that, as yet, only "a remnant" of Israel has entered into the spiritual privileges and promises given to the nation, by reminding us that, so far, all along their history they were not all Israel which have been of Israel, nor have all the children of Abraham after the flesh necessarily been his children "by faith."

But why does the Apostle, in Rom. iv., lay such stress upon the fact that the unconditional, or what I may call evangelical, covenant, into the blessedness of which all believers, including those of the uncircumcision, are admitted, was made with Abraham while yet uncircumcised? The whole passage (Rom. iv. 1-16) is deserving of careful study. Paul shows the consistency with God's plan and purpose that Gentiles should be justified by faith only, apart from circumcision and law; and the provision God had made for this from the beginning. "This blessedness" (i.e., "righteousness which is reckoned apart from law"), asks the Apostle, "cometh it upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? For we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. How then was it reckoned, when in circumcision or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision." Why? "That he might be the father of all that have faith, though they be not circumcised [Gentiles], that righteousness might be reckoned to them also; and the father of circumcision to them who are not only of circumcision [i.e., Jews "only outwardly," chap. ii. 28], but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham which he had while yet in uncircumcision [i.e., Jews also "inwardly"].

We see, then, that those who are of faith among the Gentiles are Abraham's seed, and fellow-heirs with him of an unconditional covenant and promise made to him while he was yet uncircumcised. That is to say, "the uncircumcision in the flesh" (Gentiles) are by faith linked to the covenant and promises given to Abraham while as yet he himself was in uncircumcision. But Abraham himself was not an Israelite, this name having been first given long after his circumcision to Jacob as the father of the twelve tribes, with whom the national history of the Jews only in reality begins, and the promises in reference to the land and that nation of his natural descendants through Isaac and Jacob, and the twelve tribes, which Abraham already received as a distinct part of the unconditional covenant (see Gen. xii. 7; xiii. 14-17; xv. 7-18), but which were finally confirmed to Jacob (Gen. xxviii. 13, 14) as father of all his descendants, henceforth collectively to be called "Israel," are the inalienable possession of the Jewish people, whose miraculous preservation is in itself a proof that the purpose of God in them as a separate nation is not yet fully accomplished.

IN THE YORUBA COUNTRY.

Bishop Oluwole has been visiting the churches of the Yoruba Mission, and copious extracts from his journal are given in the September issue of The Church Missionary Intelligencer. Some of the incidents are very interesting, and it is pleasing to note that in one village the Wesleyan missionary and his wife, though themselves only lodgers in a heathen compound, extended a hearty welcome and hospitality to the Bishop and his wife. We make a brief extract from the Bishop's diary:—

On Sunday, February 4th, I preached at Iporo in the morning, and attended Igbore Church in the afternoon. The preacher that afternoon was one Jacob Fadipe, a member of the Ake Church. He is a very earnest Christian, doing a very good work as a voluntary evangelist in his farm. As a result of his efforts, a small chapel is being put up in that farm for the use of those who gather there for worship. His text was Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. I sat in amazement under the sermon of this heaven-taught man. Take the Yoruba Scriptures without notes or comments, the Yoruba Prayer-book, the Yoruba Hymn-book, some Yoruba translations of Sankey's hymns, and perhaps some simple Yoruba catechisms, and you have, I believe, a complete list of the volumes in his library. There was no doubt that he constantly fed on God's Word, and that the Spirit opened his understanding that he might understand the Scriptures. He certainly spoke as one mighty in the Scriptures and as conscious of a special message.

"Another native Christian of similiar stamp, but a much older man, did a simple but beautiful thing on the Monday in the week of prayer. He was called upon to lead the great meeting in praise. He knelt down most reverently, closed his eyes, put his hands together, and poured forth praise in the words of the whole of the 103rd Psalm, adding afterwards suitable expressions of his own. These men were both at one time or another of their lives blind worshippers of dumb idols, but are now, by the grace of God, bulwarks of Christianity in Abeokuta."

CLOSED CHURCHES.—Various reasons are given for the shutting of Protestant churches during the week. Some say it is in order to prevent thieves from plying their trade in the edifices. Others assign as a reason the fact that Protestants, not believing in the corporal presence of Christ in the churches, do not go there to pray, as God will hear them just as readily in their homes. Personally we think it would be better to have the churches open, so that all who so desired might go there and worship God. Keeping them closed looks like keeping our religion for Sunday use only.—The Catholic.

DEBORAH'S MESSAGE.*

Deborah stood up again at the desk, and turned over the pages of her Bible with her slender fingers. Then, as if by a sudden thought, she closed it, and laying her hands one over the other on the edge of the desk, she said quietly, but with an intense undercurrent of feeling:—

"What have you been doing all day, I wonder? I suppose you have been here, and there, and everywhere, upstairs and downstairs—at the washtub, getting the children's meals, thinking, planning; ah, and suffering, too; yes, and fearing, too, haven't you? those of you that are poor. Some are better off. What have you been doing? Engaging yourselves this way or that; doing the little duties that you love to do, and enjoying all the sweet loved things that are close about your heart.

"And sinning, too. But I'm not speaking of that now. Well, you have been busy over the life of your body, perhaps the life of your mind, and the life of your heart, even. But, dear ones, isn't there something left? How about the life of your soul?

"You know your children have been with you and about you all day, and your husband there at meals, and your neighbours; the children noisy, perhaps naughty, but you love them all the same, you spend your life for them; or your husband, perhaps he was worried, perhaps a little short with you, but he's part of your life, isn't he? You couldn't do without these—any of them.

"But is there Anyone else, there with you all the time, whom you are trying to do without?

"This One—what is He like? He is a man like us. He wept once as your little babies weep; He knew the little troubles, the little pains that your children know; He grew up, too, as we have grown up; He knew for Himself the worries and the troubles, the hopes and the fears, the sicknesses and the anxieties, that we know as grown men and women. And He knew more. He knew a bitter death that we have not known. He, too, knew what it was to be evilly spoken of, looked down upon; and, dear friends, He never deserved it. That is what He is like—like us. Remember, you can never think that He is far off, and doesn't understand and can't know. The best of your friends—your own husband, if he is the best in the world, can't enter into all your troubles. But this One always understands; He always knows. Can it be that you are trying to do without Him?

"And what is He like to us? Don't imagine when you come to think of this again at night, to-morrow, any time: don't say, 'Ah, yes; it was all very beautiful talk of hers.' I am saying nothing of my own. I stand here to point Him out to you. Let me put it as clearly as I can: What is He like to us?

"Well; He understands, He loves, He never can forget us. Better still than that, His love is never tired out. The most patient mother's patience is exhausted now and then. But He is patient still.

"We are wilful; we are ungrateful. Yet He loves us. We are taken up with little pleasures. Yet He loves us. We scorn Him; we neglect to listen; we forget Him. But He loves us, He does not forget. Can we do without Him?

"And what has He done for us? Dear souls, what has He not done? What could He have suffered more? What more could He have done? A hard working life, a life of pain, a life full of sorrow, of contempt—and death. Then they crucified Him. And it was all for us. God help me to speak straight to your souls! Do you think that you can do without Him?

"Dear sisters, when we look back on those past years—some of us on eighty years, some on fifty, some on a good deal less than that—ah, when we look back, haven't we to say, with bitter tears, 'I have lived so much of this without Him; I have been trying so often to do without Him'? For you can keep Him away. He knocks at the door, but remember, He never forces it open. There He stands and knocks—the Man like us—the loving, suffering, tender, patient One. But it is we who must open the door, or He will not come in.

Oh, what those years would have been if we had kept our hand in his all the time, and had never tried to do without Him! Is it trouble you look back upon? That sharpest trouble of all, you know and God knows what it is; that trouble you knelt down and prayed God to take away from you perhaps this very night when you came into this room here; that trouble? Why, as you sit there, you would be thanking Him for it this very moment as you think of it. To pray to have it taken away would be to pray to have one of the sweetest memories of your life taken away. It would have been to you part of the loving will of your loving Saviour.

"Or, better even than that, you would have forgotten the trouble. You would only have remembered how He was with you, loving, helping, close to you all the days. Was it sickness? Why, that was only the touch of his hand. Or the sickness of those you love? That is harder, isn't it? But do we know better than He knows? He loves them best.

"Dear ones, I am not talking to-night of the troubles caused by your sin. Those would never have happened if He had been with you. I am speaking of the troubles in your life, of all the things in your life that you can't help.

"Is it, perhaps, a happy, smooth life that you look back upon? Peaceful, happy years, and a great deal of love all round you, and a great deal of good, pure pleasure? We have all had some of that. You mothers, you know what it is to have the little life that has cost you so much anxiety and pain. The little child lying in your arms, and to be too happy for the time to think of sorrow or anxiety. Then when the children did well at school, when you were proud of them. When you saw how respected your husband was. When he was so good to you, and so thoughtful of you. What good times those were! But did you make the mistake of trying to do without Him then? Ah, what a mistake that was!" As she said this, she leant forward with almost a smile on her face, and said:—

"Ah, you have been trying to do without Him, then, have you? In enjoying the love of the little children, of the friends, to do without Him who took the little ones on his knee, who was the best of friends. That joy was very sweet, but what would it have been if He had shared it with you? Why, all pure, all good things would have been a very heaven. In his presence, and there only, is the fulness of joy. Do you remember those two sisters, Mary and Martha, the words they met our Lord with when they had lost Lazarus, or so they thought: 'Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died'? Looking back over the years, how must we say that, 'Lord, if Thou hadst been here the trouble that worried me, weighed me down, made me sick and tired of life, would only have made me purer, closer to Thee, understanding, yes, and enjoying more of Thee. Lord, if Thou hadst been here my joys would have been doubled, and in the brightness of thy presence every little gleam of light and happiness would have been a steady sunshine. But I was trying to do without Thee'?

"And, again, haven't you felt, mothers, how much more you might have been to your children and your husband than you have been? I am not talking now of the neglects and the fits of temper, and the ill-nature, and the loud words. You know all that was wrong; you always were sorry for that. But at the best of times, most of all when the children were very good and quiet, and liked to talk to you about all their little thoughts and plans. Or, again, when they got into a naughty fit, and when you were keeping your temper, trying to do your very best with them, yet you didn't feel you had real influence with them. Ah, what good mother has not felt powerless then? How you have longed, then, to be able to be more to them!

"Lord, if Thou hadst been there! How the little ones would have been taught and comforted; how they would have learned to love to be good! Best of all, how they would have learned to love Thee!

"I have no more to say. There He stands, ready, longing, yearning to be with you always. He knows every part of your being, every nerve, every fibre, every pain, every fear, every pleasure; and in spite of all the sins, all the failure, all the littleness, all the carelessness, He loves. There He stands at the door and knocks. Will you not open to Him? Can you do without Him? There are his arms stretched out to you, poor tried ones; and will you not rest upon them? Look at his kind eyes, loving the little children, the dear ones whom you love, glad in every pleasure of yours, loving you.

"He came down from heaven to suffer and to die for you. Why? Why, just for this, that He could not do without you.

"And can you do without Him?"

HOMES OF HOPE.

The Homes of Hope, 4, 5, 6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-road, W.C., have now been established thirty-two years, during which time 3240 young women and girls of tender years, in every variety of circumstance, entailing suffering and sorrow experienced only by womanhood, have been relieved in ways most suitable to each individual case. While efforts are in many directions made to rescue the most openly abandoned from a life of shame, sufficient aid has not been afforded to the more respectable class of the fallen in their first act of declension, who are, without a doubt, the most anxious to adopt means for their own recovery.

The Homes of Hope admit just such cases as these; the young women are employed in suitable occupation, and their friends are encouraged to contribute towards the expenses attending their stay in the Home. The inmates are under good Christian influence, and the sin and shame of their condition is discreetly and beneficially brought before them. Skilful medical attendance and nursing is provided, until, by God's merciful help, they are brought through their trouble. In due time suitable situations are found for them, and aid given for the support of the children. The purely reformatory side of the work is not neglected; but wherever a sincere repentance and willingness to forsake a career of sin are shown, applicants are received into the branch known as the "Home for the Fallen."

No penitent young woman is denied admittance to the Homes while funds will admit because she has not the means to make any contribution, though perhaps the most painful duty the committee are called upon to perform is to reject an importunate application because the treasury is exhausted. The secretary, Mr. W. Hornibrook, informs us that the Homes are at present involved in debt, and the work sadly hampered. The office is 17, Bloomsbury-street, Oxford-street, W.C.

"FAITH IN THE POWER OF JESUS."

In one district of Chüchow, not far from the city of Hang-chow, in the province of Chekiang, there lived a girl who was possessed at times with what some would call fits of madness, but which were more like possessions of the devil. During these fits she would smash up everything she could lay her hands on, and even try to do harm to her relatives. Her friends tried all in their power to heal the poor girl: called in doctors and exorcists, prayed to idols, burnt incense, etc., but all without effect.

One of the girl's relatives went to Hang-chow on business, and while there heard of Jesus, and that while on earth He had cast out devils and healed all kinds of diseases. On his return home he called his friends together, and told them of this, and suggested that they might try a prayer to Jesus. At this time the girl was in one of her fits, and bound by a chain to prevent her doing harm. The friends and relatives assembled, and the man who had been to Hang-chow prayed in his own way to Jesus. When he had finished his prayer he rose, and at once struck off the chain from the girl. Some of the others protested, but the man said, "I am sure Jesus will cast out the evil spirit."

It is now nearly two years since that time, and the girl has had no repetition of the fits. She has been for some time in the Church of England Mission School in Hang-chow under teaching. Quite a work of grace has begun in Chüchow through this case, as the neighbours soon heard of the wonderful power of Jesus to save.

HAKKA-LAND.—Rev. Murdo Mackenzie writes:—"In the village of Thai-yong there are signs of a decided move amongst the people towards the acceptance of Christianity. Eleven young men, between the ages of twenty-five and forty, have just informed me that they desire to join the Christian Church. Several of the women too, wives of these men, desire to become Christians. A few days ago we had messengers from a populous region not far off, begging for missionaries."

AMONG THE ESKIMO.

The Bishop of Mackenzie River (Dr. Reeve), in a letter to Canon Hurst, the secretary of the Colonial and Continental Church Society, describes visits of Rev. T. O. Stringer to Eskimo settlements. The first visit was to the Eskimo village near the mouth of the Mackenzie. He stayed there three weeks, and taught the people daily as opportunity offered. A hearty welcome was given him, and he derived much encouragement at the outset by hearing them singing a hymn which they had learnt the previous summer, their voices rising above the noise of the stormy wind, and reaching his ears as he approached the village. Mr. Stringer says he has learned to like fresh whale, of which he ate a good deal. He saw a "medicine-making" dance, and says that several of those who took part must have been possessed, or they could not have gone through the performance as they did.

The second visit was to Herschel Island, and was undertaken at the beginning of winter. Taking a train of dogs, sled, provisions, and everything necessary for a journey over the snow, and accompanied by an Indian, he left the Mission on October 27, and reached the Island after fourteen days' travelling. It was a trying journey. A dense fog compelled them to hug the shore, and thus increase the distance. The sudden breaking off from the shore of a large sheet of ice nearly caused their being carried out to sea, and endangered their lives. They also narrowly escaped a visit during the night from a large polar bear which was looking out for winter quarters, and perhaps for a supper too. They fell in with a party of Eskimos, and stayed with them a day. They seemed to be

UTTERLY IGNORANT OF THE GOSPEL.

He had there his first experience of living in a snow house. About fifteen miles from the Island they came across another party, whom they were glad to meet, as their provisions had run out. They were all strangers to Mr. Stringer, and many of them had never before seen a missionary. He says, "I had seen some of their relations last summer, and they plied me with questions about them, for they had not heard of them since last winter. In most cases I was able to tell them some news of their distant friends, and I could scarcely get away from them. I made two trips to the village on the mainland, staying over night each time, and was much pleased with their eagerness to learn. They used to gather in the largest house, and were very attentive as I read them what I had translated, and tried to explain to them the Gospel. Their houses were the half-underground ones, built partly of poles, and covered with sods and snow. They were as kind as could be, and wanted me to stay all winter. Then they wanted me to come back and stay all next winter, and said they would hunt for me and get me a supply of meat."

The return journey occupied fourteen days, and was very trying. Provisions failed, the wolverines having destroyed two out of the four caches which they had made on the outward journey, and for a time they had to live on "tea and sweeties" (sweet biscuits?). They slept sometimes in snow houses, sometimes in snowdrifts, or wherever they could find shelter from the biting wind. Along the coast they found driftwood under the snow wherewith to make fires, but sometimes they had only ice-coated willows, and once they had no fire at all, and had to boil their kettle over a candle! And this in intensely cold weather! "For days at a time the thermometer stood at 50 deg. to 55 deg. below zero (Fahr.)." No wonder that when they reached the pine woods. No wonder that Mr. Stringer froze his heels. It seems almost a wonder that they should ever care to leave the house again when once they reached home safely, which they did on December 6.

Mr. Stringer says:—"The spring and summer are the best times for visiting the Eskimos on the coast, in fact about the only times that satisfactory work can be done. There are three or more places hundreds of miles apart that should be visited at the same time of the year, and how can one man do it unless he have wings? Influences are bearing in from different quarters that will make the work far more difficult in years to come. If a foothold is not gained now, many opportunities of good will be lost for ever. I am persuaded that it is now or never. What is to be done? Where is the man? Where are the means? The harvest is ripe, and I have faith that another labourer will be sent forth in God's good time—and surely that time is now. An unordained man would do just as well for the present if he be the right sort of stuff, and possess patience and tact. I fully believe that a few years will see the salvation or the ruin of the Eskimos."

MISSIONARY DISTRIBUTION.

The sphere of missions includes "all the world" and "every creature." The claims of God and the necessities of humanity admit of no limitation, and true Christian zeal and love can wish for none. The conception of a purpose so vast and sublime as the preaching of the Gospel all the world over, irrespective of race, language, or religion, should fire the zeal and elevate the aims of all "who profess and call themselves Christians." This design is worthy of the highest respect and admiration, for the world can show no enterprise as unselfish, benevolent, and important.

Let us see how far and in what manner it is being attempted. If the 7539 missionaries of Protestant Christendom were distributed equally over the non-Christian world, there would be one to each 140,000 of those they are sent to evangelise; or one to a population equal to that of Brighton or Cardiff. But they are placed neither according to population or area. Yet the disproportion admits of explanation, and in most cases can be justified, as we shall see.

Dealing now only with the supply of missionaries to population, the following is the relative proportion in all the important spheres of non-Christian action.

The countries and races relatively best supplied are, the non-Christian portions of North America, the West Indies, West Africa south of the Senegal, South Africa, Madagascar, New Zealand, Polynesia, Syria, Palestine, and some portions of South India, as Tinnevelly and Travancore.

Less adequately supplied are, North India, Burmah, China proper, Japan, Ceylon, Egypt, and Turkey. Yet more inadequately supplied are, Central India, Central Africa, Morocco, Algiers, Persia, Siam, Korea, Manchuria, the Indian Archipelago, New Guinea, New Britain, New Ireland, and South America.

The fields wholly unoccupied, or having only two or three missionaries, require some more detailed notice.*

Mongolia is as extensive as many Englands, but has only 2,000,000 people. Here one missionary only laboured for several years, and now there are two.

Sungaria and Chinese Turkestan, with perhaps six million people, has no missionary.

Thibet, six times the area of Great Britain and Ireland, has an estimated population of only five millions, and no mission station, but four or five on its Chinese and Indian frontiers. It remains to be seen if Miss Taylor and her companions will be able to live and labour in a land curiously closed hitherto to European settlers.

Nepal, as large as England, with perhaps three million population, has no missionary.

Afghanistan and the countries to the north and east have none, though the freedom with which Nepalese and Afghans are permitted to enter British India gives them the opportunity to gain much Christian knowledge.

In Arabia are two small missions, one on the south-west, the other in the north.

The populous states of Annam, Tonquin, and Cambodia have Roman Catholic, but no Protestant missions.

Stretching almost across Northern Africa, from Senegambia to the borders of Western Egypt and Abyssinia, lies the Sahara to the North, and the Soudan to the south, an immense region, more than 4000 miles in length, and from 300 to 500 in breadth. The population of the latter is estimated at from sixty to eighty millions, but this is a mere guess. All that we do know is, that nowhere in any of its considerable states or numerous tribes is there any Christian agency, and that the attempts recently made to supply the want, have ended disastrously, though they will be renewed.

These inequalities of agencies throughout the mission fields admit of explanation. At the close of last century and during the early years of this, when so many of the larger Societies were formed, their resources were very limited, and the heathen world was little known and far less open than it is now. Their small bands of missionaries, therefore, were sent where the people were supposed to be willing to receive them, where they would be free to labour and protected from violence, or where some features of the country attracted Christian sympathy.

One or other of these causes led to the first missions in North America, the West Indies, West and South Africa, Polynesia, Madagascar, and some parts of India, and the evidence is as clear as it is interesting, that the hand of God providentially guided these tentative movements. Nearly all the missions then founded became permanent centres of influence, and bases for the extension of missions in the regions beyond as they became known, and presented some features of promise. These, naturally, have absorbed most of the growing resources of the older societies, or of new ones requiring for suitable spheres. In this manner the Gospel has passed from island to island in Polynesia, from tribe to tribe in South Africa, and from district to district and province to province in India. And new fields have been occupied, as it has been clear that they were open, though the difficulty and danger of doing so has, in some cases, been great. China, Japan, Central Africa, New Guinea, and Madagascar, after the expulsion of the missionaries in 1835, were all once closed, or seemed to be so.

And as there have been reasons why the present fields have been occupied, though for the most part imperfectly, so there have been reasons why the last-named group of spheres have been passed by. I do not affirm that they justify oversight, but they explain it. They are, for instance, less important than they appear to be, for though in the aggregate of enormous extent, their entire population is probably less than half that of India. Most of them are so sparsely populated that missionaries would nowhere find any considerable population among whom to settle. In some the people are so nomadic and gregarious that steady, persistent work among them would be impracticable. In some the conditions of life are so wild and precarious, the governments so exclusive and intolerant, or the people so suspicious or fanatical, that no missionary would be allowed to settle there, and if he did his life would never be safe, nor would the life of any convert. The fact is too little considered that in all purely Mahomedan countries—and most of the countries unoccupied are intensely Mahomedan—both the convert and the missionary who has preached to him, are by law liable to death; and if, for instance, in Central Arabia, Khiva, or the Soudan, the Government did not execute the law, private fanaticism would be eager to do so. Beside religious intolerance, it should be considered that the dislike and distrust of foreigners, and especially of Christians, is extreme in all the lands under review. Even the temporary visits of merchants and travellers are hardly tolerated. Permanent residence is out of the question in several of them. How many Europeans have ever resided, for any purpose whatever, in Thibet proper, in Afghanistan, Turkestan, Central Arabia, or the Soudan, or would be permitted to reside there? Not a few of those who have made the experiment of travelling in these inhospitable regions, have met with a violent death, or cruel treatment, or been forced to retire, by the subtle arts of worry and "boycotting" Orientals know so well how to practise.

WHAT THEN IS TO BE DONE?

Let attempts be made, by all means, to carry the Gospel into those regions whenever there seems an opening, and the suitable persons offer for the attempt. When these fail, let missionaries be placed on their frontiers, to witness for God and as pioneers to advance whenever practicable, as was done before China was open, and is now being done on the borders of Thibet. And let prayer be offered continually to God, that He would be pleased to remove all obstacles out of the way, give to the people who sit in darkness a desire for light and life: and to his servants wisdom to discern the signs of the times, and zeal and grace to act according to them. In the meantime, as three-fourths of the non-Christian world are open to our efforts, and not half of those to whom we have freedom of access have even once heard the Gospel preached in any true, adequate manner, is there not much to be said for the policy of occupying in great strength these open fields, leaving to the very few the duty of watching and waiting near the doors that are yet closed?

AGGRESSIVE WORK.

Whilst staying lately at a large watering-place hydro, where late dinner hours interfered with attending Sunday-evening services, I sauntered into the smoke room, wondering whether an opportunity would present itself for speaking a word for the Master. Only a few smokers were there, but soon I was enabled to direct the conversation aright by telling of a minister I had that morning heard who was once an infidel, but was converted by an accident which broke his leg.

We were at once in the midst of the subject, and I took care not to allow it to change. One man rather quickly took exception to the subject, and quoted Paul's "In season and out of season"; but I informed him he had misquoted the passage, for it was "In season out of season," the "and" being omitted, and it really meant the Gospel was always in season, etc., etc. Another remarked that if salvation were by believing he supposed he might believe and live as he liked. I replied, Yes, but how would he like to live. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature," etc.; that faith in Christ revolutionised the man, making him a new man and consequently he lived a new life.

My opposing friend again interrupted, and I again had to answer him. And now another man looked into the room, and hearing what was going on, entered and sat down. I invited questions upon this very interesting subject, and promised to answer all I could.

One man asked what was to become of the heathen? Of course I referred him to the 2nd of of Romans and then dwelt upon what Paul said. A tall man then entered the room, evidently having been informed what was going on, and loudly announced that music was about to begin in the recreation room, and invited all to join them. My opposing friend readily agreed to this and called upon all to follow them, but singularly enough none moved.

Somebody now asked if I believed in heaven and hell. I answered "Yes"; and explained that heaven was to be with God, and hell to be separated from Him; that heaven was prepared for man, but hell was prepared for the devil and his angels; that our element was to walk with God, but that Adam sinned and separated himself from God by putting himself out of his element; that the qualification for heaven now was "Ye must be born again" (John iii. 7), and the qualification for hell the absence of this (John iii. 3); that we formed our own characters, and character fixed our destiny. God did not send men to hell, but men sent themselves there, and took their own brimstone with them—the fire of remorse and brimstone of memory, &c.

An elderly man asked if I believed in instantaneous salvation at the penitent form, as practised by the Salvation Army? I said there were none but instantaneous conversions in Scripture—the thief on the cross, Saul, Zacchæus, the woman of Samaria, the Phillippian jailer; that salvation was not the improvement of the old nature, but the reception of a new nature and life. It was the reception of the Holy Spirit and Divine life by faith in Christ Jesus. God did not believe in reformation, but in recreation and regeneration, and this was instantaneous when we surrendered to God by faith in Christ. Knowing the moment of conversion was not necessary, yet there must be a moment when we surrender and pass from death unto life, &c.

The musical man now burst into the room again, and loudly urged the people to join them at once in the recreation-room. At the same time he angrily denounced my using the smoke-room for preaching purposes. I replied that all were at liberty to leave if they desired, but that we were having something better than music. Only one left with him, but he quickly returned and remained firmly until the end. Others came dropping in and took seats, until there was a cry for more chairs, and the room became packed.

A white-headed man then quoted 1 Cor. ix. 27, and remarked that evidently Paul himself was not safe and felt he might be eventually lost. I answered that Paul was not in that text speaking of his salvation, but of running for his crown, as the context shows. He had left his salvation with the Saviour long ago, 2 Cor. v. 1, also Romans viii. 1. That salvation was a gift, Romans vi. 23. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." That justification was the work of an instant, "Being justified by faith," &c., Romans v. 1, but that sanctification was the growth of a life, &c., &c.

I was then charged with stopping people in the street and asking if they were saved. I owned it was true—that I had been doing it for nearly thirty years, and proposed doing it unto the end, as much blessing had resulted, several instances of which I mentioned. Drink was referred to, and I denounced it as the curse of our land, and said the next greatest blessing to conversion was to be a total abstainer; that I rejoiced in having been one for twenty-four years, purely as example.

Other questions were asked and answered, but throughout there was not a man who spoke a word on the Lord's side. After the gathering had continued about an hour and a-half, all questions ceased, and it quietly broke up. But I was satisfied the evening had not been wasted, for I had witnessed for the Master, and He would not allow the words spoken to return void. D. M. Drysdale.

"BOOKS FOR HOLIDAY READING."

This legend is to be met with in almost every magazine and newspaper that comes to hand at this season, and a perusal of the bill of fare provided under this head reveals a capacity on the part of the reading (!) public to digest aliment of a generally unwholesome description. The penny poisoner, the sixpenny startler, the shilling shocker, the three-volume villain-washer, are all parts of the same unsavoury stew, save in price.

I have often wondered why some people rush away from London in August, just to go to London-by-the-Sea, where they support existence by devouring the contents of the circulating library of the place, which they themselves call "vile."

"I'm obliged to read this rubbish," they say, when detected in the act by some surprised acquaintance, "or go without. One must read something at the seaside, you know; one gets so insufferably dull!"

"Why, then, do you leave home?" is the natural question. And so "The Scarlet Sunflower," and "Bebe," and "More Sensations without a Moral," and so forth, get read by those who would never think of besmearing their moral and spiritual outlook with such slime at home.

"Why yield to the impulse when away from home?"

"Well, there's Mrs. Janus; she's a member of our church, and when I called one day I found her flushed and excited, and she said it was no use being narrow and puritanic. She felt we did more good by going about the world with our eyes open, and if we were to be any use at all we must be able to meet the enemy with his own weapons."

"How was she preparing herself for this noble work?"

"Oh, she was reading 'Mess of the Turbidills.'"

"I suppose she has met the enemy, and conquered?"

"Have you not heard? She sees things so differently from what she did; she has grown larger-minded, and enjoys great freedom of soul. She says the old beliefs are fast crumbling away, and that she belongs to the Church of the future. I don't exactly know where it is, but I know she sometimes goes to hear Professor Neingott at the Secular Hall."

"Oh, and what does her husband say to it all?"

"I don't think he likes it, quite. But his wife says there are better things than pleasing one's husband. You see, she is quite advanced—she reads everything—and she holds that affinity and selection are controlling forces, stronger than the ordinary marriage-tie, which she says she no longer recognises; it is too arbitrary."

And so on, and so on, ad nauseam. It is not because there are no good books to read that our mothers and daughters are, so many of them, reading treacherous rubbish. No; it is because the rubbish is the rage—the fashion; the first question one hears among leisured women is—

"What are you reading now? They say, 'Yum-Yum' is the book of the year; it is more startling than 'The Celestial Gemini,' and I am just dying to read it."

I know many people who read the Bible—on Sunday—who, when starting on a journey, throw down a shilling to the bookstall clerk, asking at the same time, "Give me something to read on the journey," and receiving either some one volume of trash which is the "catch" of the hour, or a sheaf of papers whose illustrations and letterpress are devoted to subtle railleries at marriage, blasphemous handling of religious subjects, and the deceits practised upon each other by engaged couples.

Why will sensible and Christian people read what will surely leave its stain upon them? It is idle to say that when one gets to a certain age one may read anything. As well say that when arrived at years of discretion one may take poison with impunity. I was asked by a Christian mother some time ago, "Do you think I might allow my girls to read So-and-so?" naming a book which is responsible for the unbelief of many who once found all their hope in Scriptural inspiration. "They will hear of it, and may think me narrow if I do not give them the opportunity of hearing both sides."

"Would you give them laudanum to drink because, if you did not do so, they might think you prejudiced in favour of water? The cases are somewhat parallel."

It may be argued that a faith, or a purity that can be obscured, destroyed, or besmirched by reading cannot be a very strong one. The answer is that nothing is known until it is tested. But we do not test the purity of milk with offal; nor the strength of the body with a runaway steam-engine. Why, then, should the soul and the spirit be subjected to the foul atmosphere of impure and blasphemous reading?

If parents read, and allow their families to read all that is published under the name of "advanced"—whether it be that most hateful of novels, described as "theological," or that most harmful of theologies, described as "new"—they must be prepared for eccentric, vicious, and criminal results. No one ever yet touched pitch who was not defiled thereby. Read an evil book and the stain will remain with you, and upon your soul, for ever. Just for one hour give your mind to the writing of some sceptic, and by-and-by, when the fire of temptation is hottest, and your need of faith in God is sorest, all you get in the dark hour may be a resurrection of that sceptic's words, tormenting you with agonies of doubts you had otherwise never known.

Many a man would give all he owns to rid his mind of the false or filthy thoughts which abide in his memory as the result of unwise early reading. Shun all reading that has nothing to offer you but a record of evil experiences, or a creed of empty negations. If you are told that the study of special literature involves these, then avoid the study of special literature; for your Master, Christ, never intended you to attain a culture which would mean the loss of your moral or spiritual colours. Leave that cause célèbre unread; have the courage to refuse to read Blank's last unclean novel; do not wreck your soul's hygiene by studying the latest contribution to modern theological thought. Such things are not for you, if you are for Christ. Let them laugh at your dulness and your "orthodoxy" (such an opprobrious term in some circles!); you can afford that they should do so, for, thank God, there are quite as many good, pure, strong, holy books in the world as ever you will need to supply your intellectual life. "We talk of food for the mind, as of food for the body; now a good book contains such food inexhaustively; it is a provision for life and for the best part of us. Bread of flour is good; but there is bread sweet as honey, if we would eat it, in a good book."

Let no catchy newspaper advertisement, with its offer of holiday reading, mar the time of rest and refreshment you and your family intend to enjoy away from home. Books you and they must have, but let them be good books. Send for the catalogue of some reliable publisher, and with the good hand of your God upon you, you shall not fail of finding books for holiday reading. G.

MR. T. V. POWDERLY, being asked how far the nearest saloon should be from a schoolhouse, replied, "About five hundred miles would be a reasonable distance, according to my way of thinking." Very good, but in what direction? Either in the air or towards the centre of the earth, we should say.—Morning Star (U.S.A.).

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

We have received for publication the following correspondence:—

"Dear Mr. Osborn,—I enclose a letter which I have received from Mr. Broomhall, and shall be glad if you will take the necessary steps to carry out the proposed campaign. A direct appeal must surely now be made to Christian friends in order to enable the two women who have sacrificed time and health to this investigation to lay before the people the needs of those distant lands, and to make an impression on the conscience of this country that shall bear lasting fruit.

"The women have taken upon themselves the great responsibility of organising such a campaign, and we look to those friends whom God has endowed with the riches of this world to lift from us the burden of making these meetings what they ought to be. The urgency of the case must be the plea for asking you to put the matter very strongly, for, as is clear from Mr. Broomhall's letter, this is our moment. I am willing to take my share in this work if I am assisted by others.—Yours very sincerely, "Isabel Somerset."

"Mr. H. J. Osborn, 112, Fleet-street, London, E.C."

"2, Pyrland-road, London, N., August, 1894.

"Dear Lady Henry Somerset,—I write on behalf of the 'Anti-Opium Urgency Committee,' and of the Committee of 'The Christian Union for the Severance of the Connection of the British Empire with the Opium Trade,' in reference to your kind offer to make arrangements for a series of great mass-meetings in the largest towns of the kingdom, at which Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell could give an account of their recent observations concerning the use of opium in India, China, the Straits Settlements, and elsewhere. I am glad to be able to state that your generous offer is thankfully accepted by the committees above-mentioned, under whose auspices Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell had already arranged to speak.

"That these ladies were willing to render this great service, and that the 'World's Women's Christian Temperance Union' had kindly sanctioned their proposal to give themselves for a series of months expressly to this work, we considered cause for deep thankfulness, as the need of such help just now is very urgent. A wave of falsehood concerning the comparative harmlessness of the non-medicinal use of opium has been passing over the land, and strange and deplorable ignorance of the terrible injurious results of opium-smoking seems to be very common. It is therefore of the utmost importance that these, who have the requisite knowledge, and to whom the nation will listen with confidence and respect, should have the widest possible opportunity afforded them to make known the true state of things.

"As a nation we are responsible for a trade, the creation, development, and maintenance of which, considering the irreparable physical, moral, and social injury it has caused to millions of men, women, and children in China, has constituted, I solemnly believe, the most stupendous crime against humanity ever committed by any nation.

"Sir Thomas Wade long since most truly said: 'It is to me vain to think otherwise of the use of the drug in China than as a habit many times more pernicious, naturally speaking, than the gin and whisky drinking which we deplore at home. It takes possession more insidiously, and keeps its hold to the full more tenaciously. I know no case of radical cure. It has insured in every case within my knowledge, the steady descent, moral and physical, of the smoker.' Concerning this dreadful trade, and long before it had attained its present dimensions, the late Dr. Medhurst said: 'Slavery was not productive of more misery and death than was the opium traffic, nor were Britons more complicated in the former than in the latter. Those who grow and sell the drug, while they profit by the speculation, would do well to follow the consumer into the haunts of vice, and mark the wretchedness, poverty, disease, and death which follow the indulgence; for did they but know the thousandth part of the evils resulting from it, they would not, they could not, continue to engage in the transaction.'

"And yet, in the face of numberless and unimpeachable testimonies such as the above, a desperate attempt has been made before the Royal Commission on Opium, and is being made in this country, to defend and uphold this discreditable source of revenue. Unless the nation is aroused, and led to see the true character of this evil trade, the trade will go on carrying moral ruin to the homes of millions, not only in China, but in various other lands, and the Opium Commission, the appointment of which was a disastrous blunder, may be made the means of misleading the public mind.

"We therefore welcome most gratefully the help of ladies who can speak from personal observation, and who, in connection with another great iniquity, have rendered very signal service to the nation, and to the truthfulness of whose statements Lord Roberts has borne honourable testimony. They have in a very remarkable manner won the right to be listened to, and at this crisis of a great question their help will be of unspeakable importance.

"Earnestly desiring that they may be enabled to greatly strengthen the growing desire on the part of the people of this country to bring to an end our connection with a trade which the House of Commons has declared to be 'morally indefensible,' and warmly appreciating the help which at this juncture you kindly offer, I am yours very truly,

"B. Broomhall."

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

In connection with the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, Mr. G. A. Barclay, organising secretary, has been conducting a series of very successful meetings in the summer resorts of Wales, and in the West of England. Among other places visited, have been Llandudno, Penmaenmawr, Colwyn Bay, Rhyl, Chester, Southport, Blackpool, etc. In all places large audiences were gathered together, and the lectures delivered, with the beautiful pictures exhibited by the oxydydrogen lantern, created widespread interest in the work of the society, which supplies all the great missionary societies with many of their best medical missionaries. Mrs. Barclay accompanied her husband, and her rendering of sacred solos proved a great attraction, while two of the students, Messrs. Fletcher Jones and Scott Taylor, also took part in the meetings.

As an instance of the interest created, it may be mentioned that Mr. Barclay has received from visitors at these resorts invitations to conduct similar services in many of the largest and most influential centres in England. This society has trained so many English students for English societies, that it is sure to have a hearty welcome wherever genuine missionary zeal exists.

YOUNG MEN IN COLOMBO.

Dear Sir,—May I be allowed to appeal to pastors, parents, and others on behalf of young men who come out from the homeland to fill situations in Colombo, Ceylon? I would plead with all who are interested in young men to do what they can to prevent those who are morally weak from coming to Colombo at all. No young man should come here who is not a firm total abstainer, if not a decided Christian. The temptations to drink and to degrading vice are so dreadful that few young men who come to reside here can overcome them.

The other word I wish to say is that those who are interested in young men who may be coming to Colombo should communicate direct with some minister or other true friend of young men, and not through the young men themselves. When a young man comes out, bringing with him letters of introduction to ministers or churches, he often finds himself placed at a considerable distance from those to whom the letters are addressed. Perhaps he is a little shy about such matters, and so the letters remain in the young man's portmanteau, until he finds other associations, which, too often, alas! take away any wish to see either the ministers or the churches. May I entreat that in every case of a young man coming to Colombo a letter be sent to some earnest Christian or pastor here, giving the young man's name, the house of business to which he is coming, the ship in which he is sailing, the expected date of arrival, etc.? This letter should reach Colombo at least a week before the young man arrives, so that the moment he steps upon our shores there may be someone to grasp his hand, and help him through those first forty-eight hours, which are so deadly to many.

I need scarcely add that any letters which may be sent to me concerning young men shall receive all possible attention.—Yours faithfully,

T. J. Stockley.

SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.

Very hearty meetings were held on Wednesday last week, in Exeter Hall, to bid God-speed to Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Walton, Mr. G. B. Howe, and a party of missionaries about to proceed to South Africa. Friends of the workers and supporters of the work assembled in the afternoon and evening in such numbers as to crowd the Lower Hall, and the proceedings were enthusiastic in a cheering degree. The chair in the evening was occupied by Mr. T. B. Miller, who was surrounded by the new and returning members of the Mission.

In the course of an instructive address, the Chairman called attention to the two-sided character of the teaching of Acts xiii. 3, 4. First, it is said, "they sent them away"; then, that they were "sent forth by the Holy Ghost." He specially urged the lesson of the former statement, as involving those present in a partnership in the work of the outgoing missionaries. This brings responsibility; those who send are under obligation of fellowship to sympathise with and support those sent forth.

Brief addresses were given by the missionaries, the first to speak being Mr. G. B. Howe, who goes to superintend work in the eastern part of South Africa. Effort among native girls in Durban is very urgent; they sadly require Christian protection and instruction. Mr. Howe told of loving fidelity and loyal consistency on the part of native converts. Miss Sheasby, who is returning after a period of rest, spoke of work among the Malays of Cape Town. These people are Mohammedans, but ignorant and neglected. Mr. Palmer Jones, of Leeds, who has given up business at home to enter for the foreign mission field, rejoiced that the Lord had opened his way very plainly. Miss Doddrell, of London, said she was going to Africa, not so much out of love to the heathen, but at the command of God, who would, she was sure, give her that love for the natives which would stimulate her to joyous service.

An interesting break in the series of speeches was afforded by the introduction to the meeting of a number of young men about to leave for China in connection with the C.I.M. They were commended to the Lord in prayer by Mr. Spencer Walton, and doubtless many who saw their bright faces will remember them often at the Throne of Grace. A few words on the work of the S. A. G. Mission were then spoken by Mr. A. Mercer the hearty secretary of the work. He appealed for sympathy with the Mission in its various enterprises, asking friends not to forget the need for a continual replenishment of the general as well as the more special funds. Miss McCarthy, who has worked among girls in London, praised the Lord for revealing Himself to her in such a way as to give her great encouragement in her purpose for his glory. Mr. F. K. Panzera, of Ontario, Canada, had come to the point of willingness and the door of opportunity through strange and sometimes severe providences. He had prayed the Lord to delay his coming until his parents should be brought to Gospel light and liberty; and now that they had been brought in, he looked around and found that the heathen were still without. So he was going to do his utmost to testify for Christ among them. Miss F. Day, of St. John's Wood, who has been a worker among the young women at the Welcome, gave the following texts: Hos. vi. 3; 2 Sam. xxiii. 4. Mr. Harold Green, of Buxton, praised God for guidance, and gave Isaiah xxxii. 18, and Ps. xxiii. 2 (marg.).

Mrs. Spencer Walton asked whether we have understood what Christ saved us for. Was it not that we should tell others of the one great remedy for sin? Mr. Walton followed with a stirring appeal to individual effort. He directed attention to Mark iii. 14, as setting forth missionary equipment and duty:—"that they should be with Him, and that He might send them forth to preach." That day five years ago the first party of six landed in South Africa. To-day there are sixty-eight workers there, and with the reinforcements and returning workers the Mission will have nearly eighty members. The Chairman announced that South Africa presents a sphere of much usefulness for trained nurses, wholly consecrated to the Lord.

Rev. E. W. Moore closed the meeting with a stimulating address, based on 2 Kings ii. 9. He derived many valuable lessons from the story of Elisha's request at the hands of his master Elijah. A hard thing was asked and secured; and Elisha's act should be an example and an encouragement to all who desire power for the service of God.

FISHERMEN AT YMUIDEN.

By a LADY WORKER.

Last summer, when on my annual visit—in connection with the M.D.S.F.—to the fishing fleets with my friend Miss Woodman, on board the Mission smack Euston, we had occasion to put into Ymuiden two or three times with fish, and, to our surprise and satisfaction, were most warmly welcomed by some of the inhabitants of the town. They showed us with pride a large Sailors' Home in course of erection. Some of these Dutch people take the deepest interest in the Englishmen, and they have long been grieved at the success of a certain class who, by their depredations on the English fishermen, have made the little port notorious for its evil influences. Hitherto the publicans and crimps have had the field to themselves, and a very paying trade they have carried on. It must be remembered that there are thirteen public-houses, so close to each other that they can all be passed in a walk of less than ten minutes. Their gain is a dead loss to many a home on this side of the water; there is not money enough made in the fishing trade now to allow of more than a very limited expenditure. Opposition to this flourishing liquor trade has now arisen in the form of the Sailors' Home opened this year.

The Home, though managed entirely by the Dutch, is intended as much for the English as for the natives, and excellent refreshments and lodgings can be obtained there at a cheap rate. These facts were not well known to the Englishmen on our arrival, so, working on the lines of the publicans, we constituted ourselves "runners" for the house. This means no more than visiting the smacks every morning—besides at other times when they first arrived—having a chat with the men, and during the conversation mentioning that we were staying at the Home, and enlarging on its various advantages. The fishermen were very pleased to be met with an English welcome, and many a long talk we had on the fish stages, or on the decks, or in the cabins of the smacks.

We can understand that to these men the temptations of a port come with full force. Of strong natures, capable of much good or evil, easily persuaded to right or wrong, they fall an easy prey to the allurements of the land sharks. "A few hours' conviviality," they may reason, if they reason about it at all, "will pass away the evening; we must have a change once in a while, it's precious little pleasure or change we do have. If we do get a glass too much—well, it will help us to forget this dog's life. We must enjoy ourselves sometimes." And so they must; it is a necessity of human nature. We are no better able to live without enjoyment than without sunshine. If they cannot get healthy enjoyment, they take what they can get, and it is enjoyment of a certain kind for the time being.

The public-house is bright, music is going on, and a good deal of laughing and talking; now there is a chance of seeing fresh faces and of having a good old yarn. So they go in and take a glass, but they don't reckon on the strength of the Dutch spirits, and in a short time they are no longer master of word or action; the demon has possession of them.

Many a man goes on shore firmly resolved not to take even a glass, for he knows the danger of it only too well. He will just stroll round and have a look at Ymuiden, he thinks to himself, and then go back to the smack. What does he see? Not much besides public-houses; they look cheerful enough, nothing else does; but he won't go in, though he can hear they are having a jolly time there. So he strolls on, passing one temptation after the other. But his good resolutions are gradually growing weaker; it is dull work strolling about alone, and the smack will be duller still.

Then he falls in with an old chum, who asks him to come in and have a glass. In an evil moment he succumbs, the battle is over, he is vanquished; well, it is easier to give in than to hold out against such odds, and he is not obliged to make a fool of himself, he mentally argues.

Since it requires so little, then, to help our fishermen to steer clear of the shoals and quicksands on shore, shall we refuse that little? We are our brothers' keepers, and their sins will lie at our door if we turn aside from helping them when God has put it in our power to do so. We cannot all help in person, but many of us are able to do something towards enabling the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen to extend its sphere of beneficent labours in this direction. The Mission's assistance is nowhere more needed than in Ymuiden, which stands at the entrance of the North Sea Canal, connecting Amsterdam with the North Sea.—Toilers of the Deep.

THE MIZPAH Congregational Church, Chicago, has in its constitution this clause: "But no person shall be received into the fellowship of this chapel who is not a total abstainer from intoxicating beverages and in favour of the annihilation of the liquor traffic."

JOHN WESLEY AND PRE-MILLENNIALISM.

That John Wesley was a millenarian is a statement which, although likely to surprise many to-day, is yet capable of very easy proof. Methodists in America hold the hope of the Lord's return, to "rule the world in righteousness," more prominently than seems to be the case among their brethren in the old world. Hence a tractate by Dr. Nathaniel West, of Syracuse, N.Y., the well-known writer on prophetic subjects, and entitled John Wesley and Premillennialism (Hunt and Eaton, 150, Fifth Avenue, New York), has entered upon its instructive and useful career with the earnest recommendation of several influential members of the great Methodist body.

Dr. West says: "Wesley taught specifically: (1) The spread of the Gospel as a testimony to all nations; (2) an apostasy yet more to be developed, and already at work, in Christendom; (3) the literal conversion and restoration of Israel to their own land; (4) that the full revelation of the Antichrist precedes the Advent; (5) that it is the duty of the Church to observe the signs of the times; (6) the literal, visible, personal, and glorious Second Coming of the Lord; (7) that the third Beatitude, 'The weak shall inherit the earth,' refers to the Millennial Age; (8) that the curse shall be removed from the earth, and the animal creation restored to pristine innocence; (9) that there shall be a transfiguration of the planet into a new earth, with a new heaven, and a new climate; (10) that it is the duty of the Church always to pray and look for the Coming of the Lord."

This comprehensive statement of teaching is supported by references to Wesley's sermons and annotations; and then it is shown that the many great men who influenced and consorted with Wesley were professed and hearty pre-millennialists. After quoting Wesley's acknowledgment of the great help he received from Bengel's Gnomon, Dr. West says: "The foundations of the Methodist Church were laid deep in the pre-millennial faith of the pure apostolic and primitive martyr Church; and would God but revive once more in the hearts of her bishops, elders, pastors, and itinerating ministry the ancient faith that overturned the Roman empire, and kindled the souls of the two Wesleys, Fletcher, Coke, and the 'Oxford Methodists,' and gave to Bengel his undying fame, and yet dwells in the souls of thousands of God's dear children of different denominations to-day, what a conflagration of holy fervour and vital Christianity would sweep over our secularised churches, and over our land so enslaved to material interests and to mammon!"

CENTRAL INDIAN HILL MISSION.

In The Christian for December 28, 1893, there was a description of an old woman, with snow-white hair, reputed to be over 100, who, with the energy of despair, cast from her the offer of eternal life, as Mrs. Müller told the Gospel message in her village. A few weeks after, when repeating her visit, Mrs. M. found that the old lady had crept into a dark corner to listen while she was speaking to a dying man in his home, and her former defiant attitude suddenly gave way to warm affection, when the visitor described how she had taken farewell of her own aged mother to come to India, but looked forward to meeting her again in heaven. Many prayers were offered that the Lord would reveal Himself to the old centenarian, and the following extract from a letter received gives the answer:—

"Yesterday morning I visited my old 'grandmother'; she was somewhat poorly, but I believe more from want of clothing than from anything else; for the poor black shrivelled old body was wet all over with the rain. I shall take her a new soiri this afternoon. I had a happy time with her, and she is so pleased to pray with me and to tell me that she has had her sins forgiven, which I fully believe is true.

"But there are many hindrances to openly declaring herself a Christian. Death is very present to her, and as she says, 'Who will bury me, if I become a Christian openly? No one will touch me; they will let my body lie about.' This is no mere fancy, for the other day an old woman, who I fear was only a nominal Christian, died here, and there was no one but ourselves to help them. No one would touch the coffin, and the Roman Catholic Sisters, to whom someone had gone without our knowledge to ask their permission for their pew-opener to help in carrying the body, answered that this old woman had gone to hell, and those carrying her would go to hell too. One of our teachers, out of kindness to us, helped my husband and her son when it was dark; for our young men were away at the time.

Will friends pray for her and for three or four young men (who have lately been eagerly seeking instruction in the Gospel), that they may have courage to confess Christ by baptism, and may themselves become heralds to their own countrymen? Eighteen workers—one a native evangelist—are now seeking to spread the truth in and around the different stations. Lately a sixth station at Duni, near the junction of the rivers Sipna and Tapti, has been opened, and the natives there seem much interested. A copy of the report for 1893 will be sent on application.

The Book World.

The Story of Elijah, by H. K. Wood (G. Stoneman), is a review, practically considered, of the chequered and dramatic recorded career of the ancient Hebrew prophet. The lessons of Elijah's life are well applied.

The Young Woman. The second annual volume of this monthly forms a singularly varied, fresh, and readable budget. Many of the best popular writers of the day contribute to its contents, which are all of a high order. (Partridge & Co.)

Walks in Palestine. By Henry A. Harper. (10s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) This is a cheaper edition of a charming work, illustrated by fifteen artistic photogravures. These are from photographs taken by the late Cecil V. Shadbolt, of whom a brief memoir, with portrait, is prefixed.

Under the title of A Brave Saxon (Simpkin) Mr. J. S. Beamish has gathered from various authentic sources, recasting them in his own language, some of the most striking incidents in the life of Martin Luther. Some "Addenda" are devoted to a consideration of current or recent episodes in the Papal propaganda in this country.

Hidden yet Possessed. Rev. Evan Hopkins contributes this third volume to the pocket series of "The Keswick Library." The dominant notes in Mr. Hopkins's teaching are clearness and caution; these are well exemplified in the little book before us. He is at once uncompromising and safe in his unfolding of the privileges and possibilities of the spiritual life. (1s. net. Marshall Bros.)

The Sanitary Code of the Pentateuch, by Rev. C. G. K. Gillespie, is the new volume of the "By-paths of Bible Knowledge" series. It is succinct and clear, and written for the "ordinary reader." It shows in an effective manner the excellence of the Mosaic system of sanitary law. This book will be welcomed by Jews and Christians alike, and will have attractions for sanitarians and antiquarians as well as theologians. (2s. Religious Tract Society.)

A new and greatly enlarged edition of Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable is in process of publication by Messrs. Cassell and Co. (7d. per part). It purports to give "the derivation, source, or origin of common phrases, allusions, and words that have a tale to tell." It well fulfils this programme, and shows colossal industry and research. To journalists and students of literature it is invaluable. With the opening part is given an excellent portrait of the able author and compiler.

Pictures from Bohemia. By James Baker. (8s. Religious Tract Society.) A new volume of the "Pen and Pencil series." The land of Huss, though not very remote in these days of speedy travel, is virtually a terra incognita to most Britons. This charming account of the land and its peoples will help to popularise the picturesque qualities of both. We would have welcomed a somewhat fuller account of Huss himself and his place in the Reformation movement, but probably that was not within the scope of such a work. The numerous illustrations, by Walter Crane and other artists, complete the attractions of a beautiful and fascinating volume.

Present Day Primers.—This useful series (1s. each. Religious Tract Society) has been enriched by the addition of the following manuals:—How to Study the English Bible, by Canon R. B. Girdlestone, a work which has already performed an important educational service in a more expensive form; A Brief Introduction to New Testament Greek, with vocabularies and exercises, by Dr. S. G. Green, whose high reputation in this line of scholarship is a guarantee of sound method and minute accuracy; and A Primer of Assyriology (illustrated), by Professor A. H. Sayce, who has admirably succeeded in the difficult task of summarising what is known of Assyria and its wonderful monuments.

A Living Letter, a booklet by A. T. B., presents some very helpful thoughts for Christian workers, based on 2 Cor. iii. 1-3. (9d. per dozen. James Magill, Corn Market, Belfast.)

Letters to the Editor.

THE OPEN AIR IN IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—I read with interest the article from your correspondent, and the letter from Mr. Price, respecting open-air preaching in Ireland. I have considerable experience of the country, and I must express my surprise at the statement of your correspondent that "open-air preaching is a veritable blessing to the priests." I am perfectly sure that they do not so regard it, and I know from those most competent to judge that so far from it causing doors hitherto open to be closed, and frightening inquiring Roman Catholics, it has had precisely the opposite effect both in Arklow and Cork.

I was present to-day at an open-air service held in this town in the market-square, and it may not be uninteresting to your readers if I describe what I heard and saw, and the impressions produced on me and others.

The preachers were, I believe, all Irishmen; they were evidently young men of gifts and grace, they spoke simply, clearly, and with power, the Gospel message. They exhibited no ordinary courage and meekness, and many who did not sympathise with their work were indignant that the authorities permitted them to be so disgracefully assaulted. There was a large audience composed of the middle and lower classes. The former gave a respectful hearing, the latter indulged in shouting, jeering, etc., and the street arabs were permitted openly and unrebuked to throw sods, rotten eggs, and refuse at the preachers, and continued the pastime until their resources were exhausted.

I stood convenient to a county magistrate and a military officer, and heard them both say that the conduct of the authorities was disgraceful. No attempt was made to warn or to arrest the assailants, and the slightest effort of the police would have put an end to the wanton and unprovoked assaults. I do not blame the constabulary, as I am aware that they are acting under orders, but one could not but feel indignant that men who were committing no offence should not receive the just protection of law to which they were legally entitled.

I know there are many with whom it is a moot point whether open-air preaching is the best means of reaching our Roman Catholic countrymen; but, whether it be wise or unwise, it is of the utmost importance that the authorities be required to secure liberty and protection to the subject in the exercise of his legal rights.

It must be remembered that open-air preaching has never got a fair trial in Ireland, that undoubtedly there are now greater opportunities than at any previous time; that John Wesley, Gideon Ousely, and others, who, in darker times, proclaimed in the open air the Gospel, had some remarkable fruits as the result of their work; and it appears to me that instead of discouraging those who are engaged in so Christ-like and apostolic a work, we should sustain them by our prayers and by our means, and have more faith, that not only the people but the priests shall become obedient to the faith.—Yours faithfully,

A Christian Irishman.

Dear Sir,—Your article on "Open-air Work in Ireland" (August 30) to my mind hits the nail on the head. I have recently returned after five weeks' colportage work among the Roman Catholics. A quiet but effective work is being carried on in this way by Irish Church Missions, Methodists, and Presbyterians. Some of the people are very pious, and extremely jealous of their "one true Church," and great caution and tact are required in approaching them.

On the whole I have been well treated, and occasionally refreshed by draughts of milk from Roman Catholics who knew my business perfectly well. One gets many an opportunity for a quiet spiritual chat, and can often press home the necessity of studying the Bible. Many (thanks to this work) possess copies of the Douay Testament, and they read it. I met one waiting to return it, and another who had burned it, because, finding that it did not agree, as they thought, with Catholic doctrine, they considered they must be Protestant books.

I might add that after taking part in a good open-air meeting on the Custom-house steps in Dublin, I had a pleasant chat with an experienced worker, and he questioned very much the wisdom of sending inexperienced Englishmen to such a district. He was fully expecting such results, which will hinder the work in that part for a long time to come.—Faithfully yours,

Arthur Smith.

Holsworthy, Devon.

P.S.—Already a colporteur friend, working in Galway, who was doing up to that time a good work, has had his bicycle smashed.

[936]

Sir,—I thank you much for inserting my letter of the 3rd inst., which has already elicited hearty approval of our work; and you will confer a further favour by allowing me this opportunity of replying to your "Correspondent," who seems to have quite missed the mark, for he looks upon the Open-air Mission as an attack upon the religion of the Roman Catholics of Ireland. I emphatically say that this is not so, either by the constitution or practice of our Society. Our attack is directed, not against any religion, but against irreligion of all sorts and classes, foremost of Protestants, then of all others. Satan is our foe. Not long ago a Roman Catholic Mission Father stated in the City of Cork that out of their population of 76,000 there were 74,000 who did not care for their souls. We do not say this. But after such a statement we ask, "Is there not a cause?" The bulk of the crowds soon find out that our preaching is not anti-Roman, nor anti-Irish, nor of Orange hue; and therefore they gladly listen so soon as this discovery is made. The great Athenian general said, "Strike me, but hear me." So our preachers in effect say to tumultuous crowds, "If you will strike us, at least hear." In these very crowds there are God's children, who must be found out. And why desist from open-air preaching because multitudes are not converted? As well close all the churches for the same reason.

We do not think that the earnest prayer of God's children for Ireland offered up during the last half century will for ever be unanswered. And perhaps the time is very short. The people (God's people) say "The time is not come," but God says "Consider your ways."

The Gospel dispensation began with open-air preaching; may it not close with it? This is God's method in his works, his Word, and his times; a system of "introversion" seems to pervade all these. —Yours faithfully,

James Price.

Treasurer, Open-air Mission for Ireland.

[It is very important in every discussion not to confuse the issue. Neither we nor any of our correspondents desire to "desist from open-air preaching," but that the Gospel should be preached in ways most wisely adapted to circumstances. If there is one way which is always possible, always effective, and more neglected than any other, is it not that apostolic method, not only "publicly," but "from house to house, warning every one, night and day, with tears"?—Ed.]

GIFT, SERVICE, AND HEADSHIP.

Dear Sir,—In an article that appeared in your issue of August 9, I notice that you call attention to the Church at Corinth and to the readiness its members showed to contribute to the general well-being out of the diversities of gift existing among them. And you remark, "We ought to be able to have meetings—some no doubt have—to which each should be encouraged and expected to bring something for the edification of all."

This ought undoubtedly to be the case with Christian churches. In a previous chapter of this same epistle (the 12th) we find the church likened to a body composed of many members possessing different functions, members, moreover, that neither usurped the functions of one another, nor sought to do without the joint co-operation of all. Further, in Eph. iv. 11, 12, we read that Christ gave some very especial gifts to the church (apostles, prophets, evangelists, etc.) for an especial end, not to absorb every office within their own single gift, but, as the 12th verse should read, "for the perfecting of the saints unto a work of service, unto building up the body of the Christ." That is to say, all the members in the body of Christ were to be perfected toward the joint fulfilment of their several offices. And no single church is a living, healthy organism, that does not corporately exhibit an effectual working in the measure of every part, a working that results in the building up of itself in love.

But there is a momentous fact that it is needful to call attention to. This body of Christ has a head; and the gathering together of various Christians in a place could no more ensure the successful and harmonious working of each and all than a body could perform its functions without a head. The church is not independent of Christ, but wholly dependent on Him; and in Eph. v. 24, it is assumed as a fact that the church is subject to Christ.

What then is needful for the carrying out of the wholesome proposition of your article? This: that believers gather together in dependence on Him who is their corporate head; that they look unto Him from whom alone all spiritual gift descends, and that they wait on Him to control their operations and direct their service.

It surely was not in vain that He also gave this promise: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." For, when his members gather in his Name alone, there is to be realised a presence and a power that overawe the workings of the flesh, subject each individual heart to control, and guide service wisely to an edifying end.

"INTERCESSION."

Sir,—The contributions by "F. O. E." in The Christian for August 2 and 9, entitled "A Call for Intercessors," are very seasonable. In Isaiah lxii. 6, we read, "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night." Though all believers are commanded to "Watch and pray," yet the faithful "watchmen" is God's gift to the Church. The verse quoted goes on to say (margin), "Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, keep not silence, and give Him no rest till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." These words are our encouragement to earnest, persevering prayer, for the fulfilment of the many glorious predictions and promises in the Word, and that "the Kingdoms of the world may become the Kingdoms of our God and his Christ." Then shall Ps. ii. 8 be fulfilled.

Isaiah lxii. 10 is the command to the servants of God to "go through the gates, prepare the way of the people; . . . . gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people." This corresponds with Isaiah xl. 3, and the command of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

On July 19 I was present at the yearly meeting of the Society of Friends in a country place in Sussex. An earnest and able address was given by a leading brother, through whom the Lord was sending the faithful message. After he had spoken, a sister present engaged in prayer very earnestly, in the true spirit of intercession. Her petitions included prayer for one who was suffering imprisonment for the truth in a far-off land. When the prayer was ended, another brother rose and spoke from Heb. i. 2, on watching and hearkening for God's voice, and obeying. He went on to speak of prayer and intercession in the largest and widest sense and scope, not only for ourselves, but for others—for our nation and rulers, for other nations in darkness, that the light may shine in; for all missionaries gone forth, and that the Lord of the harvest would thrust forth more labourers; also that darkness, error, superstition, and all obstacles to the Gospel might be dispelled and dispersed.

When I read the articles by "F. O. E.," I felt the Lord was stirring up "his remembrancers," that they may "give Him no rest" till their prayers are all answered in fulness of blessing.

CONTINENTAL SERVICES.

Dear Sir,—I have only just returned from the Continent, and find my Christians waiting for me. In the issue of August 23 I notice that Surgeon-General Partridge has been writing a letter saying how disgusted he was with the Romish surroundings of the English Church services he attended while on the Continent.

I am quite certain the services he complains of were not held by chaplains appointed by the Colonial and Continental Church Society. The aims and teaching of this Society are decidedly Evangelical; and it is its earnest endeavour to send men out to the various chaplaincies with like-minded views. It is a pity for Surgeon-General Partridge to tar all the chaplains of the Continental chaplaincies with the same brush. He should at least make inquiries before making such statements as he does; then I am sure he would acknowledge his mistake.—Yours faithfully,

A. C. and C. C. S. Chaplain.

DAILY GOVERNESSES.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see Dora Ridgeway's appeal for "Nursery Governesses" in your paper. May I be allowed to draw your readers' attention to another class of toilers, whose struggles and privations are often little guessed at? I refer to the great army of daily governesses. Some of these are exposed to needless hardships through the thoughtlessness or stinginess of their employers, as, for instance, when they are obliged to come home for their midday meal, after a long morning's work before resuming their duties in the afternoon, unequal, perhaps, to the task of helping to prepare it, and in some cases unable to afford it, other members of the family being dependent on their efforts.

As one of them remarked lately, "What is ample for one is starvation for three." Surely the anxiety occasioned by miserably low salaries is enough without this additional burden.

IN JAPAN, Miss Bacon says, it is held to be the religious duty of every mother, from the Empress downwards, to perform the most menial duties for her children.

HAND-PICKED FRUIT is the best, and hand picking is the best way to get the fruit. It is personal work that tells. It is so in religion, it is so in everything. Five minutes' private personal entreaty will often accomplish more in winning a soul to Christ than five months' public preaching—though we would not disparage public preaching in the least. Close work is effective. When you talk to me you mean me, and I know it. Try personal work. Be a committee of one. The Church is to be multiplied by addition; and this not by wholesale but by the addition of ones, led to Christ by the personal work of believers.—American Messenger.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

A NEW Association has been formed at Spondon.

The Wolverhampton Association has appointed Mr. J. A. Roxburgh as general secretary.

The new Association at Hanley has acquired good premises, and bids fair to do excellent work.

On a recent Sunday, 104 young men attended the Plymouth Y.M.C.A. Bible Class, and 142 were present at the class at Devonport.

Mr. S. Y. Ormerod, of Plymouth, has been appointed to the secretaryship of Southport, vacant by the resignation of Mr. T. W. Gladstone.

The Manchester Y.M.C.A. reports good work at the Gospel temperance meetings and Gospel song services. The 131st emigration party has left for Canada.

The Finsbury Park Association has started a bright little Bulletin. The first secretarial miniature is Mr. W. H. Mills. The programme for the coming winter is full of promise.

The journal of the Newcastle (N.S.W.) Association, the Lighthouse, has changed its form, and now comes out as the Young Men's Echo. It tells of excellent work done by the Association, which hopes in a very short time to be occupying a building of its own.

In Leeds the Sunday afternoon workers' prayer meeting is being attended by large numbers, and the young men's conversational Bible-reading class is quietly and steadily adding to its roll. The cyclists' mission corps is doing good work in villages near Leeds.

During the year ending March 31 last, 761 new members and associates joined the Manchester Association as compared with 775 in 1893. This makes a total of 19,936 in the last twenty-two years; and the active associate and honorary membership stands at 2452.

In a recent issue of the Cape Times appears an interview with Mr. Sprigg, secretary of the local Y.M.C.A., in which that gentleman, on account of the stagnation in trade prevailing in the Colony, earnestly warns young men from this country against going thither in search of employment.

The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, asks young men coming to the French capital to apply, personally or by letter, to the secretary for information required. To those intending residence in Paris, the advantages of the Association, religiously and socially, are invaluable.

The committee of the City of Dublin Association are now making their arrangements for the winter session, which gives promise to be one of unusual interest. Mr. Henry Varley will conduct a mission for men only in the Metropolitan Hall, commencing Saturday, October 13. Amongst those secured for popular lectures are the Rev. Egerton R. Young and Capt. Reade, Royal Navy.

Mr. D. A. Black, secretary of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., reported to the monthly meeting of the National Executive, held at Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon, that a revival had commenced among the young men of his city. Seven young men, of whom five had been accepted, had offered themselves for missionary service; while the summer meetings of the Association had been larger than those of the winter.

The syllabus of the International Y.M.C.A. Training School at Springfield, Mass., has been issued. This school is devoted to the training of young men as general secretaries and educational directors of associations, and for physical directors both in associations and colleges. Sixty-one regular students were received during the past year, while the number of graduates was twice as large. The course in Christian sociology, which proved so successful last year, is to be repeated, and James McConaughy will give special courses in Bible instruction. Any desired information can be obtained by addressing Oliver C. Morse, Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

The Steine House, Brighton, Magazine writes:—"It is quite inspiriting to once again see a well-filled room on Sunday nights. The holiday season has thinned our ranks somewhat, but the growth of the attendance at the service promises for the winter session. Our Lecture Hall on Friday nights is beginning to wear an aspect of interest and appreciation. Sunday School teachers and Christian workers are rallying again, greatly to the encouragement of our tried friend, Rev. David Davies. The studies for the month have been of a very interesting character. The sacred song services, which became very popular last winter, will re-commence on the last Wednesday evening in September.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessing on a special mission to be conducted by Mr. W. Monro Collings from September 23 to 30 in the Mechanics' Institute, Stratford, E.—For a mission by Captain Rochfort in connection with Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead, September 16 to 23.—For five seamen who, on Sunday evening, professed to find blessing at the Christian Mission, Salmon-lane, E., and who have now started on their voyage.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

AN earnest, enthusiastic meeting of the societies in Erie County, Penn., was lately held. The Missionary Extension idea met with hearty sympathy.

Rev. John Stevens, president of the Chinese United Society, writes:—"Christian Endeavour has already proved to be an efficient agency in the China field."

In our last issue we described certain work as done by the Birkenhead Union; this work was done by the Liverpool Union, and not the Birkenhead Union, which is but lately formed.

A bright writer in The Evangelist (N.Y.) wisely says that "good citizenship," now such a popular watchword among Endeavourers, is only another phrase for "home missions."

The first Endeavour Society ever organised in a regiment of the U.S.A. National Guards has been formed in connection with the Eighth Regiment National Guards of Pennsylvania.

There was a pleasant celebration of an Endeavour Day at Chautauqua, with addresses by Mrs. French-Sheldon, Mrs. Grace Livingston Hill, and Rev. Dr. Wayland Hoyt. A reception was given to Dr. Hoyt after the prayer meeting in the evening.

Some of the Montreal Endeavour Societies are engaging in temperance work after a very vigorous fashion. They are securing pledges against the patronage of licensed grocers, and in favour of the patronage of those that do not sell liquors.

A successful united meeting was held at Langholm on August 28. Papers were read on "Our Pledge," "Our Motto," "Our Prayer-meeting," "Our Relationship to the Sabbath School." Rev. John Graham, Boston, U.S.A., gave a helpful address on "Christian Endeavour in America." A Free Parliament was also held.

The Sunday Breakfast Association in Wilmington, Del., carried on by members of the Union, has been holding open-air services in different parts of the city each Sabbath afternoon and evening this summer. A Gospel waggon has aided the work, and the efforts seem to have been richly blessed, both to the workers and to those who listened.

A Canadian Endeavourer suggests the organisation of rambling clubs among Endeavourers during the summer and fall. The spiritual aims of the society need not at all be lost sight of, and it might with profit imitate the example of English Endeavourers who not seldom make an open-air service in some distant village the goal of these pleasant outings.

Mississippi held its first State convention this month. A State organisation was formed and great interest was awakened in considering the topics of Bible study, tithing, the improvement of the mid-week meeting, and the relation of Christian Endeavour to weak churches in the country and in small towns. Good reports were given as to the progress of the movement among the coloured people.

The first convert of the first Endeavour Society ever established in the U.S. Navy writes from on board the U.S.S. Monongahela: "We have a chaplain on board, and I have made arrangements with him to start a Bible class among the crew at night, and he is very glad to help me to carry on the good work for the Master, as I am alone at present, but I will fight the good fight myself among the men, and I know God will be with us to bless and save."

VERY LITTLE CHILDREN can readily distinguish between deserved and just punishment, and that which is undeserved and unjust. No child should ever feel that guilt is measured, not by wilful and known disregard of duty and right, but by the loss or annoyance its conduct may unwittingly inflict.

HOW INEXPRESSIBLY TIRESOME is the everlasting "Don't!" in some households. Don't get in the fire! Don't play in the water! Don't tease the kitten! Don't trouble the dog! Don't bother the lady! Don't interrupt! Don't contradict! and Don't worry me now! while not a word has been said of something to do.

DORKING CONVENTION (October 1-5).—The letter of invitation says:—"We have no set subjects, because we desire to be led by the Holy Ghost. He knows best the message we shall need from day to day. Our expectation is from Him. How much we need to turn aside, in these last days, from the din of earth's Babel voices, that in the secret of his presence we may learn how to gain the victory over indwelling sin; how to find full and complete deliverance from all iniquity; how to be filled with the Holy Ghost; how to live lives such as the primitive Christians lived—lives of power and influence, because lives of holiness and righteousness, which were the outcome of an indwelling Christ. I need hardly say that our convention is on 'Keswick lines,' that the speakers represent various sections of the Church of Christ, and that we meet only in the Name of our Lord, and shall heartily welcome all who love our Lord Jesus Christ irrespective of denominations."

SCOTTISH NOTES.

DR. CATHERINE HOWIE, daughter of Rev. Robert Howie, goes out shortly to hospital work in Madras, under the Free Church of Scotland.

The Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, began a new session on September 4, when the opening lecture was delivered by Mr. John Anderson. Morning and evening classes for the study of the Bible will be held daily.

Dr. Parker's able addresses in Aberdeen last week were heard by immense gatherings, and were greatly appreciated. The Doctor was entertained at a public breakfast, and a warm resolution of thanks was passed for the spiritual stimulus he had afforded the community.

In connection with Dr. J. G. Paton's New Hebrides Mission, Rev. James Mackenzie and his wife and Rev. Mr. Boyd leave Glasgow on September 19, proceeding first to Australia. Mrs. Mackenzie has been a district nurse for some years, and her experience should prove of much value.

Through the Scottish branch of the Evangelisation Society, James Wharton held a series of meetings in connection with the Mizpah Band, which has had in use the Wooden Theatre in Cranstonhill for the last three months. From the first, souls have been led to Christ every night, and the workers have great reason to thank God for sending such showers of blessing.

Mr. Quarrier had a bright autumn day for his "Thanksgiving" celebrations at Bridge-of-Weir. Between 3000 and 4000 visitors were driven from the railway station, and entertained at the Homes, and every meeting was overflowing. The number of children at present in the Orphan Homes is 900, and the memorial stone of a new Hospital for the care and cure of consumptive children was laid by Sir William Arrol. £20,000 has been sent in for the work in the last two years, and the buildings at the Bridge-of-Weir village represent property to the value of £150,000. These Orphan Homes of Scotland are well worth a visit, and have abiding tokens of the blessing of the Lord on the work.

GORDON MEMORIAL HALL, EAST PLUMSTEAD.

THE fifth annual report of the work of the Gordon Memorial Hall and Mission, Glenside-road, High-street, East Plumstead, says:—

"The hall is situated in the midst of a rapidly-increasing population, which numbers at the present time about 38,000 persons, chiefly composed of the poor working classes who earn their livelihood in the Royal Arsenal and Dockyard." The work is greatly needed in the district, and we are glad to learn that much blessing has attended the efforts put forth.

A correspondent writes:—"The missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. George Richardson, have devoted their declining years to this work, and of late their faith has been sorely tried. Then, there is a sum of £25 due on the mortgage. It is impossible for this to be raised in the district, which is essentially one in which outside Christians should show an interest. The work is unsectarian, and those in charge are highly esteemed by the people."

Communications to Mr. Richardson should be addressed, 99, Brewery-road, Plumstead.

BELFAST PRISON GATE MISSION FOR MEN.—The new report of this interesting work says:—"In the past year 390 men have come to breakfast on their discharge from prison. The greater number of these do not want honest employment; many are just habitual drinkers and loafers, for whom jail has no shame. The agent can only speak a kind and faithful word, and let them go. But here and there among this sorry company we find one of a different stamp—some young fellow who has fallen through strong drink, but now that he has had some weeks to think, is ashamed of the past, and longing to turn away from old companions, and begin afresh; such a one always gets an opportunity of honest work in the Bridge House, as our Home in Fairview Street is called. There have been eighty-eight living in the Home for longer or shorter periods during the year. Of these seventeen got into work, four went to sea, three to America, seven were sent home to their parents, two elder men helped home to their families, four were kept in the Home till their parents sent money for either the whole or part fare for their return, ten were turned out for misconduct, and a large number left of their own accord. Of the ones sent to America we have very cheering accounts. In two cases friends provided the passage money, without taxing the Mission funds. Many grateful letters have been received from the parents of young lads helped home." The hon. secretary of the Mission is Mr. W. H. H. Lyons, Tudor House, Holywood, co. Down.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A temperance breakfast, largely attended, was held last week in Havelock Hall, Gray's Inn-road.

Rev. Wesley Guard says that of every hundred Methodist ministers in Ireland ninety-nine are teetotallers.

Drink (says the Irish Temperance League Journal) fills nine-tenths of the prisons, if not nineteen-twentieths. In one gaol containing 600 criminals, it was found that 595 owed their imprisonment to drink.

The report for 1893-4 of the International League against the drinking customs (Alkoholgegnerbund) contains the important notice of a change in the constitution, limiting the full membership of the League to total abstainers.

The last Sunday in November (the 25th) has been again adopted by the Nonconforming Churches as "Temperance Sunday," and an appeal will be made to all the officiating ministers to arrange for sermons being preached on the sin of intemperance.

At the adjourned licensing sessions for the city of Manchester, objections were raised by the police to the renewal of the licences of six fully-licensed houses and twenty-seven beer-houses. Nine cases were dealt with, and in four of them the magistrates refused to renew the licences.

The report of Commissioners of Customs for the last financial year says the year's figures indicate the consumption of coffee and cocoa is decreasing, and the taste for rum diminishing, but there has been a substantial advance in the amount of tea consumed. The tobacco duties have decreased a little, while the receipt from wine continues its downward tendency.

Last week an enthusiastic meeting was held in the Temperance Hall, Preston, to consider a suggestion recently thrown out by the British Workmen's Temperance Association, that a National Temperance Memorial Hall should be erected; in honour of the "seven men of Preston," who, in September, 1835, signed the first teetotal pledge, as drawn up by the late Mr. Joseph Livesey.

The question, "Should Barmaids be Abolished?" is being warmly discussed in some papers. Meanwhile, in Scandinavia it has been made penal to employ girls in drink-selling; in the Transvaal, and in some of the Australian colonies, it is proposed to abolish barmaids. The main points urged are the degrading environments of the bar for the barmaid, and the allurement she herself is to many to drink.

Dr. Norman Walker, in giving an account of a visit to the Highlands, says:—"A distinct change has come over the country with regard to temperance. Time was when whisky was constantly in evidence. I remember the late Mr. Hugh Handyside telling of a meeting he had had somewhere with a deacon's court, when a glass went round before the commencement of business. Now most of the ministers are teetotallers, the number of public-houses is exceedingly small—far fewer in proportion to the population than in the south—and such a sight as that of a drunkard is very seldom indeed to be witnessed, at least in the north. The only place which holds an exceptional position is Stornoway. During the fishing season the drinking there is deplorable."

The Medical Record, an American organ of the profession, has an article in a recent issue on "The Power of the Dipsomaniac," which is worth reading and thinking over. The condition called dipsomania is described as "morbid," manifesting itself "by the irresistible impulse to drink," and during an attack the victim "abandons himself entirely to the craving for liquor." And the effect on the victim of these attacks, and which in turn may be regarded as the cause of their recurrence, is some peculiarity in their character "which puts them out of the ordinary and among a class which we cannot trust. . . . . A person who has dipsomania is essentially one whose judgment is weak and whose actions may be erratic, perhaps picturesque, or, on the other hand, foolish, cruel, or criminal."

There is scarcely a single denomination in the country which has not in recent years taken definite action in regard to the national curse of intemperance. The Church of England and the Wesleyan Conference admit to membership in their adult temperance organisations, non-abstainers as well as habitual teetotalers, but their juvenile branches are composed exclusively of young people who have signed a pledge of abstinence. The other denominational societies—Congregational, Baptist, Primitive Methodist, Free Methodist, Methodist New Connexion, Bible Christian, Calvinistic Methodist, Presbyterian, Friends, etc.—are all organised and wrought upon an abstinence basis; and it is believed that not less than from fifty to eighty per cent. of the pulpits in English Nonconformist churches are occupied by total abstainers. It is impossible to give an accurate estimate of the proportion of teetotal clergymen in the Church of England, but it is well known that many of its ablest and most devoted men take a foremost part in the ranks of earnest temperance reformers.—Helping Words.

OBITUARY.

REV. S. B. S. BISSELL.

The death is reported of Rev. Samuel Bissell, a veteran Christian worker in the United States. He studied at Yale and Princeton, and laboured as a Presbyterian minister in Virginia over fifty years ago. Settling in the State of Connecticut, he became district secretary of the American Sunday-school Union and also of the Seamen's Friend Society. He died at the advanced age of eighty-two, leaving a bright and blessed memory.

MR. ROBERT CLOUGH, ROCHDALE.

This earnest temperance worker died on Sunday, September 2, at Dublin, where he had gone to fulfil a week's speaking engagements under the auspices of the Dublin Total Abstinence Society. He had never been in Ireland before, and enjoyed very greatly his reception by the gatherings which assembled on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, and to which he spoke with exceeding vigour and earnestness, evoking great sympathy for the cause of which he had been a lifelong advocate. Mr. Clough was sixty-four years of age, and died from syncope of the heart.

REV. JOHN DAVIES.

There has quietly passed away, at Brighton, almost unnoticed, one of the oldest Nonconforming ministers, who in his earlier days wielded a far-reaching influence—Rev. John Davies. For five years he was the colleague of Rev. Dr. Pye-Smith, at the Old Gravel Pits Chapel, Hackney, and his successor for forty years. Loving quiet ways, he could rarely be induced to preach away from Hackney. But, like the late Sir Charles Reed, Mr. Thomas Curwen, and others, he trained a band of men who became well known in the Church of Christ. He had almost attained his ninetieth birthday. His father was a friend of the renowned Christmas Evans. Mr. Davies was one of the oldest surviving students of Cheshunt College.

REV. E. A. FITCH, C.M.S.

Another missionary has fallen a victim to African fever. Rev. E. A. Fitch, who had recently come home on furlough, was seized with this sickness, and died at Weston Rectory, after a short illness, under circumstances similar to those which caused the death of Sir Gerald Portal. Mr. Fitch went to East Africa in 1884 as chaplain to the late Bishop Hannington. He has since worked in connection with the C.M.S. at Mochi, Freretown, and Rabai. He did much excellent work in these places. The people amongst whom he laboured were mostly free slaves, and he sent home some touching accounts of their devotion and earnestness. He was the son of the Vicar of Cromer. His sister, who joined the East African Mission in 1887, died at Rabai in 1891.

PROFESSOR BRUGSCH.

All students of the Old Testament will learn with regret that Brugsch Pasha, the eminent Egyptologist, died on Sunday last at Charlottenburg, Germany. As a result of his first visit to Egypt in 1853, the Professor published "Reports on a Visit to Egypt," followed by the magnificent work entitled "Monuments de l'Egypte." Researches made on his second visit to the countries of the Nile in 1857 and 1858 were described in his "Recueil de Monuments Egyptiens." At the beginning of 1860 Professor Brugsch accompanied the Prussian Embassy to Persia in an official capacity, and made a tour through that country with Baron von Minutoli, on whose death he assumed the direction of the Embassy. After returning home he published an account of the journey. In 1864 Brugsch was appointed Prussian Consul at Cairo. Having for a short period occupied the post of Professor of Egyptology at Goettingen, he returned to Egypt in 1870, and became director of the Ecole d'Egyptologie at Cairo. In 1873 he acted as Egyptian Commissioner-General at the International Exhibition at Vienna. Shortly afterwards he received the title of Bey, and organised the Egyptian section of the Philadelphia Exhibition in 1876. After the fall of the Khedive Ismail Pasha he left Egypt. He was created a Pasha by Ismail's successor.

BISHOP HAWKINS.

The death is reported of Bishop Walter Hawkins, General Superintendent of the British Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada. The Bishop was a well-known character. Born in slavery in the Southern States, he fled for dear liberty to Canada, where he became a member of the Church of which for the last eight years of his life he was the presiding bishop. In 1891 he visited Great Britain, and told in many towns and cities the story of his remarkable life. His style was emotional, after the type of an address he delivered to the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada, when he said: "I feel so lifted up that I almost forget that I am black—'pears like as if I dunno w'ether I'm black or not. I don't think my colour makes any difference to God. I come to you as a child of God, having got the blessing of salvation sixty-eight years ago, 'way down thar in the South. Ah, it was dark then! No privileges then. It was ten o'clock at night. It was over the fence, away to the woods, one mile, two mile, five mile, ten mile, to hear about Jesus. I became his child. And it has been better all the time since. The way has often been rough and dark. I have had a circuit of one hundred miles to travel, with my legs for a horse, getting one hundred dollars a year, with a large family to keep, often without food for a whole day at a time, but I loved my dark brethren, and I went amongst them, and unlocked the door of their hearts, and sowed the seed there. It was hard work but I had the marching orders from the Master."

In our issue of June 11, 1891, we gave a portrait and sketch of the Bishop, whose death was rather sudden. His wife writes: "He said the night he was stricken in the pulpit that he never was so happy in all his life, and called on the people to meet him in heaven; he asked all those who meant to do so to rise to their feet, and then called on the sinner to repent, and told them his skirts were clear. He came out of the church, and in half-an-hour he was blind and speechless; he never spoke after he was laid in his bed. This was on Sunday night, and Monday night at half-past eight he was dead. The spirit took its flight to God who gave. Pray for me, that I may so live that I shall meet him in a better land, where we will never part." These words were addressed to our contemporary Lux, founded by the late Mr. S. J. Celestine Edwards, who was the author of a Life of the bishop, entitled "From Slavery to a Bishopric" (2s. 6d., John Kensit).

A PLEA FROM BISHOP THOBURN.

Writing in an American contemporary with respect to the needs of his mission work in India, Bishop Thoburn says:—

More than 100 persons who have undertaken to support native preachers for us in India have been obliged this year to withdraw their subscriptions. I cannot dismiss one of the preachers from the work, and have not for a moment considered the possibility of such a thing; but, on the other hand, they must be provided for. Meanwhile, our converts continue to come as steadily and in as large numbers as ever before. By the time I return to India I shall probably find from 10,000 to 15,000 new converts, all of whom were worshipping idols when I left for this country. What am I to do for them? What am I to do for those we took up last year and the year before? What plan am I to devise in view of the fact that it is practically certain that at least 100 new preachers will be added to the ranks every year until the close of the century?

In God's name, I do beg all our friends to rally to our help in this great emergency. Our preachers are of various grades, and some who live in remote villages, in most simple style, cost very little for their support. Others, who live in larger towns and cities, require much more. Hence the donors can assume the support of a preacher on any scale of salary from 30dols. to 100dols. a year.

NORTH PACIFIC COAST.—Rev. J. B. McCullagh writes from Aiyansh, North Pacific, that in looking over the past year's work he finds much to be thankful for. Evangelistic work among the heathen in the interior has been energetically carried on by open-air village meetings, special services, and house-to-house visitation with marked success. At Nass Harbour regular services were held in the church during the summer; while at the Cove, where there is no church, we erected a platform between two long rows of houses, in which the Indian employés and Chinese were accommodated, and there we had an open-air service every Sunday morning. Pastoral work at Aiyansh has also been encouraging.

THE JEWISH EVANGELICAL MISSION, superintended by Rev. Aaron Matthews, continues its work in the North of England and Scotland. The Hebrew Christian House at Newcastle, at 8, Swinburne-place, is the centre of varied effort, and Jews in neighbouring towns are visited occasionally. The latest report describes the opening of a Hebrew Christian House at Glasgow, where work has been organised with an influential committee. Mr. Matthews says: "Not by any means the least part of our work is visitation from house to house. In the case of Jews, large numbers of whom are strangers in the land, unable to speak or understand a word of the language, every feature of ordinary distress is grievously aggravated. The missionary is required very often to act as intermediary, and even to transact business for them, whether it be with landlords, or other importunate creditors, with the police, or with any conceivable party where their vital interests are concerned." The address of the Superintendent of the Mission is 68, Ferr-avenue, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

PERSONALIA.

Lady Henry Somerset, according to report, intends passing the winter in Boston, as her son is to enter Harvard this fall.

Miss Macpherson and Mr. Merry sailed by the s.s. Parisian from Quebec on September 1, and are expected in England this week.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie, through the goodness of God, is sufficiently recovered to be able to resume evangelistic work, and hopes to commence a mission at Plymouth on Sunday next.

Rev. Alex. Thomson, D.D., who has for thirty-four years been the agent in Constantinople of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has, on account of failing health, felt it necessary to tender his resignation, to take effect at an early date.

Dr. F. E. Clark, founder of the Christian Endeavour Movement, who has been laid aside for some weeks through overwork, having somewhat recovered, sailed from New York for Bremen on Sept. 1, in order to enjoy a season of complete rest in Switzerland.

Rev. Dr. Griffith John, of Hankow, who recently declined the chair of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, has definitely decided to yield to the call of the directors of the London Missionary Society, and to return to England for the approaching centenary celebration.

Rev. Frederic Greeves, D.D., is seriously ill, and is now lying in a most precarious state. Medical men say he may live for a few weeks, but hold out no hope of his recovery. In Wesleyan circles the news is causing much sorrow—a feeling which will be widely shared when it becomes generally known.

Rev. Thomas Connellan, of Dublin, replying in his paper The Catholic to a correspondent, says that in his case the Romanists have tried murder more than once already. "The Lord is my rock and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower." Surely additional safeguards are not needed.

Australian Items.—Dr. Talmage has been drawing crowded houses at Sydney. Rev. John McNeil, evangelist in connection with the Presbyterian Church of Victoria, has gone to Western Australia to start religious services among the gold diggers. Rev. Thomas Cook, who had a most successful evangelistic mission in Melbourne, has been engaged in like work in some of the larger towns of Victoria.

Rev. Peter Stanford, coloured pastor, Birmingham, is to proceed to the Southern States to investigate and report upon the Lynch Law Question, and to do all in his power to allay the terrible enmity existing between the two races. It is proposed to form branches in all parts of the United Kingdom of an organisation established in America to assist the coloured people in the vindication of their rights.

Mrs. Osborn Howe writes from 14a, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon :—"My husband sailed on Sept. 8 for the Cape with other members of the South Africa General Mission. I hope to join him next spring. In the meantime, I shall be glad of opportunities to speak about the work of the mission, especially that of the eastern branch, including Natal and Zululand. This division of the mission is being worked under our personal supervision."

Mr. Walter Hazell, the newly-elected Member of Parliament for Leicester, has long been honourably known for his practical interest in social and philanthropic progress. He has for many years been an active member of the Executive Committee of the Peace Society. He is a model employer to the very large number of persons engaged in his printing establishments in London and Aylesbury, to whom he has given privileges and advantages too seldom accorded by masters to their servants.

Bishop Stuart, late of Waiapu, New Zealand, recently attended a meeting of the committee of the Bible Society, and expressed his joy at holding in his hands a copy of the Maori New Testament with marginal references. He was presented with the book, and was offered by the committee their hearty wishes for the Divine blessing on the work which he goes to undertake in Persia. The Bishop and his daughter started for Persia on Wednesday. They were accompanied by Miss H. L. Conner, who has done evangelistic work in Dublin, and has had experience in nursing and dispensing.

A THOUSAND POUNDS has been promised by an anonymous friend of sailors in aid of the general fund of the Missions to Seamen on condition that £3000 in addition be raised before the end of September. These amounts are specially needed to meet the deficiency and the increased liabilities arising from various urgent extensions, during the last two years, of religious operations amongst sailors of numerous nationalities, afloat and ashore, in many seaports, including the Port of London, the Manchester Ship Canal, and San Francisco Harbour.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting a special mission at Royton, near Oldham (Rev. A. J. Bamford pastor). His next mission begins on the 15th inst. at Gallow Gate Chapel, Leicester.

Galway.—Street preaching was continued here on Friday last, when the mob, notwithstanding the presence of a number of constables, shamefully maltreated the speakers, one of them receiving a bruise in the forehead from a stone.

Rev. James Oatey, who has of late been much used of God in evangelistic service, has resigned his pastorate at Upper Norwood in order to devote himself more fully to evangelisation. His address is 28, Rockmount-road, Upper Norwood, S.E. He is this week holding a most interesting mission at Acton.

Fleet.—A three weeks' mission in a tent at Fleet, Hants, conducted by Mr. Geo. Loudon, of the Evangelisation Society, was recently brought to a close. Throughout it was felt to be a very blessed time for Christians; some who are seldom seen at places of worship admitted deep conviction, and a few confessed Christ.

Ireland.—Evangelistic services are being held in the Methodist Mission Tent, Portadown, by Revs. A. Ball and Jno. Good. Similar services have been held at Derryheen by Rev. H. Kyle-Atkinson, incumbent of Templeshambo; in Donegall-square Methodist Church, Belfast, by Rev. Jas. Harpur; and in Ormeau-road Methodist Church, Belfast, by Mrs. Amanda Smith.

Mr. W. Grove has returned home from a three weeks' mission in Glasgow, where God has greatly blessed his labours. It may be noted that the first two converts of the mission were a man and his wife, and the last two converts were another man and his wife. Last week Mr. Grove was in the tent at Upton-lane, Forest Gate, in much power of the Holy Spirit. There were several conversions.

"The Gospel Cyclists" made their final run for this season, when they visited Waltham Abbey, and held an open-air meeting. During the past summer meetings have been held in the principal towns and villages in south-west Essex, and the sympathy and co-operation of the local Christians in most of the places visited have greatly helped to the success and usefulness of the work. A. F. Borton, Hon. Sec.

Hermon Hill, Wanstead.

Mr. John Waite, who has returned from a five years' tour in Canada and the United States, has concluded three weeks' special services at Rye, which, under God, have been much blessed. During the last week Mr. Waite delivered lectures on the Second Coming of Christ, which have been listened to with great interest; and new light has been thrown on the Scriptures. The mission has proved to be a source of spiritual blessing, and sinners have been converted.

Rev. E. P. Hammond says in a recent letter from Hartford, Conn.: "In many respects I never had better meetings than I have had the past year. On Sunday I preached three times in New Haven, twice from the Gospel wagon, in which were forty singers and workers. It was by the seashore and about 1000 were present. I was at Northfield for a while at the recent Convention, and held meetings for a few days in a town near there called Shutesbury. A blessed work began in that place and is still going on."

Sheffield.—Mr. Henry Varley's mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A. was brought to a close on Tuesday evening. The meetings have been almost exclusively for men, and have drawn together hundreds in this busy centre. So rapid was the growth of interest that the meetings had to be removed to the Music Hall, Surrey-street. Bible studies have been given daily in the afternoons to crowded audiences. The closing days have been marked with deep cause for gratitude. The members of the Y.M.C.A. have received a fresh impetus.

Lytham.—Services in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission were again held at Lytham from August 8 to 26, under the leadership of Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlew. Special meetings were held on the Friday of each week for the deepening of spiritual life, and were abundantly blessed to the workers and friends. The Bible-object competition was full of interest. Much help was given by the Christian workers in the town, and also by a small choir of boys from the Refuge, Manchester. Praise is ascribed to God for much fruit which it pleased Him to manifest to the workers before the close of the mission. F. H.

Petticoat-lane, Whitechapel.—Last Sunday Rev. W. Carlile, with Captain Loker and Lieutenant Downs, of the St. Mary-at-Hill Corps of the Church Army, commenced aggressive evangelistic work in this immense market, where it is stated by the police over 15,000 persons, mostly men, spend a couple of hours on Sunday morning buying and selling almost every description of every article. To secure a "stand" a barrow was put in position with the consent of the police, at half-past five in the morning. In the midst of all this Vanity Fair, after a little prayer and a few words from Rev. W. Carlile, Captain Loker spoke, receiving marked attention for nearly half an hour. Prayer is earnestly asked that this may be the beginning of a great work in this most Sabbath-breaking human swarm.

Ross Bible Carriage.—We have had most encouraging times this summer. This is now the thirteenth week that our tent has worked in needy villages in the neighbourhood of Herefordshire, Worcestershire, and Gloucestershire. During the past fortnight we have been holding services every night in Shurdington, near Cheltenham. The whole village has been reached, and a deep interest manifested. Several nights the tent has been crowded, with fifty or sixty outside listening attentively. We have proved in this village that the Gospel is still God's power unto salvation. Besides, we have, by the aid of our Bible Carriage, visited in the daytime some score of villages and towns, distributing freely upwards of 4000 Gospel books during the fortnight, and selling 115 books, such as "Grace and Truth" and "Travellers' Guide." John Coates.

Landseer House, Ross, Hereford.

Mrs. Baeyertz continues her fruitful mission in Glasgow. The Daily Mail of Monday says:—"A wonderful work of grace is going on in Trinity Free Church in connection with a special mission being conducted by Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz. In Cowcaddens Free Church God wonderfully used her some few weeks ago, and now Trinity Church has become the centre of blessing. Commencing on Sabbath, the 2nd inst., the services were marked by deep solemnity. Night after night immense audiences filled the large building to hear the simple story of the Gospel. On Wednesday the meeting was composed entirely of women, on Thursday of men, and on Friday, when the audience was mixed, the crowd was so immense that many had to be turned away. On Sunday afternoon and in the evening the church was again packed to its utmost capacity. There is good reason to believe that real work for God is being done."

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

Kind hearts are the garden,
Kind thoughts are the root,
Kind words are the flowers,
Kind deeds are the fruit.

Greatest of all crimes is the hurting of a child's soul.

A teacher asked a pupil, "What is the future of 'he drinks'?" The boy replied, "He is drunk."

A daughter has no right to be full of animation when visiting a friend, and have nothing but monosyllables for home use.

Education begins at the mother's knee. Every word spoken within the hearing of the little children tends to the formation of character.

How important in family life is the tone of a mother's voice. It is the sound the youngest child is most quick to estimate. It is the barometer of the family peace.

Children catch cross tones quicker than parrots. Where mother sets the example, you will scarcely hear a pleasant word among the children in their play with each other.

What sight more beautiful can we find in early childhood, than a child at play, a child wholly absorbed in its play, a child fallen asleep over its play, because so thoroughly absorbed?

This feeling of community which unites the child at first with mother, father and family, is the germ of all genuine religiousness, of all genuine endeavour after union with the eternal, with God.

It is a great event in a boy's life when he sees that work is one of the most beautiful laws of life; that work means health of body and mind, joy of heart: that the diligent life is the only true and honourable life.

One night there was a storm of wind and rain, and a little girl woke up and began to think of the sailors at sea. "Mamma," she said, "if you will pray to God for the great ships, I will speak to Him for the little boats."

Do not think that anything is good enough for the boys, and that they don't care for nice things; have their room in as nice order as possible; let them understand it is to be kept in order, and the result will justify your pains.

Do we not often use an arbitrary and a threatening manner in our commands to our children, when a calm, gentle request, in a tone of expectant confidence, would gain obedience far more quickly and pleasantly.—Kate D. Wiggin.

Many a promising boy has been led on to deceit and theft from no other cause than that his mother was wanting in order and management, and unable to teach him either by example or guidance; or, because she was too weak to resist the wishes of her child.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Rev. O. A. Moore, of Kidderminster, has accepted the charge of Stourport.

An anonymous donor has given £300 to St. James's Church, Toxteth, Liverpool.

A new church is to be built for the rapidly-increasing population in the Maybury district of Woking.

A new Anglican diocese of Ottawa is to be created in Ontario. A Synod is to be held in Ottawa during the autumn to elect the first bishop.

The Simeon Trustees have appointed Rev. R. Whitehead, curate of St. Augustine's, Liverpool, to Ince, Wigan, in succession to Canon Fergie.

The Bishop of Salisbury proposes to leave England for New Zealand early in November. He will return, vid Canada, about the end of March.

Rev. Handley Moule is spending a part of the present month at Ainmouth, in Northumberland, one of the prettiest watering-places on the East coast.

The "Rowland Taylor" Van has been visiting some watering places in Norfolk, and Mr. Brooks, the colporteur evangelist in charge, has been much encouraged.

The Truro diocese has sustained a heavy loss by the sudden death of the Mayor of Truro, Mr. Alderman Chirgwin, who contributed largely to the Cathedral Fund, and was foremost in many good works.

Rev. C. D. Francis, for thirty-eight years vicar of Tysoe, Warwick, and who is now at an advanced age, and suffering from partial blindness, has announced his intention to resign his charge at the end of a few months.

A somewhat novel experiment has been made on Sunday afternoons at Ilfracombe. The vicar of St. James's arranged that the four o'clock service should be held in the ground adjoining the church. The preacher, Rev. W. S. Carter, of the Young Men's Friendly Society, addressed a large congregation.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Side galleries, to seat 400, are being erected in Highbury Quadrant Church.

Rev. D. S. Hollies, late of Gloucester, has been recognised as pastor at Bower Hinton.

The new church, Mount View-road, Stroud Green, will be opened on Sunday, 30th inst.

The Knight Memorial Hall at Littlehampton, in memory of a former pastor, has been opened.

The foundation-stone of the new Welholme Mission Chapel and Schools, Grimsby, was laid last week.

Rev. Thomas Clarke occupied the pulpit at East Finchley on Sunday week, and at Highbury Quadrant on Sunday.

The American Year-book reports 5236 churches, a net gain of ninety-six, with 561,631 members, a net gain of 18,906. In the Sunday-schools there are 710,682 scholars, an increase of 16,629.

Rev. Arthur Hall, of Mount Pleasant, Hastings, has recovered from his dangerous illness. Thanksgiving services were conducted by Rev. W. Bolton, a former pastor.

Revs. Dr. Horton, Charles Garrett, and Hugh Pedley will speak at the great temperance meeting to be held in Liverpool on the occasion of the visit of the Congregational Union to that city.

Dr. Dale, after an absence of several weeks, preached at Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, on Sunday week from John xiii. 7: "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt understand hereafter."

Rev. A. N. Johnson, speaking at last week's L.M.S. convention at Harrogate, said that one Christian missionary's home did more to humanise, to elevate, and to evangelise a race than twenty celibate missionaries could do.

Mr. Percy W. Jones and Mr. Alfred Bonser have held a mission in Mathon, a village near Malvern, in a tent lent by Lady Henry Somerset. Rev. W. Lee and Mr. Creighton gave addresses. Children's services also were held.

At Harrogate last week the London Missionary Society began the celebration of its centenary. On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday meetings were held twice a day, with the object of stimulating interest in the special centenary fund. More of these conventions, it is hoped, will be held throughout the country between now and September, 1895, when the actual "centenary week" occurs. So far about £24,000 has been received towards the £100,000 expected in promotion of the society's special fund.

Calls.—Rev. Hopper Joplin, to Jarrow-on-Tyne; Rev. James Thomas, to Maesteg; Rev. D. W. Vaughan, to Ossett; Rev. W. Gooby, of Hayward's Heath, to Union-street, Brighton; Rev. D. S. Carlyle, to Graaf Reinet, South Africa.

Resignations.—Rev. W. H. McKenny, of Lapford, North Devon.

BAPTIST.

The Great Whyte Church, Ramsey, Isle of Man, is undergoing renovation at a cost of £397.

New buildings are found requisite for the Sunday-school at St. Michael's Chapel, Coventry.

Old King-street Chapel and school-rooms, Bristol, are to be renovated and improved at a outlay of £2500.

Warwick-street Chapel, Leamington, has been reopened after alterations and the erection of new school buildings at a cost of £1500.

Rev. T. Stephens, of Wellingborough, preached on Thursday in the Bowling-green pleasure grounds, Kettering, to a very large congregation.

Miss Angus, who has, at the request of the committee of the Zenana Missionary Society, consented to visit India, with a view to acquire a personal knowledge of the various stations, will leave early next month, and will remain in India during the cold season.

Tyndale Chapel, Bristol, has been reopened after extensive alterations. Dr. Glover, who conducted the opening service, discoursing on 1 Cor. i. 21, said the weakness of the Church to-day was due to the want of preaching the Gospel. What it wanted was preachers of Christ.

Rev. Giles Hester, of Sheffield, has met with an accident resulting in the fracture of the bone of one arm, close to the shoulder joint. After preaching at Cemetery road Chapel on Sunday evening, mistaking a path, he fell from the stage wall adjoining the class-room running along the side of the chapel.

Rev. Joseph Lush and a few earnest friends are holding services in the Coffee Palace, Western-road, Bexhill-on-Sea. A site for a Baptist chapel has been obtained, and earnest efforts are being made to erect an iron building, as the present room is much too small. The pastor's address is 11, Devonshire-road, Bexhill-on-Sea, Sussex.

The friends at West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, celebrated the opening of the seventh year of their pastor's ministry in a unique manner. The commodious building in which the work is now carried on was erected three years ago, and a debt of £2,800 remains upon it. Friends were invited to make an effort to reduce this burden by sending in thank-offerings for blessings received during the previous years. A large number of persons responded, and at the meeting on Thursday, Sept. 6, the pastor was able to announce that about £770 had been given and promised. The thanksgiving fund is not yet closed, and friends who have been helped by the ministry are invited to send in their offerings to Pastor Geo. Wainwright, West Cliff Manse, Bournemouth West.

Calls.—Rev. Watkin Jones, of Pastors' College, to Aberavon; Rev. F. G. Burgess, of Chelmsford, to Wellingborough; Rev. J. A. Thomas to Bethesda, Narberth; Rev. T. B. Field, of Bacup, to Cheddar; Rev. J. Young, of Waterfoot, Oldham, to Rugby.

Resignations.—Rev. J. L. Meeres, of Spa-road, Bermondsey; Rev. A. C. Hodgson, of Sharon Hall, Kirkdale, Liverpool.

METHODIST.

The chapel at Paulton, near Bristol, has been reopened after enlargement.

Foundation-stones of a new church have been laid at Milton-sub-Kewstoke, near Bristol.

Sir Tatton Sykes has given a site for a chapel at Garton-on-the-Wolds, in the Driffield Circuit.

Rev. H. J. Pope has sailed for America to represent the British Conference at the Canadian General Conference.

A new chapel, to seat 270 persons, has been opened at Bocas-del-Toro, a mission-station under the charge of Rev. J. Proudfoot.

A new church has been opened at Wath. The old chapel will be converted into a Sunday-school. Rev. C. H. Kelly was the preacher at the opening service.

Rev. W. Hindes has reached this country from South Africa. He has been labouring amongst the natives as well as the Europeans at Smithfield, Aliwal North.

Revs. F. J. Blake, of Dalton-in-Furness, T. H. Kidd, of Birkenhead, and G. C. Walker, Lead master of Epworth College, Rhyl, have been ordained as Wesleyan missionaries. Mr. Walker goes to Bombay, Mr. Blake has been appointed to Nassau, and Mr. Kidd is designated for British Honduras.

Rev. W. G. Taylor, leader of the Methodist Forward movement in Australia, conducted last week special meetings at the Central Hall, Manchester. On Sunday there were crowded gatherings in the Central Hall and Free Trade Hall, and the meetings during the week were very successful. Mr. Taylor's work in Sydney is very similar to that of the Manchester Mission.

The address to the United Methodist Churches, given in the new volume of "Minutes of Assembly," is from the pen of Rev. E. J. Travis. After passing in rapid review the various Connexional institutions, and specially emphasising the president's scheme in relation to the Theological Institute, and the proposals for the training of young people, it expresses the conviction that "the experience of recent years has given rise to a fear that experimental religion is not in so healthy a condition as is desirable. To Christian Churches spiritual issues are the supreme ones, and when this is not manifested to the world, church membership is likely to be undervalued, and serious loss sustained."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale is conducting a series of revival services in King's Cross Theatre, Liverpool-street.

Dr. Thain Davidson, who has preached during August in the church at Colwyn Bay, resumed his duty on Sunday in St. Andrew's, Ealing.

Holybourne Church has been burglariously entered. The missionary boxes were broken open and rifled, and a bowl and cassock were stolen.

The proposal to amalgamate the Presbyterian Churches of Mount Pleasant and St. George's, Liverpool, has been rejected at a meeting of St. George's congregation.

St. James's Church, Alnwick, which has been used for 205 years as a place of worship, is to be rebuilt at a cost of £3500. Meanwhile the congregation will worship in the Corn Exchange.

Rev. J. A. B. Cook, of Singapore, who is at present in this country on furlough, is about to return to the Straits Settlements, to labour amongst the Chinese, in connection with the English Presbyterian Mission.

From the Khassia missions information has been received that Rev. John Roberts has now thirteen churches under his oversight; at the Theological College there are thirty young natives qualifying for home work there.

Lord Tredegar has laid the memorial-stones of a new hall in connection with the Forward Movement at Clive-road, Cardiff. Three years ago Mr. Pugh commenced evangelistic operations in that district, with the result that already a church of 100 members has been formed, and the Sunday-school numbers 400 members.

Mr. William Dulles, treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., certifies the correctness of the statement that "seven hundred and twenty-five Presbyterian Christian Endeavour societies are now supporting thirty foreign missionaries through the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions."

Calls.—Rev. W. Johnston, of Laggan, to Shieldag; Rev. H. H. Murray, to St. Andrew's, Dundee; Rev. B. Macfarlane, of Cathcart, to St. Clements, Glasgow; Rev. D. Bisset, Glasgow, to St. Mark's-road Presbyterian Church, Sunderland.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Salvation Army is planning to enter the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. Bramwell Booth will open the new citadel at Stockport on the 23rd inst.

A training home is to be opened in Belgium, to be started with seven male cadets.

To help to allay the distress in Coatbridge, 2500 free breakfasts have been provided for the children at the Salvation Army barracks. The band attached thereto collected £17 for this worthy object.

General Booth is expected to arrive in St. John's on the 18th inst., from whence he will proceed to Truro, New Glasgow, Montreal, etc. After visiting a number of small places on the St. Lawrence River, he will travel to New York, where he is advertised to hold his first meeting in the Carnegie Hall on October 22.

A South European Congress is about to be held in Neuchatel by Commissioner and Mrs. Booth-Tucker. Venice and Florence are under inspection with a view to making an opening. The Memel authorities have granted permission to the S.A. officers to resume their evening meetings, which for some time have been suspended.

The fifth special open-air demonstration has just taken place on Mile End Waste. These meetings have been lately organised by the directors of the Social Wing, which has its headquarters close by. Commissioner Cadman gave a powerful address, supplemented by testimonies, life-experiences from ex-jail birds, "ex-out-of-works," etc. Hundreds were attracted, and, with few exceptions, stood listening attentively through the meeting, which lasted over two hours.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Lancaster, Ontario, Mrs. Hall, wife of the Congregational pastor, and well known in earlier years in Sheffield.—At Redcliffe, Sandown, on 2nd inst., Miss Jessie Clarkson, aged thirty-seven, daughter of an honoured missionary.—At Dorchester, Rev. W. B. L. Hawkins, aged ninety-two.—At Lye, Stourbridge, on 3rd inst., Rev. A. Wright, aged fifty-two, Vicar of St. Mark's, Stambermill.—At Seaforth, Liverpool, Elizabeth, widow of the late Bishop Ryan.—At Ashburne, on the 4th inst., Rev. G. E. Festing, aged sixty, vicar of Clifton parish.—At Cowlinge, Rev. W. Peters, aged forty-nine, for nine years Congregational minister in the place.—At Sheffield, Mr. S. Smith, a faithful worker at Queen-street.—At Bedford, Mr. George Church, aged fifty-six, a member and worker at Bunyan meeting.—At St. Ives, Mrs. Waits, aged sixty-eight, a devoted helper in the Lord's work.—At Crowland, Higham Ferrers, Rev. W. S. Snow, aged sixty-three, the superintendent of the Wesleyan circuit.—At Colne, on 1st inst., Mr. John Pickles, aged seventy-one, a valued Christian worker.—At Appledore, Isles of Shoals, U.S.A., Mrs. L. L. Thaxter, widely known as the author of poems likely to hold a permanent place in American literature.—At Greenmount, Richhill, co. Armagh, Mr. Thomas Sinton, a member of the Methodist Church, aged seventy-seven years.—At Newry, Rev. Isaac Thompson, LL.D., pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Drumbolg, co. Antrim.—At Lock Haven, U.S.A., Rev. Jos. Nesbitt, D.D., a native of co. Monaghan, and formerly an Irish Presbyterian minister, but for over forty years a successful minister in America.

Appeals.

Miss Charles appeals for help for the little patients in the Santa Claus Home, 34, South-grove, Highgate, N. Most of the children suffer from hip and spinal diseases, and often need months of nursing and care before they are fit to return to their own homes.

Homes for the Aged Poor.—Five hundred pounds are needed, in addition to £500 in hand, to wipe out the mortgage debt on the Paddington Home (65, Walterton-road, St. Peter's Park, W.). Eleven homes are now full with 134 inmates. The honorary secretaries are Miss Harrison and Miss S. A. Harrison, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

Tracts Needed.—In response to an appeal which you inserted when we were working in Ceylon, many friends sent me papers, tracts, etc., for which we were very grateful. Through ill-health we have had to leave Ceylon, and the Lord has led us here, and is giving much blessing. We are constantly needing little books, tracts, etc.

The Manse, Bideford. Mary Mottram Durbin.

HARVEST HYMN.

Once again the year's fair glory
Changeth to its mellow prime;
Tinted woods and crimson berries
Whisper of the Autumn time.

Once again, with voice of singing,
We, O Lord, approach Thy throne;
And, our glad thank-offerings bringing,
Would Thy tender mercies own.

Lord, we praise Thee for the sunshine,
And we praise Thee for the rain,
For the golden sheaves of harvest,
Verdant hills and fruitful plain.

Praise for every flower that springeth,
Shedding fragrance on our way,
And for every bird that wingeth,
Chanting still its heaven-taught lay.

'Tis Thy gracious hand reneweth
Year by year the needed store;
'Tis Thy loving-kindness addeth
Joy and beauty evermore.

'Tis Thy changeless love endureth
While the changeful seasons wane;
'Tis the precious blood secureth
Peace and pardon—priceless gain.

Thanks we give and adoration,
For the gifts Thy hands bestow;
For Thy full and free salvation
Most of all our praises flow.

Unto God, the blessèd Father,
Glory in the highest be;
To the Son, and to the Spirit,
Now and through Eternity.

Lucy A. Bennett.

The Nestorians.—A correspondent writes:—"Many your readers are deeply interested in the noble work carried on in Persia by Deacon Abraham and his wife Esther, who has been for some time in England. I wish, therefore, to draw attention to certain men, Nestorians from Persia who are taking advantage of the interest created, to visit the friends Esther has made, and get money from them for their own purposes. Deacon Abraham has no one of his fellow-countrymen authorised to collect for him."

Hymn Sheets.

TEN NEW SHEETS (Nos. 25-34),

Specially suitable for Open-Air Meetings, and other Evangelistic Services,

Are just ready. Well printed in clear readable type, on good paper.
Two Pages each, 9d. per 100; 6s. 6d. per 1000.
Post Free.

The first line of the Music (air) is printed at the head of each Hymn.

CONTENTS OF THE NEW SHEETS.

No. 25.

Work, for the night is coming.
To God be the glory!
Down in the valley.
Who, who are these?
Art thou weary?
To the work! To the work!
Redemption ground.
I've found a Friend.

No. 26.

Oh, come to the Saviour.
Showers of blessing.
Shall you? shall I?
Have you any room for Jesus?
Once again the Gospel message.
Tell me the Old, Old Story.
Sun of my Soul.
"Come unto Me, ye weary."

No. 27.

Dare to be a Daniel.
Jesus my Saviour to Bethlehem came.
Who is on the Lord's side?
Whosoever heareth.
He leadeth me!
Knocking—Knocking!
I will guide thee.
Wonderful words of life.
Take me as I am!

No. 28.

Almost persuaded.
Stand up, stand up for Jesus!
Calling to-day!
Only trust Him.
I need Thee every hour.
More holiness give me.
Behold Me standing at the door.
Come to the Saviour; make no delay.
Yield not to temptation.
Rescue the perishing.

No. 29.

I am Thine, O Lord!
Oh to be nothing!
The Light of the world is Jesus.
Look and live.
Safe in the arms of Jesus.
Jesus loves me; this I know.
Have you been to Jesus?
Jesus, Gracious One, calleth.
Simply trusting!

No. 30.

What can wash away my stain?
The hem of His garment.
Oh, what a Saviour!
Whiter than the snow.
Only an armour-bearer.
Just as I am!
Firmly stand for God!
With harps and with viols.
Light in the darkness, sailor.
Free from the law!

No. 31.

What can wash away my stain?
Redemption, oh wonderful story.
What shall the answer be?
Behold Me standing at the door.
Oh what a Saviour!
Call them in.
Take me as I am.
Glory to God on high!
Ye must be born again.
Whiter than the snow.

No. 32.

Come to the Saviour, hear His loving voice!
Man of sorrows.
Gospel bells.
I've found a Friend in Jesus.
None but Christ can satisfy.
Out of bondage.
We have heard the joyful sound.
Washed in the blood of the Lamb.
Oh come, sinner, come.
Have you been to Jesus?

No. 33.

Hark! there comes a whisper.
The Spirit and the Bride say "Come!"
Sinner, how thy heart is troubled.
Have you any room for Jesus?
So near to the Kingdom!
Calling yet!
Come, sinner, come.
Come unto Me!
Awake, awake, O heart of mine!
Come with thy sins.

No. 34.

Rock of Ages!
I heard the voice of Jesus say.
Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness.
How sweet the name of Jesus sounds.
Just as I am!
All ye that pass by.
When I survey the wondrous Cross.
Tell me the Old, Old Story.
There is a fountain.
Jesus, Lover of my Soul.

The Library of Christian Biography,

12/6 net.
(If sent by Post 1s. extra.)

Comprising the following SIX VOLUMES, each with Portrait, and tastefully got up; the Series enclosed in NEAT BOX:—

C. H. SPURGEON, The Prince of Preachers.
DUNCAN MATHESON, The Scottish Evangelist.
HENRY MOORHOUSE, The English Evangelist.
GAWIN KIRKHAM, The Open-air Evangelist.
ISABELLA MACPHERSON: A Devoted Life.
WESLEY AND WHITEFIELD, The Two Great Evangelists of the Last Century.

With the young believer, as with the mature Christian, the devout reading of a Christian Biography cannot but tend to deepen the Spiritual life, and awaken a longing for a closer walk with God; whilst the perusal of the Lives of men and women who have been instrumental in advancing the Kingdom of God at once encourage and stimulate to renewed effort those who are actively engaged in Christian service.

Each of the seven Memoirs comprised in

"THE LIBRARY OF CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHY,"

whilst skilfully portraying the various traits of character of the individual, also treat of the numerous methods adopted in the soul-saving work in which the zealous labourer was engaged. The Minister, the Evangelist, the Sabbath-school Teacher, the Open-air Worker, the Visitor in the slums of town or city—each will be stimulated and aided by the perusal of these Biographies; whilst to those Christians who are not engaged in active service, the reading of these Lives can hardly fail to suggest ways and means by which they can make known the love of Christ to the perishing souls within their reach.

GATHERED GOLD.

Desire is the soul of prayer.—Young.

TWO POINTS OF VIEW.

Martha saw her Lord's need. Mary saw her own.

THE CHANGED LETTER.

In disappointment his appointment's known,
Changed by Love's alchemy from Cross to Crown.
M. B. G.

Some plants require frost to bring out their savour, and men need sorrow to test and produce their highest qualities.

"The world passeth away, and the lust thereof." Let us lay that handful of snow on our fevered foreheads and cool our desires.—Dr. Maclaren.

None ever have been so good and so great, or have raised themselves so high, as to be above the reach of troubles. Our Lord was "a man of sorrows."—Sibbs.

I'm apt to think the man
That could surround the sum of things, and spy
The heart of God and secrets of his empire,
Would speak but love. With him the bright result
Would change the hue of intermediate scenes,
And make one thing of all theology.
Gambold (a Moravian poet).

FIVE TEACHERS.

Confucius, truth; Aristotle, magnanimity; Buddha, self-abnegation; Plato, justice; Jesus Christ, love. The last, being the greatest, includes them all.

It is not the will of God to give us more troubles than will bring us to live by faith simply on Him; He loves too well to give us a moment of uneasiness.—Romaine.

O, cling to faith, beyond the forms of Faith;
She rests not in the storm of warring words;
She brightens at the clash of "Yes" and "No";
She sees the best that glimmers thro' the worst;
She feels the sun is hid but for the night;
She spies the Summer thro' the Winter bud;
She tastes the fruit before the blossom falls.

LOVE AND COMMANDS.

There are two motives for keeping commandments, one because they are commanded, and one because we love Him that commands. The one is slavery, the other is liberty. The one is like the Arctic regions, cold and barren; the other is like tropical lands, full of warmth and sunshine, glorious and glad fertility.—Dr. Maclaren.

THE FOUNDATION OF THE CHURCH.

The foundation of the whole of the creation was laid in an act of absolute sovereign power. Hereby God "hanged the earth upon nothing." But the foundation of the Church is on this mysterious immovable rock—"Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God," on the most intimate conjunction of the two natures, the Divine and human, in themselves infinitely distant, in the same person.—Dr. John Owen.

A RULE OF LIFE.

The sense and remembrance of the Divine presence is the most ready and effectual means, both to discover what is unlawful, and to restrain us from it. There are some things a person could make shift to palliate or defend, and yet he dares not look Almighty God in the face and adventure upon them. If we look unto Him, we shall be lightened; if we "set Him always before us, He will guide us with his eye, and instruct us in the way wherein we ought to walk."—Scougal.

AFTERWARDS.

The tangled threads are in God's hand;
I know He holds them fast,
A perfect pattern, fitly planned,
'Twill all come right at last.

Then let me calmly trust and wait,
Till I that shore shall gain,
Where "crooked things shall all be straight,
And the rough places plain." M. E. S.

THE BREWSTER SESSIONS have called forth the utmost activity of temperance workers in many parts of the land. These efforts have met with varying success, but in the long run are bound to tell.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—The fo'c's'le was crowded at the last meeting with captains, officers, and seamen, as well as representatives from the Boro', Manorway, Strood, and other branches of the above crew. Miss Child gave as a text for the month "Went and told Jesus." Incidents in connection with the work were subsequently mentioned, especially of two Norwegian brethren, who left some time ago to work among the Zulus, and of Charlie, the Russian, who has arrived in New York to work among his own countrymen. The testimonies and exhortations of several captains and seamen, and the addresses by William Luff and Miss Watts, were most helpful.

Hoxton Hall Workers paid a visit to Brighton on Monday, Sept. 3, where they were received and entertained by Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Penney at Highcroft. After tea a meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Penney. Addresses were delivered by Isaac Sharp, now in his 88th year; and friends who were associated with the Blue Ribbon Army from its inauguration. Isaac Sharp, who has recently returned from a tour of the world in Christian service, gave an interesting account of his visit to the Esquimaux. Mr. William Noble chaperoned the party.

Notes and Comments.

The fortune of war seems at present, at any rate, to run somewhat strongly against the Chinese power. Latest advices tell of a decided victory in Corea on the side of the Japanese. There are fears that as a result of this defeat the mind of the Chinese populace may become inflamed against the foreigner, and that this may show itself in unthinking cruelty towards isolated European and American missionaries. We earnestly trust that such may not be the outcome of the present unhappy strife. But these friends need to be continually borne up at the throne of the heavenly grace, that God may shield them in the day of peril and tumult.

We commend the remarks of Rev. J. McNeill on after-meetings and other evangelistic methods, to the attention of evangelists and Christians generally. Every man after his own order. There are some preachers whose utterances remain with the hearers and bear fruit afterwards, though it should not spring up immediately. There are others whose gift it is to lead up to decision on the spot. The former are sowers, the latter reapers; and both will rejoice together in the harvest.

It is possible to do harm as well as good in the inquiry room. It is a very delicate operation to bring a soul into life and light. Sometimes when the Gospel has been very clearly preached, the effect is removed by unwise or inconsiderate or unenlightened counsel. Often young converts on the war path of early love are useful to young inquirers. Yet experience and spiritual skill are as a rule essential; with adequate knowledge of the Word, and a present living communion with God.

Paris is reported to have "morphine institutions," the patrons of which submit to sub-cutaneous injections of morphine, just as other slaves of vice yield themselves to the intoxicating fumes of opium. A correspondent of a Continental paper, having inspected some of these places, says: "I was painfully impressed by what I saw, and am convinced that the evil is making rapid progress, and will by degrees kill its unfortunate votaries." It is sad in the extreme to think that men and women should subject themselves to such fearful exploitation. We trust that the exposure of this new abomination will check its ruinous advance.

Which is right? The London Missionary Society has a deficit of £28,000. Concerning this Dr. Horton contends that they were not in want of money. The deficit does not lie there, but in the love of God, in the absolute faith in God, in the supreme disregard of consequences, which is the first condition of our absolute following of Christ. Mr. Guinness Rogers would rather say that the want of money is an outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual deficiency. We remember that the "Forward Movement" of this Society was initiated four years ago for the purpose of sending not less than a hundred additional missionaries into the field by the time of the Society's centenary in 1895, and that at that time there was a debt of several thousands of pounds. Yet God so honoured the faith that began the movement as to give the first year funds sufficient to wipe out the debt and a large balance in hand for the next year's operations. Sixty-seven additional missionaries are now in the field, and the annual income has been increased £20,000. Are there not two faults—first, in fixing any definite number of missionaries to be sent within a specified time? What know we of the labourers' hearts and of the times? Second, having begun in faith, why has the Board fallen back upon the method of counting sovereigns? The men are coming forward; will God withhold the money? "No," we hear someone say, "God does not withhold the money; but men do." It seems to need more grace, and more Divine power, to lead men to give their money, than to lead others to give themselves.

We hear of a proposal to induce men of sufficient means to become responsible for the support of a missionary. There are hundreds of men and women professing godliness who could do this with the greatest ease, and it would be to them an unspeakable means of grace. Many have saved a large proportion of their income by becoming Christians. Expensive amusements and parties, extravagant bills for wines and dress, have been given up with their worldly lives; but in many cases only to increase their investments in stocks often questionable. What a difference it will make at the great reckoning-day, before the judgment seat of Christ!

But it is not the "much" of the rich more than the mites of the poor which must be relied upon for keeping the Lord's treasury supplied. The mites of those who give all their living have a quality which is lacking in the gifts of rich men, though these exceed in quantity. We believe it would be easier, because more in accordance with the mind of God, to secure the support of missionaries by churches than by individuals, though the support of a missionary is the least contribution which many Christians could properly cast into the offerings of God.

For once "the silly season" of the Press promises to give us something sensible and useful. The Daily News has this year opened its columns to a correspondence on "How to Save," with the result that a proposal is seriously made to establish "A Guild of Simple Living." The bondage and costliness of modern life keep many on the verge of penury who, alone, have not the moral courage to break loose from conventional standards of living, and do what they feel to be right. One correspondent remarks that "people who retrench do so with a sense of humiliation, almost degradation, which is wholly uncalled for, and would be wholly wanting if everyone who ought to follow their example did so." The graces which ought to adorn Christian living are always in demand when evils become intolerable; temperance, when drunkenness rolls down our streets like a river; honesty, when gambling threatens to wreck our commercial stability; peace, when the costliness of armaments becomes intolerable; simple living, when luxuriousness swallows up all our means. Every true Church of Christ is a temperance society, an anti-gambling league, a peace society, and a guild of simple living, all in one. If professedly Christian churches had been true to the Gospel all the world would have seen and said so.

It is becoming increasingly urgent that something was done to correct the gambling spirit which is abroad. There are few places of business where a youth can be free from the temptation to bet. His companions are in many cases far too familiar with affairs of the turf, and it requires an amount of principle greater than many possess to make a stand against so popular an evil. The rapid growth of this vice is owing, no doubt, to the publication of betting news in the daily papers. And even our Free Libraries may help to injure many. A correspondent who recently visited one of the Birmingham Free Libraries, observed a man with pencil and paper copying some of the sporting tips and news; and near him a boy, hardly more than fifteen years old, similarly employed. The same correspondent visited Leicester a few days before, and noticed that the betting columns of the daily papers were entirely expunged, so that the gambling fraternity might consult them in vain. This example is worthy of being imitated elsewhere.

The executive of the National Union of Teachers have issued an able manifesto on religion in London Board Schools, in which they assert that the scholars have, under the compromise of 1871, been carefully and reverently taught the essentials of the Christian faith as drawn from Holy Scripture. They feel that the teachers in London Board schools "may fairly claim to have taught the faith with knowledge, in unity of spirit and the bond of love." They say that the teachers fear that religious teaching will become impracticable if varying interpretations of the Word, by varying Boards, are to take the place of the system that has worked so well hitherto. The authority of one theological circular would be destroyed by the issue of another, and orthodoxy would become heterodox at every change of government in the Board. They say, with great force, that to fluctuate from one set of tenets to another must lead to contemptuous unbelief, confusion, and revolt, and thus to the secularisation of Board schools. This again would induce the secularisation of State-aided schools and colleges.

In an article in the current issue of The Homiletic Review, entitled "The Importance of Declaring all the Counsel of God," Dr. C. B. Hulbert, of Adams Mills, Ohio, well says:—

> Symmetry of Biblical doctrine in preaching is easily preserved by one who is controlled by St. Paul's unity of aim, "I am determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." He who studies and preaches the truths of the Bible as they are headed toward, and centre in, and cluster upon, and radiate from, the Cross of the Son of God, is as far removed from the disproportionate presentation of truth, as the East is from the West. "Whom we preach?" We preach truth, but "truth as it is in Jesus"; we preach doctrine, but doctrine as inspired oracle; and these truths and doctrines in abstract forms only as they lose themselves in their concrete relationship to Christ and Him crucified.

That is to say, Bible doctrine is not a mechanical system, but an organism, vitalised by Him who is emphatically the Word of God. Therefore, preaching Jesus Christ as the Son of God, Prophet, Priest, and King, affords ample opportunity for continually declaring "all the counsel of God."

---

From the pages of The Philanthropist (New York), we see that the work of social purity is being urged forward in America in many ways. One of the private ways adopted by one of the members of the faculty of a certain college appears to us of priceless value. At Christmas he wrote a note to each of the young men expressing his interest in his welfare, and enclosing a White Cross card, with the suggestion that, if he felt inclined, he might sign it and take it home to his mother. One of the young men at least did sign his card, and take it home to his mother, who told him that she should lay it away to keep as a sacred treasure. The plan was as modest as it was wise. "Cast thy bread upon the waters."

---

The Bible has charms which do not strike all its readers alike, and it has an educational power which is by no means sufficiently recognised. In his new book, "From Darkness to Light in Polynesia" (Religious Tract Society), Dr. W. Wyatt Gill says:—

> Portions of the sacred volume that to us are of little interest, may be most attractive to savages, listening perhaps for the first time to Bible story. I never cared much for the genealogical portions until my own converts put me to shame by evincing an intimate acquaintance with them. In Polynesia, other things being equal, the chief with the longest pedigree is most respected.
> The stories contained in such books as Joshua and Judges exercise a marvellous influence over the minds of brave savages, who are astonished above measure to find that their most famous war-stratagems were long ago anticipated in far-off lands. The histories of Elijah, Elisha, Daniel, and Jonah are of undying interest. The lesson of my missionary life is this—I would give to every race, if practicable, the entire Bible.

Dr. Gill goes on to show that the mind of the Polynesian has not stopped at wonders; but, with a deepening spiritual life, there has been a concentration of interest upon Christ and his work and teaching. Thus, the Book has affected, and is steadily moulding, the lives and characters of the entire race.

A peculiar beauty resides in some of the expressions which have been employed in the setting forth of Divine truth in the Rarotongan language. For "conscience," the missionary speaks of the "heart-judge," or "heart," which answers to a frequent reference to conscience in the Old Testament.

"Faith" is "to listen to God speaking," the native preacher being always careful to add, "with the ear of the heart." "Trust in God" is "leaning on God." The pious are those "who dwell in the shadow of God." Heaven is "the day, or light of God." "For ever and ever" is "time on, on, still on." The Rarotongan of Heb. xiii. 5, has four negatives: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee; no, never—on, on, on!" How many dying Hervey Islanders have been comforted by these beautiful words, the final clause showing that the negation goes on for ever!

No book is so universal as the Bible in its appeal to the human soul. An alphabet of thirteen letters suffices to render it into the language of men who, but a short time ago, were savages. It speaks to their hearts; and at length they rejoice as we have rejoiced since the Gospel enlightened us. Man's need is to know God, and the Word of God tells him how this knowledge may be gained.

Who Are Israel?—3.

By Rev. DAVID BARON.

We may idealise the name "Israel," or think of its significance and show that what is meant by it ought to characterise all Christians now. We may treat the whole history of the Jewish people past, present, and future as typical, as it indeed is; "written for our admonition upon whom the end of the ages have come." We may even apply to ourselves or the Church as a whole promises which primarily concern Israel as a nation, if only we do not give people the mistaken idea that the application is the interpretation. We may point out the fact that in the infinite grace of God, we are now in the enjoyment of those spiritual blessings and privileges from which Israel, as a nation, has for a time been excluded owing to his unbelief, for spiritual blessings are the same, and there is but one God, one Saviour, one Gospel, and one Holy Ghost for Jew and Gentile. But to say that Gentile believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, because they are the seed of Abraham by faith, are, therefore, also Israelites, is to confound things which the Word of God emphatically and designedly differentiates; and to say that the specific promises to Israel have been transferred to the Church, is to assert that God is mutable, and that He has cast off the people which He has foreknown, at the very suggestion of which the Apostle exclaims, "God forbid!" as being inconsistent with his character as the unchangeable Jehovah.

But, you say, what about Galatians vi. 16? Is not the term "Israel" in this passage at least applied to Gentile believers? I do not think that any one who candidly examines the whole passage, and who bears in mind the Apostle's words in Rom. ix. 1-4, will say that it does. In concluding his Epistle, Paul again warns the Galatians against certain Jewish teachers who, although they were themselves circumcised, did not keep the law, and yet would constrain the Galatians to be circumcised, in order that they may "glory in their flesh." "But," says the Apostle, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. For neither is circumcision anything nor uncircumcision" (circumcision in the flesh being a strictly national rite and in relation to Palestine, availing nothing in relation to spiritual and eternal matters, to which, as he had already shown, we are linked only by faith "in Christ Jesus"). Then he ends, "And as many as shall walk by this rule" (who were they but believers to whom he was writing?) "peace be upon them and mercy"; then, having had the Jewish people brought to his mind by his reference to law and circumcision, he remembers that not all were like these false teachers, Jews only "outwardly" glorying in the flesh, but that there always were, and are, the ideal Israel, the people in whom God's purpose in relation to the earth is bound up, he adds, "and (kai) upon the Israel of God!" Does it appear strange to some that he who was in great heaviness and continual sorrow of heart and could wish himself "accursed" from God if only his own nation, his kinsmen according to the flesh, might be saved, should, when praying for mercy and peace for the church in Galatia put in a petition also for the people still beloved of God and of him "for the fathers' sakes"? Even Bengel, who does not apply the expression "the Israel of God" to the whole Jewish nation, far from confounding it with Gentile believers, says, "The Israel of God are believers of the circumcision or Jewish nation."

We conclude, then, on the authority of the New Testament, that while all that be in Christ, whether they be believers from among Jews or Gentiles, are "the seed of Abraham by faith," only a natural descendant of Jacob, but who is not only "a Jew outwardly," but who also walks "in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham which he had while yet in uncircumcision," can scripturally be called "a spiritual Israelite."

But does not this limit the scope and extent of the blessing to which believers among Gentiles are fellow heirs? By no means, for the original promise and unconditional covenant made with Abraham while yet in uncircumcision, and to which Gentile believers are linked as his spiritual seed, includes in it all that is included in the Gospel. "The Scripture," says Paul, "foreseeing that God would justify the Gentiles by faith, preached the Gospel beforehand unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all the nations be blessed." And does it not suffice you, O Gentile brother in Christ, that you are blessed with all spiritual blessing in heavenly places in Christ: that God will cause all grace to abound towards you here, and bestow upon you eternal glory hereafter, that you must needs seek to appropriate also the specific promises of blessing in the latter days, made to Israel, which, after all, so far as they are specific, apply only to this world? For remember that these spiritual blessings to which, if you are Christ's, you are a fellow heir, and in which even a Jew has no share except he be also a Christian, are greater than the promises which relate to the land, and the special blessings promised to the nation as such, during the millennium; just in proportion as eternity is greater than time, and the things which are heavenly and spiritual, and therefore eternal, are incomparably of greater importance than the things which relate to the earth, and are therefore merely temporal in their nature. But in the great plan of God earth and time have their place as well as heaven and eternity, and the first must receive its due importance, not only because as far as man's destiny is concerned it is the inevitable prelude to the second, but also because here on earth and during this short cycle of time there is being something enacted which, in the ages to come, and throughout eternity, shall show forth to principalities and powers in the heavenly places the righteousness as well as the manifold wisdom of God.

Now, in the sphere of time, and in relation to the earth, God has chosen one land to bless all lands, and one people that through it He may bless all peoples; and that the full accomplishment of this grand mission of Israel is yet in the future the New Testament, testifies as clearly as the Old Testament. "Now if their fall is the riches of the world, and their loss the riches of the Gentiles, how much more their fulness? For if the casting away of them is the reconciling of the world what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?"

"After this I will return, and I will build up again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will set it up: that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord who doeth all these things" (Acts xv. 16, 17).

Mr. Brown says that his contention that the name and whole position of "Israel" no longer belongs to the Jewish nation, but to the Church, "does not in the least interfere with what is known as 'dispensational truth,' the nation is still beloved for the fathers' sakes." Again, "The study of prophecy is undoubtedly of great importance, especially in the present day when the times of the Gentiles are manifestly nearing their end." And again, "Let us by all means pray and labour earnestly for the conversion of the Jews, and let us watch with intense interest the indications of their return as a nation to their own land as one of the principal signs that herald the speedy return of our Lord," etc. But on what ground? And what are all these but mere phrases, if Israel be not Israel, if there be no distinction between the Jews, and the Gentiles, and the Church of God; and if the specific promises and prophecies in reference to Israel and the times of the Gentiles be transferred to the Church because all believers are the seed of Abraham by faith? If Mr. Brown's assertions in his paper be true, then it is, logically, absolutely impossible to make out a Scriptural warrant for any of these other statements of his which I have just quoted.

MR. VARLEY IN COVENTRY.

Mr. Henry Varley paid last week a three days' return visit to Coventry. The meetings were again held in the Corn Exchange, the largest building in the town. On Wednesday and Thursday afternoon Bible readings were given, and truth of a most blessed and precious character was taught to the spiritual edification of about 500 believers. In the evenings of both days there were present about 3000 people, and God gave his servant great liberty and power in unfolding his Word. We had the unspeakable joy of seeing over thirty rise to their feet to confess their trust in the Lord Jesus; and when an appeal was made to believers for fuller consecration hundreds arose. On Friday night the building was again filled to hear Mr. Varley's quaint lecture on "Billy Bray, the King's Son." The whole of the proceeds from this lecture go towards helping the Consumptive Home in Australia, of which Mr. Varley is one of the first founders, and is still hon. secretary. The work here has been most glorious.

"If it were not so"

John xiv: 2.

"Yea, thro' life, death, thro' sorrow, and thro' sinning,
He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed;
Christ is the end, for Christ was the beginning;
Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ."

F. W. H. Myers.

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." To the disciple whose head reclines upon his bosom, the Master can reveal things which will not be understood by those who follow Him "afar off."

"The servant knoweth not what his lord doeth." And if we refuse or disregard the closer intimacies of friendship, we may not expect to share the sacred confidences of friendship. Blessed indeed to be servants, even if we were only servants of such a Master! "But I have called you friends," indicates another attitude which our gracious Lord assumes, and with regard to one who was pre-eminently "the friend of God" we are permitted to listen, with hushed awe, to the wondrous soliloquy, "Shall I hide from Abraham the thing which I do?" Once again, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but He revealeth his secret unto his servants."

Taking these words one with another, we get a clear and concise statement of the Lord's will for us—one which no human comments can strengthen. Has our very familiarity with the Divine utterances lost to us in any degree their stupendous significance? Pondering the extent of our privileges and our dignities, can we restrain the cry, "Happy is that people that is in such a case; yea, happy is that people whose God is the Lord!"?

Of the future state, however, it has not pleased the Lord to tell us very much. Of the glory to be revealed we have little definite information. Enough He has told us—enough to satisfy every legitimate longing. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord;" and we have to remember that the blessedness is according to his estimate of blessing, not ours merely. "They shall see his face," meets the supreme craving of a renewed heart. "We shall be like Him," is faith's one triumphant answer to every questioning as to ourselves, and our share in the coming glory. "His servants shall serve Him," comes with untold sweetness both to those who loyally confess now, "Thy service is one vast delight;" and to others who, with patient hearts and quiescent wills, wait, as yet, for opportunities denied erewhile to powerless limbs or silenced tongues.

But though there is enough for faith—enough for joyous anticipation—yet we feel that it is little that we know of heaven after all. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," nor have we any adequate conception of that "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" which will so soon outweigh our momentary "light affliction."

No more tears, no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, no more pain, no more sin—these are the negative expressions of that rest that remaineth for the people of God. The glory itself is an "unspeakable" glory, feebly set forth by such hints as human language can convey when it breathes of "fulness of joy" and "pleasures for evermore." "In my Father's House are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again and receive you unto Myself. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Such is the connection in which we find the pathetic words, which should surely silence every fear, "If it were not so, I would have told you."

It is such an appeal as friendship—any friendship worth the name—would hold to be irresistible, final. Let it be absolutely final, dear believer in Jesus, as an answer to every doubt of our unchanging Friend. Be content to trust Him—"blindly," as some will have it; but, anyway, to trust the all-trustworthy One who has never failed us, and who deigns to use the love-language of infinite grace, "If it were not so, I would have told you."

O, our peerless Lord, we do, indeed, accept this as an argument—an unanswerable argument—for unfaltering confidence in Thee. Thou hast never kept back the truth from us. "In the world ye shall have tribulation." Thou didst forewarn us, though knowing well that Thou wouldst never lead us into rooms as dark as those through which Thou Thyself hast passed. The shadow of the cross—Thy cross—Thou didst never hide from us, nor spare to tell us of our own cross-bearing. "Are ye able?" is a question Thou wilt very plainly ask of those who would impulsively hasten on to taste of thy cup, and to know thy baptism, eager to aspire to high honours in thy kingdom. And, because of all this, we acknowledge, with adoring love, the full force of this appeal of thine: "If it were not so, I would have told you."

We will not ask to know more of what lies behind the curtain of these frail tabernacles; nor, with our eyes fixed upon the sunset glories, are we anxious to inquire too particularly of the sun-rising of that day for which all other days were made. Through the eternal gates the King of Glory has gone in, and we fear not to follow. His track has been the one safe guide through time for our pilgrim feet, and even at the city gates we will look for it, till we are lost in contemplation of Thyself, "For ever with the Lord."

The King is all the glory
Of Immanuel's land!"

As Lady Powerscourt suggestively says, "The beauty and accommodation of that house (my Father's house) shall be according to his means, his taste, our necessities. When we are about to visit a person's house our expectations correspond with our knowledge of the proprietor; when we receive friends to our house it is customary to give ourselves to please them; our aim is their profit and pleasure, all the pleasure our house affords is brought forth for that end. So, in our Father's house, we shall have intercourse with the Owner, may I say? He will give Himself to our happiness. Oh, what powers are in Him when He sets about blessing; when his aim is to bless He blesses like a God; all that his house affords shall be brought forth, while the mind of the Great Original, as an unfathomable mine of wealth, shall be an ever-constant, ever-new delight." "If it were not so I would have told you."

Not exclusively for the future, but for the present also, this is a word of unspeakable cheer. There can be no denying that we are brought, at times, into circumstances which—to our shortsightedness—seem at variance with his will; at variance even, perhaps, with his promise. Temptations arise which we should speak of as unique and unprecedented, if it were not for the remembrance of that restraining word, "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man" (1 Cor. x. 13).

At crises like these (and, oh, they are testing times indeed), let the blessed assurance have its full weight. "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." And under such peculiar trials as are obviously contemplated by such words as these, let us listen for that whisper which would seem to anticipate the cry of the rent heart, "If it were not so I would have told you." Let it nerve us to holy courage, and to high endeavour, as we patiently wait for Him. Let it help us to hold on to his naked Word, even though there were but one word in the whole canon of Scripture which seemed to reach to our sore extremity. One word from Him, one telegram from the Divine Man, is enough. "If it were not so, I would have told you."

"Thou hast promised no stormless course,
Yet singing and glad we go;
Faithful and true, Thou wilt bring us through,
If not, Thou hadst told us so."

Lucy A. Bennett.

THE NEGLECTED RICH.

In our temperance campaigns we rarely hear of our workers seeking the homes of the wealthy, or the so-called "upper classes" of society. We spend our time and energy in visiting saloons in the lower parts of a city, and in striving to rescue "the masses," not including in that word those who live in "brown stone fronts" and occupy high stations in the world.

An incident comes to us from one of our well-known noble Christian workers. A great effort had been made in one of our towns to rescue the intemperate and to enlist the sympathy of Christians in their behalf. Meetings were held and earnest personal effort made to reach those who were in the lowest strata of humanity. To this class their efforts were specially directed. One of the most devoted workers, walking past a prominent business house, said to herself, "Here is one who everybody knows is rapidly going the downward way through strong drink. Why should I not seek to save him? I will go in and personally plead the case." Her courage failed. She passed and repassed the great establishment, and finally went home to think over the best way of approaching this influential and prominent merchant. She feared that he would be angry by being personally approached on the subject of his intemperance.

The next day she went again, and again walked back and fro, her heart failing her. At last, with an uplifted prayer for help, she quietly opened the door, half wishing that she would not find him in. Walking into his private office, she found him at his desk. She was greeted with a pleasant good morning, which only made it the harder for her to speak to him upon the subject. Forgetting the little speech that she had prepared, with which to approach him, she burst out with, "Oh, Mr. ——, I was so troubled about you, so anxious in your behalf." All fear and trepidation fled on the instant, and with all the earnestness of her soul she pleaded with him to turn from the dangerous channel which he had entered. Then, apologising for what might seem to him an unwarranted intrusion, she started for the door. To her surprise he rose, and in a kind and gentlemanly manner, thanked her for her interest in him, and said, "I have been surprised, and wondered, through all these meetings, that no one has come to me before this, as my habits are well known to the community. You have gone down to the gutter to plead with the lowest, the most ignorant and depressed, and have made desperate efforts to save them. I have often said to myself, of what use to the world will they ever be, even if reclaimed, and why do they not come to me and many others like me, who, if once saved for this great aim, might be an honour to God and a benefit to humanity? Are we not worth saving?" With a choking voice, he thanked her for her interest and her prayers, and added, "By the grace of God I will try to overcome this terrible habit, which I know is leading me to the loss of body and soul."

We need in this work to have no respect of persons; to be faithful in personal service with all classes Sow beside all waters. S. E. B.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

JEREMIAH'S GRANDEST ODE.

(Jeremiah li.)

God spake, and gave us the word to keep;
Bade never fold the hands, nor sleep
'Mid a faithless world—at watch and ward,
Till Christ at the end relieve our guard.
By his servant Moses the watch was set:
Though near upon cock-crow, we keep it yet.
Browning.

It was a very deserted Jerusalem in which Jeremiah dwelt, after king Jehoiachin, his household and court, princes and mighty men of valour, had been carried off to Babylon. It was impossible to take ten thousand of those that constituted the bone and muscle of the State, without leaving an attenuated and weakened residuum. Still, the fertility and natural resources of the land were so considerable as to give hope of its comparative prosperity, as a trailing vine dependent on Babylon (Ezek. xvii).

Mattaniah, the third son of Josiah—who was a boy of ten years of age when tidings came of the awful catastrophe at Megiddo, but who was now in his twenty-first year—was called to the throne by the conqueror, and required to hold it under a solemn oath of allegiance, which was asseverated and sanctioned by an appeal to Jehovah himself. It was as though the heathen monarch thought to make insubordination impossible on the part of the young monarch, since his word of honour was ratified under such solemn and august conditions—conditions which under similar circumstances the heathen king would probably have felt binding and final. Alas! how often heathen men have attached an importance to religious appeals which has shamed religious professors! And how often they must have marvelled that we could so lightly disregard them! (2 Chron. xxxvi. 13; Ezek. xvii. 13).

At the instance of his conqueror, the young king took the name Zedekiah, "the righteousness of Jehovah." It was an auspicious sign; every encouragement was given him to follow in the footsteps of his illustrious father. And throughout his reign he gave evident tokens of desiring better things; but he was weak and irresolute, lacking the strength of purpose necessary to assert himself for good amid the confused counsels that agitated his court. He respected Jeremiah, but did not dare publicly to espouse his cause, showing him his royal favour by stealth.

Meanwhile the kingdom was violently agitated by rumours from every side, which encouraged the hope that ere long the power of Babylon would be broken, and the exiles return. These thoughts were rife among the exiles themselves, as we have seen; they were diligently fostered by the false prophets, who gladly fell in with the current of the popular wish; and there seem to have been various political considerations which favoured the expectation of a speedy reversal of conditions that chafed the proud Jewish heart beyond endurance.

About this time there was a revolt in Elam against Babylon. What if this should spread until the empire itself should become disintegrated! But Jeremiah, by the voice of God, said: "It shall not be; the bow of Elam shall be broken; her king and princes destroyed, her people scattered toward the four winds of heaven" (xlix. 34-39).

Then there was the seething discontent of the neighbouring peoples, who, though they had accompanied the invader as allies, were eager to regain their independence, and desired to draw Judah into one vast confederacy, with Egypt as its base. "No," said Jeremiah, "it must not be; Nebuchadnezzar is doing the behest of Jehovah; all the nations are to serve him, and his son, and his son's son" (xxvii. 6, 7). Perhaps it was at Jeremiah's suggestion that Zedekiah at this time made a journey to Babylon, to pay homage to his suzerain, and assure him of his fidelity.

All through the troubles that followed, Jeremiah pursued the same policy. He asserted that the state of the captives in Babylon, as compared with that of the remnant at Jerusalem, was as good figs to bad (xxiv.); when Pharaoh's army produced a temporary diversion, and compelled the Chaldeans to draw off, he said that they would certainly return, set fire to palace and temple, and burn the city (xxxvii.); and his policy was so well known among the Chaldeans that in the final overthrow they gave him his life, and allowed him to choose where he would dwell (xl.)

Often it must have seemed to his choicest friends as though his advice were pusillanimous and wanting in the courage of faith. Did he really favour Babylon above Jerusalem? Was he traitorous to the best interests of his people? But if they ever entertained such questionings, they must have been suddenly and completely disillusionised, when he summoned them to hear the tremendous indictment he had composed against Babylon in the early months of Zedekiah's reign, together with the graphic description of its fall. A copy of this prophecy was entrusted to Seraiah, the chief chamberlain, who went in the train of Zedekiah to Babylon, with instructions that he should read it privately to the exiles; and then, weighting it with a stone, cast it into the midst of the Euphrates, with the solemn words, that must have thrilled the bystanders, "Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise again, because of the evil which God will bring upon her, and her might shall wax faint" (li. 59-64).

I.—THE PROPHECY OF THE FALL OF BABYLON.

The Glory of Babylon.—In glowing imagery Jeremiah depicts her glory and beauty. She had been a golden cup in the hand of Jehovah; his battle-axe and weapons of war. Her influence was carried far and wide. She dwelt by many waters, rich in treasure, and the wonder of the earth. Like a mighty tree, she stretched her branches over the surrounding lands. Queen of the nations, she was at ease, and thought to see trouble no more. "Is not this great Babylon," her greatest monarch cried, "which I have built, for the royal dwelling-place by the might of my power, and for the glory of my majesty?"

The Divine Controversy.—The Almighty had used her for great purposes of disintegration, doing among the nations much the same sort of work that the icebergs did among the rocks of the primitive world, or that the frosts do each winter in pulverising the dust of the earth. But she had abused for unrighteous and selfish ends the power which God had entrusted to her. Her execution of the Divine purpose, her administration of the Divine decrees, had been cruel in the extreme. The track of her armies had been marked with ruthless and wanton bloodshed. She had floated to the eminence of another Ararat, on the waters of another flood, an ocean of human suffering. And therefore Jehovah set nets for her, and caught her as a wild beast. He opened his armoury and brought out the weapons of his wrath.

But God was especially against Babylon for her treatment of his people. The inhabitants of Zion are introduced, crying, "The king of Babylon has devoured us, he hath crushed us, and hath filled himself with our delicacies. The violence done to me and mine be upon Babylon." Therefore the Most High would take up their cause, and take vengeance on their behalf. "As Babylon caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth; for the Lord is a God of recompenses, He shall surely requite."

The Summons to her Foes.—The standard is reared, and around it, at the sounding of the trumpet, the nations gather. The wild tribes of Ararat and Armenia are there, the kings of the Medes, the governors thereof, and all the lands of her empire. The sure-footed shaggy horses of the mountaineers are like the rough locusts, that fill the land with their countless multitudes. Sacrifices are offered to propitiate the gods of battle; and the tide of invasion begins to flow against and around the massive walls of the city. The very earth trembles beneath the weight of the armaments, and the tread of the troops. "Behold!" the prophet cries, "a people cometh from the north; and a great nation, and many kings shall be stirred up from the uttermost parts of the earth. They lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy; their voice roareth like the sea, and they ride upon horses; every one set in array, as a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon" (ii. 41, 42, R.V.).

The Attack.—The archers invest the city on every side, so that none may escape. They are bidden to shoot at her, and not spare their arrows. Now the battle-shout is raised, and an assault is made against her walls. See! she submits; she gives her hand in token; her bulwarks are fallen; the bars of her gates are broken through; her walls are thrown down; the mighty men of Babylon are forborne to fight; their might has failed; they have become as women. Lo, the fire breaks out amid her dwelling-places. The messengers, running with similar tidings from different quarters of the city, come to show the king of Babylon that the fords are in the hand of the foe, and that the city is taken.

The Overthrow of the City.—Then the captured city is given up to the savage soldiery. Nameless wrongs are inflicted on the defenceless and weak. There is plunder enough to satisfy the most rapacious. Her granaries are despoiled; her treasuries ransacked; her stores winnowed. All the captive peoples who had been held by her in cruel bondage go free, and especially the Jews. "Let us forsake her," they cry, "and let us go every one into his own country; for her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies."

And now her cities become a desolation, a dry land, and a desert, a land wherein no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass through; but the jackals dwell there, and it lies waste from generation to generation, as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighbour cities thereof.

Such were the predictions of Jeremiah concerning the greatest city which perhaps the world has ever seen, and which was then rising to the zenith of her power and glory. Seventy years were to pass before these words would be fulfilled; but history itself could hardly be more definite and precise. Those who can compare this prophecy with the story of the fall of Babylon, and with the researches of Layard, will find how exactly every detail was repeated, even to the burning of the reeds in the river-bed, the meeting of post with post on the night of its fall, the deep stupor with which the fumes of wine had dazed the brave men of Babylon, and the utter desolation which for centuries has reigned over the site of Babylon.

"They drank wine, and praised the gods of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone. In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick, upon the plaster of the wall of the king's palace. In that night Belshazzar the Chaldean was slain. And Darius the Mede took the kingdom."

II.—BABYLON THE GREAT.

In every age of the world, Babylon has had its counterpart. Over against the line of Seth, with its reverence for God, was that of Cain, where arts and science were cradled and nurtured. Babel's tower cast its shadow over the primitive races of mankind. Over against Shem was Ham; over against Abraham, Chedorlaomer; over against Israel, Nineveh; over against Jerusalem, Babylon; over against the Church, Rome; over against the New Jerusalem, Babylon the Great; over against the Bride of the Lamb, the scarlet woman, riding upon the beast. Where God has built up his kingdom, the devil has always counterfeited it by some travesty of his own.

Jeremiah comforted his heart amid the desolations which fell thick and heavily on his beloved fatherland, by anticipating the inevitable doom of the oppressor. And his words, read amid the exiles of Babylon, as they sat beside the rivers, and wept, and hanged their harps upon the willows, may have inspired that marvellous outburst of faith, and patriotism, and undying hatred—

O daughter of Babylon, thou art to be destroyed;
Happy shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us.
Happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones
Against the rock.

In the same way, throughout the persecutions of the empire, when paganism made her awful attempts to stamp out Christianity; and afterwards amid the horrors of Inquisition, when the Roman Catholic Church sought to extinguish the true light of the Gospel, which in no age has been without witnesses, the suffering children of God have turned to the Book of Revelation to read the doom of that anti-Christian power which, under the guise of paganism or of papalism, always sets itself against God, and is set on by the undying hatred of the devil. Her fate is described in words that strongly recall those of Jeremiah. She too had the golden cup, and was drunk with blood, and reigned over the kings of the earth. She too is destroyed by a combination of those that had owned her sway. A voice is heard bidding God's people come out from her, lest they be involved in her overthrow. It is rendered unto her as she rendered, and double is mingled into her cup. As Seraiah cast a stone into the Euphrates, so a strong angel casts a great millstone into the sea, saying, "Thus with a mighty fall is Babylon, the great city, cast down, and shall be found no more." And her site becomes the haunt of demons, and a hold of every unclean and hateful bird; the voice of harpers and minstrels for ever silenced; the light of the household lamp for ever quenched; the voice of the millstone for ever still.

Prophetic students have always identified this great persecuting power with Rome, the city of the seven hills; and if this interpretation be correct, without doubt, in the millennial age, her site will be as desolate as that of Babylon has been for more than two thousand years. But one is disposed to enlarge the scope of the prophecy, and to believe that every form of anti-Christian power, whether systems of false philosophy, or structures of ancient superstition, or gigantic wrongs, like the drink traffic and the opium trade, shall wither and die before the all-conquering might of Emmanuel, who was manifested to destroy the works of the devil. He must reign till all enemies are put beneath his feet. Then shall be heard in heaven the voice of a great multitude, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunders, saying, "Hallelujah! for the Lord our God, the Almighty, reigneth."

Let us strengthen our confidence in the certain prevalence of good over evil, of the Church over the world, and of Christ over Satan, as we consider the precise fulfilment of Jeremiah's predictions concerning the fall of Babylon. "So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord: but let them that love Thee be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might."

III.—OUR OWN BABYLON.

Each heart has its special form of sin, to which it is liable, and by yielding to which it has been perpetually overthrown. How bitter have been your tears and self-reproach! How you have chafed and foamed beneath the strong iron bit of your tyrant! How hopeless your struggles to escape from the tormenting net, whose meshes refused to break, whilst every plunge only entangled you more tightly in its folds!

But there is a deliverance for you, as for those weak and misguided but suffering Jews. How exactly your life history is delineated in theirs! They were the children of God; so are you. They might have lived in an impregnable fortress of God's covenant protection; so might you. They forfeited this by their disobedience and unbelief; so have you. They tried to compensate for the loss of God's keeping power by heroic resolutions and efforts, and by alliance with neighbouring peoples; so have you. They utterly failed, and were crushed as a moth in a child's hand; so has it been with you. They almost renounced hope; this, too, is your case—you hardly dare hope for deliverance. But as God saved them by his own right hand, so will He save you. And as Babylon was so utterly quelled that it ceased to be an object of alarm, so God is able so entirely to deliver you that you shall no more fear or be afraid; you shall see the bodies of your task-masters dead upon the sea-shore.

Accept these rules, if you would have this blessed deliverance.

1. Put out of your life all known sin. Are there vows that ought never to have been made? Recall them! Are there wrongs that lie back in the past, which can be righted? Right them! Are there secret habits and practices which eat out your heart? Be willing to be set free, and deliberately tell God so. So far as you are concerned, put away the idols that have provoked God to jealousy.

2. Entrust the keeping of your soul to God. You cannot control it, but He can. He made you, and must be able to keep you. One of his angels has power enough to bind the devil; surely then the Lord of all angels can deliver you from the accursed demons that make sport of you. If Christ in his human weakness cleared the temple, He must be able to drive the foul things from your heart; and when once they are out, it will be easy for Him to keep them out. In his Ascension, He was raised above all the principalities and powers of darkness, and you were raised with Him, too, if you only knew it; certainly the living Christ can tread your lion and dragon beneath his feet. You cannot, but He can. Put the case deliberately, thoughtfully, calmly into his hand. Do not say, "I will try"; but, "I will trust." Do not look at your faith, but at Him. Do not cry, "Help me!" for that implies that you are going to do some and He some, and your part will inevitably vitiate all; but cry, "Keep me!" thus throwing the entire responsibility on Him.

3. Reckon that the Almighty Saviour accepts your deposit at the moment of your making it. As it saves your hand, it passes into his. Be sure that He has undertaken it all for you. Do not try to feel that He has, but reckon that He has. Do not go over and over the act of committal, to see whether it was rightly done. Make it as well as you can, or ask Him to take what you but ineffectively transfer. Never doubt that He reads your motive and desire, even though you fail to do as you would; and that He accepts the eager willing for the perfect doing. Then stedfastly resist every suggestion to doubt Him. Dare to say a hundred times a day, "Jesus is able to keep that which I have committed to Him: I am a worm, weak, witless, worthless; but the Son of God has me in his safe keeping; He hath delivered, He doth deliver, and I am persuaded that He will yet deliver." You may have no glad emotion, no fear of victory, no share of ecstasy; never mind, lie still, and trust Him. The lion may roar all around, but the weary tired sheep will lie within the fold, absolutely safe, because the Shepherd interposes his mighty keeping between it and every dreaded ill.

THE GOSPEL IN SAXONY.

It is a grief to English Christians that Germany is not, except in rare and favoured spots, a land of simple faith and evangelic fervour. But when we come to know more of the conditions under which the Gospel is often held and preached, our wonder at the state of vital religion ceases. Briefly stated, on the one hand, there is in some parts legal protection and material support for men who are Lutheran ministers, whether they are worthy of their office or not; and, on the other hand, there is persecution and every disability for men who are devoted followers of Christ, but who cannot conscientiously enter the Lutheran Church. Religious liberty is one of those things which are decided by the individual States of the German Empire, not by the central authority, and in the Kingdom of Saxony, the land of Luther, there is no religious liberty at all. The Spirit of Christ cannot act and speak through the servants of Jesus without causing them to be subject to pains and penalties. Were Martin Luther living now, we are sure he would be the first man to protest in his own land against the power which the State wields against conscience; he would assail the position of the Church that bears his own name.

Sixty years ago Mr. Johann Gerhard Oncken went from England to Hamburg, and began to preach the Gospel. One of his converts was Moritz Geiszler, a young Saxon mechanic, who subsequently came to Glasgow to follow his craft, but was sent to college, trained for the ministry, and ordained at Little Alie-street Chapel, London, in 1857. The Baptist Evangelical Society sent him as a missionary to the land of his birth, because he had made such powerful representations of its needs. When, however, he attempted to preach the Gospel he was forbidden to do so under a penalty of three years' imprisonment. He could only visit Dresden as a private individual. He took up his residence outside Saxony, and then visited humble Christians inside it just as he was able. Oederan was a place very bitter against the few Baptists, and treated Geiszler with great harshness and injustice. Families were placed under police supervision like the worst of convicts. If a man became a Baptist his own children and friends were forbidden his house. On one occasion five policemen and a midwife (in Saxony the midwife is a State servant) forcibly carried away an infant from its parents, and had it baptized at the Lutheran Church. Such absurd persecution would be laughed out of existence in England.

In 1864 an edict was passed by which the Baptists were permitted to hold meetings, but they might not read the Bible audibly; neither might they sing nor pray; no one was allowed to speak or act as a leader, for that would have been taking the part of a religious instructor. The Baptists would not stultify themselves by acknowledging the edict as having any value.

During the last decade the struggling cause has enjoyed more prosperity than formerly, though the laws are the same as they were thirty years ago, and persecutions have not ceased.

In 1882 Mr. Schunke, a preacher, accepted the invitation of a young Christian couple living in Planitz, a mining village in Saxony, to come and speak to a few friends, who would be there to meet him in the evening. In spite of persecution good was done, and in 1884, the private room being too small for the members, a small hall was rented for the meetings. Five policemen were set to watch the opening service. Every meeting had to be reported to the police twenty-four hours in advance, and the subject of the address stated, in accordance with the law for Socialists, etc. Then after the permission for each address was given, a number of policemen were sent to watch the meeting, and see that nothing was said which had not received police sanction. Above all things, there was to be no singing or praying. Children were not permitted to be present, even though they were members. A mother with an infant in her arms, who was present on one occasion, was ordered by the police to leave, as children were not to be present! The thing seems too ridiculous to be believed. One of Spurgeon's sermons—"The Priest Not Needed"—was not allowed to be read. It is still a common thing to see constables carrying firearms stationed outside and inside the hall. "When, on one occasion, in 1887, the members were observing the Lord's Supper in an attic—for this had also been strictly prohibited—a police-officer stole into a neighbouring house and, looking through a skylight, watched the proceedings. The brother who had administered the Lord's Supper was subsequently fined £1." Yet, notwithstanding this terrorising and persecution, there is now in Planitz a chapel with 400 sittings, with 176 members, and a Sunday-school with 525 scholars. The members contributed £303 3s. to mission work in 1893.

At the end of his college course, three years ago, Pastor Karl Mascher went to Dresden to take charge of a small church that was under the care of another church at Halle, a hundred miles distant. He found only sixteen members there, and ten others scattered over a wide tract of country, some as far as fifty miles away. From a copy of the statutes of this church which we have seen we learn that the objects for which it has been formed are the spiritual edification of its members, and the extension of the Kingdom of God, and that its creed is this:—"It acknowledges only one authority in religious matters, which is the Bible, and its members pledge themselves to live and teach in accordance with its dictates." Among its rights it claims to appoint its own pastor, to observe its own religious practices in places specially appointed, as well as in the private dwellings of its members, "on which occasion everyone is permitted to enter freely." In a word, it exactly resembles the Evangelical Nonconformist Churches of Great Britain, and seeks to do precisely the same work which they have done and are doing.

The police, acting on the dictum that "the Baptists have no right of public worship in Dresden or its neighbourhood," would not allow some glass tablets giving notice of the various services to be displayed, forbade the members making their meetings known through the Press, and prohibited newspapers from accepting their advertisements. They may not even print the name of their chapel and times of services on the backs of the tracts which they distribute. Above all, we regret to record that the Lutheran pastors are intensely hostile. The Sunday-school has been denounced in the district day-school, and the children warned not to attend it. This antagonism of the Lutheran pastors, perhaps, is in some measure accounted for by the fact that the name of every person who has an income from any source, every working-man and working-woman, every servant, however small the wage may be, if only five pounds a year, is kept on a list, with a record of the religion he professes, and pays a church tax if he be a Lutheran. To leave the Lutheran Church he must give notice of his wish for a certificate of separation to the Lutheran pastor of his parish. The opposition of the Lutheran clergy has, to say the least, a mercenary appearance, and they would consult their Christian honour by withdrawing it.

One curious feature of the law brought out in an action against Pastor Mascher is that only persons who are above twenty-one years of age can claim a certificate of separation from the Lutheran Church; hence persons under that age have the right to join the Baptists, or any other Church, irrespective altogether of the authorities in the Lutheran Church. This legal decision is regarded as a charter of freedom.

The little church at Dresden has grown in three years from twenty-six members to ninety, and is carrying on active Christian work to the utmost of its ability. Its pastor spares himself no trouble to win men for his Saviour. He and his friends only claim "the right to worship God according to the teaching of his Word." The whole struggle is for freedom to extend the Gospel. So far as we can see, there has been an absence of any lower aim. If our brethren keep true to that, we cannot but believe in their ultimate triumph.

JOHN OFFORD'S MEMORIES OF 1859.

The sainted John Offord, in letters to friends, described in much detail some of the revival meetings of 1859, both in Ireland and Scotland. The following extracts from two such communications afford a profitable and joyous glimpse of the movements of God's Spirit in those stirring times.

I have spent a day at a country place three miles from Armagh, where a great work has been done. My inquiries were aided by a small farmer, forty years a follower of Christ, and a man very sound in the faith. The clergyman of the Church of England (an aged Christian) had requested this poor man (a Presbyterian) to hold prayer meetings and to talk with the people.

Six of his own family have been converted in seven weeks, and all are rejoicing in the Lord; ages from ten to twenty-two. I inquired closely of all about the foundation of their hope, the ground of their peace, or the cause of their joy, and (blessed be God) I could get nothing from them but testimony to the preciousness of the blood and righteousness and person of Christ. Every one of them seemed to be brought to peace through the application of some portion of Scripture to their conscience. The father and mother sat by with tearful and joyful countenances. They told me they had prayed for their children from their birth, and had waited patiently for the Lord, and that He had inclined his ear unto them and heard their cry. The children seemed to be very bright and happy; they rejoiced to tell of each other's awakenings and cries and deliverances.

a boy of fourteen, seemed a general favourite. He told me that God had shown him by the preaching that he was going down to the lowest hell; that He had caused him to call upon Him out of the depth, and that He had delivered him; and that now he loved the Lord Jesus, and knew Him to be his Saviour. The mother told me that seven persons had received blessing through this child. The neighbours had come to see him while in trouble, and they had rejoiced in his joy; and while he had told them of the blessedness of the love of Jesus, they had become convinced of sin, and had begun to cry for mercy. Two of these cases were very interesting. The one was a blind girl of sixteen years, to whom the boy had told how happy a thing it was to love Jesus, and to know his love. She became very much affected, and her convictions became so strong that she uttered wild cries for mercy. I saw this child, and found her resting in peaceful joy in Jesus, and on his blood of atonement.

The other case was that of the boy's Aunt Matty. This woman had come into the house after the boy had begun to rejoice in the Lord. Amongst other things he said to her, "I love you very much, Aunt Matty, but I should love you more if you loved Jesus! Oh, do love Jesus," and so on. The boy's mother told me that she burst into tears and exclaimed, "Oh! what a hardened sinner I am. My own daughter has been persuading me to come to Christ, and now this dear child is exhorting me to love Him," and she wept, and was much agonised in spirit till she found the Lord.

The work seems to have penetrated into every homestead and hovel around this family. I saw many of the cottagers, and found similar results; mental agony, deep conviction, and earnest crying and tears, and some bodily quaking and prostration, seemed to have been the process through which they had passed, but all seemed to regard the blood of Christ as their only ground of peace. The poorest woman, and as low as low could be as to intelligence, in answer to my question, "Why, think you, can the blood of Jesus cleanse from all sin, rather than the blood of any other man?" replied, "Because He is the Son of God." The mother of this woman is not converted, and in pitiable ignorance; the poor old creature told me that she wished it would come to her. The husband has been (as his wife termed it) for three weeks, but has no peace. I found some in this district not happy, but anxious and prayerful, the common mode of expression being, "I pray for Christ to come to me to wash me in his blood, to pardon me and give me his Holy Spirit." As we crossed the fields to the road on my return, the dear old man poured forth strains of gratitude to God for sending such blessed times in his day, adoring his sovereign grace and holy name. The spirit seems truly catholic, i e., unsectarian.

I am more and more convinced that this work is a most genuine work of the Lord. I have, in the course of fifty years' preaching of the Gospel, conversed with many more than a thousand souls on the subject of their conversion, and never heard more clear, full, and direct acknowledgment of the great truth of the soul's entire rest in Christ, and I never knew that testimony given with deeper feeling of affection, humility, and joy. These feelings are universally characteristic experiences of the newly converted, and many who have been aroused from a state of deadness in the Christian profession. And why shall there not be joy? But it is not joy alone, but an all-absorbing love. I have walked with clusters of young converts, and of converts in more advanced years, and am struck with the warmth of their love to the Lord, and to one another, and indeed to all Christians. This love constrains them to seek the souls of others, it overflows and pours its vivifying streams into the dead souls around. Never did I see so sweet and precious a fulfilment of the words of our Lord, John vii. 38, "He that believeth on Me," etc.

It is somewhat remarkable that the first instance of prostration in Glasgow occurred in the Church of England. While a godly young clergyman (Mr. Flindt, from Somersetshire) was preaching, a female fell from her seat, and was borne in the porch. After the service he had her conveyed into the vestry and sent for a Christian M.D. He stated that the case was not hysteria, but the result of DEEP MENTAL FEELING.

Mr. F. then said, "Shall we pray?" This was done, and the sufferer seemed able to murmur and cry for mercy. She was conveyed home, and the minister stayed with her till two o'clock, when the Lord raised her up, and gave her calm and blessed peace. This valuable brother has been of great service and greatly blessed in this work. Several of the higher classes have been awakened and brought into living union with Christ through his labours. Blessed be the Lord!

One thing that has forcibly struck me, and very deeply interested me also, is that the Christians pray with a simplicity, and directness, and faith which is marvellous, because rare until this movement took place. Answers to prayer are constantly stated, and thanksgiving offered a few days after the prayer has been made. There is indeed watching thereunto with all perseverance.

I felt this to-night in my own spirit at the Free Church, which I have been attending. One out of twenty cases for special prayer was as follows:—"A sister recently saved earnestly seeks the prayers of the people of God for a sister who has gone astray from her twelfth year" (fourteen years ago). She had been found, and consented to come to the meetings twice. She was to have come at eight this evening for the second time, when suddenly, as if by the impulse of the enemy, she darted away and returned to the streets. The sister in vain sought for her, and the above desire was sent in by her. The minister handed it to me. I had through grace the spirit of prayer, and was able to ask that the Lord would lay his hand upon her and bring her back. This was at eight. Every heart seemed to feel this case; there were 600 people present, and a most hearty response was given to the prayer that the Lord would yet bring her to the meeting. At nine o'clock a message was sent up to the platform that she had come to the meeting and found her sister's seat. The answer seemed to thrill the hearts of many, and yet they seemed to expect it. Have we not something to learn from such facts? May not our God desire indeed that we should be able and willing to deal more directly with Him about our own matters, and about the souls of others? The hour (twelve midnight) will show that the meeting did not close early. There were three successive conclusions—the second meeting 400, the third 100 anxious ones remaining.

I spoke a second time at the latter, and while so doing a strong man rose from the seat, reached the aisle, staggered, fell, and uttered a deep wail of agony, and was carried out of the church. He seemed overwhelmed with a sense of guilt, and earnestly desiring mercy.

BLACKBURN.—A ten days' Protestant mission was held in St. Barnabas Church, from September 1 to 10, under the auspices of the Church Association. The attendances were very good, especially on the two Sundays, when the church was crowded.

NEGLECTED IRISH CHILDREN.

Dear Friends,—I want to enlist your kind sympathy for the poor neglected children of Ireland, and for the valuable home for such children in Aughrim, co. Galway. This home was opened twenty-three years ago by Miss Persse, and carried on by her with much blessing to many a poor little waif. I can speak from experience, as many a time its kindly doors have been opened to receive little ones from us, when we could not care for them elsewhere. A young woman who had married a soldier in India, was left a widow with two little girls; she made her way back to Ireland hoping to find some means for earning a living for herself and her little ones. The poor widow was quite ignorant of God's Word and of the way of salvation. In her distress, she got her children placed in a Roman Catholic school, and she took a situation. When, after some time, she was allowed to see her little girls, she found them so unhappy, and they so clung to her, that she took them away with her. A friend in the house where she was servant, seeing her distress, told her of our mission homes; in due time we admitted the children, and their mother took them herself to this home for which I plead. There they were lovingly and kindly treated, poor little neglected, frightened creatures.

The mother was warned not to tell anyone what she was about to do, as she would find great opposition; and no sooner did it become known, than she was visited by an aunt from the country, a brother was brought over from England to insist upon having the children that they might be put in a convent; every effort was made to get possession of the poor girls, promises and threats in turn, but the Lord kept the mother stedfast, she would not give her children back to be brought up in ignorance of the truth. So persecuted and threatened was she, that she had to hide and make her escape at night; a kind Christian friend took interest in her, pitying her sufferings; she was well taught the precious Word of God, and she gave her heart to Him. Subsequently, a lady engaged her to go with her as nurse to India; she settled there, and regularly sent payment for her children till they were old enough to join her, and now they are a happy family in India. But for this home, what might have been the fate of mother and daughters!

This is one little tale of God's loving guiding hand rescuing his own from the ignorance and darkness of sin and Satan. As a poor, weary-looking working-man said to a teacher, after an earnest Gospel address, "Ah, we should have heard these things forty years ago, and then it would be different with us." How dreadfully sad to think that these poor fellows might have had the truth when they were children. Ought not we Christians to be more than ever earnest in seeking out the young, and instilling into their hearts those blessed words of life which are never forgotten though they may lie dormant for many a day? Oh, so many precious reminiscences come to my mind as I write—seed sown under most discouraging circumstances springing up and bearing fruit after long waiting.

I often think what a joy it will be when we meet in the Heavenly Home a number of these little ones gathered into the Good Shepherd's fold and saved, notwithstanding bitter opposition and trial; for, dear friends, don't imagine this to be an easy work: we have to make up our minds to fight the good fight of faith, to work cheerfully through good and evil report, ever keeping in mind it is the Master's work, and we have his promise, "He will provide"; and even at this moment, when we have the Home full and £145 due, we are not alarmed, for we know in whom we trust, and He who has hitherto helped will not forsake us now. Many whose eyes may rest upon this letter may have seen our appeal in The Christian lately; we would like them to know that it is a similar institution to our "Birds' Nest" at Kingstown, the same management, teaching, and care. Two kind friends, who for years gave £50 each, died lately, and as yet the Lord has not supplied their places.—Yours in the Master's service, (Mrs.) Ellen Smyly.

SECOND MEETING METHODS.

An interesting interview with Rev. John McNeill is reported in The Southern Cross of Melbourne; we extract some parts of it:—

"You do not use the ordinary evangelistic methods—the inquiry room, etc.,—very freely?

"Oh, yes; only sometimes when I ask people to wait, the whole audience waits. What are you to do? The other night I asked the people to wait, and there were not 300 people out of 3000 who left the building. Anxious people declared themselves publicly all over the meeting, and you could not get at them for solid rows of Christian people who waited to see this thing out to the last second.

"I would like to say a word about second meeting methods. I purposefully play fast and loose about second meetings. That is to say, some night after an address which, so far as one can tell, has been deeply impressive, I pronounce the benediction and let the people go. The night before I had a second meeting; the night after I will have a second meeting again, but I just deliberately play fast and loose with them in that way because they are being overdone. Of that I have not the slightest doubt.

First meeting or second meeting, it is 'the entrance of God's Word' that gives light. What I work for, first meeting or second meeting, is to get God's Word entered. Why should it not enter while the people are sitting there listening? Stereotyped evangelistic methods have created a subtle feeling in the minds of some people that works this way. The process of conversion is: 'Go to one of those special services, listen to the Gospel earnestly and eagerly. But that is not it! Wait to the second meeting! Hold the Gospel that you've heard from that man preaching to you in the first meeting; hold its appeal, and its very light and clearness, in suspense. Postpone your surrender to Jesus. Although you feel the truth warming quick in your heart, postpone it to the second meeting.' That is the feeling.

"We had a man in one of our meetings who said to me, 'I was very much impressed the first night; in fact, I think I saw it that night. But I just said to myself, "I won't go into the converting room to-night"'—this was the second meeting. You see what that man called the inquiry room! I sometimes say, after an earnest address, 'Now, friends, listen. There is to be no second meeting to-night. What would I have a second meeting for? I dare you to postpone your surrender to Jesus another five minutes! Even in breaking up to go to the second meeting the fowls of the air may pick up the seed that was sown in your heart. Some man sitting next you may say something that deflects you. I dare you to postpone your surrender another minute! It is now that the Holy Ghost is demanding your surrender to Christ; now the truth is beating round about your heart and head. Do you receive it?' And God gives me what I want. Mine is not the case of a man who is against second meetings. It is the case of a man who sees that 'one good custom may corrupt the world.' Then I will have the second meeting, with that explanation, and readjustment of the focus. If there is any man wants a word, and still is in the dark, we should meet his case. We have men and women in our churches trained in spiritual diagnosis, able to handle a sick soul and bind up its wounds and understand its view-point, and bring it right, namely, to trust in Christ. But of these there are far too few.

"Another point. I refuse to work second meetings in fixed machine-like fashion as if they were a new patent for converting souls. The second meeting is not an ordinance of the Holy Ghost. There is nothing against it, of course, in the New Testament, but there is nothing for it. But my point is this: I do this in the interests of the regular ministers. I am a regular minister, only I preach six days a week instead of one; why that should be called 'irregular' and 'spasmodic' is one of the things 'no fellow can understand.' I am simply a regular ordained minister, preaching the very same thing I preached in a settled pastorate of highly intelligent Christian people, preaching the same kind of thing six days a week instead of one. Now what I want to do is to encourage my brother in the regular pastorate, and he needs encouragement on this point. There is many a regular minister who greatly longs to see men and women manifestly converted; for manifestly, with all their outward decency, conversion is the one thing they lack. He is a little saddened by this. He is beginning to think, 'Ah well, I do not seem to have the gift for that kind of work. I cannot get people in my regular pastorate to wait to the second meetings, to declare themselves openly and publicly as to their religious condition, and let me or other good Christian people deal with them, and bring them to the light. That is a peculiar magnetic power God has given in some marvellous degree to some of his servants. I have not got it.' Now I would like to encourage that brother to believe this: God will give you conversions if you preach the Gospel faithfully to the people when they assemble next Sunday morning and evening. Preach the Gospel for conversion. Preach it for conversion on the spot, and God will give you what you work for. There is no patent process in a second meeting."

"But is it not well to get men to commit themselves by some overt act for Christ?"

"Yes, and no. It is a good thing to get some men committed; but, first of all, I want to get him committed to himself. I do not want to get him committed to other people before he is committed to his own judgment. You may get people to commit themselves by some outward sign as though they were making a declaration before a sheriff, and 600, 800, or, perhaps, 2000 cards are 'handed in' as the result of the inquiry room. A year after, you find a lot of people denouncing the evangelist's work right and left. There are ministers who will have nothing to do with it. 'Why,' they say, 'look at that last time. We had 2000 cards handed in. I got twenty for my share, and could not get three out of the twenty to confess conversion to me.'

"It is God's work, and you cannot hurry Him. On the whole, I would rather not push too far in the way of visible numerical results. Have faith in God. Whenever I see a crowd gathered to hear the Gospel, I begin to thank God there and then. I don't postpone my thanks until I see what are called results. He will get his own. And I would rather have my work to bulk bigger after I am gone, by 'results' steadily coming to the light in the way of applications to ministers for admission to church membership on the part of people who were neither ticketed nor counted, and in the way of changed lives exhibited by others, than to have a grand numerical 'result' that begins to change and shrink before the evangelist has gone a week. But I would like also to say that the disparaging comments of some ministers on the results of evangelistic work are worth nothing. They let the results slip through their fingers."

THE BOUNDLESS SEA.

I sat and watched where the countless waves
In a long procession burst:
Poured on, poured in to the shore's deep graves,
Absorbed in its awful thirst.
And as full and free are God's gifts to me
As the countless waves of the boundless sea.

They came! they came! on each others' heels,
With a fulness broad and high:
And the breath they breathed was a breath one feels,
Like a breath from God's pure sky.
And as full and free are God's gifts to me
As the countless waves of the boundless sea.

They spread their treasures of silver wealth,
Though it all seemed spread in vain:
The greedy sand, with a thankless stealth,
Seemed robbing the rich old main.
But the sea gave more from his treasured store,
And kissed with new blessing the thirsty shore.

They came unasked, and it seemed to me
They came where the rocks repulsed,
And threw them back on the dear old sea,
With a sudden shock convulsed.
But the sea gave more from his treasured store,
And kissed with new bounty the hard, rough shore.

I sat and counted the countless waves,
That no ebbing tide could stay,
And they seemed to rise from the opened graves
Of the lost of yesterday.
And as full and free are God's gifts to me
As the countless waves of the constant sea.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

WORK ON THE CONTINENT.

Sir,—As announced in a recent number of The Christian my wife held a series of meetings at Chamonix, where the schoolhouse had been very kindly placed at her disposal by the mayor. The object was a double one. First, to seek to reach with the light and life of a better world some of those who travel, seeking to get rid of the ennui of a listless, aimless existence. The second was to interest visitors to the Alps of France and Switzerland in the work we are carrying on among the working-classes of these nations. The meetings were held nightly and were fully as successful as we had expected.

The Maréchale held an open-air meeting on the town lands of Beaulieu at Lausanne, by permission of the mayor. It was a very remarkable gathering of 2000 people. The greatest order prevailed. The wife of Ex-President Ruchonnet was present and expressed afterwards her great delight. Pointing to the scene, men and women kneeling on the grass, seeking salvation, she said, "That is the best of all." Who had more right to rejoice over such a work than this noble Christian lady, the wife of the President who did so much, both by his publicly-expressed sympathy and his official defence of our liberty, to re-establish our right to preach the Gospel to the poor?

The Maréchale met in council at Lausanne and Zurich the 200 officers who are so devotedly labouring in the towns and villages of Switzerland.

Lovers of the Alps may be interested to know that we have many converts among the wood-carvers of Lake Brienz and the watchmakers of the Jura, and that one of the painters on pottery and cowbells of the Aigle valley is as remarkable a case of salvation from infidelity and morphine and suicidal meditations as one could almost conceive of.

We have also been rejoiced lately by the conversion of an anarchist at C— in the Jura, who was designated not long ago for a bloody deed, but who was converted in time to prevent its accomplishment. We continue to have access to the people all over France and Switzerland in a remarkable manner. Vast opportunities are before us if we only had more workers. Here is a splendid field near home for those who aspire to toil in a missionary soil of special rockiness. In France they can grapple with the giant demons of superstition, infidelity, and indifference, and find a moral soil as hard as any on earth.

The Maréchale has spent eight out of the nine last months in travelling from place to place in these countries holding series of meetings, and has had everywhere crowded audiences. The work at Havre is going on powerfully, and we hear of conversions every week. We are just now opening a rescue home in the Parisian suburb of Neuilly, and another in Zurich under the leadership of a Russian Princess, who is an officer with us. These efforts will naturally need help.

Let me mention, in closing, a scheme I have had much in mind for some time for the spreading of the Scriptures and sound Salvation literature throughout France. Petroleuse! is a word recalling lurid memories of the Commune and its awful Amazons. The word is now applied to the new horseless road conveyances with petroleum or gasoline motors. We want to start a Bible and Salvation carriage of this sort and have already received a few subscriptions for this purpose. We have suitable officers ready for the work. This novel kind of carriage would excite much interest and curiosity all over France. We would be glad to hear from any friends who would be interested in such work, and could help us either to acquire a "Petroleuse," or to obtain the Scriptures on terms sufficiently low to enable us to offer them at the reduced colporteur prices.

MR. C. B. BARNETT left Adelaide about the middle of August, for China, where he hopes to labour in connection with the China Inland Mission. Mr. Barnett has been for the past seventeen months at the Belair Training Home. The training the students undergo at Belair is evidently beneficial to to them. Mr. Middleton, writing from China, says Mr. Clinton and he find that they have a great advantage over some others, from the practical experience gained at Belair.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY SEPTEMBER 23.—AMOS VIII.

Basket of Summer Fruit (1-3).—This suggests the nearness of judgment. Fruit is picked when it is ripe, and the fruit-gathering closed the Jewish harvests: so the end had come for Israel. The husbandman's work on her behalf had closed; judgment was imminent. In another sense our lives should be as baskets full of the fruit of the Spirit, ripened in the summer light of God's perpetual presence. Joyous hymns would be transformed into cries of terror, and the temple, probably of Bethel, filled with the slaughtered bodies of its votaries.

The Crimes of the Nobles (4-6).—The oppression of the needy was a chief form of their sin. Eager for gain, they wearied of time spent in their idolatrous festivals. They grudged that a day should pass without opening their stores of wheat, and in their traffic they made their weights less,and took from the purchasers a greater weight of money than was due.

The Land shall mourn (7-14).—God cannot forget until He forgives the penitent. He is the excellency of Jacob, and He swears by Himself because there is no greater. There is an inevitable Nemesis in the world. Sooner or later judgment always comes back on transgression. Oh, sinful man, seek the blood of cleansing that "I will never forget," may be changed for, "their sins and iniquities will I remember no more!" (8) This river is the Nile. The tide of an invasion should sweep over the land, as when Egypt is submerged by the annual inundations of its river. (9) The terrors of judgment are greatly increased when they are sudden and unexpected. The people would not hear God's prophets, so the days would come when there would be a famine of them. God takes away from us what we do not value. Some centuries of church-history have been specially marked by a dearth of godly preachers (Jno. vii. 34). (13) Oh that our young men and maidens were smitten with this hunger and thirst after the true word of God! Not because it has been withdrawn as in the case of Israel, but because they have come to see that they cannot live by bread alone. Those that trust in things of time and sense lack permanence, those only that do the will of God abide for ever.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24.—AMOS XI.

Divine Siftings (1-10).—Fugitives from the Assyrian invader, the people of Israel would shelter in the temples of Dan or Beersheba; but Jehovah, standing by the false altars, with one blow would level the whole structure to the ground, crushing all within. Men may dive as deeply as the abyss of sin permits, and climb as high as their own efforts can carry, but they can never elude the judgment of God. (3) The forests and caves of Carmel, and the depths of the Mediterranean, that lay all around its base, would resemble so many cells in the prison-house. The universe itself lies open to the sight of God, how then can a sinful man escape Him? (4) Flight, concealment, yielding to the inevitable invader, cannot cut the chain that links sin and penalty. (5, 6) In this magnificent sentence, Amos shows that the calamities of the land were due to the direct agency of the omnipotent God. Remember, child of God, that if He be swift to avenge, He is also quick to help, and that all his resources are at the disposal of faith! (7) Israel had forfeited its peculiar relationship to God, and reduced itself to the level of Ethiopians. The prophet even minimises the marvels of the Exodus, showing that God had done great things for other peoples. Sin may cancel the effect of all the advantages of our early nurture. (8) There is always a remnant. In wrath God remembers mercy. (9, 10) In winnowing, the chaff is destroyed, but not one grain. Thou art the "least grain," Christian, and thou shalt not be cast away!

Restoring Mercy (11-15).—A burst of the noblest inspired poetry. The apostle James quoted it (Acts xv. 14-17). A people is now being taken out from among the Gentiles, but ere long all Israel shall be saved. (12) The derision and triumph of Edom was the bitterest ingredient in Israel's cup of judgment. Some day we shall possess our foes. (13, 14) Material prosperity follows in the wake of righteousness. The literal restoration of Israel in their own land is certain, and Canaan shall again clothe herself with the fertility of the earliest days. Whenever God turns captivity, wealth and joy follow fast on each other's steps.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25.—OBADIAH.

This shortest book of the Old Testament is wholly engrossed with the destiny of Edom. To understand it we must remember the inveterate hate that severed the two peoples, though they sprang from a common ancestry. It began with the refusal of Edom to grant his wearied brother a passage through his country at the Exodus. It continued throughout Israel's history. We constantly meet references to it in the wars of the kings, and Israel never forgot Edom's joy in her disasters (Psa. cxxxvii. 7; Lam. iv. 21, 22; Ezek. xxv. 12-14). Typically, Edom represents the flesh which clings to us all through our life, and can only be dealt with by Him that came from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah, Who is mighty to save, and Who interposes Himself between us and our direst foe (Isa. lxiii.). Child of God, this prophecy is thus in its deepest sense true of thee!

Obadiah wrote these words immediately after the fall of Jerusalem before Nebuchadnezzar. Jeremiah, who was living at the time, incorporated many of them with his own, thus stamping them with a double sanction. Five years after Edom was overrun and subdued by the Chaldeans. (3) Pride and self-sufficiency are peculiarly sins of the flesh. (4) God is able to abase; humble thyself therefore. (5) When God deals with us it is not with the superficial work of the thief, but with the destruction of the invader. (7) Edom's ambassadors failed to obtain help of confederate nations, and were brought back to their frontiers from a fruitless errand. Strength, craft, might, alike are futile. (10-16) There is nothing that God so quickly avenges as faithlessness to those holy ties by which man is knit with man. (17-18) In the end God's people inherit the earth. The Esaus flourish and prosper like green bay trees, but they are inevitably cut off. Be patient, and wait for the interposition of God. Fret not thyself. (19-21) The redivision of the enemies' territories. They of the south, and of the lowland, are of course the Jew in the coming time. The lands of their foes will pass into their possession. Benjamin will extend across the Jordan to Gilead. The hosts of Israel that were taken into captivity will possess Phœnicia to the north, and the captives of Jerusalem, scattered to the very borders of the Bosphorus, will return to possess the cities of the south, and Jehovah shall be King of all the world.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26.—JONAH I.

Go to Nineveh (1-3).—Nineveh, on the banks of the Tigris, capital of the Assyrian Empire, was founded by Nimrod. It contained probably a million people. This mission was intended, not for its sake alone, but to lead Israel to repentance by its example. (3) How often men resemble Jonah by acting as though the presence of God were confined to their father's home, their native land, to leave which seems to offer them license! How often an evil purpose is fitted by favouring opportunities. Every step is a going down, and at Joppa we find the ship going down to Tarshish. When we go with God He pays the fare; when against Him, we pay our own.

The Tempest (4-7).—God has many messengers to send after his runaways. Winds and tempests fulfil his word. The storms encountered by the disobedient are worse than the perils in the path of duty; the indifference of Jonah is in strong contrast to the eagerness of the heathen. (6) Thus the world appeals to the people of God, demanding the reason of their strange indifference. The lot is cast into the lap, but God disposes it. The discovery of sin is certain.

The Fear and Effort of the Sailors (8-14).—These eager questions, this awful fear of Jehovah, this hard rowing to save, if they might, the prophet's life; this prayer that they might not be involved in punishment for slaying an innocent man; this ultimate turning to God on the part of the ship's crew, are very beautiful traits, and show something of the work of the law, written in human hearts. But how ineffectual is every effort on the part of the sinner to evade the pursuit or judgment of the Most High. Love is here in the guise of the storm, the Father in the form of the avenger.

The Great Fish (16-17).—This was possibly a shark, God, who sent the storm, prepared the fish. Life is full of his contrivances. To plunge beneath the wave is to fall into his arms. More than once the body of a man has been found in the bellies of the sharks of the Mediterranean. The huge sea monsters and the minnows of the pond do God's will.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27.—JONAH II.

Prayer from the Depths (1-3).—It was a strange oratory, but it matters little where we pray, if only the heart seeks God in sincerity and truth. Prodigal, outcast, imprisoned in darkness, we may yet cry, and our request will enter the ear of God. We have need to be afflicted, else we might not learn the blessed practice of prayer. Let not sin hinder you from appealing to God as yours (1-6). Not unseldom we are so sure of deliverance that we can thank God for it before it has arrived. Jonah's prayer is full of quotations from the Psalms. It is well to commit them to memory; they will furnish material for thought and utterance when we have not our books beside us.

Look Again (4-8).—The bitterest ingredient in Jonah's lot was to think that he was cast out of God's sight, as though he feared that he would never again stand before Him, either for fellowship or for service. But he dared to look again. Oh! soul, learn from this that there is no place so dark or deep whence thou canst not look again to God. Whenever thy soul faints, remember the Lord, his grace, and pity, and infinite resource, and let thy prayer come in unto Him. God can bring thee up from the lowest pit. What comfort there is for backsliders in these words. Get right with God, and all your life will adjust itself. To forsake God is to forsake your own mercy. To return to Him is to find it again.

Paying Vows (8-10).—Salvation is entirely of the Lord. From the beginning to the end of Christian experience, we must learn this. It depends on nothing we can do, but wholly on his unmerited grace. But let us be sure to pay what we vowed, and to sacrifice with the voice of joy. It is so easy to make profuse promises beneath the rolling billows, and to forget them when we emerge on dry ground.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 28.—JONAH III.

The Second Mission to Nineveh (1-4).—Peter was not only forgiven, but restored to his office, and preached the memorable Pentecostal sermon, so Jonah was sent again to Nineveh. When a backslider is really restored there is no reason why he should not resume Christian service. Thank God that his Word comes the second time. There was no hesitancy this time on the part of the prophet. The story of his deliverance seems to have reached Nineveh, and prepared the people to receive his word (Luke xi. 30). We must preach only as God bids us. He will tell us what to say. Nineveh is said to have been sixty miles in circuit, therefore three days' journey. It was full of violence and cruelty.

Its Repentance (5-9).—What a marvellous spectacle, the whole city on its knees. The king and his court, as well as the very brute creation, involved in one common humiliation. The repentance was universal in its scope (5), practical (8), and directed toward God (9). What a contrast to Israel! There was a novelty and freshness in Jonah's message, accompanied by the power of the Spirit, which arrested attention. How often familiarity with the truth blunts our perception of it!

The Forgiveness (10).—There was no change in God. He is always the same, but the effect of his glorious nature on human hearts is altogether determined by their aspect towards Him. To the froward He shows Himself froward, to the merciful, merciful. What we are to God we shall find Him to be to us. Men's backs are turned towards God, but as soon as they turn to Him they are conscious of the ineffable love that had never ceased to beam from his face.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29.—JONAH IV.

The Prophet's Displeasure (1-3).—It may be that Jonah was anxious about his own country. He had told Jeroboam II. to beware of invasion from Nineveh, and when it seemed likely that the proud city would perish, he began to hope that all fear of hostility was at an end, and that Israel had now no ground for alarm. These hopes were, however, dashed to the ground so soon as God turned from his purpose of destroying Nineveh. Moreover, he might have feared that his people would be encouraged to disregard his warnings, since in the present instance they had not taken effect. Thus, an encouragement would be given to their courses of evil. Rather than witness further a continued apostasy, Jonah would prefer to die (1 Kings xix. 4).

The Divine Remonstrance and Pity (4-6).—How gentle the Divine voice that pleads against passion and anger! How tender the Divine care of the petulant and disappointed prophet! He who had prepared the fish now prepares a gourd. How full life is of God's preparations! What mitigations there are in all our lots! Look out for your compensations!

The Discipline and Education of Circumstances (7-11).—God is in all. He permits or appoints. Previously He prepared the gourd; now the worm and the east wind. Each fulfils his purpose; and bears a deep lesson in its heart. Jonah mourned for the gourd, though it had cost him nothing; but he did not realise that Nineveh was more to God than that gourd to him. God had laboured for it; God had made it to grow; God was mindful of the little children that filled its streets, and the dumb cattle that browsed on its pastures. It would be an exquisite pain, therefore, to have destroyed it, if He had been compelled thereto by its sins. And He desired his servant to enter into fellowship with Himself in his love and pity for the great nations that lay outside Israel, and that were the subjects of his providence and solicitude. What a rebuke to Jewish narrowness of vision! What a conception of the Divine pity that broods over the great heathen cities of our world!

THE FOREIGN AID SOCIETY, for the diffusion of the Gospel on the Continent, has completed its fifty-fourth year of usefulness. It aims at assisting Continental Churches in the fight against Romanism; and the new report abundantly shows that the present is a time of great opportunity in France and Belgium alike. Those who feel for the struggling Continental Churches should read this report, and respond to its appeal. Copies may be had from Miss Burgess, Redleaf, Greyhound Lane, Streatham, S.W.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 30.
REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Mark i. 15.

THE period covered by this series of lessons extends from the birth of Jesus to the first year of his public ministry. Lesson i. tells the story of his birth. Describe the scene upon the hills of Bethlehem, and that in the courtyard of the inn. How different! Yet the glory that appeared to the shepherds was all on account of the event which took place near the inn. Show how the event fulfilled God's prophecy, proved his power in controlling the actions of men who knew Him not, and revealed the matchless condescension of the Son of God.

Lessons ii., iii. and iv. tell of his childhood. Picture Him first as carried in the Temple for presentation. Who prophesied concerning Him there, and what was the nature of his prophecy? The next picture sees Him in the humble home at Bethlehem. What visitors came to see Him? Whence came they? How did they find Him? And how did they pay Him homage? Let not their devotion condemn our neglect. The third scene is a stirring one, resulting from a dream, and leading to a hurried journey into Egypt. What danger threatened Him? Show how the Golden Text for lesson iv. was illustrated. Is not the text true for every life which is truly committed to God's care?

The one incident known of his boyhood is told in lesson v. Where, and on what occasion, did it take place? How does it illustrate on the one hand Jesus' devotion to his Father, and on the other hand, his obedience to his reputed parents?

The Baptism and the temptation (vi., vii.) are preparatory to his public work. In the first He is consecrated to God by his own act of surrender, and by the anointing of the Holy Spirit. In the second He is tested, as Adam was, but with a very different result. Enforce the lessons of his obedience to God's ordinance, and of his resistance of the devil's temptations.

The remaining lessons describe the prominent events of the first year's ministry. Who were the first disciples? Tell their names, and where and how they became followers (lesson viii.). What was his first miracle? Where was it performed? What lessons does it teach? (lesson ix). What was his first work of reform? Describe how the temple was defiled, and tell the significance of his cleansing (lesson x.). The first discourse is the theme of lesson xi. When and to whom was it delivered? What was its subject? Can you repeat any of its memorable words? Lesson xii. gives one of the incidents of his first tour. Describe the place, the occasion, the person He met, the conversation, and the remarkable result.

All this enforces upon us the message of the golden text. The object of the Gospel narrative is not to interest us, but to lead us to repentance. Is it not wise to trust such a Saviour? And is it not supremely guilty to reject Him?

CHARTERHOUSE SCIENCE AND ART SCHOOLS AND LITERARY INSTITUTE.—The winter session of this, one of the largest science and art schools of the United Kingdom, will commence on Saturday, Sept. 29, under the presidency of Rev. Henry Swann, M.A. During the late session upwards of 1,100 students, mostly elementary teachers, availed themselves of the privileges afforded. Instruction of a practical character is given in most of the sciences at a very nominal fee; whilst in art, at an equally low rate, students can be advanced in their studies under the direction of competent instructors. Classes will be held to prepare candidates for matriculation (Lond.), the clerical, medical (including mental), legal, and other exams. Full particulars of the classes may be obtained from Mr. C. Smith, organising secretary, St. Thomas's Charterhouse Schools, Goswell-road, E.C.

CHINA.—A correspondent sends the following:—"At a meeting of Christian workers held the other night in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Miss Underwood and Miss Roberts spoke of their work in China. Miss Underwood said if one went to China expecting to find the people eager for the Gospel they would be disappointed. There were many things opposing the spread of the Gospel. Among other things she named ancestral worship, the opium curse, the ungodly lives of many Europeans, and the lack of agents to teach the native Christians. Many agents gave themselves up to evangelistic work, and there was special need for teachers of the converts. Miss Roberts said that when she went to China in 1887 she was stationed in a large province in which there were only two preaching stations and one European missionary; now there are sixteen stations, though these are far from meeting the needs of the people, for the province is about the size of England."

BLACK AND WHITE: A PARABLE.

"OH dear! What have you been doing, Ethel?" There was no reply to this exclamation of the nursemaid, who lay down the book she was reading and in utter astonishment stared at the little tot of two years. Ethel, all unobserved by the maid, who was deeply interested in her book, had been playing with the coal to her heart's content; and when detected had altered the appearance of her clean pinafore considerably.

"What nasty stuff coal is," said a voice, as the door closed on the surprised maid taking her young charge to the bathroom. "I really wonder that it is allowed in this room." It was one of the white paraffin candles on the piano that spoke, and as he did so he looked across to his brother in the opposite sconce with a very dignified air, as though they belonged to the peerage of candledom.

"Don't talk so disrespectfully of your relative," replied the coal from the scuttle. "You needn't give yourselves such airs, for you are very closely related to me."

"Related to you, indeed, you dirty creature!" cried the pair of candles in unison. "Pray don't claim kindred with us." "Whether I claim it, or not," responded the coal; "it is the truth; so don't be proud."

"Proud! We are concerned about our self-respect; really, how rude you are, but, then, it's to be expected, for you belong to the lower orders." And as the candles uttered these words they assumed such a haughty attitude that they were in danger of toppling over on to the keyboard beneath.

"Well, that is good," said the coal. "Here are you both scorning your lowly origin, and calling your ancestor ugly names, because he speaks too plainly for your educated ears." This was said with a great deal of warmth, and it was quite evident that both sides were losing their temper.

At this juncture a third voice was heard (from the grate) trying to soothe the ruffled talkers. "If you will allow me," said the flame, "to give a little information on the matter you are discussing, I think I can clear up the difficulty, and make you good friends." And so they readily welcomed the proposal, the coal knowing how the matter would end, and the candles believing that they would be cleared of any relationship with such a disreputable connection.

"You see, my friends," said the fire, in a friendly tone, "you are very young, and like all young people, you have a lot to learn, and so if you are willing to listen to me, you shall have the benefit of my experience, which is a very lengthy one." The candles were quite won over by this conciliatory speech, and said they would be glad to listen to anything the fire had to say.

"My friend the coal," began the flame, "is the father of a very large family, and I may as well run through the names; there is Coke, Tar, Benzine, Naphtha, Carbolic Acid, Aniline Dyes, Almond Flavouring, Lubricating Oils, Paraffin Oil, and Solid Paraffin from which you are made; so you see he is quite right in claiming you as relatives."

"Well, we are fairly puzzled," cried the candles, "and can't understand it one bit, for there is no family likeness; he is black and we are white."

"Let me tell you how it is done," replied the fire, "and then you will understand it. The coal is put into a long iron vessel, and I do my best to make it very hot, and then you and your brothers are born, while he, poor fellow, dies and is not seen again." There was a slight pause, and then the candles said, in a very subdued voice, "Then after all we are only coal." "Not exactly," answered the fire. "Coal changed by a wonderful process, through which the blackness is lost and you become white. But do not be puffed up; remember always 'the hole of the pit whence ye were digged.' It is not your work, therefore no credit is due to you for the great change; but the credit is due to Him who devised such a wonderful plan for getting white candles out of black coal."

That night the candles on the piano were lighted, and the strains of music gladdened those who formed the family group. It was a happy evening, and one of the pieces sung was this, "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth? for He is like a refiner's fire."

CHILDREN IN ZULULAND.

There are thousands of children in Zululand who have never heard the story of Jesus. One of our missionaries in the South Africa General Mission travels over Zululand with his wife in a donkey-cart. It has a hood and four donkeys to draw it. He writes:—

"The other day a poor man came to us saying, 'My little girl has broken her leg; do come and see her.' The sun was setting, and his kraal was on the other side of the river—we had passed it on our journey—but we took some bandages and went with him. We found a nice little girl, four years of age. An old rag was tied round her leg with some reeds to form a sort of splint. But the whole did not support the broken bone at all. I took it all off, and then found they had cut into the flesh all round, and put medicine into the little wounds. I washed it away, and set the bone and bandaged it with splints. The next morning, I found that the poor little creature, by tossing about on her hard bed—only a mat on the ground—had displaced the splints. We gave them a sack, telling them to fill it with soft grass, and to make a little bed for her.

"Afterwards we called all the people together, and told them the old old story of Jesus and his love. As we were finishing the meeting, a little boy walked towards us, feeling his way with a reed. We saw he was blind, and his father said he was born so. Only three years old, and blind! His name is Ufindi."

Will you pray for the Zulu children, and for the missionaries, and will you ask Him to send you some day as his messengers to the heathen, whose lives are dark and sad without his love.

WORK.

LAID it down in silence,
This work of mine,
And took what had been sent me—
A resting time.

The Master's voice had called me
To rest apart—
"Apart, with Jesus only,"
Echoed my heart.

I took the rest and stillness
From his own hand,
And felt this present illness
Was what He planned.

How often we choose labour
When He says "Rest."
Our ways are blind and crooked,
His way is best.

There is a blessed resting
In lying still:
In letting his hand mould us
Just as He will.

His work must be completed,
His lessons set;
He is the higher Workman:
Do not forget.

It is not only working,
We must be trained;
And Jesus learned obedience,
Through suffering gained.

For as his yoke is easy,
His burden light,
His discipline most needful,
And all is right.

We are but under-workmen;
They never choose
If this tool or if that one
Their hands shall use.

In working or in resting,
May we fulfil,
Not what we would, but only
The Master's will.

God The Holy Ghost.—2.

A BIBLE READING.

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

I pass to the Mid-Dispensation, when the Lord Jesus Christ is to be born into the world after 4,000 years of silence on the part of the Holy Ghost. He had been seeking a godly seed, and He has sought in vain, until at last (exactly as at the time of the Flood) the whole race seems at the time of Christ's birth to be given over to idolatry and licentiousness and degradation. The Spirit has nothing to brood over but a dark moral and spiritual chaos. Yet He still seeks a godly seed.

There were two things that man had never, up to that time, seen upon earth. The one was a perfect man, and the other was the magnificence of the love of God. Adam and Eve started as man—male and female in one perfect man. They lost their perfection before a child was born, and therefore the first child that ever saw the light in this world saw no perfection in any part of God's creation. And they had never seen the whole creation of God in its perfection and beauty. These three things—a perfect man, the magnificence of the love of God, and the glory of creation—had been unknown to the whole human race.

But when God's fulness of time was come, suddenly the Spirit of God was seen brooding over this world. He said, "Let there be light." And what came? First, the Holy Ghost took possession of two aged persons, Zacharias and Elizabeth, filling them with Himself. They had a child by miraculous agency, who was to be "full of the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb." The Spirit of the Lord enabled them to make prophetical utterances, and they glorified God as to the coming of the Perfect Man. Then comes the Spirit upon an old man, Simeon, and a prophetess named Anna, so that they speak of the coming salvation about to be seen—a "Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel."

Then the Child Jesus is born into the world. God is seeking a godly seed, and the residue of the Spirit is working to get a godly seed. Christ comes into the world, and as He comes we know that He has not only been conceived of the Holy Ghost, but filled with the Spirit from the hour of his conception onward. He waxes

STRONG IN SPIRIT, EVEN AS A CHILD.

Then comes that mysterious Mid-Dispensation of Christ's life. I ask you to see now the Holy Ghost's operations confined, as it were, exclusively for a time to Him. God must have a perfect man, and through that perfect man a perfect creation. So Christ is brought from God the Father's throne to enter into human nature, that the Holy Ghost, who has been for four thousand years, apparently, working in vain, may begin to see of the travail of his Spirit, and be satisfied.

What see we now? Then comes the time when Christ is taken to the water to be buried for sin, as an embodiment thereof; mysteriously enacting in his own person the law of death which had been carried out in the time of Noah's Flood upon the whole human race. When the Flood had drowned all the guilty except that little remnant in the ark, there came a dove, which brooded over the face of the waters in the days of Noah, and brought an olive leaf, as if to say, "Peace, perfect peace," to those who would take it. Christ goes into the water, and is drowned as it were for man, that death may be carried out on Him typically or prophetically, as the representative or embodiment of the whole of human sin. As He comes out of the water, alive unto God, the Holy Ghost comes down as He was never seen before, and only on that one occasion—in the living form of a dove. He settles on the Christ, and God takes possession of Him, and abides.

And now Christ comes out of the water, filled with the Holy Ghost as never before, always full, but now filled with power for service. He passes into the wilderness as

THE REPRESENTATIVE OR INCLUSIVE MAN.

He has died as an inclusive man prophetically, as it were, but He now passes forth as a representative or inclusive man to fight, filled with the Spirit. He fights in the wilderness the devil and his angels, and gains absolute victory for man, and returns, as we read in Luke iv. 14, "in the power of the Spirit."

Then He begins to preach, and He says: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the Gospel to the poor." You read in after days (Acts x. 38) one great sign of Christ's ministry, as Peter describes it; "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power; who went about doing good." There is the whole of his ministry—the Holy Spirit of God works in Him, and enables Him all through the three years.

At last we come to the closing scene of his life. Is the Holy Ghost acting in the death of Christ? Yes. We read in Hebrews ix. 14, "Who through the Eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God." Christ passes to his death by the Holy Ghost's enabling. The Spirit of the Lord is upon Him and in Him, and Christ died literally by the Spirit's action, that there might be the perfected Man. And how perfected? Through suffering. The Holy Ghost has called Him to it, and the Holy Ghost has suffered with Him. The Holy Ghost has felt for the Christ, and He has borne all that He could for Him, in all the agony of our redemption, as the Spirit of the living God. Does Christ rise by the Spirit? Yes. "Declared to be the Son of God with power according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. i. 4).

THE MID-DISPENSATION IS NEARLY OVER.

The perfected Man has risen from the dead by the operation of God the Holy Ghost; men may now see in Christ what could never be seen before, the perfect Man and the only one; and it is all by the operation of God the Holy Ghost. Watch how there was the law of progress in Him. First the Spirit of God has brooded over the darkness; then He has entered into the womb of nature and caused a new man to rise—progress of light and birth-power, of life and dominion; exactly as after the six days of the creation, when the perfect man stood forth in the image and likeness of God, and it was said by the voice of the Holy Ghost again, "Have dominion, be fruitful, and multiply." Let God get the glory through the perfected man. Now the Holy Ghost speaks to the Christ at the close of the Mid-Dispensation, when Christ is perfected by resurrection from the dead, and He says, "Have dominion, be fruitful, and multiply." "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." Christ has done this, and the moment He rises from the dead, even before He ascends into heaven, He has one new power He never had before (I speak reverently of Him as man, not as God) all through his career upon earth.

Watch one beautiful trait in the working of Christ. Whatever He got as a man He gave. He never received from God what He did not pass on. The moment He rises from the dead He has one thing He never had before—the Spirit of life from the dead. He had never been dead before, and therefore He could not have it. But He has the Spirit of life from the dead now, and so, from the day of his resurrection, He enters mysteriously into the midst of the little band of disciples who had no real spiritual life yet, and He says, "Peace be unto you: as My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you. And when He had said this, He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost."

You remember how, when God had created the first man, before sin came, and the perfected man lay in his material form, the Lord breathed into his nostrils, and man became a living soul. Now, Christ has received the Spirit of God as life from the dead, and the moment He gets it, He breathes upon his disciples and says, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost."

WHAT IS THIS GIFT?

There has been much inquiry as to the distinction between this gift and the gift of Pentecost. It was just all that Christ had to give that day—the "Spirit of life from the dead." That moment He constituted the Church by that breathing, when they received from Him the Spirit of life from the dead. As He breathed upon them, chaos passed, order came, life began, and the Church existed.

But it is not yet empowered. "The Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified" (John vii. 39). He gave all He had. Now the Mid-Dispensation ends, Christ passes behind the cloud and enters into the glory of God the Father. But the moment He enters there, what does He attain to? When He rose from the dead He attained to certain privileges. He was no longer subject to the material laws of creation, no longer in the natural body. He passed from the natural into the spiritual body by the resurrection from the dead; and so He could pass where He would. All He could then give was the "Spirit of life." But now he rises to the glory of God, and He has got the Spirit of glory and power. And directly that little interval is over, and the fulness of time has come, we enter upon the third dispensation, the dispensation of magnificent spiritual advantages to men and to the whole of creation. Then God the Holy Spirit will see of the fulness of the travail of his Spirit, and be satisfied absolutely, as Christ will also be.

(To be concluded.)

DR. BAEDEKER'S TRAVELS.

In a recent communication from Dr. Baedeker, he says:—

I arrived at Salzburg yesterday, Sept. 10, and hope to go to Gratz to-morrow, thence to Vienna, Buda-Pesth, Bucharest, Odessa. The Lord has given many opportunities for testimony on my way. The Students' Conference at Frankfort was a time of much blessing, of which the fruit will be found in days to come. Then there were large Evangelistic meetings at Frankfort, Heidelberg, and Ludwigshafen, which were owned of God. From August 27 till Sept. 1, the Blankenburg Conference took place, which proved to be a time of real and, I trust, ever-deepening blessing to many, especially to pastors and ministers of the Gospel. Miss von Weling has now very superior accommodation for her guests, and the forest air of Blankenburg, in Thüringia, has a wonderful soothing and invigorating effect on overwrought brains and nerves.

From Blankenburg my journey took me to Stuttgart, where I had the joy of meeting with many Würtemberg brethren, being gathered at their annual conference at Karnthal; also in Stuttgart and Cannstadt many opportunities for testimony and fellowship presented themselves.

Surely everywhere in Germany the fields are white unto the harvest, but the labourers are few. Mr. Schrenk is not yet quite restored from the effects of his accident, and his strength is greatly taxed, and his time more than fully filled up. Mr. Reinmuth having died, there is a vacancy at Gratz to carry on the important work in that place which our brother and his wife have very efficiently carried on now for many years. May the Lord give the man of his own choice to fill up that vacancy.

The further to the East the less there is of light. This place, the most beautiful on the face of the earth with regard to scenery, is under the deadening power of Romanism, and every effort to bring in Gospel light is by Church and State suppressed. O for daring witnesses to carry the Gospel banner into the very enemy's strongholds, to be the bearers of light for the dark places of the earth. Bavaria, Austria, Hungary, Roumania offer great opportunities for men of courage, with hearts full of love to their fellow-men. How many lights are put under a bushel, or under a bed, which ought to be put on a candlestick! Even in many of the Roman Catholic countries of Germany there are ways to preach the Gospel by way of public addresses on some stated subject, without infringing on the law of these lands, which forbids such addresses to be given in the form of worship, i.e., with singing and prayer.

It is my great joy, and I count it a high privilege, to be allowed fellowship in the Gospel with some solitary labourers in the vast fields, but my time is running out, and Russia has claims on my time more urgent than even Germany. I shall be grateful to the Lord's remembrancers for their prayers on my behalf, and on behalf of the brethren in bonds.

THE PORTSMOUTH RESCUE SOCIETY and Protestant Home for Fallen Women continues its merciful ministry. During last year ninety-nine inmates were received, making, with those in the Home at the beginning of the year, 121 cases of rescue and protection. The report says: "The Home is situated in the middle of the chief naval town in the world, with its thousands of sailors, soldiers, and dockyardmen. It is a well-known fact, though a sad one, that troops of fallen women frequent the places where the men of the public services are stationed. Our Home is always open to receive these fallen ones when they express a well-grounded wish for reclamation. The Home requires about £3 daily for its present expenses." The hon. secretary of the work is Commander B. H. Key, Downham, St. Edward's-road, Southsea.

NEWS FROM MEXICO.

ROMISH PERSECUTION.

THE other day the wires were kept busy ascertaining my whereabouts. I was wanted in Saltillo, six hundred miles from here, where Rev. H. R. Moseley had been thrown into prison for publishing a tract in Baltimore, Md., U.S.A., on "Three Centuries of Romanism in Mexico," in which it was claimed that there were statements reflecting on the Mexican nation. The tract was in English, for circulation among English-speaking people. It was a blood-curdling story Mr. Moseley undertook to tell. He was unguarded in some of his statements, and they were liable to be construed unfavourably to the present condition of the Government and people, though it was evident that this was not his intention.

An American youth was spending the summer at Mr. Moseley's. He thoughtlessly said to an intelligent Mexican boy that before coming to Mexico he had read a tract by Mr. Moseley, from which he formed the idea that all the Mexicans were Indians. "I did not expect to find such clever fellows as you," said the American boy. The Mexican understands English well, so he said, "Can you show me the tract?" "Oh, yes," said the other. He read the tract, and became very angry, for, while he is a sceptic, his mother is a fanatical Catholic. He told a friend of his who had a grudge against Mr. Moseley. This young man wrote Mr. Moseley a sharp note, telling him that if he did not retract the statements reflecting on Mexico that he would publish them in Spanish. Mr. Moseley declined, not thinking that the boy would carry out his threat, but he did. There were published garbled extracts, half sentences, and many things that Mr. Moseley never thought of saying. The populace were worked into a perfect frenzy. Mobs rushed through the streets, hunting Mr. Moseley, and would have killed him if they could have found him. He was arrested for defamation of the Mexican nation.

When I arrived, I found the American Consul-General present, who was going to demand the unconditional surrender of Mr. Moseley. I begged him to leave the matter in my hands for a little while, which he did. I saw the governor, who is my warm personal friend, and also wired the particulars to President Diaz, who immediately wired for Mr. Moseley to be released, and also informed the prosecuting attorney that it was not the province of the Government to fight the battles of the clergy. Mr. Moseley left immediately for the United States, and no doubt his usefulness in this country is ended, as everybody believes that the Romanists would have him assassinated for exposing their corruptions in the past. Rome cannot stand the light of history.

Many friends are sending me by post packages of cards, tracts, and literature in Spanish. These have been distributed by myself and my native helpers. All classes of people receive them gladly. Let the supply be abundant and continuous. Remember that we have 11,000,000 people to be reached. I wish that we could sow down Mexico in Gospel literature while the doors stand wide open.

I am always glad to hear from those who help, and will gladly give any information that may be desired. The Holy Spirit seems to be moving some hearts to support native colporteurs in this country. I wish that these good intentions may materialise. Foreign nations must be evangelised through native workers in the main. They are so much cheaper, and there is less prejudice against them. At the present rate of exchange efficient colporteurs and native helpers, who could visit from house to house, and from town to town telling the old story, distributing Bibles and tracts, and preaching the word, can be sustained at a cost of from two to four pounds each per month. I will cheerfully select and take the oversight of these workers, and see that their reports are promptly forwarded to the one supporting them. My work is that of an organiser and general missionary. We have twenty-seven States, and two Territories. How it would cheer my heart to see one or more native workers in each of these, This has been a long cherished desire of mine. A brother in Christ was supporting twelve workers, and was about to appoint as many more when he died a year ago. He left a large sum by will to carry forward this work, but the family contested the will, and but little or nothing will ever go to this work in which he took so much delight.

W. D. POWELL.

Toluca, Mexico. August 27.

OUR work among the Romanists of Mexico City is attended by much encouragement. We have now four preaching stations, and hold services every night in the year. The two new stations are on important thoroughfares, and are filled at every service with people who never before heard the simple Gospel.

We have been compelled to put up a board screen in front of each street door, in order to shield audiences while we tell them of the love of the Lord Jesus; and the boards are pretty well pelted and spread with filth during each gathering. One soon becomes accustomed to such things, and while eager mothers with babes are listening, and hardened sinners stand hat in hand, pondering the words spoken, and children press forward for the tracts and cards kindly sent by English friends, we are unmindful of the noise and jeers made by the children of Rome outside.

In one of our new mission stations, the "Santa Maria" we call it, from the name of the street on which it is located, a bright young man has made a good confession before many witnesses. He left his idols, and humbly knelt to the Lord Jesus and accepted him as a sufficient Saviour. The next day his family turned him out of home, but he has remained steadfast, and wishes to be baptized.

Spanish Christian literature will at all times be acceptable. WILLIAM H. SLOAN.

"HONEST JOHN."

THE LATE MR. J. STEVENSON, J.P., LIVERPOOL.

ON Friday, August 10, there was removed from our midst, by death, in his sixty-sixth year, one who will be remembered as the kindliest of men. Mr. J. STEVENSON, J.P., rose from a humble position, by thrift and sterling worth of character, to be the head of a flourishing firm. His fellow-citizens elected him to the City Council, in which position he earned for himself the appellation of "Honest John," so straightforward were all his dealings with others. In 1886 he was made a magistrate for the City. While he was a terror to evil-doers, he was ever merciful to the young, making full allowance for youth, ignorance, and the surroundings of the unfortunate.

As a magistrate, no one took a deeper interest in the temperance movement, in the supervision of disorderly houses, and in the closing of public-house back-doors. He freely sacrificed time and self to everything which tended to purify city life. At the Licensing Sessions he would sit on the bench day after day, never missing a moment, no matter how pressing his own business might be, in the hope that he might be able to remove temptation out of the way of his weaker brother. To him and his like-minded magisterial brethren we owe much of the better state of the Liverpool of to-day.

But the writer knew him best as a Christian worker. It was here he shone brightest.

There had overflowed a considerable population outside the city boundary, and in the neighbourhood of Wavertree. At the time we write of it was a sort of no-man's land, as far as the means of grace were concerned. Mr. Stevenson had to pass and repass this daily in going to and returning from business. His kindly heart was moved again and again to do something to gather these people in to hear the Gospel. His first venture was not a success, but when another began to conduct services in a cottage, whom he did not then know, he readily joined in, and these two remained life-long friends, and continued to be co-workers. Soon the room in which the meetings were held became too small. A hall was built, chiefly by his liberality, and enlarged a few years after at his sole expense, current expenses being also met. Many in his position will give money to carry on Christian work, but Mr. Stevenson did not stop there. From the first he took his full share of the work. For the past eighteen years he was seldom absent from the Sunday-school, ready to take any class; but would never become superintendent, preferring a fellow-worker to have the place of honour. In his turn he conducted the evening service.

So dear to his heart did this work among the poor become that he resigned his office of deacon at the church, that all his time might be devoted to it. He was to be found night after night, now among the children, now among the social work, ever spending himself in the people's good. For young lads he manifested a special care; and all through the season he sent some twenty to the baths every Monday. To the poor he was particularly kind, always ready to hear and help. Many a sick one was comforted by his timely aid; often entering the home of sorrow, and leaving sunshine. For not only did he give material help, but his deep sympathy with the suffering was so real that they knew in him they had a true friend. These will miss him much. In all his giving the Master's rule was followed, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth."

As the district grew, he felt the need of more "house-to-house" visitation than he could personally undertake. He sought and obtained the help of the Town Mission. A missionary was appointed whose duty was to visit every home in the district. Under this new arrangement the work at the Hall continued to increase. Between him and the missionary there was the closest fellowship. Those who knew him most loved him best.

When the end came he was ready. For three weeks he had been confined to the house, but no one looked for death. In a moment the call was, "Come up higher," and "he was not, for the Lord took him." While he did so much work for Christ's sake, it would be difficult to find another with less self-confidence, or of a more retiring disposition.

THE HELPLESSNESS OF HEATHENISM.

DURING a recent visit to the island of Tsung-Ming, an old gentleman named Tsun, having heard us preaching in an adjoining street, invited us into his house to tell him more of the Gospel. Upon entering, a large number of his friends and neighbours surrounded us, when the old man, standing up in the midst, and with despair depicted upon his countenance, said:—"I am seventy-six years of age; my eyes are dim, my hands are paralysed, my whole system is breaking up, and soon, I know, I must die. I have worshipped all the idols and performed all kinds of meritorious deeds, and yet my heart is not ready; I am not prepared to die."

Such is the confession of a conscientious idolater; nor can idolatry offer any other testimony, being absolutely "without God and without hope in the world." Contrast this hopeless cry of the heathen with the triumphant song of the aged Christian:—"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Having therefore this glorious hope,

Shall we whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Shall we, to men benighted,
The lamp of life deny?

Salvation! oh salvation!
The joyful sound proclaim,
Till each remotest nation,
Has learnt Messiah's name.

SCOTTISH NATIONAL Y.M.C.A.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The delegation at this Conference, held at Galashiels from September 11 to 13, numbered 204 (including twenty visitors), from eighty-five associations. Among the visitors was Mr. J. Breckenridge, Newcastle, N.S.W. Very complete arrangements had been made for the comfort of the delegates, more than three-fourths of whom were welcomed, with true Border hospitality, into Galashiels homes. The proceedings of the Conference were characterised by a warm and prayerful spirit, and in every other respect crowned with success.

Prayer-meetings for definite blessing had been held for several weeks previous; also meetings of the Union on Sunday morning, two of the latter being addressed respectively by R. Henderson Smith, the Scottish travelling secretary, and Prof. Lindsay, D.D., Glasgow. The Sunday morning preceding the Conference saw at least 500 young men and women assembled in the Town Hall to hear Dr. Lindsay, who delivered a touching and impressive address on Paul's words, "Be ye followers of me even as I also am of Christ" (1 Cor. ii. 1).

Rev. Mr. Matheson, president of the local Fellowship Union, preached in the Free Church a stirring sermon to young men, during the day, from the 110th Psa. 3 v., and Dr. Lindsay preached to a large congregation from the pulpit of St. Paul's Established Church in the evening, his text being the somewhat singular one, "But if not," occurring in Daniel iii. 18.

The vestibule of the Town Hall and the Lower Hall presented an animated scene on the Tuesday evening when the delegates arrived. The large attendance of ladies and townsfolk, who had come to welcome their guests, betokened the hearty interest the occasion had created. A few informal words of greeting from Mr. Matheson, responded to by Mr. A. Kennedy, chairman of the National Executive, while tea was being served, preceded a reception by Provost Brown in his robes of office. The large hall was crowded to excess at the public meeting, the Provost presiding. The chairman welcomed the delegates in the name of the community. While expressing his sympathy with the work, he stated that in 1868, when the first conference was held in Perth, there were forty-six associations and 4225 members, while to-day there are 246 and 24,499 respectively. Rev. Mr. Spence spoke in the name of the churches. Mr. Kennedy replied for the delegates.

The features of the evening's programme, however, were a powerful address delivered by Dr. John Smith, Edinburgh, and the singing of Mrs. Oatts and a choir from Glasgow. Dr. Smith had for his subject "The Social Potencies of the Christian Religion," which he discussed in relation to the pursuit of truth, matters of public and social import, matters of purity and the pursuit of the moral ideal. The speaker contrasted various schemes for raising and saving society with the Christian faith, and sought to show that only the principle of sacrifice manifested and magnified in the cross of Jesus would prove of abiding efficacy. His eloquent address evoked much enthusiasm.

The prayer-meeting on Wednesday morning, presided over by Jas. H. Smith, Dundee, proved a time of sacred privilege, many attending and taking part. (We wish all late-comers to prayer-meetings could have heard the "pawky" but firm rebuke administered by the chairman this morning.) The subject of the first sitting of the conference, "The Responsibilities of Members of Associations," was introduced by Mr. R. Fleck, Saltcoats, in a practical paper, bristling with points. He divided members' responsibilities thus: (1) to God, (2) to ourselves as individuals, (3) to our fellow-members, (4) to our fellow-creatures all the world over. He proceeded to apply these divisions to public and private life, etc.; among his important points being the necessity for the daily maintaining of our spiritual vitality, setting our affections on things above. "This may be a platitude; God help us to make it a great reality." Bible study, attention to the development of our mental powers, the acquiring of ability to use our social instincts and opportunities in Christ's work were dwelt on. For public life he knew no better rule for Y.M.C.A. members than the golden rule, and strongly urged the duty of Christian men undertaking municipal duties. He thought the aims of the Association sufficiently defined in the Paris basis, and quoted, while deploring the lack of interest in Association finances, a proverb "made in Germany," "When amiability ceases, financial matters begin."

An interesting conversation followed.

At 11.30 a function called the Question Drawer began, with Mr. Hugh Macpherson, Falkirk, in the chair. Questions relating to the work and organisation were put into a drawer by the members and then pulled out by the chairman, who invited answers. Smoking, sport and pastimes, methods of financing, cards, and bazaars were among the subjects discussed. Smoking, some members thought, should not be tolerated, and others thought the matter should be left an open question. Sport and pastimes were dismissed as a subject too wide for a few minutes' discussion. Cards, the Conference would have nothing to do with; and bazaars of any sort found little favour. A short praise, prayer, and Bible-reading meeting followed, Mr. George Kydd, Montrose, presiding.

The business meeting was held in the afternoon, at which Mr. Young, honorary treasurer, submitted the annual report. It set forth that amongst manifold difficulties the work had been prosecuted with vigour. The speaker claimed that in a ratio to the population of the country, the Scottish Y.M.C.A. was not equalled by that of any country in the world. The number of associations is 240, and the number of members, associates, and juniors is 24,479; while honorary members numbered 902. The travelling secretary (Mr. Henderson Smith) and the treasurer also submitted reports. It was agreed that a week of special prayer be observed from November 11 to 17. Mention was made of Mr. Fermaud's intended visit in October.

The members and many friends accepted the invitation of Mrs. Brown, Galahill, mother of Mr. A. L. Brown, to a garden party. The weather was charming, and the outing was greatly enjoyed.

The Conference resumed at 6.30, with Mr. A. L. Brown in the chair. Councillor Fairgrieve read a paper on aggressive work. It gave rise to an interesting talk, which, however, got rather deflected from the subject by a chance allusion to the religious novels of the day. That part which did bear on the subject took more the form of testimony than a contribution of fresh methods.

A public meeting was held in the Public Hall, which was crowded to excess. The first part of the meeting was occupied with short addresses by Messrs. Breckenridge (Newcastle, N.S.W.), J. H. Smith (Dundee), and W. Henderson, assistant travelling secretary. Mr. W. A. Campbell (Glasgow), delivered a stirring closing address, on "The world for Christ.

A thanksgiving service was held on Thursday morning. The magnificent weather continued, and together with the national and classic interest of the Scott country, made the excursion to Abbotsford exceedingly enjoyable.

An evangelistic meeting, held in the Town Hall, on the return of the delegates, and attended by a very large audience, was addressed by Mr. W. Henderson, jun., and blessed with great spiritual power. Grateful recognition must be made of the splendid hospitality of Provost Brown and Mr. Gibson (Nintmailing) in providing luncheon for the Conference on the Wednesday and Thursday, the latter at the Waverley Hydropathic. Unmistakeable blessing attended the entire proceedings, and constituted the Conference one of the most successful ever held in Scotland.

WORK IN SOUTH-WEST LONDON.

Dear Sir,—I think I ought not to keep silence any longer as to the Lord's most gracious work in the Conference Hall in Eccleston-street. During the past ten years the blessing has gone on without interruption. Hundreds have been brought to the Lord through the ministry of scores of his servants. The little meeting of believers on Friday at eight, who come to meet the Lord only, and trusting that He is really there, and, therefore, not waiting for someone—a Saul, perhaps—to "conduct the meeting," has never once failed to realise He is there as the head of his body, the Church, and continually to answer the prayers of his people.

There are also weekly meetings for soldiers, policemen, cabmen, young people in houses of business, German governesses, children, Bible classes, and mother's meeting, which all seem to have God's blessing.

There is one special feature which I think important, and which I would desire to impress on young workers for the Lord. The meetings are all small, with the exception of one meeting of the young people in a house of business, where sixty to seventy gather weekly. We have not thought it for the Lord's glory to use any expedients to "get up a large meeting." We have had no choir generally, not even a harmonium, but believing, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto Me," we have desired to "wait only on the Lord." Where there is a decay of spiritual power it is a temptation to go down to Egypt for help.

The growing passion for musical services, and the decay of a spirit of prayer, may, I fear, be the outcome of so constantly trying to "attract people" by that which feeds the flesh, rather than by the Cross of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation. The upper room and the 120 gathered together of one accord prepared the way for the power from on high; and then the unlearned and ignorant Peter broke the power of an ecclesiastical and temporal domination of ten centuries, and by one short message from God was used to found the Church. This soon was the instrument of saving thousands, who in their turn were the messengers of God for the whole world. But catchpenny attractions, or even Sauls, head and shoulders taller than any of the children of Israel, will prove broken reeds against the great powers of darkness and the "wicked spirits in the heavenlies." For these the whole armour of God alone will avail.—Yours faithfully, Radstock.

THE NEW PASTOR AT WESTMINSTER.

Rev. W. Evans Hurndall, M.A., entered on Sunday on his new pastorate at Westminster Chapel, which has been without a regular minister for seven years. Both services were well attended.

In the morning, preaching from the words, "Make this valley full of ditches" (2 Kings iii. 16), the new pastor said the Church of God to-day has a great need. Its need is one, not many. Christ's coming to this world was of immeasurable importance, but his going was not of less importance, for it was needful for Christ to go, or the Spirit would not come. We now live, he continued, in the era of the Holy Ghost, and our need, the need of the Church, the need of the Churches, the need of godly men, and the need of ungodly men if they would but know it, is just that which God has provided for the era in which we live—the grandest of all eras. The early disciples had no such advantages as we have, but they had the Holy Spirit, and they have shamed every century that succeeded them, including our own vaunted trumpet-blowing century.

I could almost wish that at the forthcoming assembly of the Congregational Union, with which this church is connected, no words should be spoken from man's mouth to man's ear, but that every hour of that great convention might be given to crying to God for what we supremely need, the presence and the working of the Holy Spirit. In God's mysterious providence one of the humblest of his servants has been called to stand in this famous pulpit, for ever associated with the saintly Samuel Martin, and I would like to say at my very first service here as the pastor that I could not have come to stand here or to be your minister unless I had solemnly engaged with myself to depend upon one thing, and one thing only, and to recognise one need, and only one great need, and that the Holy Spirit. If my work here prospers it will be through the Holy Ghost.

DAN.

Tramps both were; outcasts stamped.

Gloomy, dejected, destitute. Friendless, homeless, hopeless. Not craving sympathy. Not seeking work. Thinking it no shame to confess that they came in because the hall was warmer than the street. Meat and drink they wanted, but liquor rather than food. Yes, they knew the drink was poison hurrying them on to the grave. "What would you have us live for?" growled Dan. "Any change we'd welcome. Could we be worse?"

Then their life story came—such a common-place one too. They had hugged sin; now they were having its wages. They were living advertisements of how it pays to serve the devil.

About the sowing and reaping both knew. They had had their seed-time; now they were harvesting—foretasting the joys of hell. The cup of reward was at their lips, and in bitterness, yet resignedly, they were sampling its fiery contents.

By their own folly outcasts for ten years! All that weary time miserable forsaken tramps. Save when in prison, rarely sleeping more than a couple of nights under the same shelter. As a rule hungry; at rare intervals "happy" when pouring spirits down to keep the spirits up.

Boycotted by the moral, shunned by the fashionable, "advised" by the one-day-in-seven Christians. Sick they were of hearing in nearly every town they visited, well-dressed, well-fed men and women sing,

Down in the human heart,
Crushed by the tempter,
Feelings lie buried which grace can restore;
Touched by a loving hand,
Wakened by kindness,
Chords that were broken will vibrate once more.

"If I went into one of their churches, would I get the touch of a loving hand?" asked Tom, with a meaning glance at his scanty and foul-smelling clothing.

He and his mate had hugged their sin close, and in return the old serpent had crushed all joy and was surely sucking the life out of them too.

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," and in early manhood they had chosen the dread Hell-hound for master. He had coursed them hard, enjoying doubtless the sufferings of his wretched hunted victims. They had eaten of the fruits of his garden. Choice fruit of its kind—"bitter, aye bitter," hummed Dan.

They came to the City together as lads. Lodgings were insufferably lonesome. The Young Men's Christian Association gave both a hearty welcome when they first called. After that nobody knew them, and the stranger lads were shy. The church was as cold as their furnished room; there was no cheery greeting in Christ's house for them, no warm friendly hand grip for the young voyagers as they entered and left the place where all had been counselled to be kindly affectioned one to another, to do unto others as ye would they should do unto you. It was all so different from the old home-life that they home-sickened. And then they lapsed, as so many do.

Their fellow-clerks invited them to the music-hall, to the theatre, to the public-house. They declined resolutely for a time. Around them everyone "put something on" horses, and the foolish lads listened to the fairy tales, and soon were reckless enough to become the easy prey of the tipster, who knows so well how to dupe those who trust his prophecies.

And soon their master knew. He could not afford to have betting men in his service, and with a month's salary he shook hands with the two friends and sent them adrift. Thus, not quite three years from home, they were fairly started on the down grade. For a time they "sponged" from acquaintances, but the strands of the thin rope of the worldling's friendship soon parted, and the pair were adrift hellward, floating with the flotsam and jetsam of the world's castaways.

Twice had Dan's mother sought her boy. Twice her strayed one had been gently drawn home. In the great family Bible his name stood under a pledge to abstain from drink. But the sin was in his heart, he was not "kept by the power of God" and when the tempter came down he went lower than ever. "She's gone now," he added, with a motion of the ragged sleeve of the many-coloured old waterproof that did duty for shirt, vest, and coat, "and I'm glad she never knew how deep I sank."

The chums were steeped in sin. Oh how repulsive it seemed, how terrible the penalty of choosing it! Ragged, hungered, abandoned. No money, nor hope of it; no work nor wish for it. Broken in health. Hearts turned to ice. Such comfort as they looked for that to be found inside a jail, or in that worse haunt known as "lodgings for workmen and travellers."

. . . . .

Changed for the worse. Cleaner, compulsorily; more grizzled, certainly. In the great hospital Dan lay a-dying.

I bent low to say I remembered him, and was startled by his abrupt question, "Do you mind that hymn, 'We shall all meet again on that great judgment morning; The books will be opened, the roll will be called'? Will I meet mother there?"

Ah! he had remembered!

A week later I sat with Dan's hand in mine. Suddenly he spoke. "If I asked Him, would He forgive all the past?"

Slowly I repeated, "Behold a man full of leprosy, who, seeing Jesus, besought Him, saying, 'Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean.' And Jesus moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, 'I will; be thou clean.' And immediately the leprosy departed from him."

Neither spoke for a time.

Soon his lips formed the words "moved with compassion."

Then I resumed, repeating slowly, "Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord, though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow, though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool. Before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear. Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea. Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out. I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions and will not remember thy sins."

"Be kind to the laddie when he comes home to die. Leave his room as it is. He'll like things as they used to be," the mother had said before her death, and Dan did go home to die in the cosy room of that many-gabled curiously-built old farmhouse. Sitting with him, each sister in turn had heard of the wondrous way in which the dear Lord had brought the poor waif to Himself, and ere the autumn leaves had all fallen, the three sisters had one by one yielded to the dying brother's passionate yet tender pleading to accept the Saviour's priceless gift.

"If only I might live my life over again," said Dan, a day or two before he swept in triumph through the pearly gates, "that I might plead with these dear fellows in the lodging-houses and jails." But the past was beyond recall.

The exile is at home;
O, nights and days of tears!
O, longings not to roam!
O, sins and doubts and fears.
What matters now? O, joyful day,
The King has wiped all tears away!

Gone to be with Christ, which is far better. No more cold. No more prison bars. No more weary trampings.

In his mother's grave we laid the poor worn-out body. On the old moss-covered stone in the lovely, quiet churchyard, beneath his mother's name, are cut the words:

Dan, aged 34.
Until we meet again before his throne,
Clothed in the spotless robe He gives his own,—
Good night.

What a grand reunion, the praying, believing mother welcoming the redeemed waif, rescued from the very jaws of hell!

. . . .

With fear and trembling the three sisters had come into the great city to tell their brother's story in the little hall where first I had met Dan.

Near the platform a fire threw out a ruddy glow, and gave an air of comfort to the otherwise gloomy-looking place, but surroundings were speedily forgotten as, in broken sentences, Dan's story was told by the eldest sister. Many in the audience had known the self-made outcast. Again and again the speaker stopped to sob. Rough men and, if possible, coarser women were constantly picking their hymnals from the floor to hide the great scalding tears they vainly tried to check.

As she wound up the sad story of the mis-spent life, as she told of the nights of prayer of the never-doubting mother on behalf of her son, wonderful utterance was given to her, and she rang out in burning words the good news of her brother's glorious and triumphant death, and of the Saviour's wondrous love.

His sister Mary next spoke. "My brother said, 'If ever you sing in the slums for Jesus, sing it,'" and a solemn hush fell on the meeting as she repeated softly, almost whispered, the refrain—

"We shall all meet again
On that great judgment morning."

Surely a live coal from off the altar touched her lips as she went on to plead with those who were making shipwreck of their lives, and who were treating God with indifference!

Then the youngest girl prayed, and as she pleaded with God on bended knee, a wondrous presence seemed to fill the room. One could not exactly say how it happened, but here and there men and women rose, as she told Jesus of their sins and their temptations, and their difficulties and their woes, and soon there was a little group of kneeling men and women round the sisters, clasping their hands and vowing, with tears streaming unchecked, their desire to have Christ as their all-in-all.

It was a girlish voice started it, but we all repeated it over and over again:—

Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidd'st me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God I come.

And somehow when the hallkeeper brought me the keys and said he wouldn't wait after eleven o'clock, I feared to lock those joyous newborn souls out to their misery. G. A.

THE PARIAHS OF INDIA.

The South India District Committee of the L.M.S. appointed a sub-committee some time ago to report on "the best method of elevating the depressed classes." It has done its work, and the results are published in Forward. A very full and careful account is given of the disabilities from which the pariah suffers—exclusion from wells, from Government hospitals and courts, and from village schools; his ignorance and degradation are powerfully set forth. "The custom of forging false documents in the names of pariahs, or of obtaining their consent to deeds, the purport of which they do not understand, is so common as to be regarded as a matter of course." These people generally are in a condition of practical slavery. In some cases ryots own whole families of pariahs in actual slavery.

The effect of the ignorance and degradation of the pariah is an abundant harvest of crime. Petty theft is too common to be noticed among a people whose normal condition is one of semi-starvation. The more serious crimes against property and person are directly attributable to the ignorance of the low-caste people, and their utter dependence for livelihood upon their more powerful neighbours.

In faction quarrels, which are most bitter and frequently lead to bloodshed and murder, the pariahs are useful as cats-paws of the opposing factions; and house-breaking, cattle-poisoning, grievous assaults, and murders, are frequently perpetrated through their instrumentality. If the crime is detected the poor pariah is the sufferer, whilst the instigator and real offender gets off scot free. Not infrequently the pariah suffers for crimes of which he is entirely innocent. The real culprits buy off the police and village officials, who, in their turn, screen themselves by concocting a case against a pariah, in which they have no difficulty in securing a conviction.

The pariahs have a desire for improvement, especially where they have come under Christian influences. As they begin to grow more and more discontented with their lot, and to hope for better things, they are being irresistibly attracted towards Christianity, and are looking to the missionaries for guidance and assistance. Says the report from which we have quoted:—

It is well for the higher castes that the work of emancipation is being thus peaceably undertaken, and it is the imperative duty of the missionary societies to give themselves whole-heartedly to the work. It is not too much to say that they are mainly responsible for the discontent and expectation that have been produced among the pariah population, and they are the best qualified to guide and control the forces at work to a peaceful and successful issue.

The sub-committee, however, do not mean that they wish to take in hand the social cause of the pariahs, for they say very wisely: "The struggle is and must be their own. Government and missionary societies can only render indirect assistance, to enable them to work out their own deliverance."

THE PERTH CONFERENCE.

The thirty-second annual Christian Conference was held in the civic Hall of the "Fair City" from September 11 to 13. This conference is, we believe, the second oldest in Britain, that of Barnet (now Mildmay) being the oldest. Local parties may lament the absence of distinguished Christian workers from a distance, and the loss of the joy of looking upon and holding face-to-face fellowship with brethren and sisters in the faith whom they could only meet in Perth once a year; but all must rejoice in the manifold multiplication of such gatherings throughout Great Britain and Ireland, although necessarily that happy fact deprives some local conferences of the position they formerly held.

During the lapse of years most of the original promoters of the Perth Conference have entered into rest, and now of all the company of gracious men who thirty-two years ago appeared upon the platform only two survivors—Mr. James Balfour-Melville, W.S., Edinburgh, and Mr. W. E. Malcolm, of Burnfoot—were present. A younger generation, however, has come to the front, among whom are Lord Kinnaird, Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart., and Mr. F. A. Brown-Douglas.

On the evening of September 10, a reception meeting took place, when many strangers were welcomed by the committee. Thereafter a prayer-meeting was held in the Free Middle Church for blessing upon the Conference, and an evangelistic meeting for women was held in the Boys' and Girls' Hall.

Next morning the usual hour was spent in prayer and the hearing of reports as to the work of grace at home and abroad. Similar meetings were held on the following three mornings. An opportunity, gladly seized, was given at these morning meetings to humble as well as more assertive workers to testify of the progress of the Lord's work, and many very interesting details were given. A marvellous ingathering by baptism at Rohilkund, N.W. Provinces, India, was vividly and pathetically told by missionaries—wife and husband.

The Conference proper began at 11 a.m., when there was a good attendance, Lord Kinnaird in the chair. The subject of Conference was in Himself, in Creation, Providence, and Grace. After praise, and prayer led by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Rev Professor W. G. Blaikie, Edinburgh, in an exceedingly rich and Scriptural discourse, opened up the subject, dealing with each part in a manner which deeply interested and instructed the audience. Try to think as they might of the attributes of God, who can by searching find out God, who can find out the Almighty to perfection? Speaking of the discoveries of the telescope and microscope in the last two centuries as revealing to us somewhat of the glory of God in creation, there was need, he said, of prayer for a sanctified telescope and microscope, and for scientific men, that they might not be satisfied with the contemplations of God's wonderful works in themselves, but might behold his glory in them all. He told the story of a young man who had called upon the late Mr. Fairbairn, of Newhaven, to inquire as to the truth of the innumerable stars and systems revealed by astronomy. When the youth was informed that it was all true, that there were about 500,000,000 stars within the range of the telescope, and that we cannot see anything like the limit of creation, he exclaimed, "What an awful thing to have the great God for an enemy." Might not they rather say, "What a glorious thing to have the great God for a Father and a Friend."

Providence often appears as a very tangled and ravelled skein, so much misery, sickness, wickedness, injustice, carnage, etc. Can it be that this system is used for the promotion of the glory of a holy and good Being? We should remember we see but a little part of God's plan; we do not see the relation of all the parts to each other. Nevertheless, we do get glimpses from time to time, and sometimes we see the whole scheme in a small scale, as in the Book of Job. There is a very beautiful verse in the epistle of James (v. ii.), "Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord: that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy." When the whole scheme has been wound up, the end is seen to be wholly gracious. Again we may see a chapter of Providence come to a close, e.g., the Reformation. Then in Rev. vii. we have a very fruitful and gladdening help to acquiescence in the mysterious providence of God. In the vision of the beloved disciple there is nothing but praise and thanksgiving. Those which came out of great tribulation had no fault to find with the discipline. It was the right way, the Lamb was leading them, and God wiped away all tears from their eyes.

Proceeding to speak of the glory of God the Father in grace, the learned professor said: The scheme of grace is the crown and climax of all his his ways of revealing Himself to men. The glory of God's righteousness, love, holiness, is seen in the grace. But another attribute seems to have impressed Paul—the glory of his wisdom. "O, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" "The manifold wisdom of God" (Rom. ii. 33; Eph. iii. 10). Wisdom is skill in the selection of suitable means to accomplish suitable ends. In the Word of God is the scheme of grace. In that scheme God brings back an alienated race, because He brings a mighty motive to bear upon the hearts of men, and draw out the affections to overcome the sinfulness of the heart. No other scheme—no human religion has such a propitiation—a bridge over the gulf of sin—a high priest over the house of God. He grieved over so many able men leaving out the propitiation for sin. As it was the eye of John the beloved disciple who discovered that it was the Lord who appeared on the shore, so it was the eye of Paul, the most learned of all the Apostles, who discovered the depth and riches of the wisdom of God in the Gospel scheme.

Rev. J. E. Houston, Cambuslang, and Rev. D. M. McIntyre, Glasgow, followed; the latter tracing the experience of Moses, and counselling his hearers to keep the sacramental rubric, This do as a memorial of Me, over all their life and conduct.

The afternoon conference continued the last sentence, and applied 1 Cor. x. 31, to daily life; and thereafter short addresses were given by Continental ministers and foreign missionaries. "The salvation of our children" were the subject of a prayer-meeting during the afternoon, and a meeting for ministers was also held at which Rev. H. Webb-Peploe, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Rev. Dr. Peloubet, Boston, and Rev. J. B. Figgis spoke.

In the evening the large hall was crowded, Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart., in the chair, and evangelistic addresses were given.

On the second day Lord Kinnaird was again in the chair, and the subject of conference was, "The Glory of Christ in his Person and Work and in his People."

Rev. J. E. Houston illustrated the subject by a detailed review of the Gospel story. Rev. J. B. Figgis treated mainly of the glory of Christ in his people. Every miracle, every word of his, was, indeed, a scintillation of his glory. The name of our Lord Jesus Christ was glorified when a church was called Christ Church, and when a college was called Jesus College, but ten thousand times more when a cup of cold water was given to a disciple in the name of a disciple.

Rev. Dr. Peloubet referred to the design on the boards of a book written by the great American infidel. There was there a cross, "for the glory of God," and telegraph poles, "for the good of man," But there was a great truth in the emblazonment of the scoffer which he did not see—the cross was above, the poles were below. Had there been no cross, there had been no telegraph poles. Some men were saying Christ was behind the age. He would say, so He is, as the wind is behind the ship—it makes it go. There had been no progress in the world without Christ.

In the afternoon, mission-work again held a large place. Short addresses were delivered by Miss De Broen (Paris), Rev. Francis Ashcroft (Rajpootana), Rev. Dr. Watson (Cairo), Rev. A. B. Wann (Calcutta), Rev. A. Tornory (Calcutta), Rev. Walter Joss (Madras), Rev. Egerton Young (missionary to the Red Indians), and Mr. D. A. Hunter (volunteer missionary to South Africa.

The evening meeting was entirely given to the missionaries, Mr. William Ferguson, of Kinmundy, being in the chair. Dr. Anderson, Formosa, speaking of the opium question, declared that notwithstanding adverse testimony in recent days, all missionaries would have to disbelieve the evidence of their senses were they to say that opium was not hurtful and a great hindrance to their work. He gave a very interesting account of the characteristics of the Chinese, and showed how often even the natural curiosity of the Chinaman provided the missionary with an audience.

Rev. Francis Ashcroft, Rajpootana, gave an account of Indian work. Rev. Egerton Young, missionary among the red Indians in Hudson's Bay Territory, described the lives of the people among whom he labours, and had much interesting and heart-cheering news to tell of their wonderful advance in civilisation and religion through the influence of the Gospel.

On the third day the attendance was large. The subject for the day was "The Glory of the Holy Spirit in Himself and his work, in the Church of Christ here and hereafter." Rev. Marcus Rainsford and Rev. J. B. Figgis were the speakers. In the afternoon the Communion of the Lord's Supper was celebrated, and in the evening an evangelistic meeting was held. A. K. McM.

PARIS WESLEYAN MISSION.

The Evangelistic Mission in Paris and other French towns, conducted under the direction of the Wesleyan Missionary Committee, has sustained a serious loss by the death of its superintendent, Rev. Wm. Gibson. At the time when the report of last year's work was issued, such an occurrence was among the least probable of events; and it is not difficult to read in the events recorded the designs and movements of the leader of the work.

Speaking in general terms the report says:—"France is ripe for the Gospel—riper than many other lands, and unless the Protestant nations around do much more than they have done hitherto to give it the light of life, its blood will be on their skirts at the day of reckoning. If ever the Forward Movement was needed, it is here and now. We do what we can towards it by cheerful meetings, lively singing, and, most of all, by going in and out among the people, and receiving them in our families as if they were our own brothers and sisters; but we long to launch out boldly on a much larger scale, and we would do it if so much of our time and strength were not taken up with the financial part of the Mission."

The missions at Rue Roquépine and other Paris centres, as well as at Rouen, Elbœuf, Havre, and St. Servan, are then described. The work of the Bible woman at St. Cloud is said to be of special value: "Many are the sick whom she has cheered with her sympathy, and not a few have been saved at the eleventh hour through her ministry of love. Only lately there was a very interesting case of a pronounced Freethinker, a woman who had always mocked at religion. Her sister had once belonged to us, but forsook us for reasons of self-interest, not daring to forfeit the custom of the well-to-do Catholics. At the same time she felt anxious about her irreligious sister, and implored Mdlle. R—— to try and awaken her conscience. It seemed impossible at first; the woman would not hear a word. 'Show me your God, and I'll believe in Him,' she said scornfully, and then turned her face to the wall and kept a stubborn silence. The visitor went quietly out, but returned to the attack the week after. This time the sick woman was a little less surly, but told Mdlle. R—— that she was being removed to the neighbouring village, and should be too far to be visited. However, nothing daunted, Mdlle. R—— found her out in her new home, and this unexpected devotion quite broke down the poor woman's opposition. Well, 'I will try to believe in your God,' she said with tears, 'since you have been so good as to come all this way after me.' She did not try in vain. The Lord is very near to all who call upon Him, and He soon revealed Himself most blessedly to her. She died, some weeks after, in perfect peace, and was buried by the Catholics, as we had not cared to trouble her last hours by pressing her to sign a paper wishing us to perform the funeral service."

The report continues: "It is the same thing here as everywhere, the masses are first reached, and through them we get to the upper ten. Our congregations gradually become more respectable, the 'ouvriers' bring their 'patrons,' the servants their mistresses, there being more familiar intercourse between the classes in France than in England. In one of our meetings, a poor woman, through her constant and impassioned testimony, was the means of bringing to the hall the lady at whose house she worked as charwoman. This lady, the daughter of a famous painter, showed interest in the preaching, and evinced her sympathy in a practical manner by helping with the Christmas tree. Another young servant's fidelity was made a blessing to a worldly woman who happened to be visiting her mistress."

A SLAVE RESCUE EXPEDITION.

In May last one of our boys, "Gordon," came to Dr. Fallon and me, in great distress. He had just heard that his sister, who had been stolen when a little girl, was now living in slavery at Matope, forty-five miles farther up the Shiré River. He asked leave to go and see if he could get her home. In a few days he came back to say he had seen and spoken to his sister, but her cruel owners beat her for asking to get away. Gordon offered to pay £2, or even to stay himself as their slave, if they would set her free.

It was decided that I should go with Gordon and get the girl away; and being specially commended to God both for the journey and the success of the mission, we started on Thursday, May 17, Gordon and three carriers accompanying me. I got such a hold on Isaiah xli. 10 that I felt sure of success. Mr. F. Millar gave me his repeating rifle in case of need, as we had to pass through rough country, infested with wild beasts.

The party having been joined by two others, one of them Gordon's brother Hugh, at Blantyre, and night having been passed in the forest, the station of the African Lakes Trading Co., at Matope, was reached. After resting for nearly two hours, I started for the rest of my journey. I had 3½ miles to go up the river to get where the girl was. My friends at the station kindly provided me with a boat and crew. Leaving our carriers, Gordon, Hugh, and I set off in the boat, our crew all excitement. Arrived at a landing-place, we walked for about a quarter of a mile, till we came to a village of three or four huts—the huts of the chief and his wives.

Into the enclosure we entered without the slightest ceremony, and

ASKED FOR THE CHIEF.

He was not at home. Then we asked for the lady, the chief's head wife. She was in one of the maize gardens. Gordon and Hugh went to the place, and found her and the girl at work. Gordon told his sister that we had come for her. The old lady at first refused to see me, but afterwards came alone, complaining that the girl had run away! The noise thus made gathered quite a crowd of men, women, children, and dogs. Some of the men had spears, others skullcrackers.

I asked the old lady where the girl was, Gordon interpreting for me. She denied all knowledge of her. I then told all the crowd that slaves were no longer allowed in this part of Africa, and that I had come to take the girl home to her own people. When the men heard this they began to mutter. Gordon told me they were saying, "If what this white man says is true, we must not keep any more slaves." But the old lady kept protesting her innocence, and ignorance of the girl's whereabouts.

I saw I should have to press my case; so, laying the rifle on my knee, I drew out my watch, and said to Gordon, "It is now four o'clock; tell the old lady that she must produce the girl by five, or else she will have to go to the 'Boma' (the native word for the Consulate)." She rose from the place where she had been squatting, muttering and grumbling that she had no girl but her own. I said, "Well, bring her, that we may see her." She set off, and I sent Hugh after her. While they were gone, I got a fine chance to talk to the crowd, and from slaves to men I, through Gordon, spoke to them about the slavery of sin and Satan, but of all the crowd (some sixty in number) only one had ever heard about Jesus or God.

As we were speaking, Hugh and the old lady returned, the latter saying that some man had stolen the girl, and she did not know where she was. She was beginning a long palaver, but I cut it short by telling her to go and as it was getting late, and I wanted to get down the river before sunset. Off she went, in a different direction. I told both Gordon and Hugh to go, and bring the girl this time. It was not long before I heard loud voices, and in a short time Gordon appeared, and with him a stout young woman, whom he, with tears of joy, introduced to me as "his sister, truly! truly!" Behind them came Hugh and a whole crowd of men and women.

The girl dropped at my feet, and the crowd gathered quite close round us. Pointing to Gordon and Hugh, I said to the girl, "Are these your brothers?" In good English, for she had been at school at Blantyre, she said, "Yes."

"Do you wish to be taken home?" "Yes."

"Will you come with me to-night?" "Yes."

I said to the people, "You hear what she says; and now I am going to take her."

I told Hugh to lead the way. I put the girl next, and followed her, with the rifle in hand. Gordon came behind, and after him our boat's crew, the whole crowd shouting at the top of their voice. I saw no more of the old lady. I think she was afraid I was going to take her also!

Thus we marched to our boat. I had the girl put in first, and before we rowed away I got Gordon to tell the crowd that what I had just done should be done to all slaves; that they were the slaves of Satan, but that Jesus had come to set them free, if they would let Him. We pushed out into the current of the river. By 6 p.m. we had arrived at the African Lakes Company's station again. The sail down the river was very beautiful, with the setting sun shining on the range of mountains behind. The banks of the river in some parts were covered with flowers hanging down to the edge of the water, and here and there a group of natives standing in amazement looking at us, while several canoes crossed from one side to the other. Our friends at the station were quite surprised that I had got the girl with me, and more so when I told them I did not so much as pay one penny for her release. I had thus a grand opening for giving them my testimony, and I told them it was not I, but God who

HAD GIVEN US THE VICTORY.

After dinner we started for home. About eleven o'clock, as we were going through a thick wood, my ear caught a sound I had not often heard. Calling a halt, I heard plainly the roar of lions not far off. Now was the time to trust, and again I felt perfect confidence in God. I knew my boys well, and told Gordon to tell them what the white man's God had said to him. Every now and then the sound could be heard, for a time more and more distinct, and then gradually it became fainter and fainter, till before we rested at one o'clock it had died away.

We slept until five o'clock. An hour later we were on our way again. We had not gone more than a quarter of a mile when we saw a party of men sitting on the road, with the remains of a huge fire by them. They told us they had had no sleep, as lions had been "plenty," and all around them. Within a few yards of where they were sitting, we could distinctly trace the marks of their feet in the sand. Going on some further distance we met about sixty men and women, who told us that lions were many, and that they had had to sleep in the trees, as they were afraid to sit by their fires. All along the road in the sand for three or four miles we saw the footprints of the lions. We heard a sound in the distance just before seven o'clock, and we stood still to listen. Once more in the far distance we heard the roar of the lion. My boys said there was no more to fear, for the lion was now going to his lair. That was how he roared before lying down. So God made good his precious promise.

Gordon, with his sister and Hugh, having parted from us to go to their home, Blantyre Church was reached, and at 5.45 p.m. on Saturday we arrived at Masidi, truly thankful that God had honoured me to set at liberty at least one slave, and that I had in such a wonderful way proved Him to be faithful to his promises (Isa. xli. 10; Luke x. 19). Truly

They who trust him wholly
Find Him wholly true.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.—The 76th annual report says: "For the benefit of seamen this Society unites in various ways, 97 ports, and in these ports there are 100 stations, eighty-five Institutes, Rests, Bethels, reading-rooms, and homes, while for work afloat there are three floating bethels, three steam launches, twenty-eight sail and row boats, 150 workers, including missionaries, colporteurs, matrons, Christian boatmen, and helpers." Although its income last year, including balance brought forward, large special sums and amounts locally raised and expended, amounted to £22,318 6s., yet such has been the extension and response to urgent appeals for help from ports, near and distant, that to retain and complete work additional help will be needed. Three new Sailors' Institutes, at Falmouth, St. Petersburg, and Dover, are now in progress. The headquarters of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society is at Sailors' Institute, Shadwell, E.

HANG-CHOW MEDICAL MISSION.

In the annual report of the C.M.S. Hang-chow Medical Mission, Dr. D. Duncan Main gives a deeply interesting account of the progress of the work. During the year 12,074 new patients passed through the dispensary. Out-patient work alone is not wholly satisfactory, but as a "feeder" to the hospital, where patients can be more carefully looked after, it plays a very important part. Proceeding to speak of the hospital work, Dr. Main says:—

"Many of the diseases are so chronic, and so aggravated by native quacks, that even with the best hospital treatment we can do little to relieve them. As a rule they come to us after all other plans have failed. Idols, astrologers, fortune-tellers have been consulted; the wonderful virtues of tigers' bones, snakes' skins, and dragons' teeth have been tried; charms have been used to expel the evil spirit and pacify the offended gods, and when they have spent all and are nothing better they come to us, hoping to be cured, many of them 'right off.' Not a few are brought to us in the last stage of fatal sickness, and when we tell them that they cannot be cured their friends are most unwilling to carry them away, and often remain for hours on the Compound, pleading with us most earnestly on their knees, and knocking their foreheads on the ground, to save them. It is hard to convince them that there is a limit to our power.

"The patients while in the hospital are expected to contribute towards their board. Many of them, however, are too poor to give anything towards their support, but through the kindness of friends who maintain cots we are able to receive them free. Still there are many of the Chinese who are both able and willing to pay for treatment, and are not the proper objects of charity, and ought not to be treated on charitable lines."

Of the medical class, Dr. Main says:—"The success that has already followed the work of those that have been trained by some of us, abundantly justifies the time and money spent in educating them. Our students are all Christians, and we daily try to keep before them that their knowledge of medicine is only a means to an end."

During the year ninety-seven opium smokers were treated in the Refuge, and 580 passed through the dispensary. Dr. Main says:—"The fact of so many applying for treatment is some proof of the prevalence of the vice. With regard to the actual extent of opium-smoking here, there are no data from which to make a reliable statement; however, there are over 1,000 registered opium dens in the city, and it would seem that opium-smoking is steadily increasing. In former reports I have freely given my opinion as to the degrading and demoralising effect the vice has upon its victims, and another year of daily contact with them only confirms my convictions of its ruinous effects."

The Leper Hospital admitted fifty-four patients, and two of the inmates became Christians. Under the head of "Evangelisation," the report says:—

"During the year the three hospital evangelists did faithful and patient work in the wards, dealing personally at the bedside with the patients, teaching them to read and instructing them in the Way of Life. About 2000 services were held in the hospital during the year. They also visited the homes of all the patients who, while undergoing treatment, showed an interest in the Gospel. We look upon this part of our work as most essential. Impressions made in the hospital, if not deepened in the home, very soon pass away."

MR. INGLIS AT THE POLYTECHNIC.

The special services conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis, at the Polytechnic, Regent-street, W., during August and September have been signally owned and blessed of God. Not only has the large hall been crowded to its utmost capacity, but, better still, numbers have stepped over the line. The work has been specially interesting and fruitful among men. The afternoon gatherings have been largely attended, and God's people have been greatly stirred and helped. The Bible lectures proved times of much spiritual profit and refreshment from the presence of the Lord. The Thursday evening meetings have also been well attended and encouraging.

Mr. Inglis holds his farewell meetings on Sunday, at the Polytechnic, prior to his departure for America. He sails in the s.s. New York on Sept. 29, hoping to evangelise in the various cities of the Western States. His standing address while in America will be, care of Col. Janeway, New Brunswick, New Jersey, U.S.A.

MR. McNEILL IN MELBOURNE.

In The Presbyterian Monthly for August, published in Melbourne, there appears a leading article on the mission lately conducted by Messrs. McNeill and Burke. The writer says of Mr. McNeill:—

"His appearance in Melbourne has been nothing short of a phenomenon. The city has been moved, certainly as no other preacher has yet moved it. He came quietly, without beat of drum or any other sensational preliminaries, stepped on to the platform, opened his lips, and at once thousands hung upon them in breathless suspense and admiration. His meetings have been described in a daily paper as worship reduced to its simplest elements. His message is nothing new. It is just the Gospel; the Gospel simply, fully, wholly, only—nothing but the Gospel. He is a preacher of Christ announcing God's own message to the weary heart of humanity. As to his manner, there is no pretence, no straining after effect, no conventional parade. He is plain, unaffected, pointed, homely, and burningly earnest. His freshness, quaintness, and naïve and exuberant humour constitute an element of no small attractiveness. He is a man of clear, strong faith, and never doubts his message or his Master. Hence he speaks from the heart, straight to the heart, and quickly touches the deep and indestructible instinct of religion that lives in all humanity. This to some extent accounts for the wondrous spell which he exercises over vast crowds of people. But, indeed, in order to be understood he must be heard. About the only thing that we can confidently say of him is that he is an instrument in the great Master's hand, specially raised up, and specially equipped, for a special and greatly needed work. He puts forth no claim to be anything more. Like one of old, to whom probably he bears no small resemblance, 'he was in the deserts till the day of his shewing unto Israel.'

"What as to results? These are two-fold—visible and invisible. The visible are patent enough, and striking enough withal. They are thus described in a leader in the Argus, whose reporters have been eagerly scanning and recording them:—'The largest buildings in the city are too small for the crowds which are attracted. The church where Mr. McNeill is about to conduct a service, even at the busiest hour of a week-day, resembles nothing so much as a besieged city. Excited crowds gather round the doors, which have to be locked long before the time fixed for the service, to prevent a rush dangerous to life and limb. Disappointed groups rush distractedly round the building seeking for some unguarded means of access. Grave divines turn burglars and climb laboriously in at the windows, while well-dressed ladies contend with each other at the doors, not so much for priority of entrance as for the privilege of standing next to the doors which are hopelessly barred to their entrance.'

"And what as to those results which the eye cannot take in? These are with God. We have no doubt that numerous conversions are already recorded. Of these, as in all cases of revival, we are ready to speak with bated breath. But this we do know, that thousands have been profoundly impressed with the presence and power of eternal realities. Mr. McNeill's words have fallen like a bombshell on the hearts of multitudes in our pleasure-loving city. And our strong hope and expectation is that through the outpouring of the Spirit from on high, while many cold lethargic hearts will feel the warm throbbings of fresh life, a great harvest of souls have been gathered for God."

[From our own Correspondent.]

Another memorable week has passed. The greatest event in Melbourne has been the daily meeting in the Town Hall, when business men have packed the hall in every available space, the ladies' portion being gradually reduced, till the announcement was made on Friday by Mr. McNeill that the meetings would be continued next week, commencing on Tuesday, but the only accommodation for ladies would be in the clock gallery and the organ gallery behind the platform. Mr. McNeill's manly utterances draw out the men to his meetings, and one of the most striking features of the "Exhibition" gatherings has been the large proportion of the male element.

The past week's services at the Exhibition have been larger than the previous week, and the impression made has been even deeper than before. Mr. McNeill has not held after meetings regularly, but has adopted various methods of driving home the truth, and urging decision for Christ.

If there is any special feature of Mr. McNeill's preaching that must strike the faithful Christian with admiration, it is the magnificent manner in which he exalts the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour. Some of his perorations, from an oratorical point of view, were simply grand; but their grandeur consisted more than all in the way in which he gave glory to Jesus, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world. His oratory seems the natural passion of his fervent soul, and as he puts all his force into his preaching it tells with striking effect.

Mr. Burke has day by day and night by night sung the Gospel to the crowds, and led the great choir which has helped him in the presentation of the truth by song. He has also kept his companionship with Mr. McNeill in having a bit of a slip off his horse, which came down with him on a muddy bit of ground. He was none the worse for it. Colonials say a man is not a rider till he gets three falls, so they are both on the highway to becoming expert horsemen.

This week the evangelists go to Geelong to hold evening meetings in the exhibition building there. This involves a hundred miles' railway travelling per day, as they continue the mid-day business men's meeting in the Melbourne Town Hall.

NOTES.

Mr. Soltau, from Tasmania, is now holding an eight days' mission in one of the Melbourne suburbs.

The twenty-first annual Christian Conference, in connection with the Melbourne Y.M.C.A., begins to-day, Monday, August 13. The subject for the Conference is "The unsearchable riches of Christ" (Eph. iii. 8). The sittings of the Conference will continue from Tuesday till Friday. The chairman is the Ven. Archdeacon Langley, who is now returning to reside in Melbourne after several years' ministry in Gippsland.

Dr. Talmage is expected in Melbourne this week, when, doubtless, crowds will attend his lectures.

Already preparations are being made for the fifth annual Convention of the Victorian Christian Endeavour Union, which is to be held on September 13 and 14.

A CONVERTED JESUIT.

It was my privilege on Sept. 9 to witness, in a village in Western France, a very touching ceremony—the admission into membership of the Reformed Church of France of the youthful ex-Jesuit priest Victor Aubert, whose conversion was recorded in The Christian of May 10 last. The new convert expressed his thankfulness to God for having rescued him from a system of formalities and ritualism quite unsatisfying to the cravings of his soul. He spoke very quietly, almost timidly, and the effort was evidently painful to him; but his humility and simplicity touched all hearts.

In the evening we had an evangelistic service in the church, followed by a social entertainment, at which we were the guests of the Y.M.C.A. An earnest address to believers was given by Mr. Hathaway, of Cherbourg, and Mrs. Hathaway also spoke with loving fervour and power. M. Lacune, the earnest evangelist of the district, also addressed us. It is hoped that M. Aubert will be enabled to pursue his theological studies, and become qualified for pastoral work. This case should extend and deepen interest in the work among converted priests, of which Professor Bertrand, 86, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly, Paris, is the director.

NATIONAL PROTESTANT CONGRESS, EDINBURGH.—Mr. C. J. Thynne, Wycliffe House, 6, Great Queen-street, W.C., is endeavouring to arrange a visit to Scotland on co-operative principles. The inclusive cost, for journey from St. Pancras to Edinburgh, two days' excursions, and other charges, will be five guineas, while the railway fare alone will be only £1 10s. Arrangements can be made for parties to join the train at Birmingham, Leicester, Derby, Manchester, Liverpool, and other places. The trip gives a good opportunity for Southerners to cross the border, and it is hoped that 200 will communicate to Mr. Thynne their intention to join the train on Saturday morning, October 13, returning on the following Saturday.

S.A. RESCUE WORK.

Some idea of the extent and importance of the rescue and women's social work of the Salvation Army could be gathered at the headquarters of that branch, 259, Mare-street, Hackney, last week, when Mrs. Bramwell Booth and her coadjutors celebrated the tenth anniversary. A sale of fancy and useful needlework was held in a marquee erected in the garden, the stalls being furnished by the different homes, supplemented by a display of fruit, vegetables, and Salvation Army matches. There was also an exhibition of various Salvation Army industries, with girls at work. Close by is the Salvation Army Maternity Hospital, and many of the visitors availed themselves of the opportunity of inspecting the wards of this useful and well-appointed home.

The first day's proceedings commenced with a luncheon in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Hackney, presided over by Mrs. Bramwell Booth. After luncheon Mrs. Booth thanked the company for their sympathy with the great work in which she was engaged. They had at first only hoped to raise £500 at this festival, but that sum had almost been subscribed, and now they aimed at getting £1000, which would free them from the burden of debt till the end of the year. They now had fifteen rescue homes at work, one hospital, three women's shelters, four separate industries, and five homes for working women of good character, some of whom had passed through the rescue homes. Since they began this work 10,600 women had passed through their rescue homes. They were pressing forward with the midnight work, and they had also been very successful in getting hold of prison cases. Wonderful opportunities presented themselves, and only recently they had been requested to take over several rescue homes in different parts of the kingdom, but they had decided that they could not undertake any fresh burdens and responsibilites at present.

Mr. Richard Cory addressed a few words of encouragement to the gathering, and finished by offering £20 to the funds of the work, which he described as most necessary and blessed.

Thanksgiving services were continued on Thursday.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.

Mrs. Amanda Smith has been in Ireland for some time, and her visit has been made a great blessing to many. She concluded a brief mission in Ormeau-road Church, Belfast, which attracted great attention. Very large congregations assembled, and deep and solemn impressions were made on those present. Many of the Lord's people were led into a richer and deeper experience, and others were brought to decision for Christ. The after-meetings and meetings for testimony were such as can never be forgotten.

She left for Liverpool on Thursday, September 6, accompanied by the prayers and good wishes of those who heard her. She will long be gratefully remembered. It is earnestly hoped she may be induced to visit us soon again. James Kirkwood.

DR. SAIKI.

Sir,—This noble young Japanese doctor is not at Tokio, as stated in your recent sketch, but at Kyoto, 329 miles away from the modern capital. Kyoto is the ancient sacred capital of Japan.

He has not yet "established a Maternity Hospital," but is very anxious to do so, as explained in a long letter from himself to Dr. Barbour, of Edinburgh, within the last month, whose intimate friend he has been for some years.—Yours faithfully,

E. A. Gordon, Author of "Clear Round."

ANDREW BLOODWORTH, a well-known local temperance advocate, whilst addressing a public meeting in the village hall at Charlton Kings, Cheltenham, last week fell back, and before medical assistance was at hand expired. Deceased was just terminating an address. He leaves a widow and six children.

SANITATION IN CHURCHES AND CHAPELS.—The difficulty so often felt in securing the intelligent working of warming and ventilating apparatus will make many welcome some clear and explicit rules, drawn up by a sanitary engineer, and printed on a card suitable for hanging up in a vestry or class-room. ## CIVIC REFORM.

In the current issue of The Review of Reviews Mr. Stead formulates a programme for civic and social reformers. We give the twelve points of his scheme. They are all good and most desirable things to aim at; but at best they are only half-way houses to the true goal. Let people's hearts be savingly changed, and these points, individually considered, will virtually settle themselves:—

I. Apathy.—Whereas in a democratic state the only safeguard of the interests of the commonweal is to be found in the general, intelligent and continuous interest which the citizens take in the good governance and pure and efficient administration of public affairs—whether national, municipal, or parochial—it is of the first necessity to dispel the natural apathy and indifference with which large masses of people regard all public questions, and to arouse and maintain among all citizens a sense of their civic responsibilities, and the religious duty of public service.

II. Peace.—Whereas the maintenance and cementing of peace, private, social, industrial and national, is the condition of all orderly progress, it is the duty of all good citizens associated in this union to promote peace and ensure it, (a) by promoting friendly arbitration in the place of hostile lawsuits; (b) by seeking to establish conciliation in industrial disputes; (c) by encouraging the growth of feelings of fraternal unity between the nations, especially those of the English speech.

III. The Unemployed.—Although the pitiful condition of the workless workers is a reproach to civilisation and a menace to social peace, no general agreement exists at present as to the true solution of this problem. There is, however, no difference of opinion as to the first step that must be taken, viz., that as a condition precedent to any intelligent handling of this question, the unemployed should be correctly, periodically and systematically enumerated on a uniform plan, so that it may be known how many there are, where they are to be found, what they can do, and what are their present means of subsistence.

IV. Drunkenness.—Agreement as to legislative remedies has not yet been arrived at, but no difference of opinion exists as to the evils of drunkenness and the duty of all good citizens individually and collectively to enforce the laws which exist for the prevention of intemperance, and to resist any and every attempt to place the administrative, judicial, or legislative authority under the control of the purveyors of intoxicants.

V. Temperance.—That ample opportunity should be afforded for supplying the needs of the community for recreation and refreshment, apart from premises licensed for the sale of alcoholic drink.

VI. Associations.—The promotion of voluntary associations among the people for the purposes of providence, co-operation and mutual help is an object on which there is no difference of opinion, for the average individual in modern society without association is practically helpless.

VII. Civilisation and Education.—All good citizens can unite in the effort to make elementary education more efficient and universally accessible, to extend university teaching, to promote technical education, to establish libraries, reading rooms, residential settlements and polytechnics, and other means of education and civilisation.

VIII. Charity.—The co-ordination and co-operation of all existing modes of charitable relief is indispensable to secure adequate assistance for the deserving, and the repression of incorrigible idleness and professional mendicancy.

IX. The Afflicted.—The effective supervision and the progressive improvement of all existing arrangements for the collective treatment of the orphan, the sick, the aged, and the afflicted is an object recognised as a duty by all sections, sects, and parties.

X. Vice and Crime.—The discouragement of all public incentives to immorality and gambling, the enforcement of the laws against crime, and the making of due provision for the rescue and restoration of the criminal and vicious, are duties which no church or party disputes.

XI. Health.—The promotion of sanitation, the provision of adequate and healthy house accommodation, and the preservation of open spaces form a common ground for common action.

XII. The Home.—The duty of securing sufficient leisure for the father to make the acquaintance of his children, and for the mother to discharge her maternal and domestic duties, the promotion of all that fosters, and of opposing all that impairs, the sanctity and happiness of the family, form part of the universal creed of all good citizens.

REMEMBER THIS, my son, yielding to temptation to-day is inviting the tempter to come back and see us again to-morrow.—A Mother's Letter.

CONFERENCE IN THURINGIA.

We look back with feelings of deep gratitude to our past Conference, which took place August 27 to September 1. The subject brought before us was a rich one, "Christ all in all," and stress was laid on the complete Saviour, as revealed to us in his Word, and the complete salvation prepared for those who are willing to accept it.

A true Alliance spirit prevailed throughout the assembly, which was composed of ten different denominations. Our dear friend Dr. Baedeker worthily represented the British Committee of the Evangelical Alliance, and brought us a brotherly and sympathising letter from its secretary, Mr. Arnold. Rev. Graves Walker also was among us, to our great joy, and his addresses at the Conference as well as his daily Bible readings were greatly blessed to many. Other English and Irish friends, too, were present, so that our gathering was quite international, and much sweet fellowship was enjoyed, not alone in the meetings, but also during the walks and drives in our lovely woods and dales, in glorious summer sunshine.

Among German speakers who were present, and whose names may be known in England, we mention Pastor Jellinghaus, of the State Church of Prussia; Pastor Ernst Gebhardt, of the Episcopal Methodist; Pastor Meyer, of the Baptist Church at Budapest; Pastor Frank, missionary to the Jews at Hamburg, and Colonel von Knobelsdorff, the leader of the temperance movement in Germany.

We feel much cheered by the fact that at this our ninth conference, as at its predecessors, several were won for Christ. Now that our winter work is soon beginning, we ask for the prayers and sympathy of our English friends. The present dimensions of the mission carried out from this house are so increasing that the load of work laid upon some shoulders has become almost too heavy, and we often wish that some English Christians, with time and a little private means, might feel inclined to give us their help.

FLORENCE MEDICAL DISPENSARY.

The third annual report tells of good work. During last year forty-one different towns and villages sent patients; and while bodily ailments have been attended to, the Gospel has been lovingly presented to the people. The report says: "As an adjunct to the dispensary, we have engaged a room in the house of our district nurse, and have used this for patients coming from the country and requiring two or three days close attention, or for operation cases after the operation. Three patients have availed themselves of this nucleus of a hospital.

By the Soup Kitchen relief has been given to the poor. As affording some idea of the superstition and error which prevail in the rural districts, from which many patients have come, it is related that a priest, lately, in one of the village churches—having to preach a special sermon on the Madonna,—gave out his text: "By one woman sin entered into the world, and by one woman came the forgiveness of sin." With the exception of one of the dispensary patients, the audience were quite innocent of the fact that the text existed only in the priest's imagination.

The report is signed by Signor Luzzi, pastor of the Waldensian Church, and Dr. Thomas Henderson. Communications in England may be addressed to Capt. Keith Wisely, R.E., 12, Palace Court, Bayswater, W.

DONCASTER RACES.

Messrs. Heath and Carter, of the Open-air Mission, visited Doncaster to assist the local workers at the races. For many years the Christians in Doncaster have taken the greatest interest in such work, and a daily prayer meeting is held during the race week to seek God's blessing. Friends also meet to fold the tracts and papers for distribution. About 24,000 books, tracts, and Scriptures (portions) were distributed on and around the course, and at the open-air gatherings. The services were continued till 10 p.m., and even later, as many were anxious to listen, and tears were visible in some eyes.

Drunkards and harlots gathering around the meetings heard the news of free salvation, and many were touched to the heart. The language on the racecourse was most repulsive. Mr. Heath testifies that he has never heard worse, although engaged in the work for many years. It is this poor, degraded people that the open-air mission is seeking to reach, and God has wonderfully owned the labours put forward by its agents and preachers. The tracts were well received, many expressing thanks. May God grant that the written and spoken Word shall prove of power to many a soul's salvation.

CORNISH COAST MISSION.

The annual meeting of this branch of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society was held last week, under the presidency of Lord Roberts, at the Town Hall, Fowey, which was filled to overflowing. The chairman said all who were acquainted with the life of seamen, the dangers to which they were exposed when afloat, and the temptations which met them on shore, would feel that societies of this kind should be earnestly supported.

Rev. G. J. Hill presented a most encouraging report, showing that the Sailors' Home at Fowey had been well frequented by seamen during the past year, that many letters had been received from old boarders referring, in grateful terms, to the kindness received from the manager, Mr. Lloyd, and his excellent wife. The reading and recreation-rooms had been largely attended, and the mission services and temperance meetings had resulted in the conversion and reclamation of very many seamen. The shipping, not only in the harbour of Fowey, but also at Par, Charlestown, and adjacent ports, had been visited by the missionary, and much good had resulted. Mr. James, the sailors' missionary, gave a cheering account of his work.

Miss Weston, who was warmly welcomed, said she had journeyed from Portsmouth, chiefly, if not entirely, in order to attend this meeting of a society in which she had felt interested for the past twenty years or more. This was only one of its branches, but she was glad to find it in so flourishing a condition and so influentially supported. Hers was not a limited experience of Sailors' homes and rests, but she had never found a brighter, cleaner, or more comfortable looking place than this at Fowey. The fact that the work was carried on at such a small cost spoke volumes for the care, prudence, and foresight of those entrusted with its management. She hoped all the help needed would soon be forthcoming for the support of this useful and important work.

The annual meeting was immediately followed by special mission services, conducted by Rev. G. J. and Mrs. Hill.

ANTI-LYNCHING COMMITTEE.

Sir,—The news which reaches this committee from our coloured friends in the United States of America is now of a more hopeful character. Encouraged by British sympathy, they have already organised Anti-lynching Committees in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, and other important cities, and in Boston several of the leading white citizens have pledged themselves in support. Amongst the speakers at the Boston meeting was Mr. William Lloyd Garrison, whose statements are more condemnatory than any hitherto made by coloured or white persons in this country.

The conspiracy which resulted in the recent awful massacre of six negroes suspected of barn-burning near Memphis, Tennessee, has at length roused the Governor's attention, and the civilised world is waiting to see if a jury can be found which shall mete out the same degree of punishment to these white murderers as would be meted out were they coloured men.

Permit me to contradict a statement which has appeared in certain papers. It was not Governor Northern, but another Governor (whose name, for the sake of the honour of his State, I suppress) who said he would gladly lead a lynching party. Governor Northern, as well as Chief Justice Bleckley, of Georgia, some time ago set a worthy example by proclaiming against lynching.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—On behalf of a special series of Sunday evening addresses by Rev. David Baron to Jews and Christians, at Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater, commencing on the 23rd inst.—Special prayer is asked for two meetings to be conducted at the Hertford Y.M.C.A., on September 21, by Mr. W. Monro Collings.—For a fortnight's special evangelistic services, to be held in the Baptist Chapel, Sourton, Devon, by Rev. G. Parker, of Mursley, Bucks.—For a united two weeks' mission in the Public Hall, Reigate, to be conducted by Mr. E. P. Telford, commencing Sunday, September 23.—For a blessing on a week of special services (preceded by a week of meetings for prayer and consecration), from September 23 to October 5, to be conducted by Mr. Henry Hutchinson, of the Children's Special Service Mission, in Lansdowne-place Ragged School, Tabard-street, Borough.—For blessing on a mission to men by Mr. Henry Varley, in the New Cross Hall, Sept. 23-27.—For a convention for the promotion of Scriptural holiness, in Assembly Rooms, Junction-road, Highgate, N., Sept. 24 to 30.

Letters to the Editor.

SOCIAL PURITY IN CALCUTTA.

Sir,—In your issue of August 2 there appeared a letter, signed "M. Mody," which animadverts somewhat severely upon the action of the Calcutta Missionary Conference. There has been no right-about-face movement by the Conference, who are pursuing the same ends as have been before them all along, and, as far as I am aware, they are in perfect accord with the Presbytery of the Free Church, to which your correspondent alludes. In common with all reformers in England who are seeking for social purity, they see the need of checking the shameful solicitation which prevails, and they consider that it can be done in Calcutta, as in Liverpool and Manchester, without in any way dealing harshly with the women.

As to the disgraceful traffic between Europe and India, carried on by certain foreigners, they have recently made it clear, on more than one occasion, to the authorities that it is the men who should be punished and not the poor women, who, as can be shown, are frequently the victims of what may not inappropriately be called, "Calcutta's Slave Trade."

—Yours truly, John P. Ashton.

Bhowanipore, Calcutta, August 25.

DEGRADED LITERATURE.

Sir,—Following up the remarks in Mr. Comstock's address and your editorial on unwholesome reading, I would direct attention to another phase of the evil. The daily papers have lately published the fact of "the disappearance of a school teacher." They subsequently recorded that the girl had been found, owing to the publicity given to the case, and to the action of the police. The high-flown, unhealthy pages of the penny novelette had filled the poor girl's mind with morbid fancies and led her to wander away from her home. This story is one of thousands, in that the cause unhinging the minds of young girls and boys, robbing them of their innocence and veracity, creating in them a morbid craving for excitement, and rendering them unfit to meet the serious duties of life, is foolish, false, and sometimes vile literature. One cannot estimate the depths of evil to which these wretches creations point their victims, for that is how one must class the devourers of trashy stories, just as one speaks of the victims of alcohol, or vice, or disease.

There is little use in writing columns of invective against the writers or readers of this rubbish, nor in lamenting its increase. The only thing to be done is to multiply gentle and loving individual agency among parents, teachers, friends, and [relatives, who may avoid preaching, and show by practice that life is full of good things, and that it holds for them no interest higher than their young friends. Christians everywhere ought to unite, that this mental poison shall not continue to be read by our youth so long as prayer is possible and God is the Father of his children. G.

PROTESTANT EDUCATIONAL CLASSES.

Sir,—The season has again come round when arrangements are being made for the winter's work in connection with Protestant Societies, Y.M.C.A.'s, and Mutual Improvement Societies. I venture to suggest the importance of distinctively Protestant instruction being given to the young at the present time. There is much need to guard and fortify the young against the subtle, deadly influence of Romish error and superstition, and establish them in the knowledge and love of Bible truth, as one of the best means of counteracting Romanising encroachments throughout the land.

Where Protestant educational classes have already been established, complete satisfaction has been given. They have been the means of keeping together our young people, profitably occupied: educating them in a most useful branch of knowledge; inspiring them with greater appreciation of invaluable privileges we now enjoy, so dearly bought by our martyred forefathers; and training them to take an intelligent and firm stand in defence of Bible truth, and of our religious and civil liberties. As subjects I would suggest:—

The History of the Reformation and of Protestantism;

The History of the Holy Scriptures;

The Romish Controversy—embracing: (1) The Roman Catholic Creed; (2) a review of Popery in its social aspect.

And Ritualism.

I shall be pleased to give your readers any further information in my power, and may be permitted to state that I have had practical experience in the work.—Your obedient servant,

Leopold D. E. Smith,
Hon. Sec. N.W. London Branch, Calvinistic Protestant Union.

THE CHURCHES AND THE HEATHEN.

Dear Sir,—I have been much interested in some papers which have appeared in recent numbers of The Christian, one of which was written by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, another was an account of an address by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of America, and two others were written by Mr. Crosbie, of Nottingham. The subjects brought before your readers in these papers are the need for Christians generally to engage in making known the Gospel, and the need there is for an enduement with the power which comes from the Holy Spirit. The evangelisation of the world seems in the Divine plan dependent upon these two conditions.

I wish to add a little to what has already been said in respect to them. I have laboured in India for many years, and am well acquainted with the leading facts in the history of the mission enterprise in that great land, and I greatly rejoice in what God has wrought through the efforts of the many devoted men who have gone forth and laboured there under the auspices of the great missionary societies. But the work in India and in other heathen countries is so vast that I am persuaded we should seek to enlist in the great undertaking the zealous co-operation of all Christian men and women who have gone, or may hereafter go, to sojourn among the heathen. I do not see that there is any likelihood of the work to be done being accomplished unless there shall be such of the Spirit upon the true Church at large as will lead to this result.

It is very sad to see the want of interest in the spiritual welfare of the natives which characterises tens of thousands of Europeans and East Indians who are to be found there. There is, God be praised, a goodly number of pious men in civil employ and in the Army, and among the mercantile and trading classes, but the sentiment that the evangelisation of the heathen is not their work, but the work of missionaries and native preachers, and the difficulty which their ignorance of the vernaculars presents, lead them to live among the perishing millions without doing more than give a little money for the promotion of their spiritual welfare.

There are many exceptions, and the American Episcopal Methodist Mission in their spheres of labour have worked hard and with a measure of success to bring this class into hearty accord and practical sympathy with the evangelisation of the heathen, but, speaking generally, there has been great apathy on the part of the European Christian community in reference to this great duty. This apathy has reacted upon the community itself, and irreligion which would, we may well suppose, have been checked by the operation of an active evangelistic spirit, has consequently flourished in all parts of the country among the English and their descendants.

The great need in India and other lands now is that the Spirit which led the first disciples to go everywhere preaching the Word should constrain all true believers to make known by word of mouth to those around them the glorious Gospel of the grace of God, and that it should constrain many of our fellow countrymen now at home and the pious youth of America and the continent of Europe to go forth as independent evangelists. To some this may seem very impracticable, but if one in sixty of the members of the Moravian Church can consecrate themselves to such service, why could not a vast augmentation of the members of those representing other communities take place if the faith and zeal which have animated them were to be granted to us? Surely many of these Moravian brethren find the means of support for themselves and their families in their spheres of labour. Has not the Apostle Paul himself set us an example in this particular? When there was the need then he laboured with his own hands for his own support and the support of his associates.

But the languages. How is the difficulty of acquiring the languages spoken by the heathen to be met? I reply, an earnest desire for the salvation of men such as moved the scattered disciples, of whom we read in the Acts xi., who had been filled with Pentecostal life and power, would in many cases soon find a way to surmount this difficulty. Let a thousand lucrative appointments under Government be offered to Europeans and their children resident in India, and to East Indians, who, during the space of two years, would qualify themselves to pass in one or other of the vernaculars, and I believe that everyone of these appointments might thus be secured. Then the wives of settlers and residents in India, very many of whom have a great amount of leisure, might, if there were the ardent desire to do so, acquire the knowledge of an Indian language.

I may here remark that

WHAT IS NEEDED IN INDIA

in this connection is the establishment in important centres of a Christian Institute for the study of the vernacular languages (and a similar provision might be made in other countries), to foster and aid the effort of those who would seek to qualify themselves for Christian work among the heathen. There is another project which strikes me as practicable. Why should not the truly Christian merchants and tradesmen, and the railway companies, who send out young men to conduct their business, secure devoted Christian young men who would seek the welfare of the people of the lands from which their employers derive their wealth? Or is it to be understood that earnestness in religion disqualifies a man for mercantile pursuits abroad? Oh, that Christian men of influence in the business world at home would do their utmost to secure the sending forth of servants of Christ to help in our mission fields! And if Christian capitalists would invest abroad the capital they could spare for the purpose, not chiefly for personal aggrandisement, but in the interests of the kingdom of the Lord who bought them with his blood, and whose redeemed servants they profess to be, then great results in relation to the conversion of the world might be expected to follow.

For instance, there might be a well-organised agency for the disposal of

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

In India we have a reading population of fifteen millions, and the number is rapidly increasing. Two millions are glad to have English books. Infidel works from England, and other pernicious English and native publications, are being largely sold, and these need to be superseded as far as possible by books permeated with Christian principles. We have our Christian book and tract societies in India, but there is, I believe, great scope for private undertakings in the literary world there. Let capitalists, then, be urged to combine and use a part of their capital in the interests of Christ's kingdom abroad, and let the pious youth of the churches be encouraged to seek employment in foreign lands that they may be used for God in the vast regions of heathenism.

I would meet another objection. It may be thought that the different heathen countries must be evangelised by natives of these countries, and this remark is unquestionably true, but hitherto in India the work has remained in the hands of the missionary societies, and the Europeans and Americans sent out are still the men most prominent in the prosecution of this work. God can and will, we trust, raise up in India such men as were San Quala and Kothabyu among the Karens in Burmah, but at present we are under obligation to seek from God that more labourers—many more—shall go forth to evangelise the teeming millions of India and the heathen in other lands—more missionaries, and a multitude of men who, while pursuing a secular calling, will devote their spare time and all their influence to the furtherance of the Gospel. Was not the Roman world to a large extent prepared for the diffusion of the Gospel by the diffusion in so many portions of it of devout men of the Jewish race, and of the Divine religion they taught? And did not these foreign Jews, when converted to Christ, become, while they followed their ordinary avocations, the most useful propagators of the Gospel?

NEED OF SPIRITUAL POWER.

And now, in reference to what Dr. Gordon and Mr. Crosbie have advanced. We do indeed need, and we have come to an epoch in the world's history when plainly we are called, to seek the mighty power of the Holy Spirit for all believers, that they may be qualified for preaching the Gospel as it should be preached at home, and to the uttermost part of the earth. This conviction wrought, we believe, by the Holy Spirit in the minds of many of God's people, should lead to their coming together for consultation and prayer. Deeply have we to deplore our manifold sins and shortcomings, and we may well weep together before the Lord as we think of the apathy which still characterises the great majority of Christians in respect to the salvation of a lost world. And we may well renew together our surrender and consecration of ourselves to Christ to be his faithful servants, with the one all-absorbing aim to live Christ—to live his life of toil and self-renunciation and suffering that we may bring sinners to Him, and to wait together that Pentecostal grace and power may fill our spirits. And with the Lord's blessing the movement will become germinant, and in many a new centre will the blessing be sought and given, and the great desire of the Christian heart—that the Kingdom of God may come universally, will be realised in an unprecedented manner.

With a view to the great end contemplated in Mr. Crosbie's last paper, I would suggest that a Conference be held in London, if the managers of some Christian institution who are in accord with these views shall grant the use of their rooms for the gatherings, and that the advisability of establishing a "Prayer Union" be then considered.

ELI PERKINS' ADVICE.

The following story is interesting. Whether it is absolutely true we do not know, but it is not at all strange that the Young Men's Christian Association should have such influence on a man's life as Superintendent Swift says it had on his. Such incidents are occurring frequently in the experience of association members.

"I owe my first start in life," said Superintendent Swift, of the Union Pacific Railroad, "to a little circumstance. I had been an operator on the New York Central. I was not a vicious boy, but bad company led me to drinking and gambling, and I lost my place. But I had obtained a new situation on the Union Pacific at Omaha. On the train going there I happened to get into a coach with a very pleasant gentleman who amused me with several interesting stories. At Burlington, Ia., the stranger looked me in the eye and said gently:

"'You are a young man, just starting in life. Where are you going?'

"'To Omaha,' I said. 'Do you know anyone there?' 'No, not a living soul.' 'Now, that's good,' said the gentleman, whom I afterwards found was Eli Perkins; 'you will now have the best chance in the world to start life right, and make a success in your new field. I advise you, my dear boy, as soon as you get to Omaha, to go right to the Young Men's Christian Association, and join it.'

"'But I am not a good Christian,' I said.

"'Never mind that. They will, perhaps, make you one. There you will meet clean young men, and bright fellows, too. You will find baths and a splendid library, and companions who will help you socially.'

"Well," continued the superintendent, "I followed Perkins' advice. As soon as I joined the Young Men's Christian Association and got away from old companions I felt like a different man. I felt a new dignity and felt that I had as much manhood as any one. The operators knew that I belonged to the Young Men's Christian Association, and I felt that I had an example to set. The boys began paying a deference to me. There was no swearing in the office. This made me feel proud, for I felt that I, too, was doing good.

"Well, I grew in the office, and grew in the Young Men's Christian Association. I lived in a new social world. When I wrote home to my mother, who is a praying Christian, that I had joined the Young Men's Christian Association, she wrote me a letter stained with tears of joy. Then I was happy. Finally I became a Church member.

"You ask me if I am still an operator? Oh, no. My belonging to the Young Men's Christian Association made the officials have confidence in me. I was promoted to assistant to the president, and now I am superintendent of the Valley branch, and a little good business advice from Eli Perkins caused it all. The advice gave me first start, and the Young Men's Christian Association drew me up and held me there."

BRIEF NOTES.

Monsieur Fermaud secretary of the Central International Committee, expects to visit England and Scotland during the month of October.

From Auckland Mr. Brackenrigg reports that the work of the Association is going on well, and that there is much encouragement in many ways.

The new Association at Winchester has kept up its work remarkably well during the summer; the Bible class has had an exceptionally high average.

At the Birkenhead Y.M.C.A., Christian Evidence lectures will be given during the winter by Mr. George Wise, of Liverpool, and Rev. Macdonald Munro, M.A., Everton, Liverpool.

The twelfth annual report of the Worthing Association is a most encouraging document. Improvements have been made in every department, and the finance statement shows a balance in hand of £24. The hon. sec. is Mr. F. A. Watts.

The Newcastle-on-Tyne Y.M.C.A., in presenting its annual report, expresses thankfulness that, in spite of many difficulties, the work has been well sustained. The total weekly attendance has been about 2500, of whom 2000 are men. The membership now stands at 825.

The Theatre Royal Services, held by the Adelaide Association, continue to attract splendid attendances each Sunday evening, the proportion of men present being very gratifying. For seven years these meetings have been held without intermission, and the spiritual good effected by means of them is quite incalculable. Song services have also proved very successful.

The North-West Metropolitan Association (Stafford Rooms) reports a year of steady progress with a gratifying increase in membership. The Bible Studies have been most interesting and resultful. Open-air work during the summer months in Hyde Park, and in the winter nearer the rooms, has proved a valuable adjunct to the Association. We regret to observe that the adverse balance amounts to £150.

A special mission to young men begins on Sunday at Aldersgate-street, the evangelist being Mr. W. R. Lane. Meetings are being held this week at 8 p.m. for united prayer for this mission. The presence of members and friends at these meetings is earnestly invited. This is the first occasion on which the members of the United Association at Exeter Hall and Aldersgate-street have had an opportunity of co-operating in prayer and service. It is believed that much blessing will result from their hearty fellowship.

A young man giving the name of George Martin has been visiting some of the Associations in the South Midland District, and has obtained pecuniary assistance in more than one instance. His story is that he is a coach-painter out of employment, that he needs money to obtain tools, and sometimes he states that he has secured employment at a distant part of the town which he is visiting. His story on being tested is found to be untrue. His description is: Age about thirty-three, low forehead, light hair, frank expression, smooth tongue, rather shabbily dressed, height about 5ft 8in.

An illustrated report of the proceedings of the Jubilee Conference is now in course of preparation, and will be issued shortly. It will contain verbatim reports of sermons, addresses, papers, and discussions; also descriptive accounts of the reception by the Lord Mayor and Corporation, the great jubilee demonstration at the Royal Albert Hall, the visit to Windsor, etc. Fully illustrated by pictures of speakers and places of interest associated with the Conference, the book will form a handsome souvenir of the Jubilee of the Y.M.C.A. Price 2s. 6d. Orders should be sent to the secretary, Jubilee Council Office, Exeter Hall.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Worcester Y.W.C.A. has opened new premises in Foregate-street.

In connection with the Putney Branch, it is proposed to hold an eight days' mission at the Institute from September 30 till October 7. Miss Bazett will give afternoon Bible readings, and conduct evening evangelistic services. A special effort is being made by the committee to enlist the sympathy and co-operation of the heads of the houses of business in the neighbourhood, so that the work among shop assistants may be extended.

Evening educational classes are again being arranged at several London centres. The prospectus announces such subjects as dressmaking, hygiene, nursing, cookery, book-keeping, French, etc. Civil Service classes also will be held at the Finsbury Institute. Connected with the Central and the Finsbury Institutes there are two well-fitted gymnasia, where those who are desirous of physical recreation can have instruction in gymnastics and drill at moderate fees. At some centres, instruction will be given by L.C.C. teachers. A prospectus will be sent free by the secretary, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.

The United Central Council of Great Britain and the International Committee of America have formulated a constitution for the "World's Young Women's Christian Association." A provisional committee has been formed, consisting of Hon. Mrs. Ion Keith-Falconer, Hon. E. Kinnaird, and Mrs. Herbert Tritton (representing the United Central Council), and of Mrs. Boyd, Mrs. J. F. Farwell, Jr., and Miss Morse (representing the International Committee). The object of this development as stated in the Y.W.C.A. Directory, recently published, is the "Consolidation of Young Women's Christian Associations in all lands, the formation of national organisations, and the extension of the missionary and evangelistic work of the Y.W.C.A. throughout the world." Miss Reynolds, the recently-appointed world's secretary for the Y.W.C.A., has arrived in this country from America. Landing at Glasgow per s.s. Furnessia, she spent a day in going over the Y.W.C.A. Institutes there, and in seeing the parks, public buildings, etc. She then proceeded to Edinburgh, en route for London, in order to acquaint herself with work carried on in the Metropolis. She has the intention of going abroad to attend the Neuchatel Conference in furtherance of the work.

WOE UNTO THE HOME whose king is a child. The true mother is a queen, whose subjects should be most loyal and most loving. Parents never reach the best results of training by self-effacement. Authority in its place is as important as self-sacrifice.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A C.E. Society has been formed at South-street, Sheffield, with about thirty members.

In one Massachusetts county union, each Congregational society is to give two dollars toward the support of a pupil in Straight University.

The members of the Lowestoft Christian Endeavour Societies held a seaside convention at Lowestoft last week. In the afternoon an open-air service was held on the beach.

Two of the members of the Society of the Clinton Avenue Reformed Church of Newark, N.J., are engaged in their Master's service this summer, and are helping to spread the news of his Kingdom.

The Christian Endeavour Movement is nowhere making such rapid strides as in the churches of Madagascar connected with the London Missionary Society. There are now ninety-one societies, with a membership of 3,377 in the island.

The Cleveland C.E. Union devoted its quarterly meeting, August 27, chiefly to temperance and good citizenship, and passed resolutions condemning the police authorities of Cleveland for refusing to enforce the Sunday laws. The Union also endorsed a new movement, in which Protestant and Roman Catholic societies, Endeavour societies, Good Templars, Women's Christian Temperance Unions, and kindred organisations have recently united for practical temperance work.

The society at San Sebastian, Spain, has been accomplishing much good through the work of a diligent Sunday-school committee. This committee has tried especially to collect books and tracts suitable for children to read on Sunday, which has been no easy task, as this class of literature in Spanish is scarce. The library that has been gathered is lent for the most part in Roman Catholic families, where the books are much read by the older persons, who would not go to a Protestant service.

An extraordinary prayer-meeting was held by the New Jersey delegates on the train in returning from the recent Cleveland Convention. It was the intention to make the service very brief, but it ran on, impossible to be stopped, for an hour and a-half. The Pullman conductor and the train conductor were both greatly interested in the meeting, and took part acceptably, though they were not professing Christians. The engineer and fireman could not take part in the meeting, but an earnest letter was written and sent forward to them.—The Golden Rule.

Now that local and district C.E. Unions are so rapidly multiplying in all the large centres of population, many will be interested in a plan for aggressive work which one city union has recently adopted. Every two months they hold a mass meeting, at which an address will be delivered by an Endeavourer concerning some practical point of committee work. This address will be followed by a discussion on the work of that committee. At each of these regular meetings the president of each society is to read a written report, not over five minutes in length, which is afterwards to be filed with the secretary of the union. The society which during the year adds the largest number of active members in proportion to its membership at the beginning of the year, and which at the same time shows an average attendance and participation of its members in the consecration meeting, becomes the banner evangelistic society, and holds the city union banner for the next year. The society which contributes the largest amount of money to Christian enterprises in proportion to its membership, at the same time contributing an average amount to foreign missions, becomes the banner missionary society, and holds for the year a missionary banner.

CHINESE IN LONDON.—The work of Rev. George Piercy among the Chinese of London is well known, but it is not so generally known that Mr. Piercy labours without the support or encouragement of any society. His mission appeals to Christians without distinction of denomination; and Mrs. Piercy, who bears a good share of the responsibility, is glad of opportunities to make it known by addressing parlour or public meetings. Mr. Piercy's address is 50, Leyspring-road, Leytonstone, E.

CHANDOS-ROAD MISSION, STRATFORD.—For many years a humble tenement in Chandos-road, Stratford, E., has been the centre of encouraging mission work among young and old. The ramshackle character of the building has involved the workers in much inconvenience, and for some time plans have been maturing for better accommodation. The mission has lately become associated with Cann Hall Baptist Church, Leytonstone, the pastor of which (Rev. G. T. Ennals) has prepared an excellent scheme, which is now being carried into effect. An iron building is about to be erected on a site which has been bought in the Edith-road, near to the old mission centre. It is emphatically a needy locality. The leader of the mission is Mr. J. Johnston, 92, Janson-road, Stratford, E.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. Dr. Stalker's weekly prayer meeting in Glasgow is being largely attended, and is found by all to be stimulating and refreshing. It is announced that this winter the doctor's subject is to be, "Jeremiah: the Man and his Message."

The Assembly of the Established Church has within recent years shown commendable diligence in inquiring into the religious condition of the people of Scotland. The committee who have charge of this matter are meanwhile visiting in the synod of Moray, and their interviews with the office-bearers and addresses to the congregations are having a quickening influence.

The news of the death of ex-Bailie Mitchell, of Falkirk, at Lamlash, Arran, whither he had gone for a change, has been received with sadness by the community in whose interest he had laboured so long and faithfully. He was proprietor of Grahamstown Ironworks, one of the largest and most important foundries in the district. He was a strong and ardent upholder of all movements for the improvement of the masses.

Mr. Thompson, evangelist, Glasgow, is becoming a great favourite with his addresses on the Passover and "The Pilgrim's Progress," which are illustrated by beautiful limelight views. He has lately conducted a three weeks' mission in the West U.P. Church, Johnstone, which has been crowded every evening, a number of inquirers generally remaining to the after-meeting. Mr. Thompson begins a similar series of meetings in Hope Hall, Paisley.

IRISH NOTES.

St. Peter's Church, Dublin, is about to lose one of its best workers in the person of Miss Wharton, whom her sister is about to engage in missionary service among the Eurasians in Madras.

The open-air preaching was continued on Friday and Sunday last in Galway and Athlone. In both places the crowd was extremely hostile, and the preachers received very rough treatment.

A Baptist new church has recently been opened in Cork, and of this Mr. W. J. Tweedie, of the Pastor's College, was last week installed as the pastor, Revs. H. D. Brown (of Dublin) and James Stephens (of Highgate) taking part in the service.

A Conference for the promotion of spiritual life has been held in the Hackett Memorial Hall, Bray, at which addresses were delivered by Revs. J. J. Luce, of Gloucester; W. E. Burroughs, of Kingstown; John Dowse, of Belfast; Canon Robinson, and Professor Mackintosh.

The Church Conference at Cork last week passed off very successfully and was largely attended. The opening address was by the Bishop of Cork, and was on "Modern Theories as to the Origin and Authority of the Old Testament." Amongst those who attended and took part in the proceedings were the Bishops of Glasgow, Salisbury, and Ontario.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE AT WORTHING.

Mr. William Noble has conducted a week's mission in connection with Christ Church, Worthing, in the Parochial Schools. The occasion was availed of to promote the principle of union among the different religious bodies; the chair being taken each night by an office bearer of a different Church. In this way the Church of England, Congregationalists, Baptists, and Primitive Methodists were represented, while the presence of the Rev. Dr. Dawson on Tuesday spoke for the Wesleyan body. A united choir of about sixty singers, under the kind conduct of Alderman Linfield, further emphasised this satisfactory feature of the mission. On Sunday evening Mr. Noble delivered an address at the Assembly Rooms to a large and deeply interested audience gathered at 8 p.m., after the services in the different places of worship, and on Monday night closed his mission in the schoolrooms with his lecture on J. B. Gough.

The mission has been a success, and we believe a blessing will follow, founding our belief less on the numbers, though these were satisfactory, than on the spiritual influence, under the blessing of God, produced by the tone and matter of Mr. Noble's addresses, characterised as they were by great boldness and faithfulness, with a persuasive charity that deeply impressed his hearers. Already there is a proposal to follow up his work by a united mission.

Charles Hole, LL.D.,
Vicar of Christ Church, Worthing.

LITTLE SELF-DENIALS, little honesties, little passing words of sympathy, little nameless acts of kindness, little silent victories over favourite temptations—these are the threads of gold which, when woven together, gleam so brightly in the pattern of life that God approves.—F. W. Farrar.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The first Sunday in the New Year will be set apart by the British temperance women for prayer.

The Good Templar Order has been planted in Mashonaland, where, unfortunately, intoxicating liquor had previously been introduced.

Mr. Malins, Grand Chief Templar, has received a petition from Malaysia for the formation of a Good Templar Lodge to work in the Tamil language.

New headquarters will soon be opened by the Brixton branch of the B.W.T.A. Two bright rooms have been secured on one of the main streets, and will be fitted up, where the regular meetings and social business of the branch will be conducted.

Preaching to a crowded congregation at York Minster on Sunday week, Canon Fleming spoke of the need of temperance in its highest and broadest sense, temperance in judgment, temperance with tongue, temperance in all things—in short, government of self.

The temperance returns of the Methodist Free Church for 1894 show a serious decrease. The number of societies has fallen from 777 to 721, and the number of members has decreased by 4133. The societies affiliated to the League are fewer by thirty-six, with a decrease of 6161 members.

Rev. J. C. May, native secretary of the Evangelical Reform Association of Sierra Leone, and the head of Good Templary there, writes to Mr. Mullins, giving an encouraging account of recent native temperance celebrations in the churches and chapels. Temperance principles appear to be taking root in the city of Freetown.

The Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission held its quarterly meeting last week. The amount of work done during the summer months has been both varied and good. Lectures on the scientific aspect of the question, cottage meetings, and personal visitation have all been continued with earnestness and zeal.

The Manchester Diocesan C.E.T.S. is carrying on a vigorous police-court mission work. The following are the statistics of the labours of the four missionaries in the two months (July and August):—Total cases dealt with, 1035; persons visited at their own homes, 277; persons placed in homes or restored to friends, 15; visits of "cases" to missionaries, 39; pledges signed, 167; loss of employment averted through missionaries, 6.

At Hornsey, on Saturday week, a large open-air meeting was held, under the auspices of the North London United Gospel Temperance Council. Mr. T. Freeman, F.G.S., F.S.S., conducted the meeting, and addresses were delivered by Mr. W. Heal, of Camden Town, Mr. G. D. Barns, of Hampstead, and Mr. W. Wray, to a highly-appreciative audience of several hundreds. At a little before eight o'clock the band led the way to the Lecture Hall, Middle-lane, where another meeting was held.

The eighth annual report of the Temperance Home for Women at Sydenham states that last year the home was self-supporting. The number of fresh patients during the year has been twenty-nine—twelve ladies and seventeen working women. The number in the home on March 31 was twenty-two—eleven ladies and eleven working women. Any help in the way of gifts for the home, or applications for servants, companions, and other situations for patients leaving the home, should be sent to the matron, The Tor, 20, Silverdale, Sydenham, S.E.

Colonel F. Cardew, her Majesty's administrator of Sierra Leone, who has been a total abstainer for the last sixteen years, has lately accomplished a journey of 600 miles into the interior and back. It was said by some that he would not return alive, because he was a total abstainer, but he has returned sound and well. Moreover he did not carry any ardent spirits as presents to the native chiefs—as his predecessors were accustomed to do. When a list of articles for gifts to native chiefs was presented to him for his approval, he struck out from the list the cases of gin and demijohns of spirits entered thereon.

THE LAUNDRY AND HOMES OF INDUSTRY, Arrowfield Top, Alvechurch, Worcestershire, have for their primary object the provision of safe shelter for women and girls who, through weak intellect, have no power of self-protection; and for these they find remunerative employment in laundry work and other suitable industries. The second annual report states that seventeen inmates have been received into the Homes, and successive visitors uniformly remark upon their bright and happy manner. Difficulty has been experienced in finding remunerative occupations within the capacities of the girls; and on this point the secretary will be glad of practical hints. The report should be of considerable interest to such as aim at helping the weak and neglected. Communications may be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, Miss Stacey, 30, Calthorpe-road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

GATHERED GOLD.

Look at temporals with a spiritual eye.

Rarely promise; but, if lawful, constantly perform.

Moderation is commonly firm; and firmness is commonly successful.

The tallest trees are most in the power of the winds, and ambitious men of the blasts of fortune.—Penn.

The pious man and the atheist always talk of religion; the one speaks of what he loves, and the other of what he fears.

Life is but a short day, but it is a working day. Activity may lead to evil, but inactivity cannot lead to good.—Hannah More.

Remember, whatever warrant you have for praying, you have the same warrant to believe your prayers will be answered.—Philips.

SERVICE.

No service in itself is small,
None great, though earth it fill;
But that is small that seeks its own,
And great that seeks God's will.

J. Dickie, of Irvine.

POVERTY.

Be not ashamed to be, or to be esteemed poor in this world; for he that hears God teaching him will find that it is the best wisdom to withdraw all our affections from secular honour and troublesome riches, and to place them upon eternal treasures, and by patience, by humility, by suffering scorn and contempt, and the will of God, to get the true riches. Jeremy Taylor.

CONTENTMENT.

I knew a man that had wealth and riches, and several houses, all beautifully and ready furnished, and who would often trouble himself and family by removing from one house to another. Being asked by a friend why he removed so often, he replied it was to find content in some one of them. "Content," said his friend, "ever dwells in a meek and quiet soul."—Walton.

THE WISDOM OF GOD.

When we were children, there were things in the conduct of our parents the reason of which we could not comprehend. And shall the little child man imagine that he can understand every dispensation of the great Father of all? We have since seen the wisdom of our parents in that which we condemned, and should not man form the same judgment in respect to the government of God?—Bogue.

RELIGIOUS PRACTICE.

Nothing, indeed, can be more futile than even the most correct system of religious opinions, if our faith has no influence on the heart, and fails, therefore, to produce its legitimate consequence—a godly life and conversation. Everything in Christianity is directed to practical purposes; and in the day of righteous retribution it will only aggravate our condemnation to have heard, understood, and approved the Word of the Lord, if we shall have persisted in refusing to follow its dictates.—J. J. Gurney.

THE INVALID'S LOWLY SERVICE.

I am not sent a pilgrim here,
My heart with earth to fill;
But I am here God's grace to learn,
And serve God's sovereign will.

He leads me on through smiles and tears,
Grief follows gladness still,
But let me welcome both alike,
Since both work out his will.

J. Dickie, of Irvine.

ARMENIAN CHRISTIANS.—Lord Kimberley, replying to representations made by the Armenian communities in England, India, and America, with reference to the condemned Armenians at Yuzgat, says a telegraphic report from the British Consul at Angora says that in accordance with instructions from the Porte all the Armenians, about 170, sentenced to imprisonment by the Yuzgat Court have been released, and orders have been given for a reinvestigation of the cases of seventeen prisoners under sentence of death.

THE UNIVERSAL BENEFICENT SOCIETY was founded a long time ago to assist in various ways necessitous persons of good character; and it still has on its list nearly fifty annuitants receiving £15 each. In the report for last year, the Council record with regret the death of Mr. G. Stormont Murphy, who, as secretary, for twenty-three years devoted his best energies to promoting the welfare of the Institution, and, by unvarying kindness to applicants for relief, earned the gratitude of the poor and the confidence and regard of the Council. The present secretary is Mr. S. Sutherland Safford, 15, Soho-square, W.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. T. L. Johnson is holding a special nine days' mission in Kensington Baptist Chapel, Bristol, for which he will be glad of the prayers of many friends.

Rev. James Oatey continues his deeply interesting mission in the Baptist Chapel, Acton, and there is much joy over sinners repenting and compelled to flee to Christ. There is a spirit of great expectancy that the closing days will see yet richer blessing.

Mr. Henry Collins has concluded a fortnight's mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Castle Cary. His earnest preaching was listened to with great attention. Many who had heard him on former occasions gratefully acknowledged the deep impression made.

Ireland.—A successful series of evangelistic services has just been held by Mr. W. J. Soney, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, in Tralee. Mr. Soney has also held very interesting Gospel meetings in Ballybunion, co. Kerry, and it is felt by many that the need for such services in the villages and rural hamlets of the south and west was never greater than at the present time.

A Month's Tent Mission has been concluded in connection with Blackthorn-street Chapel, Bow Common, E., on the site of the proposed hall. Mr. Henry Lakin has been helped mightily night after night, and eternity alone will reveal all the blessing attending the services. A notable feature of the mission has been the attendance of a large number of men. Several friends helped during the last week of the mission, the interest continuing throughout.

Doncaster Races.—Mr. Corbridge, of Sheffield, sent two agents of the Rescue and Evangelisation Mission, Mrs. Ashton and Mr. R. Greenwood, to preach the Gospel on the racecourse and in the streets at Doncaster. Nearly 500 copies of Tips and Hints from the life of Fred Archer were sold. Much good resulted from the effort. The book refers to Archer's life, and starts with the text: "So run that ye may obtain" (1 Cor. ix. 24). Tracts and Gospel books for distribution are much needed.

Blackburn.—Mr. Thomas Payne has concluded a ten days' special mission here. There has been much definite blessing. In forcible yet homely words he sought to bring before the people the claims and power of God. Sinners were awakened, backsliders healed, and believers brought to seek the fulness of the blessed Spirit. Mr. Payne intends paying a short visit to America in October. He desires the prayers of Christians for much blessing during his visit. His address is 34, Grosvenor-street, Chorton-on-Medlock, Manchester.—L. S. Hodgson.

Mr. John H. Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, has completed his summer's mission in Mid-Kent. He commenced with the tent at Frittenden, continuing at Sutton Valence, Langley, Lenham, and Lenham Heath. God's blessing has again been with his servant, and many have found and accepted Christ as their Saviour. The greatest success has attended at Frittenden, Sutton Valence, and Lenham Heath, the tent at the latter place not being large enough to accommodate the congregation on several occasions. We pray that God's blessing may still attend the efforts of his servant.—W. C. B.

Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded an evangelistic mission at Airdrie with much acceptance. The mission was a united one, under the auspices of a committee of eleven of the ministers of the town and representatives from each of the churches. Prior to the commencement of the meetings, a Christian Convention was held, when addresses were delivered by Rev. C. G. Moore and various ministers from Glasgow and neighbouring towns, as well as several missionaries from the foreign field. Despite the unsettled state of affairs in the district (which is the centre of the great coal strike), the meetings have been largely attended, and lasting blessing is expected.

Margate.—During the past season many Christian friends have been seeking to bring some of the pleasure-seeking throng at this seaside resort into the liberty of the Gospel. Rev. W. Hay Aitken has been preaching to crowded congregations at Holy Trinity Church, and not without signs following. A noonday prayer-meeting has been held under the auspices of the neighbouring Free Churches. Children's services were conducted daily at both ends of the town. The Cliftonville meeting was under the leadership of Rev. W. Seely, curate of Trinity Church; the Shaftesbury House services, at the other end, were conducted by Mr. W. Monro Collings. Mr. Owens Mell, of Shaftesbury House, has held open-air services nightly on the bathing stage opposite the South-Eastern Railway Station; and occasional services have been arranged by Mr. Brigg, pastor of the Baptist Chapel, the Open Brethren, the Wesleyan Mission Band, and the Salvation Army. Special services were held each Lord's Day evening in Mr. Sanger's Music Hall. The attendance has been even larger than on former occasions, and more than justifies this aggressive effort to reach the unsaved multitude.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Frederick Greeves, D.D., is reported as considerably better than he was a week ago.

Mr. Josiah Spiers is now resting at the Bridge of Allan, after being ill with severe cold at Largs. He reports himself as feeling much better already.

Rev. G. Whelpton, M.A., of Havre, has been appointed to succeed the late Rev. W. Gibson as superintendent of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission at Paris.

Rev. W. Carey Sage, B.D., who recently attended the Triennial Conference of Continental Baptists, held in Berlin, has undertaken for a few months to act as deputation in England of the German Baptist Mission.

Rev. T. K. Beecher, after a pastorate of forty years, retired on August 26 from the active ministry and the pastorate of Park Church, Elmira, though he hopes to continue with the congregation as long as he lives. He was a brother of the late Henry Ward Beecher.

Mr. A. S. Dyer, of Bombay, has arrived in England, accompanied by Man Sukh Lal and his wife, Phul Bai, Rev. A. W. Prautch, and Mr. Kanaga Ratnam, B.A., of Belgaum. These friends expect to take part during the winter months in a vigorous anti-opium campaign.

Mr. James Wharton, whose name is familiar to many through his evangelistic labours and his service among the freed slaves of the Southern States of America, needs at present the sympathy and prayers of many. He and his family are plunged into deep grief through a shocking fatal accident to their dear boy, aged sixteen, who got his head jammed in a hydraulic lift at the shop where he was serving his apprenticeship. It is a great comfort to know that the dear lad had confessed the Lord Jesus.

Rev. O. Michelsen, writing from Tongoa, New Hebrides, on July 24, refers to the recent illness of himself and wife. He says:—"Mrs. Michelsen is now much better. Sometimes she has been the worse of the two, suffering from fever and influenza; at other times both of us have been laid aside—myself with influenza only. For the last three or four weeks I have had very little hope of further service on Tongoa. The Lord knows. Pray that I may have grace to say, 'Thy will be done.'"

Rev. G. A. Wilson, of Sowerby Bridge, Yorkshire (United Methodist Free Church), has been appointed organising secretary of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, in succession to Mr. Norton P. Betts, now Secretary of the Church of England Young Men's Society. Mr. J. G. Alexander, on his return from the East, has resumed his post as hon. secretary of the Anti-Opium Society. The society's offices are about to be removed from Broadway-chambers, Westminster, to Finsbury House, Blomfield-street, opposite the London Missionary Society.

GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.

Mr. W. Monro Collings, of Gosport, sends some particulars with respect to the labours of Mrs. Cook and her helper, Miss Gooch, on board the Good News mission steamer, in the many ports visited during the past four months. At a praise meeting at Plymouth the workers were much cheered and encouraged in hearing the hearty testimony of a young fisherman, who had walked nine miles to attend the meeting. He said that four years ago his brother and he gave themselves to the Lord on board the Herald of Mercy. He is still rejoicing in the Saviour and trying to win others from the paths of sin. His brother is now preaching the Gospel in Canada with much acceptance. Amongst the places visited for the first time were Newlyn, Mousehole, Porthleven, St. Ives, Padstow, Bideford, Appledore, Barnstaple, and Ilfracombe. Missions of several days' duration were conducted in each of these ports, and were much appreciated by the seamen and townspeople, who crowded the little cabin night after night. For a visit paid to the Godrevy lighthouse the lonely watchers were most grateful; as also for a good supply of books, comforters, cuffs, etc. This was the first visit they had had from Christian workers for ten years.

Mrs. Cook has now returned home for the winter's work at Gosport. She desires that much blessing may be granted to this branch of the Mission. At the Seamen's Bethel the Gospel is faithfully preached by a resident missionary and a band of voluntary workers. Lower down the street and in close proximity to the harbour is another building where there is a bright attractive reading-room for fishermen, watermen, and lads of the seafaring class. Unfortunately, many in winter time are out of work and in sore distress, and Mrs. Cook will be glad if friends will assist her to provide occasional free teas and coffee suppers for them.

OBITUARY.

REV. DR. EDGAR, NEWBURGH.

The death is announced, at the age of 58, of Rev. R. Edgar, D.D., for over thirty years minister of Newburgh, N.B. He was the author of a series of text-books, entitled "Sunday Lessons for the Use of Sabbath Schools," and obtained the degree of D.D. from the Glasgow University about ten years ago, in recognition of a thesis on the synoptical Gospels.

MR. EDWARD BRODRIBB-RANDALL.

By the death of Mr. Edward Brodribb-Randall, the Home for Female Orphans in Grove-road has lost its devoted hon. secretary—a post he held for a great many years. The deceased, who was well known in local circles, was greatly esteemed for his high character and philanthropic work, and his death is sincerely regretted. Much sympathy is felt for the widow in her bereavement. The deceased was a lawyer of considerable eminence, and resided at 4, Northwick-terrace, St. John's Wood.—Marylebone Times.

MRS. WALTER ASHTON.

This beloved lady, the youngest daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Halley, died on Friday week at her residence, Hesketh Park, Southport. For over twenty years she was an invalid. Her days were spent in gentle, quiet ministries that were helpful to many. Some of the Christmas greetings in verse which she composed and sent forth to her friends have the flavour of true poesy. The photograph of her Sunday-school scholars she kept hanging over her bed as a memento of a ministry that was very dear to her; and in Warrington, where she spent the active years of her married life, the poor and suffering ones had in her a true sister of mercy.

REV. W. SCARBOROUGH, DARLINGTON.

Rev. W. Scarborough, superintendent of the Darlington Wesleyan Methodist Circuit, died very suddenly on Monday. He was nearly sixty years of age, but was apparently in his usual health when he preached on Sunday evening at Melsonby, a few miles from Darlington. He reached home about ten o'clock, and retired about an hour and a-half later. Soon afterwards he was seized with violent internal pains, and died almost immediately. For twenty years Mr. Scarborough was a missionary in China, returning about nine years ago. He has since held appointments on the Leamington, Hartlepool, and Darlington Circuits. He leaves a widow and two daughters,

THE HON. P. CARTERET-HILL, D.C.L.

We regret to announce the death, at the age of seventy, of the Hon. P. Carteret-Hill, widely known as a staunch Evangelical Protestant. Formerly an active and conscientious Government official in Canada and Nova Scotia, Mr. Hill resided, during recent years, at Tunbridge Wells, where, with the late Canon Hoare, he did much to advance the cause of the Low Church party. It was mainly through his influence that Tunbridge Wells was selected for the ensuing Conference of the Evangelical Alliance. Mr. Hill was a well-known figure at Exeter Hall, where he was frequently chairman at the meetings of the Protestant Alliance and kindred societies. The Societies for Prevention of Cruelty to Children and Animals had no warmer or more consistent supporter.

REV. A. MCKENZIE, D.D., NAIRN.

This highly-esteemed labourer, the minister-emeritus of Queen-street Free Church, Edinburgh, died suddenly on Tuesday, 11th inst., at his residence, Westerlea, Nairn. He was a probationer of the Church of Scotland when the Disruption took place, and came out with the Free Church. He was ordained as first minister of the Free Church of Nairn in 1843, and remained there till 1863, when he accepted a call to the Free Tolbooth Church, Edinburgh. His ministry at Nairn, as in Edinburgh, was singularly successful, and he was beloved by his people. In March, 1891, the Tolbooth congregation was amalgamated with Free St. Luke's, and thenceforward the united congregation became known as that of Queen-street Church. There, along with Rev. J. G. Cunningham, Mr. McKenzie ministered for rather more than a year, retiring in 1892 from active service. In November, 1893, Mr. McKenzie's ministerial jubilee was observed in Edinburgh.

MARGATE.—Friends proposing to winter on the South Coast may be glad to know that Shaftesbury House, Margate, the well-known seaside home for young men, is available for general visitors of both sexes during the winter season. Margate, while it has an exceptionally bracing air, registers a mean temperature in winter several degrees higher than London, and is specially suited to those subject to rheumatic or chest complaints. Particulars may be had from Mr. W. Owens Mell, Shaftesbury House, Margate.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. F. J. Chavasse will conduct a quiet day for the clergy in the Parish Church, Macclesfield, early in October.

A Jewish Exhibition was held at Douglas, Isle of Man, last week, under the auspices of the London Jews' Society.

The Bishop of Exeter has presented the charge of Horrabridge, South Devon, to Rev. Henry Startin, lately of Stodenham, who was trained at Wycliffe Hall.

Rev. E. A. Stuart, vicar of St. Matthew's, Bayswater, preached in Belfast on Sunday last, in the morning at St. Thomas's, and in the evening at Christ Church.

Rev. J. J. Lindeman, vicar of Penn-street, Amersham, is appealing for funds towards the building and fitting of a new mission church shortly to be opened in his parish.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence announced on Sunday to his congregation at Blackheath Park that he had definitely declined the offer of Holy Trinity Church, Tunbridge Wells.

The Bishop of Algoma, who has been compelled by failing health to resign his see in the Far West, sails for England on September 26. He has accepted the Chaplaincy of Mentone.

Canon Durst is about to resign his canonry in Winchester Cathedral in order to devote himself entirely to the duties of his new position of Rector of St. Mary's, Southampton.

The New Zealand Herald of July 11 chronicles the arrival at Auckland of the new Bishop of Melanesia, and publishes an interesting interview which one of its representatives had with the Bishop.

The report of the Indian Missions carried on in the diocese of Calgary, N.W. America, has been issued for the year 1893-94. The Bishop contributes a short introduction, in which he asks for the sympathy and support of all who have the welfare of the Indians at heart.

More than £1200 has been received towards the fund for establishing a memorial of the late Lord A. C. Hervey, Bishop of Bath and Wells. There will be a recumbent statue in Wells Cathedral, and the balance of the fund will be applied in augmentation of the endowment of poor livings in the diocese.

On Tuesday week a meeting of the Church Pastoral Aid Society was held in the Cutlers' Hall, Sheffield, under the presidency of Archdeacon Blakeney. An address, with special reference to the ways in which the Society's interests and usefulness might be advanced, was given by Rev. John Barton, the secretary of the Society. He explained the object and needs of the "Forward Movement," and answered several questions.

The "Mpwapwas," of St. James's, Holloway, an organisation for "intensifying interest in missions," are arranging to open their winter's work, under the new vicar, Rev. E. Grose Hodge, with a week's missionary exhibition and conversazione. The following are the speakers:—Monday, Sept. 17—Rev. H. E. Perkins, of the Punjaub, C.M.S.; Captain E. Poulden, Secretary of the S.A.M.S.; and Miss Kate Sachs, late of Jerusalem, C.M.S. Tuesday, 18—Miss E. M. Sandys, of the C.E.Z.M.S.; Rev. A. Elwin, of China; Rev. H. J. Schaffter, of Tinnevelly; Mr. Eugene Stock, of the C.M.S.; and Rev. E. H. Pearce, of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Wednesday, 19—Miss Kate Sachs, Rev. S. W. Chorlton, Rev. G. Ensor, and Mr. Livesey Carrott. Thursday, 20—Mr. Sidney W. Donne, C.M.S., Bengal; and Rev. W. T. Hollins. Friday, 21—Mrs. Knox, of China, of the C.E.Z.M.S.; and Rev. E. A. Stuart. Saturday, 22—Special prayer meeting.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Pleasant Sunday evening services, conducted on the lines of P.S.A. meetings, have been commenced at Brampton.

Rev. J. K. Nuttall has resumed his ministry at Great George-street Chapel, Liverpool, after an absence of six weeks.

Rev. W. J. Butler has recovered from his recent illness, and preached in Westgate Church, Peterborough, on Sunday.

Rev. T. Rhondda Williams has sufficiently recovered from illness to resume his work at Greenfield Church, Bradford.

Rev. W. J. Cole has sufficiently recovered from his recent illness to resume his ministry at London-road Church, Braintree.

The weekly prayer-meeting at the London Mission House will in future be held on Monday from 12 to 1 o'clock, instead of 12.30 to 1.30.

Pleasant Tuesday evenings have been started in connection with Sutton-in-Ashfield Chapel. About 450 persons were present at the opening meeting.

A farewell meeting was held last week in Broughton Park, Manchester, in connection with the departure of Rev. Jonathan and Mrs. Lees, Mr. and Mrs. Kingman, and Miss Pearson, for work in China.

The Colonial Missionary Society has made a special grant of £150 to the Congregational churches of Queensland towards meeting the enforced reductions in ministerial stipends caused by the floods of last year and subsequent bank failures.

At the Women's Pleasant Monday Evening Meeting at Queen-street Church, Leeds, Mrs. Dodgshun presided, and the address was delivered by Mrs. Wainwright, of Birstall. "These meetings," writes a correspondent, "are proving to be a very great help to many women in Leeds."

The meeting of the directors of the London Missionary Society held last week at the Mission House was made special and thrown open to friends so as to receive a number of missionaries returning from foreign service, as well as to bid farewell to a still larger number leaving for China. The former included Miss Mary Roberts, of Manchester, who for the last six years has been labouring in North China. She had hoped to have returned with her brother, Dr. F. C. Roberts, the medical missionary, but his unlooked-for death had made the homeward journey a lonely one, and gave peculiar pathos to the words of welcome. The war in the East added special emphasis to the words spoken to the outgoing band, which includes Rev. Jonathan Lees, Miss Pearson, and Dr. Eliot Curwen. The directors have given their missionaries a free hand to do whatever they think best, should an emergency arise, for the safety of themselves and of those associated with them.

Calls.—Rev. A. Seys Howell, of Southampton, to Soho Hill, Birmingham; Rev. A. H. Cullen, of Gloucester, to Heaton Mersey; Rev. E. Allen, to Shepton Mallet.

Resignations.—Rev. G. Walker, of Long Melford; Rev. A. Turner, of Ashford; Rev. J. Cliffe, of Lane Chapel, Holmfirth.

BAPTIST.

Lewisham-road Church, Greenwich, has celebrated its jubilee.

The foundation-stone of a new chapel has been laid in Taplin-road, Hillsbro'.

Rev. Philip Davies, who has laboured on the Congo five years, has come home on furlough.

Rev. Giles Hester is progressing satisfactorily towards recovery, and is now able to leave his bed.

The church at Tottlebank has celebrated its 225th anniversary. Rev. A. Riddel has been recognised as pastor.

Rev. E. E. Walters, of Jubilee-drive Church, Liverpool, has returned from Switzerland, after an absence of three months, greatly improved in health.

The Tract and Book Society are about to migrate from their present depôt in Furnival-street, having secured larger premises in Gray's-inn-road, where they propose to open a book-room.

The annual meetings of the Welsh Baptist Union have been held at Morriston. The new chairman is Mr. D. Davies, of Merthyr. The reports presented show good work in many parts.

Tabernacle Church, Nottingham, reports that the membership has risen from 635 to 770, a net gain of 135. There are 180 church members in the Sunday-school, seventy of whom have joined during the past year.

Rev. Russell H. Conwell, of Philadelphia, according to one of our American contemporaries, addresses 8000 people every Sunday. He has established a college where 120 students are taking a regular course, and 3500 others are attending classes in various subjects.

Rev. T. Bentley has resumed his ministry at Chipping Norton after six months' illness. At a service to welcome him back, Revs. R. B. Wallace, C. Hobbs, and G. W. Davidson took part in congratulating him upon having completed twenty-five years' ministry in that place.

A site has been secured in the northern part of Brighton for the erection of new Sunday-schools, at an estimated cost of £1300, land being reserved for the future erection of a church, for which plans have been prepared. This is the result of evangelistic work on the part of the three Baptist churches in the town.

A magnificent gift has been recently made to the Baptist denomination in South Croydon by a Church of England lady, comprising a large plot of freehold land and church buildings thereupon, valued at upwards of £2,000. In connection a church has been formed by Dr. Jas. A. Spurgeon. The new church numbers 105 members, and Rev. R. E. Chettleborough has been unanimously elected pastor.

Call.—Mr. Gledhill to Haslingden.

Resignation.—Rev. W. H. Payne, of Ormsby.

METHODIST.

It is proposed to build a new chapel in Cambridge-street, Wellingborough.

New chapels are being erected in Keighley, Mottram St. Andrew, Finechambers (Hexham).

A "Pleasant Wednesday Evening" service has been inaugurated at Bethel Chapel, Hull, with a large audience.

The Primitive Methodist Mission Van has been so successful that a new van has been offered by an earnest friend.

Rev. G. P. Clarke states that the Central Mission, Bradford, has doubled its membership since the new hall was opened.

New chapels have been opened by the Wesleyans at Banks Hill, Morley, Summerbridge, Nidderdale, and Loddon (Norfolk).

It is interesting to note that a few days ago Mrs. Roberts, wife of a Free Methodist evangelist, conducted, by invitation of the vicar, an evangelistic service in the vicarage library at Stainfield.

The latest advices from Corea to the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Office state that the missionaries in that country are safe, and that the mission property has suffered no damage. Bishop Ninde was compelled to abandon all hope of getting to Corea for the annual meeting, the regular steamers having all stopped running.

In connection with the Wesleyan Mission, High-street, Deptford, a miscellaneous sale of second-hand clothing and other articles will be held in the Lower Hall of the Mission Chapel on Thursday, October 18. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson, of 90, High-street, Deptford, and Mr. G. Stone, of 36, Payne-street, Deptford, will be pleased to receive, on behalf of the sale, clothing and articles of any kind, or they will be sent for on the receipt of a postcard.

A Deaconess Home in connection with the Gravel-lane Church, Manchester, was opened on Thursday. It has eight bedrooms and two sitting-rooms, and will be occupied immediately by three deaconesses, who have already done good work in different parts of England. The condition of the district is most deplorable, and the field is a wide one for the social work that the deaconesses lay themselves out to do. It is hoped that, besides the deaconesses, the new house will accommodate Christian women of leisure and refinement from the suburbs who may be induced to give up a portion of their time to work in the neighbourhood.

PRESBYTERIAN

Rev. John More will be inducted on Sept. 27 to his new church at Woolwich.

Rev. Hugh McIntosh has resumed his work at Brockley, after a visit to the North.

It was reported at the last week's meeting of Presbytery that a site has been secured for a church at Fulham.

Alterations of a very extensive character have been made in Stephen's Church, Leicester, with the result that the building, which will accommodate 450 worshippers, is now one of the handsomest in the town.

The fourth annual conference of the English Presbyterian Church of Wales was held last week at Chester, when about 200 delegates, in addition to 75 students from the Bala and Trevecca Theological Colleges, assembled from various parts of the country. The conference extended over three days. The whole tone was encouraging.

Calls.—Rev. R. S. Anderson, of Ferry-Port-on-Craeg, to Free St. Enoch'c, Glasgow; Rev. J. Ritchie, of Callender, to Dunfermline; Rev. D. Munro, to Lochgilphead; Rev. J. Jones, to Cynfal, East Merioneth; Rev. C. Davies, of Cayo, to Blaina, Mon.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A new meeting-house has just been opened at Tunbridge Wells.

Out of the twenty delegates from America to the recent Peace Congress at Antwerp, sixteen were Friends. These and English Friends and others held a "meeting for worship," in a room kindly lent, on the Sabbath succeeding the Congress.

The Friends of Middlesbrough, assisted by Theodore, Herbert, and Howard Nicholson, are having a mission in the circus there with the hope of reaching the masses. Much is hoped for from this bold effort for Christ by the three brothers.

Friends' Foreign Mission Association seems very active in pursuit of its work. Only recently five missionaries left for Madagascar, and soon one is going to China, three more to Madagascar, and six to India, some of these are new, others are returning after furlough, but all are impelled by love to Christ and the heathen. Blessing must rest on the Church thus carrying out the "marching orders" of the Captain of our Salvation. The citadel needs to be strong when the outposts are so numerous.

On Thursday evening, the 13th inst., John J. Dorland and wife were liberated by Westminster Monthly Meeting to join some Friends of Sunderland in a visit to Palestine, Syria, and Egypt, and such other places, going and returning, as might promote the cause of truth. They hope to visit the missions of Friends and those of other Churches as way opens fall on their journey. At the same meeting Samuel Baker, of London, was liberated to visit the south of Ireland, chiefly in connection with foreign mission work. There was much expression of sympathy and unity with our friends in their prospective work.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth will visit Salt Lake City before he returns to England.

The dates for Self-denial Week are fixed from Saturday, October 20, to Sunday, October 28.

The new barracks recently opened at Norwich is situated in the Bull Close. It has seating accommodation for 600. An adjoining building is being fitted up for the juniors, which, when finished, will hold 200 children.

General Booth announced at his farewell meeting that the profits arising from his book, "In Darkest England and the Way Out," would be between £6000 and £7000, the whole of which sum would be devoted to the Social Wing.

The Inquiry Department of the Army has only been in existence for the past five years. During that time 10,000 inquiries have been made for lost friends, and of these 3104, or a proportion of one in three, have been successful.

The Free Methodist chapel in Redruth is partly the result of a visit paid by General Booth twenty-eight years ago, the number of conversions at the time being very great, and so many being added to the membership the present magnificent chapel was built.

La Maréchale has had remarkable meetings in Switzerland. "Her rapid campaign through French and German Switzerland has been greatly blessed. The Sunday afternoon open-air meeting at Lausanne was the largest we have ever had in Switzerland; there were 2000 present. The attention was remarkable."

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Wyke, on 8th inst., Mr. Joseph Clarke, aged 86, for many years an earnest worker.—At Morriston, Mr. D. Davies, J.P., a willing helper of Christian work.—At Upper Norwood, Mr. E. Pritchard, a faithful steward of the Lord's money.—At Cheltenham, on 10th inst., suddenly, Mr. A. Bloodworth, an earnest temperance leader.—At Bradford, Mr. George Taylor, a devoted worker at Kirkgate Chapel.—At Norton (Doncaster), Mr. William Gooderidge, a valued class leader and local preacher.—At Woodford Hall, Winsford, Mr. G. Slater, a prominent Free Methodist leader.—At Blaenau, Festiniog, Mr. David Jones, loved and honoured for his faithful work.—At Londonderry Rev. Wm. Miller Major, Senior Canon of Derry Cathedral.

Jews in Germany.—A lady without private means is desirous to devote her time and energies to Christian work among educated Jews in a large town in Germany, sharing the burden of one who has laboured there alone for six years. Friends able and willing to assist are requested to write for information to J. C. D., 6, Clementina-villas, Halton-road, Spilsby, Lincolnshire.

Jubbulpore, C.P., India.—In a recent letter, Mrs. Nelson, wife of Rev. J. Nelson, Presbyterian chaplain 2nd Scottish Rifles, says:—"A branch of the W.C.T.U. has been formed here. We have now more than twenty members. We decided to start a 'Band of Hope'; nearly thirty children have signed the pledge. We are greatly in need of suitable literature for this branch of our work. We hope to start a branch of the Y.W.C.A. The Y.M.C.A. have over eighty members. The work of the S.C.A. goes steadily along." Packets of temperance and Gospel literature will be received and forwarded by Miss E. Self, 56, Carlton-road, Mile End, London, E.

THE SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION is an auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A. In the report of last year's operations, we read: "The secretary, Mr. A. H. Wheeler, has visited a great many garrison towns and organised seventy-one branch societies in various centres; and very important service has been rendered by the secretary in attending the conferences of the Y.M.C.A., and bringing it to the notice of local secretaries. During the trooping season he has co-operated with the workers of the Soldiers' Institute in visiting all the Indian troopers, both outward and homeward bound, and by this means Christian men have been welcomed home, and the names of the outgoing men have been sent to Mr. Harrington, in India." The headquarters of the Association are at the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Notes and Comments.

"Who are Israel?" A letter on this subject, by Mr. H. D. Brown, will appear in our next.

A grotesque error occurred in our last. In the third paragraph under Notes and Comments, our words "in the warmth of early love," were transmuted into "on the warpath of early love."

When reading frequently of late the pacific sentiments and intentions of the great ruling powers, and the assurance that nothing was likely to disturb the peace of Christendom, we have been reminded that they say "Peace! peace!" when there is no peace; and that when they say, "Peace and safety!" sudden destruction cometh.

And now there bursts upon the world this cruel and destroying war between Japan and China. Scarcely a word of regret or remonstrance from Pulpit or Press; indeed, the newspapers speak of the new Power which has to be taken into account, without a word of sorrow for the writhing mass of human agony, the seething refuse of every battle.

It seems almost impossible that this great slaughter can be confined to these two Eastern nations. Already Russia is on the scene. Who knows how soon the European Powers may find themselves drawn into the deadly fray? Are we not within measurable, almost visible, distance of Armageddon?

If Japan is making a bid by her military and naval prowess for a place among the great powers of the world, she is apparently on the way to success. But it is a pitiable comment on our life and standards of judgment, if nations are to be appraised according to their ability and skill to destroy life and property. It is like deciding that the best fighting boys in a school shall be at the top. According to this rule, the Jews were far below the Egyptians and Assyrians, but we know now that, they were of far more use to the world than their overshadowing neighbours. Japan will find that she is paying a heavy price to rank with Germany and the United Kingdom.

The intention of France to interfere more directly in the affairs of Madagascar is causing anxiety as to the fate of missionary work in that island. Great things have been done, but alas! the Government is very corrupt, and may possibly fall before a foreign power. Prosperity has also had its baneful influence on the native churches; it is not easy, we believe, to keep them pure and true. They have, no doubt, large numbers of faithful men and women, but what are they against the huge mass of heathenism all around? It is one thing to found a church or churches, another to save a nation. Should the French assume an active protectorate over the island, it is feared by those who have the best means of judging that the work of Protestant missions would be seriously impeded.

America wants a Lord Shaftesbury to take up the cause of the factory children. In textile factories children walk twenty miles a day. Two-thirds of the yarn manufactured in America is spun by children under sixteen years of age. In the thread mills, some of which we believe are owned by Englishmen, children walk nearly as many miles. In button factories children eyelet twenty gross of buttons a day. In the great feather factories, all through the hot weather, children stand ten hours daily steaming feathers over pipes from which volumes of hot vapour are constantly escaping. "Stock girls" are all day long bearing heavy burdens up and down long flights of stairs, their average wage being little more than seven shillings a week (and they are fined for absence, tardiness, and all mistakes), which, for a day of from ten to sixteen hours, the time some work, is about a penny an hour! How much is left when the fines are paid? Surely the pitiful cry of the children is entering into the ears of the Lord. Money got out of such exactions is cursed.

In view of several elections which will presently take place, we think that Christian citizens should seriously consider what is their civic duty. They may decline to have anything to do with them, either to work for the return of a candidate whose character they know to be good, and whose services they believe would be useful to society, or to be candidates for office themselves. Before doing this, we think that they should seriously reflect upon the condition of things which such abstention from public duty on the part of Christian citizens will inevitably bring upon us. Our municipal government will become like that of the City of New York, of which a picture is given in the pages of The Forum:—

> If the testimony of the witnesses is to be believed, there exists a Police Protective Tariff, the revenues from which equal the legitimate income of the city. These revenues are divided between various politicians in and out of office. The probabilities are that there is a regular ratio of division, a percentage, as is usual among brigands.
> For example, a disorderly house, if its owner wishes to carry on his wickedness without molestation, pays an "initiation fee" of five hundred dollars, and a monthly sum of from fifty to one hundred dollars. A policeman pays for his appointment and for his promotion.

We hold that it is in every way an advantage to have true Christians, really carrying out the law of Christ, in every position where salaries are paid for work done. Then it cannot be a bad thing to have them in situations where no salaries are paid—in Parliament, in County Councils, on Boards of Guardians, and Parish Councils. It is better thus to be serving only the bodies and minds of men than to be absorbed all along in making money, or in doing that and enjoying the leisure of a comfortable home. The Forum says that the inquiry into the state of New York city "has disclosed the terrible fact that the quality of our American citizenship is being destroyed in the race for wealth. Personal convenience outweighs civic duty." A Christian of true faith and courage proves a check on any dishonest body of men.

We are the more earnest on this point of laymen doing their share of public duty, because, in some cases, ministers are in danger of being tempted away from their own proper work. A country pastor, asked by a correspondent of The Independent whether he should stand for the Parish Council, replied:—

> I feel I should like to, but the work of visiting must not be neglected, and the pulpit must be put first of all. It is easy for others to criticise, but let a man do as I have done since the end of last September—pay six hundred visits, covering an area of nearly thirteen miles, four in each direction, give regularly his best in the pulpit every Sunday without a change, conduct a Bible reading in the week, attend forty meetings in different parts, spend thirty-five hours in Board School and technical work, and I cannot tell how much time in receiving callers—and what has he left for reading and for himself? I speak as one who knows. If the attempt to make us ministers men of affairs is carried to a much greater extent, our own real work must suffer, and it will become true that we do not read, simply because we cannot.

Yes, and when the real work suffers all the rest will suffer with it. Let Christians do their civic duties, and, at the same time not neglect the prayer meeting, the hearing of the Word, the fellowship of the saints, the worship of God.

"A Catholic Layman" writes to The Westminster Gazette to say that he, in common with many Roman Catholics, thinks that the decision to build a sumptuous cathedral at Westminster is a mistake, and that Cardinal Manning's course "to extend and increase schools and build small churches was more favourable to the growth of Catholicity." It appears that in the last twenty years six large churches have been built at the cost of £300,000; the proposed cathedral—building and site—will cost £750,000. He states that whereas there were seven million Catholics in the United Kingdom in 1841, there are now five million and a half—a decline of two millions and a half in Ireland, and an increase of a million in Great Britain. Romanists may find, like other systems, that their decay will come with increase of show.

It is exactly 354 years to-day (September 27) since the Jesuit Society was formed by Ignatius Loyola. While bearing the name of Jesus, how little has it done that has been in harmony with it! Its history has been largely a history of craftiness, of duplicity, and of persecution. The name Jesuit has become a synonym for deceit. That the Society has largely counteracted the work of the Reformation is a lamentable fact; that it is now working in sinuous ways to bring back England to the feet of Rome there is every reason to believe. In churches, in places of business, in Parliament, in the Press, it is constantly labouring to influence opinion, and to turn the habits of the people Romewards.

That it should ever have acquired power seems strange; but we must remember the depravity of human nature, which always leans to a corrupt form of religion, rather than to the truth; also that the Reformation itself was an imperfect work—only a beginning—and retained many of the deadly seeds of Romanism; and, further, that where the Reformation was victorious it sometimes caused reaction by pressing its successes too far. In too many cases its alliance with princes and rulers was its weakness and downfall. The truth is safest in the keeping of loving hearts, however humble. And it is a fact as strange as it is suggestive, that amid all the revolutions of thought which take place, the pure, simple form of truth in the Scriptures remains untouched and unspoiled. Until men come to that there will be no rest for the sole of their foot.

The "run" of books is a curious study. Mr. W. J. Gordon, writing in The Leisure Hour, says that book-buying declines enormously between Christmas, when books for presentation are bought, and Lent, "when the women betake themselves to the Imitatio and its crowd of imitators, by way of amend for their excursions into the doubtful and suggestive. The coincidence is too striking to be overlooked; whenever there is a boom of an 'advanced' novel in November, there is a greater run than ordinary on 'devotionals' in the following Lent. During Holy Week the sale of Lenten literature thins out, and by the Thursday is utterly lost amid a crowd of guides and holiday hand-books." A plain evidence this that impure novels are corrupting too many of the women of our country, and that religionis with large numbers an observance of days and seasons.

On Sunday last many of the ministers of the Free Churches in South London exchanged pulpits, as an expression of fraternal unity and regard. The movement, which is one of the highest promise, was inaugurated at Christ Church (Rev. F. B. Meyer's) some months ago. It is intended to summon at an early date a meeting of the pastors and officers of the various Nonconformist churches in the district, to confer respecting the formation of a federation of Christian men to take concerted action against the intemperance and vice of this portion of the great Metropolis, and to act together for the spiritual interests of the people. In the first week of the year united special services are proposed to be held in four centres in South London.

When the priests failed God raised up prophets. They should have learned the law at the mouth of Eli, but because of his unfaithfulness the Word of the Lord was precious (rare) in those days; there was no open vision. Then God gave Samuel, and the Lord revealed Himself to Samuel in Shiloh by the Word of the Lord. In like manner, at the present time, when many accredited and gifted men have proved indifferent, unfaithful, and senile, God has raised up a new order of testimony in Conferences and Conventions held in our own and other lands where the foundation truths of the faith of God's elect are maintained in their integrity.

---

The Ark of the Testimony was lost to Israel under Hophni and Phinehas, and the glory departed, but Samuel taught them the good and the right way, and ceased not to pray for them. The testimony of the modern Church has been largely lost in so-called modern thought, but the Conventions have done much to recover it. Our ruin in Adam, our redemption by Christ, our reconciliation through his blood, our resurrection in Him, our regeneration by the Holy Spirit, our transfiguration into the image of our Lord from glory to glory, our being like Him when we see Him as He is, our citizenship in Heaven, from whence we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion our humiliated body into the likeness of the body of his glory—all these great truths are taught at these united gatherings.

World-wide Evangelisation.

I HAVE been deeply interested in the most important letter in THE CHRISTIAN, of September 13, from China, by Mr. J. Sadler, who says of a young convert that in his pleading he "referred over and over again to the wonderful ease with which God could work." Rightly prayed, beloved brother of China; for our brother Paul in his Epistle to the Hebrews fairly revels in detailing the ease with which our Almighty Father worked one miracle after another, and these wonders Paul piles one upon another in his letter to the Hebrews, not to be placed by us as relics in some museum, to be wondered at, but for our own practical edification and example. For, verily, our own Heavenly Father LOVES to respond to our prayers by night and by day. Even more ungrudgingly than the immense waters I have gazed upon of the mighty Niagara, ever pouring over their great rocky bed down into the flowing waters below. Many of your readers will surely rejoice in Mr. Sadler's letter.

The sisters of the corpsed Lazarus remonstrated with the Saviour, "If Thou hadst been here our brother had not died," and again when He ordered the gravestone to be removed, Martha remonstrated, "Lord, by this time he stinketh." But Jesus replied, "Said I not unto thee if thou wouldest believe thou shouldest see the glory of God," and then He cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth," followed by the command, "Loose him and let him go."

Let then our united prayer go up to God for the natives of China, of India, and of Africa, and the world, that they may speedily be raised from their spiritual death, and even the most ignorant of them loosed and let go in their thousands and tens of thousands, as holy livers and unpaid messengers amongst their fellow-countrymen.

Oh, that with China, and India, and Tibet, and Africa, and the whole world, laid before us, instead of praying the limited prayer for "foreign missionaries," we should be lifted up to the higher prayer used by the persecuted Jews at Pentecost (Acts iv. 29). "Grant unto thy servants that with all boldness they may speak thy Word. . . . And when they had prayed."

No wonder the Gospel then and thus thereby should spread by leaps and bounds in Europe and Asia and Africa. They had no steamboats to run across the seas, and America was then unknown to the old world, and the printed Gospels and Epistles were unknown. But in the known world for a while the Gospel continued to spread by leaps and bounds. Christ had ordained that every single male and female Christian should be a burning, brilliant, reflecting lamp. The superstition that NONE but clergymen or ministers or missionaries should be the reflecting lamps of Jesus Christ was from Satan, and crept stealthily in according to the Saviour's own warning, "After my departure shall grievous wolves enter in, not sparing the flock." What need we then to cry to God for most? For funds, O no! no! For more missionaries, or more money? O no! no!

When Christ was prayed to stop the simple folk from testifying aloud, He rebuked the interruption, and said, "If these should hold their peace the very stones would cry out." Is it not a time then for us of Europe and America, and of all Christendom, with one accord to get on our faces and beseech Him to thrust out his own children, and to forgive us our miserable lukewarmness and blind mistake in not praying for the WHOLE army of God, i.e., for every truly converted man and woman, boy and girl, even if they be what the Bible styles but babes and sucklings, that with one accord throughout Christendom and heathenism, and Mohammedanism, and amongst the beloved sons of Israel, we, that is, the whole body of believers, may be bold and active but humble witnesses that Christ has saved ourselves, and does delight to throw his arms of love round and save and transform the most sinful human creature?

REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

P.S.—Since commencing to write this letter, I have read with deep interest the most important letter of Mr. J. H. Anderson on this subject in THE CHRISTIAN of September 20, which surely deserves being disseminated by the thousand.

MR. TOYE AND THE ORPHANS.

ONCE a year Mr. Toye asks his friends and neighbours to join with him in praise and thanksgiving for the way that he and his large family of little folk have had their wants supplied. Last Friday many responded to his invitation, so that his upper chamber was filled to overflowing.

It is now twenty-five years since he pitched his tent in Lewisham-road and opened his Home for the fatherless there, with the children he had rescued from want in Millwall during a very trying period.

There he is still in his seventy-fifth year maintaining the principle with which he began, that to whatsoever straits he might be brought, to no human ear would he tell his need. And how has his method answered? Mr. Toye is able to say that his table has always been spread, and that his faith in God for his future is stronger than ever. Seeing he shelters, educates, clothes and keeps over one hundred and fifty friendless little girls, good mothers with smaller families may know what responsibilities he bears, and admire, if they may not imitate, his unfailing trust in his heavenly Father.

But Mr. Toye does not hide that a life of faith is not always a life of sunshine. There would be no need for faith if it were, and he strongly emphasises that to exercise faith for the due payment of food, firing, rent, taxes, and reorganising drains to suit the surveyor, and to sit and talk about faith, are two very different things. For instance, only a fortnight ago the storeroom, was a storeroom only in name; now it was pressed in, running over, and everything paid for.

It has happened ere now that half an hour before tea all there was in the house for that meal was the table-cloth; but before the hour struck horse and van came to the door with all the needed bread, cut and buttered!

The story of last year's work has been one of considerable trial, and Mr. Toye's health has not been so good as usual.

The following is from one month's experience:—

16th.—From Blackheath, ten quarterns of bread; from Lewisham, a basket of fruit.

17th.—A friend in Greenwich, 13s.; box at the gate, 8s. 8d.

20th.—Very little has come in for several days. We were now greatly tried, but the Lord remembered us in our need, and sent us £10 through a reader of THE CHRISTIAN. Will this kind friend please accept my thanks for this timely help, for which may the Lord God reward him or her?

21st.—From Blackheath Hill, £1; box at the gate, 1s. 1d.

23rd and 24th.—A friend, 20s.; from an orphan box, 1s. 8½d.; box at the gate, 9s. 7d.

27th.—From Swanley Junction, £2 2s.; by carrier, a parcel of paper, etc.; Lewisham-road, a piece of meat; from Kensington, 20s.; from a lady in France, 5 francs; from Maidstone, £20. This was a most blessed answer to prayer. For some time past we have been very poor, living day by day, and almost meal by meal, upon what was sent in. For some days I had been speaking to the Lord about our storeroom, which was nearly empty, and reminding Him, according to his word, "Put Me in remembrance."

Thus it has been during a quarter of a century, light and shade, the trial of faith, and prayer answered, so that this servant of God might not be confounded. Old and tried friends have been removed by death, and new ones have taken their place, and to-day Mr. Toye's song is of mercy and of thanksgiving for all the ways in which he has been led.

NO MISSIONARY WORK seems so meritorious as that of rearing to worthy citizenship a homeless waif of our race that has been rescued from the drift of the world. What a crown of compensation awaits such a missionary!

Missionary Principles.

Foreign Missions have their foundation in the authority and claims of God. He has the most absolute right to the obedience and worship of all. He claimed these from the Israelites, and prohibited every approach to idolatry—(Ex. xx. 3-6)—not only on the ground of their special national relations to Himself, but as the universal Creator, Lord and King of all. Idolatry, all through the Bible, whatever its name and form, is condemned and denounced as vain and useless, and as rebellion and robbery of God. Against nothing are the Israelites so warned all through their history, and for nothing did they so suffer as for their lapses into it. The idolatry of surrounding nations was invariably denounced and condemned by the servants of God, and to its pernicious influence were ascribed most of the evils existing among them and the troubles they endured.

These facts should have more consideration from those inclined to look favourably on non-Christian religions than they usually receive. God being what He is, the sole and universal origin of all things, infinitely worthy of the love and service of all, has indefeasible claims to the worship and service of every human being, so that it cannot but be a great loss, or calamity, or sin, not to know of and serve Him.

False religion fails to reveal the highest and most necessary truths; it exerts no adequate check on the selfish, evil propensities of our nature; it ministers in many ways to evil instead of checking it; and nowhere does it give adequate power to resist evil and to rise above it. If it does, where is it to be seen? What deliverances for humanity has heathenism ever wrought? This aspect of the subject has been dealt with in a previous paper, but, in an age disposed to depreciate Christianity, and to think too favourably of false religions, it needs to be repeated.

It was to vindicate the claims of God as the eternal Lawgiver and King, in pity for the sins and sorrows of humanity, and because there was no other eye to pity or arm to save, that the Son of God became incarnate; and after his atoning death gave the command: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." No theory will explain this Divine and unique interposition, but that which declares that there is in Christianity a power to save and bless men, both in this life and the life to come, which no other religion possesses. Thus zeal for the glory of God, pity for the sins and sorrows of men, and sympathy with the purposes for which our Saviour lived and died, urge to the prosecution of missionary enterprises; and it is difficult to understand how the temper and spirit of Christianity can exist in any strength without sympathy with their operations and aims. They have a Divine authorisation; they exist to carry into effect the purposes of the Almighty; they are in sympathy with the mind and will and command of Christ, and can claim therefore the aid and sympathy of all his disciples.

There are other principles which should be kept in view in the conduct of missions, because, though they cannot claim Divine authorisation, they are right in themselves, efficient in their action, win public sympathy and support, and may be expected to meet with the Divine blessing. Far more depends on the adoption of these than at first may appear. The Divine truths on which all missions are based, should bring them the warm sympathy and aid of all Christians. The missionary spirit should be as a matter of course, the outflow of the Christian mind. But it is not so in all cases; we see large numbers, more or less professing godliness, who seem to be indifferent to missions and untouched by any ardour in their behalf. There are others whose interest can only be described as languid and feeble. All these may be interested or repelled by the policy and methods of missionary societies. The fact that their interest is affected often by very secondary influences, makes it the more important that missions should be conducted as wisely and efficiently as possible; on such principles as will bear the closest investigation, and win the steady enthusiastic support of the largest number of devout and thoughtful people. For failure in this, Societies, their officers, and agents, are mainly responsible. Too frequently they fail in the presentation of the Divine and authoritative claims of missions—perhaps because the acceptance of these is assumed, whilst the presentation of their own or their Society's claims, ministers to passing rather than permanent interest, or to a weak sentimentalism. Whatever the cause, there is not as large a number of warm, steady friends of missions as reasonably might be looked for, nor that enthusiasm which they are well fitted ideally to produce.

Missionary methods greatly tell in this direction, and may hereafter be considered; but two principles may here be stated of the utmost importance, as any one widely acquainted with the thoughts and opinions of the great mass of practical persons interested in such subjects well know.

First, missions should be conducted both at home and abroad as economically as is consistent with efficiency. This will be admitted; and yet it requires strong conscientiousness and resolute purpose to give it practical effect. Free expenditure saves trouble and pleases many, and the machinery of operations is apt to extend into details of management which are alike elaborate and expensive. The most effective check on this tendency is to remember that money contributed to missions is sacred, and should as far as possible be reserved for direct work done; that it is given mainly by those who are not rich, and often is the product of great self-denial, and that of all the causes which check enthusiasm and liberality, the impression in question is the most frequently heard of, and the most deterrent in its effects.

Akin to this is a second principle, that missions abroad should work from the beginning toward independence and self-support. This, too, will be acknowledged as reasonable, and yet, practically, it is seldom steadily kept in view. The poverty of most heathen people, their selfishness, their readiness to receive rather than to give, and the reluctance of missionaries to lay any burden on new converts, with the hope that the power of the Gospel will cause in due time a rich growth of unselfishness, zeal, and liberality, leads them to postpone pressing or even mentioning such questions. The longer such a course is deferred, the more difficult initiation becomes. Instances have not been rare when, after ten and even twenty years, no steps have been taken at a Christian station toward self-support; and when even the successful mission has become a far heavier burden on the resources of a home Society, than when it was commenced. To help themselves from the beginning is a principle needing to be pressed. It is right in itself. It is wholesome for all native Christian communities. It is one of the methods by which the strain on the finances of some societies would most effectively be relieved; and it would quicken and stimulate home liberality in many ways and for many reasons.

New England Unitarianism.

The Independent has published a review, as important as it is interesting, from the pen of Dr. Brown, of Bedford, of Dr. Albert E. Dunning's new book, "Congregationalists in America" (Memorial Hall, E.C.). The point which has especially interested us is that of the rise and decline of Unitarianism. After the great revival of religion, evoked mainly by the labours of Jonathan Edwards and George Whitefield, a reaction set in, and slowly and stealthily Unitarianism crept like a blight over many of the churches. Especially was Boston affected through so-called "liberal" ministers.

When the controversy opened between the orthodox party and the Unitarians, the latter were confident that before fifty years should be passed "orthodoxy would have become a thing of the past, while Unitarianism would be the prevailing type of religion." When twenty-five years of the fifty had passed, Dr. Channing, who had been forty years in Boston, had to say, "I would that I could look to Unitarianism with more hope. But this system was at its recent revival a protest of the understanding against absurd dogmas, rather than the work of deep religious principle; it was early paralysed by the mixture of material philosophy, and fell too much into the hands of scholars and political reformers, and the consequence is a want of vitality and force, which gives us little hope of its accomplishing much under its present auspices, or in its present form."

But it never gets under any better auspices, nor takes any diviner form than that of a philosophy. It is not religion, but a set of notions. What it came to in Boston is thus stated by Dr. Dunning:—"Twenty-five years after the controversy broke out in 1815 there were in Massachusetts about 130 Unitarian churches, of which the parishes of ninety-six had been originally orthodox, while about thirty had been organised by parishes from which orthodox churches had removed. There were at that time 414 Trinitarian Congregational churches in the State, 197 of which had been organised since 1815. According to the United States census for 1890, there were in the whole of the States 421 Unitarian churches, with 67,749 members, more than half of whom are in Massachusetts. The number of Congregational churches in 1890 was 4868, with 512,771 members."

That some at least of the Unitarians of America are conscious of their feebleness appears from the following fact:—Dr. Palfrey, one of the founders of the Unitarian Association, once remarked to Dr. Hale, also a Unitarian, that "between 1810 and 1830 we governed Boston and we governed Massachusetts; and they let us do it because we did it so well." In a lecture which Dr. Hale himself recently gave, he recalled that observation, and asked why they did not do it now? He answered himself. "Because the aristocracy of Massachusetts tried to preach the Gospel to the people of America; but for the lack of a miracle of Pentecost they could not speak the language." We entirely agree with Dr. Brown when he says "that a Christianity without a dying, atoning Christ is a dying Christianity." And, further, we say that the Holy Spirit will only be present to give spiritual quickening and life when the Son of Man is evidently set forth crucified, risen, and glorified.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

INTO THE GROUND, TO DIE.

(Jeremiah xxxii.)

All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist;
Not its semblance, but itself; no beauty, nor good, nor power,
Whose voice has gone forth, but each survives for the melodist
When eternity affirms the conception of an hour;
The light that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard,
The passion that left the ground to love itself in the sky,
The music sent up to God by the lover and the bard;
Enough that He heard it once; we shall hear it by and by.

Browning.

Whilst shut up in the court of the prison, perhaps fastened by a chain that restrained his liberty, Jeremiah received a Divine intimation that his uncle would shortly come to him with a request for him to purchase the family property at Anathoth. This greatly startled him, because he had so clear a conviction, which he cherished as divinely given, of the approaching overthrow of the kingdom, and the consequent desolation of the land. It had been his one incessant message to his people for nearly forty years that the land must keep her Sabbaths as a judgment for the sins of the people; and now it seemed conflicting and inconsistent to be told to purchase the field at Anathoth, as though it were needed for cultivation. The Divine command quite staggered him, and may have made him for a moment question whether there had not been some mistake in the message he had so constantly reiterated in the ears of his people.

He gave, however, no outward sign of his perplexities; but when his uncle's son entered the courtyard with his request, the prophet at once assented to the proposal, and purchased the property for seventeen shekels (about £2). A similar incident is recorded in Roman history. When Rome was being besieged by Hannibal, the very ground on which he was encamped was put up for auction, and purchased; a proof of the calm confidence that the Romans possessed of the ultimate issue of the conflict.

In addition to this, Jeremiah took care to have the purchase recorded and witnessed with the same elaborate pains as if he were at once to be entering on occupation. Not a single form was omitted or slurred over; and ultimately the two deeds of contract, the one sealed with the more private details of price, the other open and bearing the signatures of witnesses, were deposited in the charge of Baruch, with the injunction to put them in an earthen vessel, and preserve them. They were probably not opened again until the return from the captivity; but we can well imagine how strong a rush of emotion and confidence must have been inspired, as the men of that day perused the documents.

But Jeremiah was not a sharer in that glad scene. He did as God bade him, though the shadow of a great darkness lay upon his soul, from which he could only find relief, as the Lord on the cross, in recourse to the Father. Indeed, at this point of his life, he resembles the hidden vessel, which contained within it the charter of the nation's deliverance. He was an earthen vessel indeed, but he contained heavenly treasure. He fell into the ground to die, as the seed does, which holds at its heart a principle of life, that can only express itself through death, and can only bless men when its sowing, amid the depression and decay of autumn, has been complete.

I.—HOURS OF MIDNIGHT DARKNESS.

It is only in service that anything reaches its fullest life. A bit of iron is condemned to solitude and uselessness till it becomes part of a great machine. A seed of corn, hidden for three thousand years in a mummy case, abides alone, and only learns the motive and glory of existence when, through death, it learns to weave the chemical juices of the earth, and dews, sunbeams, and air, into the fabric of the golden corn. A man who lives a self-contained life, of which the gratification of his own ambition and selfhood is the supreme aim, never drinks the sweets of existence, or attains his full development. It is only when we live for God—and, in doing so, for man, that we are able to appropriate the rarest blessedness of which our nature is capable, or to unfold into all the proportions of full growth in Christ. In the deepest sense, therefore, Jeremiah could never regret that he had given the strength and measure of his days to the service of others. If he had not done so, but had shrunk back from the high calling of his early life, his misery would have been in proportion to the royal quality of his nature, and his power to enrich the life of man.

But none can give themselves to the service of others, except at bitter cost of much that this world holds dear. In the words of Christ, the corn of wheat must fall into the ground and die, if it is to bear much fruit. In the case of the wheat-corn, death is necessary to break up the case in which the principle of life lies imprisoned. It has fed on the choice farina, the fine flour, stored in its sac or shell, and having consumed it all, it must be let forth; and there is no way of emancipation except through the death that tears down the prison-walls of its cell, and allows it to strike its radicle downward, and its blade upward to the air. And in the case of every true life, there must be death to the attractions and indulgences of the self-life, that the soul, being at leisure from itself, may go forth to seek its supplies from God, and to weave them into nourishing food for the lives of those around. This will explain the privations and sorrows to which Jeremiah was subjected. Death wrought in him, that life might work in Israel, and in all who should read the book of his prophecy.

He died to the dear ties of human love. "Thou shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place," was early said to him. The men of Anathoth, of the house of his father, conspired against him. The friends with whom he took sweet counsel, and in whose company he walked to the house of God, betrayed him. What he held in his heart belonged to the race, and might not be poured forth within the narrower circle of the home, of priestly temple-duty, or of the little village of Anathoth.

He died to the goodwill of his fellows. None can be indifferent to this. It is easy to do or suffer, when the bark of life is wafted on its way by favouring breezes, or the air thrills with expressions of love and adulation. Then a man is nerved to dare to do his best. And a nature as sensitive as Jeremiah's, is peculiarly susceptible to such impressions. But it was his bitter lot to encounter from the first an incessant stream of vituperation and dislike. We have no record of one voice being raised to thank or encourage him. "Woe is me, my mother," he cried sadly, "that thou hast borne me a man of strife and contention to the whole earth. I have not lent on usury, neither have men lent to me on usury; yet every one of them doth curse me."

He died to the pride of national patriotism. No patriot allows himself to despair of his country. However dark the louring storm clouds, and strong the adverse current, he believes that the ship of state will weather the storm. He chokes back words of despondency and depression, lest they should breed dismay. He does not allow his heart to harbour the thoughts of despair that flit across it, and knock for entrance; he drives them away, and treats them as traitors, guilty of high treason. But Jeremiah was driven along an opposite course. A truer heart than his never beat in human breast. A loftier patriotism than his never hazarded itself in the last breach. His belief in Israel was part of his belief in God. But he found himself compelled to speak in such a fashion that the princes proposed, not without show of reason, to put him to death, because he weakened the hands of the men of war.

He died to the sweets of personal liberty. A large portion of his ministry was exerted from the precincts of a prison. Repeatedly we read of his being shut up, and not able to go forth. His friend, Baruch, had constantly to act as his intermediary and interpreter. This, too, must have been bitter to him. His writings abound with references to nature, and to natural processes; and the iron fetters of restraint must have eaten deeply into the tender flesh of his gentle heart.

He died, also, to the meaning he had been wont to place on his own prophecies. Up to the moment when Jehovah bade him purchase the property of Hanameel, he had never questioned the impending fate of Jerusalem. It was certainly and inevitably to be destroyed by sword, famine, pestilence, and fire. All that he had ever said in private or public was but the fresh assertion of this bitter fate, with some new touch of pathos, or turn of emphasis. But now, the word of God, demanding an act of obedience, seemed to indicate that the land was to remain under the cultivation of the families that owned it.

II.—JEREMIAH'S BEHAVIOUR.

To very few men has it been given so closely to walk along the path which the Redeemer trod during his earthly life. He was stripped of almost everything that men prize most. But amid it all, he derived solace and support in three main directions.

(1) He prayed. Take this extract from his own diary: "Now, after I had delivered the deed of the purchase unto Baruch, the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the Lord, saying, Ah, Lord God!" Yea, and he was encouraged in this holy exercise; for shortly after this incident, when tidings came to him that the houses of the kings of Judah were being broken down to provide materials for the building of an inner line of defence, behind the shell of wall which was nearly demolished by the terrible battering-rams, and when his heart was more than ever dismayed, the word of the Lord came to him, saying: "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee, and will show thee great and secret [or inaccessible] things, which thou knowest not" (xxxiii. 1-5).

There is no help to the troubled soul like that which comes through prayer. You may have no clear vision of God. You may be only able to grope your way in the direction where He sits, enshrouded from your view in the thick darkness. You may be able to do little more than recite things which God and you know perfectly well; ending your prayer, as Jeremiah did, with the words, "and behold Thou seest it" (24). Nevertheless, pray; pray on your knees; "in everything, by prayer and supplication, let your requests be made known unto God"; and the peace of God will settle down on, and enwrap, your weary, troubled soul.

He rested on the Word of God. The soul of the prophet was nourished and fed by the Divine word. "Thy words were found," he cries, "and I did eat them: and thy words were unto me the joy and the rejoicing of my heart." It sounds but hard and cold advice to bid a man in sorrow to read his Bible; but it were impossible to give better. Because, behind the words is the Word; in this garden the Son of Man walks; in this tabernacle the Sun shines in whose beams are health and comfort. How often have God's people turned to the Bible, as the Saviour did in the darkest hours that swept over his soul, and found in a Psalm or a chapter the balm of Gilead, the tree of life with healing leaves!

He faithfully kept to the path of duty. "And I bought the field." It does not always happen that our service to men will be met by rebuff, ill-will, and hard treatment; but when it does, there should be no swerving, or flinching, or drawing back. God's sun shines on the evil as well as the good, and his rain descends on the fields of the thankless churl equally as on those of his children. The fierce snow-laden blast, driving straight in your teeth, is not so pleasant as the breath of summer, laden with the scent of the heather; but if you can see the track, you must follow it. To be anywhere off it, either right or left, would be dangerous in the extreme. And often when the lonely soul has reaped nothing but obloquy and opposition, has been borne to a cross, and crucified as a malefactor, it has comforted itself with the prospect of the harvests of blessing which were to accrue to those who had rejected its appeals; just as Pentecost came to those who had been the murderers of Christ.

Such are the resorts of the soul in its seasons of anguish. It casts itself on the ground crying, "Father, Abba, Father"; it stays itself on the word of promise that comes to it in angel-garb: it goes forth to yield itself to death, assured that life awaits it and the objects of its choice.

III.—COMPENSATIONS.

To all valleys there are mountains, to all depths heights; for all midnight hours there are hours of sunrise; for Gethsemane, an Olivet. We can can never give up aught for God or man, without discovering that at the moment of surrender He begins to repay as He foretold to the prophet: "For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron." We do not make the surrender with any thought of profiting by it; but when we make it, with a single purpose and aim, we learn that when Christ lays a requisition on boat or sailor's time, He returns the boat laden with fish to the water's edge.

Nor does God keep these compensations for that new world, "where light and darkness fuse." It were long to wait, if that were so. But here and now we learn that there are compensations. It may seem a hardship to the man to leave his cell, where he has been immured so long that he dreads the light, the stare of strange eyes, the call for exertion; but when the first stiffness of the joints, and novelty of his surroundings have passed off, will he not be compensated? The first movement from the selfish life may strain and try us, the indifference of our fellows be hard to bear; but God has such things to reveal and give, as pass the wildest imaginings of the self-centred soul.

So Jeremiah found it. His compensations came. God became his Comforter, and wiped away his tears; and opened to him the vista of the future, down whose long aisles he beheld his people planted again in their own land. He saw men buying fields for money, and subscribing deeds and sealing them, as he had done; he heard the voice of joy and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, the voice of them that bring the sacrifices of joy into the Lord's house; he was assured of the advent of the Man, the branch from the root of David, who should sit upon his throne (xxxii., xxxiii.). There was compensation also in the confidence with which Nebuchadnezzar treated him, and in the evident reliance which his decimated people placed in his intercessions, as we shall see. And if he could only know of the myriads who had been comforted by the story of his griefs, and by the assurances of his prophecies—ruddy juice pressed into the golden chalice of Scripture by the sorrows that crushed his heart—surely he would feel that his affliction was light and not worthy to be compared with the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory which it was working out.

So will it be with all who fall into the ground to die. God will not forget or forsake them. The grave may be dark and deep, the winter long, the frost keen and penetrating; but spring will come, and the stone be rolled away, and the golden stalk shall wave in the sunshine bearing its crown of fruit, and men shall live on the bread of our experience, the product of our tears, and sufferings, and prayers.

LEPER HOME AT JERUSALEM.

This Moravian institution continues its pathetic and deeply interesting ministry. The present year commenced with twenty-eight patients—an increase of four. Sixteen of these were men, and twelve women. Two of the inmates have been in the Home twenty years.

In the new report Mr. Schubert, the director, says of his afflicted family: "I get on with them pretty well. Sometimes a decided word is required, but I could also give many an instance of childlike affection and gratitude. They cannot do heavy work, but are willing for light tasks when I call upon them. Now and then they set to without being asked; e.g., lately at the beginning of the rainy season, they all helped to carry in wood. The blind and the fingerless filled the baskets, and the others carried them in. Such tasks are good to divert their thoughts from their sad estate."

During last year death removed six of the poor lepers. One of these, a woman, who had been an inmate for nearly three years, was named Fatme. She gave little trouble, and was always cheerful and contented. In her last illness she suffered a good deal, until a stroke deprived her of consciousness. A few weeks before she died she begged to be carried into the chapel to the Christmas festival service, in order that she might repeat her portion of Scripture in presence of the assembled guests. It was touching to hear from her lips Mary's song of praise, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour."

Several of the inmates are fanatical Mohammedans, who make all kinds of excuses to avoid the brief and simple daily worship. One woman, if she attends the service, always asks God to pardon her for having listened to the Bible! A man requested that he might wash his own clothes, as he held it to be sinful to pray in linen which had been washed by Christians. He was ultimately satisfied to some extent with Mr. Schubert's explanation that God looks on the heart, and not at the clothes in which we approach Him; but yet he persists in sprinkling his linen with water before putting it on, and praying that no harm may come to him through the contact of Christian hands!

Hence it is evident that the workers in this Home have not only hazarded health and life for Christ, but are called upon to endure much gainsaying, and to exercise great patience in the discharge of their arduous duties. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. H. O. Essex, The Square, Fairfield, near Manchester.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

LITERAL AND SPIRITUAL:

There is a difference to be observed between literal prophecy and apocalyptic prophecy or prophetic visions. For example: "They pierced my hands and my feet," "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" "I thirst," the casting lots for his garments, etc., necessarily derived their significance from a rigidly literal fulfilment, because they were intended to identify Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ of God. But the prophetic dreams of Pharaoh and of Nebuchadnezzar, and the visions of Daniel and Ezekiel and John, are not literal but symbolic prophecies. In earlier days everything was spiritualised, now the pendulum has swung to the other extreme, so that everything is literalised. And we of this spiritual dispensation are liable to lose more ourselves by an extreme literalism, than our fathers are said to have defrauded the Jews of by an extreme spiritualisation.

The literal interpretation contains the spiritual as the cup contains the water. Without the spiritual, the literal is an empty cup, which cannot satisfy our thirst. Without the literal, the spiritual is like water spilt upon the ground, which cannot be gathered up. Read in the letter only, Exodus is the mere record of a temporal judgment and an earthly deliverance; but read in the spirit these are seen to signify eternal judgment and eternal redemption; the lamb is transfigured into the Lamb of God; Moses and Aaron into the Apostle and High Priest of our confession—Jesus; and the promised land into the rest of faith and the everlasting habitations.

JEW, GENTILE, AND CHURCH OF GOD.

There are three classes of people in the world—the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God. The two former are in unbelief. The latter are God's believing people. When a Jew or a Gentile believes in the Lord Jesus the Jew (as I heard it said many years ago) is un-Jewed, and the Gentile is un-Gentiled; for they are baptized by the one Spirit into the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. There is neither Jew nor Greek, barbarian nor Scythian, male nor female, bond nor free, circumcision nor uncircumcision: for all are children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, and all are one in Him.

THE APOCALYPSE.

The key to the Apocalypse, "The Book of the Unveiling" (as Mrs. Charles, Author of "The Schönberg Cotta Family," has well rendered it), lies in its first verse, "He sent and signified" (sign-ified, expressed by signs, symbolised) "it by his angel unto his servant John." The symbolisation is founded upon the Old Testament (Jewish) history and worship. The prophecy of things future, and the allusion to things past and present, are conveyed in symbolic visions, such as we find in Daniel and Ezekiel, and more or less in all the prophets.

The candlesticks and the stars, the hidden manna and the white stone, Balaam, Balak, and Jezebel, are not to be literally understood any more than the winged and horned wild beasts of Daniel or the cherubim and seraphim of Ezekiel and Isaiah. The book has of necessity a past, a present, and a future fulfilment. Also an inward one, which is the spring and essence of all.

It is always true. For it is the symbolic exhibition of the actings of God and his Christ, of Satan and man, during the period since the Word was made flesh to the time when Satan is cast into the lake of fire. It is always true, for it is the unveiling of the forces which pull the wires of human action. "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts, which war in your members?" And because this is so, Satan will let us be occupied with outward fulfilments, if only we be kept from considering the Armageddon within.

One will take one view, another will take another, but each will be blessed in reading, according to the promise at the beginning of the book. Let not him that eateth of either interpretation despise him that eateth not; neither let him that eateth not judge him that eateth. For each can say, "Thy words were found, and I did eat them, and thy words were unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart." All Scripture is given by inspiration of God: there is no other Scripture; and Scripture, because it is inspired of God, is larger than all our powers of reception put together. Therefore I have learned not to deny the view of another because it differs from my own. Ask fifty Christians, of varied age and experience, to write their views on even the most familiar portion of God's Word. None would produce the counterpart of another, yet not one would necessarily be incompatible with the rest. Just as the air has many functions, but none is inconsistent with any other.

The most important is the sense which is most personal, inward, and experimental. Wise expositors turn the two-edged sword upon themselves, that it may divide between soul and spirit, and joint and marrow, and discern the thoughts and intents of the heart. Thus Wesley prayed: "With power control the beast and devil in my soul," and with profound insight William Law declared that "Self is hell; it is the devil; it is darkness, pain, and disquiet. It is the one only enemy of Christ; the great antichrist. It is the scarlet whore, the fiery dragon, the old serpent, the devouring beast, that is mentioned in the Revelation of St. John." The Bible is much larger than all our conceptions and imaginings, and it has abundance of realistic and literal fulfilment for realistic and literalistic minds; as well as poetry and similitude for imaginative minds. Let us not be eager to oppose or contradict what others see, or think they see, so long as it does not contravene the manifest and self-evident truth of God. M.

BIBLE CLASSES.

I see that you are anxious to hear from any who are interested in work connected with men's Bible classes. I am glad to say that my class numbers over 250, and our usual afternoon attendance is either just over or just under 200.

If you ask, where lies the secret of its success? I should say:—

(1) In a little prayer meeting held every Thursday night; we meet at 8.15, so as to make it a service for those who cannot get to the ordinary week-night meetings. Here we get our members who have decided for Christ, and if you heard the many earnest prayers that go up every week for homes, workmates, and the Sunday work, you would not wonder that God has heard and answered.

(2) We all row in the same boat. No member is allowed to feel that he is more poor or ignorant than others. I have often noticed that if one comes in and looks a little puzzled over finding hymn or lesson, an open book is placed in his hand almost before he has realised he is in trouble. A new member is invariably introduced to the president either before or after the service by the member who has persuaded him to come among us. Our sick members are well visited, and, if necessary, helped by one another to a holiday by the sea; not as an act of charity, but with the feeling that at a future time they may have the pleasure of helping someone else.

I think self and selfishness have been largely laid aside by many of our members; the work is so dear to their hearts that "What is best for our members?" is the question that is being constantly asked among us, and the prayer "The whole class for Christ" is constantly going up in our midst.

We keep our services short and bright, and try and teach a commonsense every-day Gospel. If anyone doubts the power of "The Old, Old Story," or thinks that the men of to-day require different teaching to the men that listened to and learned from the Saviour, I would like them to drop in any afternoon, and see for themselves the reverent, earnest, intelligent attention that is given to the simple Bible lesson.

Our members vary in age principally from eighteen to forty; we have a few as young as seventeen, and some who are far on in life's journey, but the large majority are as fine a set of fellows as you could wish to see, and all their helpful, thoughtful sympathy makes the work of the president comparatively easy, and the many who are glad to testify what Christ has done for them helps us all to press forward. Herts.

THE WEST LONDON MISSION has more than justified the expectations of success indulged when they took over Craven Chapel and its lecture-hall, a few months ago. The Friday night service, hitherto held in the lecture-hall, has never been sufficiently well attended to fill the room, but now it is so crowded that it is held in the chapel. It is conducted by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, and thus affords a good opportunity for those friends to hear Mr. Pearse who cannot get to St. James's Hall on a Sunday morning, when he usually preaches.

REVIVAL CONFERENCE AT DUNDEE.

"WILT thou not revive us again?" was the cry of some hundreds of Christians last week in this Scottish town during the three days of the annual Christian Conference, held in the Kinnaird Hall. The subject was Revival, in its varied relations to the individual, the family, the Church, and the nation, the central points around which the thoughts of the speakers gathered being its needs, its hindrances, suitable methods, and its successes at home, and in the foreign field.

THE FIRST DAY.

Reference was made by Lord KINNAIRD, as chairman, on the first day, and by subsequent speakers, to the thanksgiving meetings held in London last spring. Indeed, it may be said that this Conference was in a measure the outcome of those meetings, so far as the selected subject was concerned; and there is no doubt that, as in Dundee, so in many other places, believers are earnestly looking for a gracious visitation of the Spirit in awakening the careless, and the revival of his people. As some of the speakers urged, "Let us not be content to live in the past, whether it be the revival of 1859 or any blessing which we have had since. The experience of the past is apt to become the prejudice of the present. Rather let us seek fresh grace and a continuous revival in our lives day by day."

The presence on the platform of Rev. W. Y. FULLERTON had an especial interest in that he was the third pastor of Melbourne Hall, Leicester, who had addressed this Conference, his predecessors, Revs. F. B. Meyer and C. B. Sawday, having occupied his place in previous years, and each telling of almost continuous revival in that large and prosperous church. "I dwell in the high and holy place . . . to revive the spirit of the humble . . and the heart of the contrite ones," was his theme, and no more comprehensive verse could he have chosen, as setting forth the conditions of blessing. Revival comes not from (though it may come through) a conference, but from God. It is mentioned in Scripture as emanating from each of the three persons of the Trinity, and it is to those that are "humble" and of "contrite heart" that revival comes. Ten times in Psalms (of which nine are in Ps. cxix.) occurs the phrase, "Quicken me"—a right recognition that it can only come from "the high and holy place." It is possible to become immersed in the Lord's work till the

WORK TAKES THE PLACE OF GOD.

When this is so, a change of work may be beneficial. Get God in the right place and yourself in the right relation to Him. If there be any cloud intervening, yield. He "will not contend for ever"; to him who yields revival comes. "I knew Jesus," wrote George Fox in relating his experience, "and He was very precious to my soul; but I found something within me which would not keep sweet and patient or kind. I did what I could to keep it down, but it was there. I besought Jesus to do something for me, and when I gave Him my will He came to my heart, and took out all that would not be sweet and kind and patient; and then He shut the door!" And He will do the same to-day to those that thus seek Him fervently.

"The drama of the Christian life with the part of Christ omitted will not be a comedy but a tragedy, be the actors ever so talented and the production ever so brilliant." This remarkable utterance came from Rev. Dr. BLACK, of Inverness, in a powerful address upon the Church of Laodicea. Viewed historically, the Laodiceans, as a people, were enterprising, independent, and well-to-do; and it matters little whether the description addressed by the Spirit to the Church referred more especially to their commercial or ecclesiastical prosperity; they were satisfied with what they had, but, alas! ignorant of what they were. The appeal is alike appropriate to the individual, the family, and the Church. "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the Kingdom of God." Yet this is qualified by the explanation, "they that trust in riches." The golden calf is a curse even though Aaron be the goldsmith; yet gold became a blessing when the people brought it as a freewill offering to Moses for the building of the Tabernacle.

This is equally true, be the prosperity in the business or in the Church. To-day, as then, the curse of the Church is leaving out Christ where He ought to be the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last. I know not which is the greater plague,

RICH FLESH OR RELIGIOUS FLESH.

The one with the hand full of gold, the other with the hand full of self-righteousness. Yet in reality they were "wretched" (R.V. "to be pitied"), as Dives in all his splendour was "to be pitied" by Lazarus at his gate, or Simon the Pharisee, by the woman of the city at the feast. It may or may not be important—

To see ourselves as others see us, but it is all essential to see ourselves as God sees us. What if He shall pierce through the royal robes of wealth or self-righteousness, and write me down as one "to be pitied"? What if He sees my religion, but finds no heart therein? Well I remember as a lad seeing the funeral in Dublin of O'Connell, and being told that his heart had been left at Genoa. In childish simplicity I asked, "Is it not a great fuss to make over a body without a heart in it?" but many a time in later years have I seen it in the Church of God. There may be a certain warmth born of activity, but the only warmth that God desires is that of a pulsating heart.

In commerce, the Laodiceans were celebrated for the glossy appearance and blackness of the wool they sold. It will matter but little with what admiration men may regard your life if it will not bear the scrutiny of the Great Merchantman. What is your market, this world or the next? How will He value the life you offer to Him? Rouse you! Listen! Though He reprove, He will "counsel"; though He "rebuke," He will "love"; though He "chasten," He will "stand at the door and knock"; to any who will hear his voice and open the door, He will enter in and sup. That will be revival indeed!

"The Duty of seeking Revival" was next urged by Rev. W. H. RANKINE, of St. Boswell's, in an address from Ps. lxxxv. 6. The inevitable result of "reviving" must be "rejoicing." Many Christians are, as it were, in a state of suspended animation, as a half-drowned man. They have walked by the river of worldliness and sinful pleasures until they have fallen in, and their spiritual life is well-nigh extinct. How often a minister has to say of one or another, "Would to God he had never professed to be a Christian!" The real enemies of the cross are those who, having made profession, have identified themselves with the vices and sins of "society." The Church is sick of them, and the world despises them with honest scorn.

We are right to seek revival, though it may not come in crowded meetings, or in a great breaking down of sinners, but in a new and fresh beauty of the power of the Lord, as the gentle dew on a thirsty earth. There are certain conditions and blessings which we have no right to shun, without which, indeed, blessing will not come. One of these is Prayer. This was more fully dealt with at a subsequent meeting by Mr. Quarrier, but the present speaker cited, in illustration, a remarkable awakening in a rural district well known to himself, where there was not a house in which one or more persons had not been brought to Christ; and it transpired incidentally that for years the owner of the property had prayed individually for every man, woman, and child upon his estate, which resulted in a spontaneous awakening to consciousness of sin and longing for salvation.

It may here be mentioned also that in the Dundee Y.M.C.A. very great blessing had followed the gathering of a few young men for prayer at an early hour on the Lord's Day for some weeks past.

THE SECOND DAY.

When the session came for the consideration of "Methods to be used in the Work of Revival," Mr. WM. QUARRIER, whose Orphan Homes have made his name of world-wide recognition, gave a rousing address from the incident of the Syrophœnician woman, upon "Prevailing Prayer," and surely none was better able than he to present this truth, since prayer has been the one instrument that he has used for the support of his institution, and never yet has he been disappointed. When the Glasgow Bank failed, and not only the Homes and himself, but also most of his subscribers suffered heavy loss, he proved the Lord to be independent of any human limitations, and there was no want. Said he, "I had hardly anything in the world but the clothes I stood up in (and, thank God, they were paid for!), but God never failed in his promise to be the "Father of the fatherless." In his earlier Christian life he had known what it was to pray earnestly for ten years for something he never got, but that was because he "asked amiss"; and he learned that, although differently, the Lord answered his prayer in a better way. A felt need, perseverance, faith in God, faith in methods used, and fulfilment of all necessary conditions, were the headings of his discourse, and each was driven home with intense earnestness and a good deal of hard-hitting. As to methods, he took occasion to "let go" on the subject of bazaars, which he deemed to be outside the pale of Divine blessing, "ay, even though Her Majesty should be there to honour it!" Dancing in connection with church "socials" was condemned with equal force; and so far did the speaker carry his audience with him that the hundreds present broke forth into spontaneous applause as he claimed that no revival could come in a Church until the worldly element was expunged from it.

Rev. WM. ROSS, of Cowcaddens, Glasgow, followed with "Aggressive Work" as the second great factor in a revival. After presenting a solemn petition that God would "visit the waste places of our beloved land, and break up the fallow ground of our great cities," he turned to the vision of dry bones which Ezekiel saw, as recorded in Ezekiel xxxvii. 1-10, in association with Jer. iv. 3, 4, Isa. xxxii. 13-20, and Ezek. xxxvi. 33-38. God made the prophet to until his soul was stirred to its depths, for he was appalled. He obeyed the command to speak the Word of the Lord to the bones, with the result that they "came together," "but there was no breath in them." Then he waited on the Lord again, the breath of God entered in, until they "stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army."

The great problem of to-day is our city populations and their spiritual needs, with which the Church of God is not keeping pace. Hundreds of Christians live comfortable suburban lives, and have no conception of the real state of things. True, they respond with money when appealed to; they can say, "Lord, when saw we Thee an hungred, or athirst, or naked, or sick, and did not minister unto Thee?" and they help in good work so far as their knowledge goes. But more, far more, is wanted—to give themselves, and to establish a real, living contact of Christians with unbelievers. There are 300,000 souls in Glasgow who have no visible connection with any known religious organisation. But, oh! to think of their souls, and that Jesus Christ is interested in every one of them. What is needed is aggressive work.

Look at Palestine, Greece, Italy, Asia Minor. Think of how the Gospel flourished there in the early days of Christianity. Why are they spiritually desolate now? Because the Church abandoned aggressive work. In certain parts of Scotland pasture land is very scarce; there has been no ploughing—no aggressive work—and the heather has forced its way over it.

Mr. Ross then referred back to the day when he summoned his people to face the needs of the district surrounding their church, which was practically the beginning of a stream of blessing, which has been flowing ever since. Unhappily, lack of time cut his narrative short; but enough had been said to demonstrate the possibility, yea, the necessity, of a church receiving blessing itself in being a channel of blessing to others.

In the evening the same speaker delivered a telling address on "The Happy Results of a Revival," which we hope to reproduce more fully in an early issue.

THE THIRD DAY.

The subject was "Remarkable Awakenings" (a) in Christian Lands; (b) among the Heathen. The first fell to Rev. HENRY MONTGOMERY, of Belfast, who had crossed the Channel to be present at the Conference prior to a week's mission to be held at the Y.M.C.A. He sketched the course of revival movements in America under Jonathan Edwards, David Brainerd, Chas. Finney, and Nct-tleton—men strong in prayer—whose preaching of the sovereignty of God was followed by deep conviction of sin in the hearers; in Scotland, under Robert Bruce (Edinburgh), McCulloch (Cambuslang), McCheyne (Dundee), and Burns (Kilsyth); in Ireland, where the Irish Presbyterian Church is itself the child of revival times. Very telling were the incidents related—how strong men gripped the pillars of the Church, as Edwards declared of the wicked that "their feet shall slip in due time"; how Brainerd agonised for hours in prayer out in the woods until he was able to "regard the things of the world as nothing more than pebbles at his feet"; of Finney, "a torch lit by God, who blazed and flared, and cared for no one," who in a certain place took as his text (he knew not why), "Up, get you out of this place, for the Lord will destroy this city" (Gen. xix. 14). First anger, then fear, then contrition seized his hearers, and not until afterwards did he learn that the place had earned for itself the name of Sodom, and the man who had invited him to preach had been nicknamed Lot!

The great revival in Derry the speaker described in the words of the late Professor Smith:—

"On the occurrence of the first outwardly manifested conviction in Derry, the sensation of awe produced upon an audience of 2000 was deep in the extreme. No pen could describe and probably no finite mind estimate the depth of feeling that produced that awful hush which seemed as though the auditory had been turned to stone. In the annals of our city, celebrated as it is for scenes and times that have thrilled down the lines of ages, perhaps no such panting hearts ever beat upon sleepless beds as on that eventful night. It is not to be forgotten and it never shall be. The whole population of the city felt themselves under the hand of omnipotence. The scorner's chair was empty, and an awful silence reigned even in the circles of profligacy and sin. The transient pursuits of time were for the hour swallowed up by the great question, borne down upon every heart, 'Who may abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when He appeareth?' The whole population was moved as the trees of the forest shaken by a mighty wind."

> Then at God's presence shook the earth,
> Then drops from heaven fell,
> This Sinai shook before the Lord
> The God of Israel.

From these awakenings in Christian lands Dr. George Smith bore his hearers further afield to consider the spiritual outlook among the heathen. He pourtrayed the two distinct lines of work employed by missionary societies—(1) the "collective," or "mass," system, by which whole families, tribes, or islands are recognised as Christian on evidence of an awakened interest and agreed conformity to certain rules of life; (2) the "individual" system, which requires a personal confession of Christ and evident change of heart before a convert is admitted to Christian fellowship. The first, adopted (speaking generally) by American and German missionaries, involves nominal adhesion; the second, practised by British societies, demands actual conversion.

But while we may deem the second to be the right ideal, we must not close our eyes to the importance of the wider movements of communities towards Christianity, which have been apparent in India, Africa, and (a little) in China.

First, in India, among the Pariahs or serfs, there has been an awakening, as also among the Chooras and Musbees, the Kols and Santhals, in the Zenanas and Hindu villages. Indeed, fruit has sprung up where it might have been least expected. After the siege of Delhi some Bibles were found by a band of Sepoys, who studied them diligently. But the Government decreed that if any Sepoy became a Christian he should forfeit his position. Seeking the advice of Christian officers from whom they had learned of the things of God, they had no alternative but to leave the army. But they declared to their own people what the Lord had done for them, which resulted in a gathering of many into the Christian fold. In addition to these "mass" movements, important progress has been made among individuals, including 120 Mohammedan gentlemen of good position, of whom sixty-two are now missionaries and fifty-eight high officials. Dr. Smith related the conversion and public baptism of a high-caste Hindu barrister, concerning whose conversion an active discussion has taken place in the Indian papers. The confession of faith of this man is so remarkable that it is given entire in another column (p. 23). He also reported that in and around Calcutta there was such an ingathering of women that it was proposed to set apart a lady missionary for the especial work of baptizing female converts, not secretly, but upon the open confession of their faith.

In Africa, too, blessing is following upon years of faithful toil, where has taken hold of the people, as it was in Uganda.

Only this past week a young Mohammedan arrived in Edinburgh to seek advice as to the disposal of his father, who, having written books in the Arabic tongue against the religion of Mohammed, is being sorely persecuted. The Sultan, if he can find his hiding-place, will "spirit him away" to some distant prison, where he will have to end his days.

Turning to Japan, Dr. Smith called attention to the fact that that country had of recent years been putting on the garb of civilisation. And what did they see at the present moment? Japan attacking Corea. Time after time they had defeated the Chinese, and there was every probability, in the opinion of military men who knew the facts, and of those who studied these countries, that Japan might yet come into possession of Pekin. What would be the effect of the war on Japan and China? Would the present dynasty in China be upset, and would they have the same confusion, trouble, and revolution that General Gordon put down? Anything was possible in the way of change and revolution as the result of the war.

In the afternoon several missionary addresses were delivered. Rev. J. Colville Peattie spoke of his work at the mission station at Madras. The people with whom they had to deal were principally Hindus, who, he said, were an amiable race and easily got at, but they were ruled by certain ideas of caste which held them in an iron grip. Some people thought that Hinduism was in its decay, but as a matter of fact it was still a great power. Mr. Peattie was a strong believer in missions undertaking educational work. Dr. P. T. Wilson, of Lucknow, connected with Bishop Thoburn's work, had a singularly interesting story to tell of God's mighty doings in Northern India. Alluding to the forenoon subject, he said that he himself had been born in a revival. He remembered well the time—forty years ago—when he knelt at the mourners' bench and gave himself to God. The Holy Spirit came upon him, and he was filled with joy. He was only a youth then, and an enthusiastic Christian present was so glad that he took him in his arms and carried him round the schoolroom, singing for joy as he went. God had greatly blessed them in Northern India. He had himself on one tour, when there was a great movement towards God, baptized 1300 persons.

Mr. Peter Whytock spoke of the dying multitudes of Africa, and told of blessed work going on in dark Balolo land. He made touching reference to converts being baptized over the grave of that consecrated young missionary, Mr. John McKittrick. He also stated that one great evil they had to contend with was the importation of rum by the white man. Later on a missionary tea meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. hall. Ex-Provost Moncur occupied the chair. After referring to the evident interest that Dundee was taking in mission work by the large gatherings that assembled to hear the stories of the missionaries, the Chairman said this interest that had been created by revival in their hearts should make them seek to send the glad tidings to all ends of the earth. This was a missionary age, but what was lacking was not men but money. Rev. J. Colville Peattie said they would never have much hope of mission work till they knew what the people really were. One of the characteristics of the Hindus was their love for their own books, and anything with the ring of wisdom in it was sure to be listened to. He showed how from the native poets they had access to the people's minds, and so through these broken lights could lead them to the Light of the World. The whole outlook of mission work in India was most hopeful. Individuals were seeking baptism and church fellowship. But even a more hopeful movement was the shaking of old ideas. There was nothing sentimental about mission work. It was hard work and intelligent sympathy and earnest prayer. Dr. George Grieve, from North Africa, said his sphere was Morocco. The North Africa Mission began nine years ago. Before that it was strange that missionaries passed and repassed that part of the world without ever thinking of entering it. Mrs. Wilson, from North India, spoke of the awakenings and revival she had seen there, and Mr. Peter Whytock gave a short account of how the great awakening began in the Congo.

THE MISSIONARY REVIVAL OF THE CENTURY.

This was the subject of an able address delivered by Dr. George Smith at the evening meeting. He said the century had been remarkable for many triumphs, material, intellectual, and social, but the most wonderful of all the triumphs of the century had been the missionary revival. The motive power within all had been spiritual, and the object had been the establishment, extension, and advancement of his Kingdom. He traced the mission work of the century to 1843. In that year, he remarked, a singular event happened in God's Providence. No doubt many views were held of that event; but, for himself, he thanked God for the Disruption, because he looked upon it with the evolution of the century as a great home missionary movement, and he knew it to have been the greatest foreign missionary movement that had ever been seen in Scotland. It was a home missionary movement because it did what even Chalmers with his wonderful eloquence and begging power had failed to do: it had doubled the churches in Scotland, and it developed foreign missionary work to a wonderful extent, having far more than doubled the missions. Dr. Smith referred to the mission work in India before and after the Mutiny, and passed on to speak of Livingstone's labours in Africa. He concluded by appealing to all who were not engaged in mission work at present to begin at once, and so help to advance Christ's Kingdom in all ends of the earth.

Many points of interest must perforce be omitted in a condensed report such as this. Other gatherings were held, such as conversational meetings in the afternoons to consider "Hindrances to Revival," and "Personal Dealing with the Careless and Anxious." Mr. Quarrier occupied an interesting hour in describing the rise and progress of the work to which he has been called; and not the least important feature were the evangelistic addresses by Mr. Fullerton, Dr. Black, and Mr. Montgomery, which formed the second half of the evening sessions, these being also followed by a meeting for enquirers. As chairmen, Lord Kinnaird, Revs. David Clark, John Bisset, and Alex. Osborne, and Wm. Ferguson, of Kinmandy, spoke wise and pointed words to the subject of the day, and it was gratifying to note the presence of a very large proportion of the ministers of the town, representing the various denominations.

The two outstanding thoughts were, perhaps, the power of prayer, and the necessity of separation from the world—the futility of trying to dovetail worldliness with true godliness. And what shall be the practical outcome of the Conference? It is said that when a well-known evangelist had conducted a mission in Dundee a year or two ago the shopkeepers felt the effect in the payment of outstanding accounts. Such an argument the world can understand; and if a tenth part of the teaching inculcated at these meetings is carried out, not Dundee alone, but all Scotland will feel its reality.

ITALIANS IN TUNIS.

There are some twenty thousand Italians and Italian-speaking people in the city of Tunis. They are wonderfully accessible, and their own priests having been expelled from the country, these people are free to receive the teaching of the Gospel. The majority of the women are unable to read, but would, we believe, welcome a visitor, who, with the love of God in her heart, sought to lead them to Him. There is a wide open door for mothers' meetings, Sunday-school, night-school for men, and so on. The ground is almost untouched as yet by any Christian workers. One brother in Tunis has a little Gospel meeting weekly, but what is this among such a population!

An Italian evangelist, who has been working for some years in North Italy (while still carrying on his trade of shoemaking), has responded to this call for help, and is willing to go to Tunis, with his wife and two sons—one able to help him—if partial support is guaranteed by Christian friends. About £60 a year would be sufficient. This brother is very highly recommended by earnest workers in North Italy. Particulars will be gladly furnished by

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 30.—MICAH I.

The Nations Summoned (1-4).—The prophet repeats the words used by his namesake and predecessor, the son of Imlah. When God comes near man to judgment nature trembles, as Sinai did at the presence of the Lord. But how much more should the hearts of sinners! It would appear that God will do nothing against his disobedient children that cannot be justified by an appeal to the conscience of the world; therefore He summons the earth to witness.

The Transgressions of the Chosen People (5).—In each case the national sins are traced to the capitals, Samaria and Jerusalem, which, instead of being sources of holy influence, were centres of corruption and moral disease. We may well concentrate our thought and work on our great cities, for what they are the land becomes.

The Punishment of Samaria (6-9).—Heaps of rubbish and stone are gathered from the fields to clear them before the vines can be cultivated, but all this would soon be undone, and Samaria would return to her former condition. She would be so utterly destroyed, in punishment of her sins, that her foundations would be laid bare. (7) The hires were the wealth and possession Israel boasted of having received from false deities, but all that she had accumulated should return to those from whom it had been obtained. (8) The prophet profoundly lamented the destruction he announced, and in his unkempt person, divested of outer garment or sandals, he represented what was about to befall his people. Jackals and ostriches (see R.V.) made a plaintive wailing and crying in the Eastern night; all this was fulfilled when Shalmaneser destroyed Samaria.

The Punishment of Judah (10-16).—The enemy enters Judah from the north, destroying villages and towns till he reaches Jerusalem, which falls before him; he then passes on to destroy the cities of the south. (10) Aphrah or Ophrah was in the tribe of Benjamin, one of the first towns an invading army would attack (1 Sam. xiii. 17). (11) Saphir was a village on the hills of Judah; its people were to go into captivity. Zanaan was in the sea-coast plain (Josh. xv. 37), her inhabitants would be too occupied with their own grief to be able to succour or sympathise. Bethezel was near Jerusalem, her people would be too sorrowful to be able to arrest or stay the progress of the conquerors. (12) Maroth may be Maarath (Josh. xv. 59). (13) Lachish was one of the first cities to introduce idolatry, now her people must prepare for flight. (14) The alliance between these neighbouring towns would be broken, and all hope of help from one to the other would be at an end.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 1.—MICAH II.

An Enumeration of Sins (1-11).—That the rich oppress the poor, and do it with deliberate design, is a grevious offence in the sight of God. Mark the gradation here, to devise, to work, to practise. If there is power in your hand you must use it, not to oppress, but to help. (3) As they devised evil against their fellows, God would devise it against them. The head should no longer be haughtily uplifted, because the yoke of the foe would lie so heavily upon it. (4) These were the words the people used; they would be derisively appropriated and thrown back on them by their oppressors.

(6) The Israelites bade the true prophets cease from announcing unwelcome truths, and, as a punishment, these prophets should cease to speak to them. (7) The people prided themselves on bearing the name of Jacob, but they had none of his spirit. The disasters that came on them were not due to any drying-up of God's pity and love. To hose who walked uprightly He was still good and merciful. (8-9) The proud aristocracy took from their peaceful neighbours the inner ornamental robe as well as the garment, and deprived widows of their homes. (10) The children of God are exhorted to depart from the ungodly world, where they can find no home. (11) Refusing the true prophet, the people are surrendered to those who walk in falsehood and love strong drink.

Promises of Restoration (12-13).—Bozrah was famed for its pastures. Israel shall be gathered as a flock under the true Shepherd. The Breaker is Jehovah, who demolishes every obstacle and opens the closed gates through which his people pass from the land of the foe. These words refer also to the resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ, for our Lord broke open the gates of death, and we follow Him into resurrection life. Let us break forth from the graves of lust and sin, and seek the things that are above. Follow Jesus closely, and He will break open every barred door.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2.—MICAH III.

Condemnation of the Princes (1-4).—The image is that of the caldron from which food is prepared. The princes sit around casting in the very flesh and skin of the people they were set to rule. As the oppressed cried in vain, so will their oppressors cry in vain. It greatly sears the conscience to know and not to do. After a time men who sin against their better knowledge cease to know, and those who sin against their better feelings cease to feel.

Condemnation of the False Prophets (5-8).—They wittingly misled the people. Their own desire was to have food to bite. For those who provided it they uttered peace; for those who opposed them, war; therefore the darkness would overcome them, they would be involved in the bitterest grief, and God Himself would cease to speak. (8) How great the contrast between them and Micah himself, who spoke with so evident a consciousness of spiritual power! There is nothing that he says of Israel which ought not to be appropriated by each of us. Let us ask that the power of the Holy Ghost may rest on us (Acts i. 8).

Condemnation of the Priests (9-12).—The splendid buildings in Zion, and the fortifications of Jerusalem were founded on plunder and bloodshed. All society was rotten with luxury and crime. The leading citizens boasted the presence of the Temple in their midst as a sufficient safeguard against calamity. They substituted ritualism for religion. But nothing could avert the fate of the city. (12) Jer. xxvi. 18 quotes this verse. These words were literally fulfilled after the fall of Jerusalem, when the Roman general left in charge drove a ploughshare over the site of the Temple. The threatenings and promises of the Word of God mean just what they say.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3.—MICAH IV.

An Ancient Prophecy (1-4) See Isa. ii. 1-4.—It is not improbable that Isaiah and Micah alike quoted from some older prophecy, which, in its fulness, is yet to be fulfilled. Israel, in her restored beauty, shall, throughout the millennial age, be the centre of a renovated world. The restoration of Israel will bring greater glory to God and blessing to the world than their scattering (Rom. xi. 15). (2) Note the attractiveness of true religion, that men will seek after that which offers them peace or blessedness. To be taught God's ways and to walk in his paths is the ideal of a holy life, and we may well ask for the sacred talisman to open it for ourselves. (3) The Lord Jesus by his Gospel is to rule amongst men, and peace shall be triumphant, so that the very implements of war shall be used in the industries of the farm.

The Resolution of the Jewish People (5-8).—One result of their sufferings will be to bind them to Jehovah. (6-9) Fulfilled in part in the return under Ezra, but destined to be realised in fuller measure when they are gathered out from all nations to their own land. (8) Following out the idea of sheep, Jerusalem is described as the tower from which the shepherd observes his flock. The glorious days of her first dominion shall return to her.

The Babylonish Exile (9-10).—Zion is in consternation at the approach of the Chaldeans. These questions are asked derisively. There was both king and counsellor, but they could not stay the invader. Anticipating the fall of the city, Micah says the people must go into captivity, from which God would deliver them. The Assyrian Empire was in her pride when these words were written. Nothing but inspiration could have suggested the thought of Babylon as Israel's future oppressor.

Various Oppressions (11-13).—Edom, Ammon, and others rejoiced at the fall of Jerusalem. They exulted in her overthrow, not knowing that God would so overrule her disasters that they would become the very ground of her future power. (13) Zion is compared to an ox treading corn, and is bidden to destroy her foes and take their spoil, which would be brought into the Temple, and dedicated to Jehovah. It is thought by some that this refers to the days of the Maccabees. The first verse of the next chapter properly belongs to this.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4.—MICAH V.

The Advent of the Messiah (1-5).—The name given to Bethlehem recalls Gen. xlviii. 7. It was almost too insignificant to be reckoned among the thousands of Judah, but though this was true of its numerical importance, it was far from being the least in spiritual rank, because Christ was born there. There is, therefore, no contradiction between this and Matt. ii. 6. God always chooses the weak things. Each tribe was divided into thousands of families; hence the thousands of Judah. Mark the sublime antithesis. As man our Lord comes from Bethlehem; as God his goings forth were from everlasting. (3) God would give Israel up to their foes until the travail pangs of generations yearning for the advent of the Messiah, should result in his incarnation. When Jesus is lifted up the residue return to Him. (4) The attitude of standing is assumed by the shepherd to guard his flock at every point. O, timid sheep, learn the might of your Saviour, and nestle secure under his mighty protection. Thou canst not perish, and the lion of hell shall be foiled. Nothing shall dim the majesty and glory of thy Lord. (5) Christ is our peace, in the conscience, with one another, and in respect to the righteous claims of God's holy law (Eph. ii. 14).

The Increase and Victories of Israel (6-9).—The Assyrian is probably named as representing the enemies of Israel, but in those days of restoration, on which the prophet debates with so much rapture, there would be no lack of rulers and defenders. These figures are used symbolically of a full and sufficient number (Eccl. xi. 2). The Messiah would deliver his people from the Assyrian, and surely we may trust Him, who is also our Saviour, to deliver us from the power of our spiritual adversaries. (7) The myriad dewdrops sprinkled lavishly over the pasture-lands, baptizing them with fertilising moisture, and doing their work noiselessly and independently of the sons of men, are a beautiful symbol of the influence of the people of God on this parched world. (8) This is a contrast to the former verse; there we have the benignant, here the aggressive and victorious side of true religion. Literally true of the Jews: spiritually true of the conquests of the Spirit of God.

The Spirituality and Purity of Israel (10-15).—The days of the Millennium are alluded to, when there will be no longer any need for the implements and battalions of war, and no desire to employ them; and when before the prevalence of true religion all forms of idolatry will be swept away. Let us see to it that we do not rest on creature-trusts, or harbour idols.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5.—MICAH VI.

The Divine Summons (1-2).—The earth is called to witness between God and his people. How wonderful that the Almighty should condescend to come down to justify his ways with man.

The Divine Claims (3-5).—How pathetic to think of God fearing lest He had wearied his people. He had done nothing but show his unchanging and infinite mercy throughout their entire history, and more especially in the matter of Balaam. Shittim was the place where Balaam gave the wicked counsel which nearly led to Israel's overthrow (Num. xxv.). Gilgal, the scene of Israel's first camp in Canaan. God turned the curse into a blessing, and shielded his people. But how much more He has done for us in Jesus.

The Impotence of Ritualism (6-8).—The people, impressed by the previous appeal, are represented as asking how to appear before God. Various sacrifices and rites are suggested. The proposal to offer the first-born was in harmony with the customs of the heathen peoples around (2 Kings iii. 2). What a sublime conception of true religion is here! Not outward rites, but a lofty morality! Not forgiveness as an end, but as a means towards that integrity of the soul, which in God's sight is priceless (Matt. xxiii. 23; Luke xi. 42). The grace of the Holy Spirit waits to work all these things in us. What more desirable than the daily humble walking with God? Such companionship necessitates humility.

The Sins of the People and their Penalty (9-11).—God's voice speaks in national calamities; blessed are the wise who hear it. (10) "Are there yet?" That is, after all God's remonstrances. (21) This "I" refers to Jehovah. He could not have fellowship with those who were so deceitful. (14) This humiliating casting down, resulting from the Divine chastisement, would be in the midst of the land, i.e., would penetrate to its metropolis and temple.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6.—MICAH VII.

The Universal Corruption of the People (1-6).—The prophet looked in vain for a good man. Oppression, bribery, bloodshed were everywhere in the ascendant. (3) Both hands were stretched out in the service of evil. Would that all the servants of God were as eager to serve Him, as the votaries of the devil their Master. (4) The day foretold by the true prophets had arrived. (5-6) When man is faithless to God, the bonds of society are relaxed.

The Good Man's Refuge in God (7-13).—Let us not only look to the Lord, but wait for Him. In these words the prophet not only speaks for himself, but personifies his people. God loves his children to trust Him absolutely and in the dark. (9) When calamities are the result of sin, it becomes us meekly to bow before them, God is still our Father, waiting to gather us to Himself, so soon as his discipline has done its work.

The Prophet's Prayer and Ascription (14-20).—The prophet pleads that the great Shepherd would guide his people with his rod and staff; and asks that they may be led into rich pasture lands. (15) Thus God answers his servant's prayer. (16, 17) The prophet anticipates the effect produced on the peoples when they see the Divine interposition for Israel. Struck dumb and deaf! In abject prostration! Filled with reverent fear! (18) God passes by the sins of his people because of the blood of the Atonement shed on Calvary (Rom. iii. 25). But He does more; He subdues our iniquities. And as Israel saw the forms of their foes strewn on the seashore, we shall look back on our tyrant sins, slain by the right hand of our Redeemer. So will God keep his mercy and truth (Luke i. 72, 73). What a God is ours

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

OCTOBER 7.

Jesus at Nazareth.—Luke iv. 16-30.

Golden Text, Heb. xii. 25.

This incident took place soon after the commencement of the second year of our Lord's ministry. The miracle of John iv. 43-54 closed the first year. The next recorded event is the miracle at the Pool of Bethesda during his visit to the Passover Feast (John v. 1-9). Then hearing of the imprisonment of John the Baptist (Mark i. 14), He returned to Galilee, and after preaching in other places, so that his fame went before Him, He visited Nazareth.

(16) He preached in the synagogue, a building something like a modern church, nearly square in shape. At one end was a pulpit, and behind this an ark in which the sacred books were kept. In the centre was a reading-desk upon a platform. Anyone wishing to read or speak intimated his desire to do so by standing up (compare Acts xiii. 16). It was our Lord's "custom" to attend the synagogue. Not that the worshippers and the teachers were perfect; far from this; yet Jesus did not neglect a customary means of grace because it was abused by many. Enforce his example. There is no better way of keeping God's day than by spending it in God's house.

(18, 19) This was the text of our Lord's sermon. It is a quotation from Isa. lxi. 1, 2, and was most appropriate as an announcement of the work upon which He had entered, and of his authority and qualification for it. The anointing looks back to his baptism (iii. 22), since which time his life had been in an especial manner led and controlled by the Spirit (iv. 1, 14). The text declares Him as Preacher, Physician, and Redeemer. Note the kind of persons to whom He should minister—the poor, the captives, the blind, the broken-hearted, the bruised. Only such need Him, and are likely to receive Him. In truth all men are such, but many do not know it. The first condition of being helped and saved is the acknowledgment of our distress and need. The Gospel introduces "the acceptable year of the Lord" (19), which every Jew would understand as referring to the Jubilee year (Lev. xxv.). The blessings which that day brought to the Israelite were a type of the blessings secured to us in the Gospel—liberty for the slave, restoration to a lost inheritance, and the staying of actions against debtors.

(20-22) The sermon is not given (21). Note, it is possible to hear the best of preachers with attention and with admiration, and remain unblessed. If popularity were our Lord's aim He immediately wins that; but He wants their submission to the truth. Let every teacher have the same aim, and every hearer be content with nothing less. Of what avail will it be to admire the messenger if we do not receive his message? Note, next, that persons who reject Christ will always find some excuse for their conduct. There was no reason in their objection to Jesus because they knew Him as Joseph's son. After so many years, during which they had been observing Him, they ought to have known that He could not be a deceiver. And if they did not know all the facts connected with his birth, they might easily have discovered them. Objections that the smallest amount of inquiry would suffice to explain are keeping many away from the blessings of the Gospel.

(23-27) The purpose of these verses is twofold:—First, to convince the people that they had no good reason for rejecting Him. The reference to the miracles of which they had heard reminds them that God has borne witness to Him. They cannot reject Him without rejecting God. He could work no miracles among them because the spirit in which they desired them would have made the miracles mere ostentatious displays, and would only have increased their guilt. Next, to show them that if they rejected Him, others far less likely would receive Him. The widow of Sarepta, and Naaman the leper, were both Gentiles, who obtained blessing while widows and lepers in Israel were passed by (see 1 Kings xvii. 1-24; 2 Kings v. 1-14). Mere privilege confers no blessing if it be not valued and used. Compare the two cases of faith which our Lord specially commended (Matt. viii. 10; xv. 28). No lesson needs to be more solemnly applied than this.

(28-30) This is what mere admiring hearers could do to the Prince of Preachers. When He touched their conscience, humbled their pride, revealed their danger, they grew angry. "Nazareth spreads itself out upon the eastern face of a mountain, where there is a perpendicular wall of rock from forty to fifty feet high."—Godet. It was probably from this height they sought to hurl the Saviour. The folly of their act was equal to its wickedness. Truth remains even if its preachers be all slain. Our Lord's escape from them seems to have been one of those instances in which his true dignity appeared. He awed them by the majesty of his bearing, and passed through them unhurt.

For the Young.

CROWN JEWELS.

There is a great deal in the Bible about "jewels"; "precious stones," "treasure," and pearls, rubies, emeralds, and amethysts, with many other stones of value, are there frequently referred to.

But it is when we read of any of these in connection with God and ourselves, that they become of the deepest interest to us. If you turn to Malachi iii. 16, 17, you will find God speaking of his faithful children, as "My jewels," and in the margin the reading for this is "special treasure." I daresay you have often joined in singing this verse of a hymn—

> Like the stars of the morning,
> His bright crown adorning,
> They shall shine in their beauty,
> Rich gems for his crown.

What did you think as you sang? Did you ask yourself whose was the crown? Whose the shining? The words of Isaiah, "Thou shalt be a crown in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God," explain this to you; the servants of God are his crown, and He holds them in his hand as the joy with which He will crown his Son, Christ. I am afraid "shine" is a wrong word to apply to jewels, as the hymn puts it. Jewels sparkle when the light shines upon them; they do not emit any light of themselves, as you may see by holding a diamond in a dark corner; but carry it into the sunlight or the gaslight, and you will see it flash and sparkle in a hundred ways.

So with you. Do you want to sparkle as one of God's jewels? "The light shall shine upon thy ways," and "Christ shall give thee light." In his light you will not only see light, you will show it, and He will make all the darkness light in you, and you shall gleam and glow for Jesus. Where will you do this?

"Oh," you say, "I am not very obedient or patient; I am rather idle, and not always painstaking, and these things grieve my friends—yes, I think I should like best to shine for God in my home."

You are quite right, home is the place in which to shine. Let Jesus shine upon and in your heart, and the light will fall upon all its dark places, so that disobedience will become obedience, impatience will become patience, and idleness and carelessness will become diligence and carefulness.

Remember that you cannot sparkle and shine of yourself; you must, like the moon, shine with a borrowed light. Put yourself in the light of God—Christ—and you will shine with the Light of life; as our Lord said, "I am the Light of the world: he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the Light of life" (John viii. 12). Read also John xii. 35, 36, where you will see that those who believe and walk in this light are called "children of light," a beautiful title.

"But," you say, "what about the jewels? You were going to tell me about God's special treasure."

To do this, shall we consider some things about jewels? First of all, a pure gem is very valuable. I held in my hand the other day a tiny well of light, a diamond weighing twenty-four carats, and I was told that its value was seven hundred pounds! And what if I tell you that the lapidary told me that when its cutting and polishing were completed it would be worth as much again as that!

If the diamond or the ruby is a valuable jewel, how much more precious is God's child! Think of the cost: "You are a purchased possession"; "Redeemed," not "with corruptible things, as silver and gold . . . but with the precious blood of Christ" (1 Pet. i. 18, 19). God "spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all." At what a cost, then, has our Father purchased the "gems for his crown"! He gave "his only begotten Son" for you and for me that we might become his "special treasure."

Do you say that you find it hard to shine for Him? See that diamond in the crown of an Emperor; it took two years to polish it. It was found at first in a bed of quartz. This had to be carefully removed, and the dull, rough-looking stone had to be polished; then it had to be carefully cut, so that its facets might catch the light, and reflect it from a hundred points. Then, perhaps, it was full of flaws; these the skilful lapidary has to remove or hide. Do you see yourself in all this? A time of preparation, a time in which God will remove the flaws from your character, chip off the corners, cut out the evils, polish all the rough places, and finally "present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." Can you believe it? Does it seem almost too good to be true? Put yourself into his keeping, and "let Him do what seemeth Him good," and you will become one of his jewels. Heaven has been described as "A prepared place for a prepared people." To be one of his "living stones," you will have first to be prepared by his Divine hand. Let Him root out all flaws, or sins, whatever they be. Whom He loves He chastens, or cuts, or polishes.

But the finest stones can be imitated. I have just been reading of a piece of glass covered with garnet, which was sold as a fine ruby at thirty pounds a carat, and neither buyer nor seller knew that it was a false or worthless stone.

"There are no imitation Christians!" you say. I am sorry to say there are; but we have nothing to do with them—let us look to ourselves; let us avoid what we know will make us like them—hypocrisy, deceit, treachery, cowardice, malice, and all uncharitableness, pretence, and unbelief. Be true; be honest; "Be thou strong and very courageous"; be real, whatever else you may not be, and God will confirm you in his way, so that you may walk before Him and be, in his eyes and by his grace, perfect.

Sham jewels! I looked in the windows of a jeweller in Paris, and found both alike—one the exact counterpart of the other in the articles displayed. I wondered at this, but on looking up I saw across one window, in large letters, the word, "Imitation." So that every diamond, every ruby, every pearl in that window was a sham, so like the real that I, knowing nothing of gems, mistook them for the real.

We may pass in the world, for a time, as God's jewels, but He, the great Lapidary and Refiner, who knows our hearts, sees, if we are merely imitation jewels, all the worthlessness, all the sham, and his heart is grieved because we are not among his "special treasure." Let us be real. In "the light of his countenance," and as his child, you shall sparkle as never the finest ruby or diamond sparkled; yea, you shall gleam and glow in the Saviour's diadem, one of his brightest Crown Jewels.

> Help me, my God, to speak
> True words to Thee each day;
> True let my voice be when I praise,
> And trustful when I pray.
> Thy words are true to me,
> Let mine to Thee be true;
> The speech of my whole heart and soul,
> However low and few.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., Sep. 30, John xxi. 15-25; Mon., Oct. 1, 2 Chronicles i. 1-12; Tues., 2, ii. 1-12; Wed., 3, iii. 1-17; Thurs., 4, v. 1-14; Fri., 5, vi. 1-11; Sat., 6, vi. 12-25.

THE NATIONAL HOME-READING UNION begins its sixth season on October 1. The object of the Union is to stimulate and direct home-reading in such a way as to make it truly educational—this is done by the organisation of local associations—and to sustain interest in systematic and mutually helpful reading. The Union is calculated to render special assistance to that large class whose education at school has been somewhat advanced, but who have not been able to continue it at college. A course of home-reading wisely arranged and aided by tutorial direction in monthly magazines gives an outlook upon the domains of knowledge that are traversed at the University, and should help to form mental habits similar to those which are there acquired. Some of the most eminent head masters and mistresses have urged upon the committee of the N.H.R.U. the importance of this branch of the work, and have assured the committee that many of their ablest pupils, when leaving school, express the desire for such guidance and help in their future readings. Further information may be obtained from the secretary of the Union, Mr. M. C. Mondy, Surrey House, Victoria Embankment, W.C.

God the Holy Ghost.—3.

A BIBLE READING.

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

(Concluded.)

When Christ is about to pass to the glory of God, He says to his disciples, "Tarry ye in Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." What was to be given to them? Peter tells us (1 Peter iv. 14) that they had received "the Spirit of glory and of God." There is a new gift at Pentecost never heard of before. Christ received the Spirit of glory, and so the Psalmist says, "Thou hast ascended on high; Thou hast led captivity captive; Thou hast received gifts for men; yea, for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them" (Psalm lxviii. 18). "Blessed be the Lord," says the Psalmist, "which daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation." In Eph. iv. 8, we read that Christ "ascended up on high to give gifts unto men." In the Old Testament prophecy we are told that He was to receive gifts; now Paul says He was to give gifts unto men.

What are these gifts? Gifts of the Spirit always. At the beginning of the Third Dispensation, once more the Spirit is seen brooding over the chaotic darkness of the world, which is waiting for this blessing. And there is one possible receptacle; one spot, only one, where the Spirit of God can settle—the little upper room. Once more He is seen coming down with a mighty rushing wind, moving over the face of the waters. With the wind there comes, not the dove, as in old time, but the Spirit of God in the form of "cloven tongues like as of fire." Formerly it was the dove; it was the water; but now it is the fire of God. And as the Spirit of God descends He comes into the human receptacle that man makes for Him. The Holy Ghost descends to be the Spirit of glory and of God, and to take possession of man, for God's own glory through Christ Jesus.

Now what see we? Chaos giving place to light and order; then the separation, as in the first creation, of the upper from the lower, of the heavenly from the earthly; then the introduction of a principle of life and power. Embodied in the human then there comes out the living Man, and with that living Man there come the Church and the whole world in time. He takes possession, and says, "Live, have dominion, be fruitful and multiply, and God shall look upon the work of his creation, and be satisfied, and say it is all very good."

This is the dispensation that we live in, and whether we speak of the individual soul or the Church as a whole, remember that it is always a unit in the sight of God. Exactly as the Godhead is one, while there are three Persons, so in regard to the spiritual creation now, there is but one Man, Christ Jesus the Lord — He the Head, we the members, to make a "perfect man," so to speak. And when Christ's Bride is complete, then God the Holy Ghost shall say the perfect man is ready. God will reverse the order of his former creation for the perfected man. He will then make all things new, and creation shall sing to the glory of God through eternity, and the Holy Ghost shall be satisfied.

But what saith the Holy Ghost in this dispensation? In former days, as we have said, He came to reveal law. In the Mid-Dispensation He came to reveal love; and in the Third Dispensation He comes to reveal life. It is life in its magnificence that is offered to every one of us this morning—life from the dead. And how? You must get it as Christ the perfected Man got it. You must go into the water and be drowned; I say it solemnly. Then you are dead and done with as the old man. Now the Spirit of God enters into the cold clay corpse, as it were, and He gives new life. The man rises, alive unto God, by the resurrection power of the Holy Ghost; and the first thing he receives is "the Spirit of life from the dead," that he may give life. He is meant to live as Christ did. The spiritual man, so far as his spirit is concerned, is called to give what God has given to him. Having received "the Spirit of life from the dead," he is to pass it on to others; and each man becomes the representative of Christ, as the true wife is of the loving husband.

But are you ready to undergo the process? In the first place there was water and drowning, and then the Spirit of life from the dead. Now the Spirit comes as fire. Remember that a man is not constituted for service who has not been through this. I am not here to argue with those who differ from me about theological expressions, but to speak of the grand realities of this dispensation. The Spirit of the Lord brings fire with Him, and you must be baptized into the Holy Ghost and into fire. And what men shrink from now is this great refining power to which we must be yielded. Think you that the disciples shrank at Pentecost when the Holy Ghost suddenly descended upon them, and claimed them for God with that awful elementary action of fire? It purges, destroys, enthrals, enkindles, enables, empowers. And we can only know the blessings of our dispensation, which is the Spirit of glory and of God upon us, when we have submitted to the action of fire which burns up that filthy thing which you so hug and cherish within. Then shall the Spirit of glory, as well as the Spirit of life, work out through you upon the world around.

But the Spirit of glory can only take your spirit department yet, because you are left in a body of corruption, and a body of corruption cannot receive the Spirit of glory. If the Spirit of glory, which means "fire" everywhere in the Bible, came to the body we should be at once burnt to nothing. So God keeps back the Spirit of glory from the body, but He gives it to the spirit, and men are meant to be spiritual men

UP TO THE EXTENT OF THEIR POSSIBILITIES.

As the Spirit of glory takes possession of the spirit department, He works out to the heart and affections; then He claims the will, and the mind; then He claims the body as a servant. Through the operation of the mind, and the will, the man is made willing in the day of the Lord's power by the Holy Ghost, and the body must always obey wherever it is dictated to by the spirit and will and mind of the man.

That is all we can have as yet. I wonder how long it will be before my Lord Jesus comes to see the travail of his soul and be satisfied, and before the Spirit of God shall be completely satisfied! Then in the twinkling of an eye, when the last trump shall sound and the dead in Christ shall rise first, we which are alive shall be changed into a spiritual body. "Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." We have only the spirit, but Christ has got his spiritual body. We wait for the spiritual body, that shall be like his, for "we shall see Him as He is," and we shall be "changed into the same image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord."

"Who is willing to consecrate himself this day unto the Lord?" The one thing that hurt God all through the Old Testament dispensation was that his people rebelled and vexed his Holy Spirit. That was what Stephen had to say with agony, and it cost him his bodily life to say it. When the New Testament dispensation had been opened, he saw into the glory, and he said to those poor miserable men in Jerusalem, "Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and in ears, ye do alway resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye." They came at him with stones; and if a man preaches God the Holy Ghost fully to-day, I believe there are many Church people and rival ecclesiastical systems that are

if they can. I never provoke hostility from Christian men, until I speak of God the Holy Ghost; then people are ready to anathematise one if one makes mistakes. But if there is truth in what I have tried to show, that there have been three dispensations at work for the seeking of a godly seed, so that there may be a perfected creation, how far are you willing to submit yourself to the working of the Holy Ghost, who is the creative, the teaching, and the enabling faculty of the Godhead? How far are you ready to submit yourselves to Him, and ask to be "strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled with all the fulness of God"? Brethren, "be filled with the Spirit," and do not let Him yearn over you in vain, but give Him all you have to give this day with thankful hearts, for the glory of God.

IT IS A TERRIBLE INSIGHT into the discipline of a home, when a child, on receiving a simple order, says, "Mother, need I do it?"

PERTH CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

Mrs. Blaikie presided on Tuesday, and opened the meeting with a few remarks on Jude 20, 21. The addresses from Miss Ferguson, Miss Thompson, and Miss Hislop, which followed, were peculiarly solemn and impressive. They told of young girls and rough men being brought to the knowledge of Christ. They spoke of the awful possibilities of faces once illuminated with the Divine light growing dim through giving way to some known sin, and of the yearning of converted parents over their children, in whom the fruits of their own evil lives were painfully manifest. Young workers were told not to be easily discouraged, but to wait the Lord's time; the ground must be prepared and the stones removed before the seed can be sown and spring up. Those who are unable for foreign work were invited to volunteer as helpers at home, and thus set free experienced workers to go abroad; others who feel they have no gift for work were urged to go to some of the neglected parts of the country and live consistent Christian lives.

Mrs. Oatts presided on Wednesday afternoon. She read John iv. 35-38, and urged all to show a more prayerful sympathy in the many discomforts of missionaries to which women are peculiarly susceptible. Mrs. Watson, from Cairo, dwelt on the ignorance and superstition of the women there. It is forty years since the mission with which she is connected was begun. There are now two boarding schools and twenty-one day-schools. Mrs. Wilson, from India, said she had been there fifteen years. She was eight years in the Medical Mission at Agra; now her chief work is among native Christians.

Miss Ricketts dwelt on the power of Christian love, and gave a graphic description of the way in which Chinese women would quarrel over some trifle, and become reconciled through reading 1 Cor. xiii. Miss Mann, who was for some time associated with Miss Ricketts in China, told of a visit to a heathen house. On the bed, under which were potatoes, cocks, and hens, lay a weird-looking old woman. She was a hundred years old, quite deaf, and almost blind. The Gospel had been preached for forty years in her neighbourhood, but she had never heard it, and it was now too late. Had she been able to say where she expected to go when she died she would have said, "To the land of darkness." Are those who are not able to go out as missionaries doing all they can at home? Is each congregation organised with monthly meetings for missionary news and prayer? And what about the children? Our hope in Foreign Missions at home and abroad depends on the children.

Mrs. Blaikie gave a message from Mr. D. A. Hunter, who is going out to Lovedale, South Africa, that a trained nurse is required for that district. The mission would give board and lodging, but are not in a position to offer a salary.

Miss de Broen, who has laboured in Paris for twenty-three years, is anxious to open a home for her workers, and requires a lady superintendent. She spoke with sorrow of the power of infidelity in France even upon Christians. More enthusiasm is needed. One visitor who had been given a little money to spend on herself gave it to the Mission, because she wanted Paris to be a little better for her visit.

Mrs. Brown Douglas presided at the praise meeting on Friday morning, and gave some helpful thoughts from Mrs. Gordon, who originated this meeting some years ago, but is now unable to attend. The meeting was brought to a close with several prayers, special remembrance being made of Mrs. Gordon in her weakness.

SEAMEN IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

For many years a thoroughly Christian work has been going on among seamen in the port of Constantinople. Many sailors have through it been brought to Christ, and many led to inquire about salvation.

Miss Green-Armytage, who is now in England, but hopes very shortly to return to Constantinople, is in great need of a lady helper, being now quite alone in the work. The lack of means, or of sufficient means, seems the great difficulty in the way of those whose hearts are willing. £75 per annum is required for the maintenance of a helper. Subscriptions towards this object may be sent to Miss Green-Armytage, c.o. Major Robert H. Long, Conference Hall, Mildmay, N.

"THE LORD'S TREASURY."

"What we would like to know is what he does with the money, and what has become of the eighty children who have gone to him from our city." So said a north-country paper, pretending to review the twenty-seventh report. . . . . I seemed to be watching a treasury with an inscription over it, "For Dr. Barnardo's Homes." The Master Himself was sitting by it, noting carefully the gifts as they were poured in; ever and anon his face lighted up with love and joy, and no wonder, for amongst the crowd there came some who, like the widow of old, gave their all. A poor cripple came up and threw in only a few pictures for a scrapbook, but, he said, "I have only seven shillings a week and a wife and four children to keep, but I did want to do something." By and by followed an aged woman, who put in ten bright sovereigns and a number of small garments. "I, too, have only seven shillings a week," said she; "but I heard the story of the poor little children, and grieved that I could do nothing, when I thought I can get a little bit of calico and make it up; then friends gave me more material and money too, so I can bring this." Close following was a little child. Putting in two shillings, he said, "Mother said I might give sixpence, but I do want to give you all I have got." As I turned away I thought, "Truly this is sacred money, and it will pay for not merely temporal necessities, but such things as shall save souls and be for the honour and glory of God."

"Would you like to see some of the results?" said a voice beside me, "then follow me." It was an angel who spoke, and in a moment we were in a children's hospital. "Her Majesty's Hospital," he said. We went to where a boy lay dying. Rough indeed had been his lot, and his rescue came too late to save him for this life, though not for the other. Listen to his very last words: "Nurse, do you love Jesus? Don't say I hope, say I know"; and with that his happy spirit fled. Then we passed to the bedside of a little girl; she too was just departing after long suffering patiently borne. We just heard her last words: "Oh, Sister, I am going to Jesus. Don't you envy me? Don't you wish you were going too?" Now we were at the Girls' Village Home; we glanced rapidly at the peaceful cottage homes, and entered one where a baby girl, a little more than five years old, was suffering bitter pain. "Oh, mother darling, don't cry," we heard her say; "Jesus could make the pain better, but He does not because He knows it is best for me to have it."

And now away over the water to one of the mighty cities of the United States. There in a brilliant club-room stands a young man, to whose words others are attentively listening, for they recognise in him one who shall be among their senators ere long. "But a few years ago," said my companion, "this man was among the ragged destitute children of a great city in the mother country, but Dr. Barnardo rescued him; come and see another." We went northward, and were in a large church; the congregation of 1,500 were drinking in the faithful Gospel message from the lips of their beloved minister, little guessing how well he had known what it was to be destitute and without a friend. Now we speed away to another city, a newly-founded one, and the citizens speak respectfully of the man who lighted it for them, and who is to represent them in Parliament. Away once again we are in a theological college; among the students is a young Zulu. "He," said the angel, "was rescued by Dr. Barnardo, and now he is studying to carry the Gospel back to his own people as an ordained missionary."

But we may only glance at one more; it shall be typical of many hundreds of others. And we were in a cottage home, such an air of comfort over the living room, the baby sleeping near the fire, the husband and wife at the table. "I don't know how it is," he said, "but my heart is full to-night of the memory of that terrible night when Dr. Barnardo found me sleeping out on London Bridge without hope or help, and brought me into happiness and a good chance in life." "Yes, and shall I ever forget," she replied, "how he saved me from a cruel, drunken mother, and gave me a loving, happy home, where, best of all, I was taught to love Jesus? God bless dear Dr. Barnardo."—The Rock.

THE LATE DR. F. C. ROBERTS.

When, in June last, the death was reported of Dr. F. C. Roberts, of Tientsin, it was not only felt that the London Missionary Society had sustained a serious loss, but that the mission field had been deprived of a Christian worker of truly noble parts and qualities. The friend and for a time helper of James Gilmour, and the devoted successor of Kenneth Mackenzie, Dr. Frederick Charles Roberts was one of the mighty men of the North China Mission; all were strong in faith, in prayer, and in labour, and all now sleep in Jesus in the land where they served the one blessed Master.

The son of Alderman Roberts, of Manchester, the subject of this brief sketch was born in Wales, but brought up in the great northern city. He was cradled in piety, and from his earliest years was responsive to the spiritual influences by which he was surrounded. At the age of sixteen he united publicly with the Christian Church, and even then a missionary career was becoming the settled purpose of his life. At his father's suggestion, he resolved to study medicine as an equipment for service abroad.

His education had been well attended to, and he applied himself with praiseworthy diligence. After a preparatory course at the Manchester Grammar School, he spent three years at the University College of Wales, at Aberystwith, under Principal Edwards, of Bala. Thence he went to Edinburgh for medical study, and at the end of four years took the degrees of M.B. and C.M. Meantime, he threw himself with a zeal full of promise for the future into various kinds of Christian effort. After another year spent in special studies, he offered himself to the L.M.S., in 1887, for foreign service.

He was accepted, and appointed to be the colleague of James Gilmour at Chao-yang, a Chinese city in the extreme north of the metropolitan province of Chih-li, and about ten days' journey alike from Peking and Tientsin. After passing the winter of 1887-8 at the latter city, he proceeded to his appointed sphere in Mongolia. There his health suffered considerably, but before the time came to face contingencies arising from that fact, he was transferred to Tientsin to labour as successor to the lamented Dr. Mackenzie. What followed may be given in the words of Mr. Jonathan Lees, in the July issue of the Chronicle of the London Missionary Society:—"The removal re-established his health, and at once opened before him an almost boundless field for work. In every way worthy to follow even one so distinguished, it is saying little to assert that the Medical Mission in Tientsin did not suffer in his hands. Coming to it at a time of difficulty and anxiety, owing to the unfriendly action of the high Chinese officials, and handicapped by the severe strain necessitated by the study of the language conjointly with the daily needs of a crowd of sick poor, his quiet strength and singleness of purpose enabled him, under God, to achieve a great success.

"He won the confidence of the Chinese as fully as the affectionate admiration of his colleagues. His charming gentleness and unassuming manner, linked with singular firmness and common sense, enabled him to be of great service to the Church. Many of his patients bless God for the 'double cure' given to them through his care. Latterly he had on several occasions visited distant out-stations of the Mission, and with the most happy results."

Dr. Roberts's settlement in Tientsin was thus described by Mrs. Bryson, of that city, in a recent issue of The Sunday School Chronicle:—"Few of his fellow-workers in that great city can forget the day when the quiet figure in travel-stained Chinese clothes suddenly appeared in the midst of their mid-day prayer meeting. Especially do they remember the same meeting on the next day, when the newly-appointed young doctor led our devotions. Upon each one of us he left the impression of a man who had heard God's call and obeyed it, sure that the needed strength and wisdom would be given by the Master from whom it came. Dr. Roberts had been barely six months in the country, but the Sunday before the day on which he took up the charge of the hospital was memorable for an address which he delivered in Chinese asking the prayers and help of the native Christians and his fellow-misssonaries in the work to which he had been called."

Just after Dr. Roberts's death (at the early age of thirty-two), Mr. J. G. Alexander, who was staying in Tientsin, wrote to us: "The medical man who attended Dr. Roberts during his last illness says that he had done in seven years the work of twenty-five years, and so an attack of fever, not in itself serious, left him without rallying power. He has gone to his reward; and we can but repeat, as he himself said in his last conscious interval: 'Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?'

"Dr. Roberts was not one who rashly and knowingly overworked himself, or who refused to take reasonable rest and recreation when opportunities were afforded. He did not give one the impression of a man who was wearing himself out; and I am disposed to think that his whole-souled love for his work prevented him from having any idea that he was doing too much. So far as his death is to be attributed to any preventible cause, it is to the undermanning of the missions, due itself to the want of sufficient consecration to God's service in the foreign field on the part of the churches. His home-call is a loud cry for fresh reinforcements that shall fill up the gaps made by death, and shall render unnecessary the overstrain now put on too many of those who are pressing on to victory in the name of Christ out here.

"His influence among the Chinese was very great, his sympathy with them was so true, his patience and care so unbounded. He hated unrighteousness in every form, and no one more heartily sympathised with efforts for putting down the iniquitous opium traffic. His example, his word, his influence were always for his Master, and his seven years in China will doubtless yet be fruitful in many hearts where he has sown the Word of Life. 'That life is long which answers life's great end.'"

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

Dear Sir,—It was a great joy through the generosity of kind friends to be enabled to receive and comfort last winter 250 fatherless or orphan children, and keep them till the spring, in warmth and health, training them in useful ways and cleanly habits; 140 of these have now been successfully placed out in Canada. Five times the number, between the ages of twelve and sixteen, could have been settled, provided they were industrious and well behaved.

We have been back in Liverpool a month, and are daily receiving children who are eager to be taught and then emigrated, under good care and supervision, to a land where work is constant and wages progressive, as they themselves increase in strength and ability. We could give many instances where our young people, prospering in Canada, have paid the passage money for their friends to join them. One of our girls quite recently deposited with us five dollars for her brother, who is in need in Liverpool, towards the expenses of going to Canada.

Help is needed for fresh work now entered upon this winter. Our hon. treasurer is Mr. J. J. Kenna, 18, Mellor's-buildings, Exchange-street, Liverpool. Clothing, new or old, most thankfully received.—Yours faithfully, (Mrs.) Louisa Birt.

Union or Confusion.

To what extent and how should Christian union be cultivated and followed? Evidently a strong and increasing desire for comprehension exists. This is found amongst the great denominational institutions of Christendom. The union of the Greek Church with the Roman Catholic is being openly advocated. The comprehension, also, of the Episcopal and the leading denominational institutions of England and the world into one vast Christian organisation is regarded by many as the ne plus ultra, religiously considered, of the times in which we live.

Happily, such associations are not likely to be brought about. I say "happily," because, in common with many who greatly value the unity of the Church of God, I believe the suggested unity is neither practicable nor desirable. Most certainly it is not of God. Zeal that is not in harmony with the will of God, and directed by intelligent perception of the issues aimed at, cannot be trusted. The words of the Apostle concerning the Jews, "I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge," find a fresh application in the course taken by these mistaken and misguided friends of union. The Church of Christ must have revealed truth as its basis in all questions which belong to unity. Where truth is not received and obeyed, in the nature of things there can be no enduring unity.

UNHALLOWED COMPROMISE.

Let us suppose a conference gathered of all the great leaders of the existing ecclesiastical institutions. They meet to consider how to bring the different parties into one great organisation. What would be the first requirement regarded as absolutely essential to the proposed comprehension? Just this, a basis of unhallowed compromise, which could only mean the practical rejection of the Supreme authority of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Head of the Church. In like manner, the Word of God would be expected to yield its claims as the High Court of Appeal in questions of doctrine and practice. The Scriptures would have to give place to the authority of the Church, to tradition, and the so-called "higher criticism."

To give the Lord Jesus his place as Head of the Church would necessarily involve the overthrow of the false centres and headships which exist. These lords over God's heritage would not be likely to vote for their own effacement. This they would have to do if Christ had his place as Lord. The results of such a conference could only lead to the wildest ecclesiastical confusion. It is not Church comprehensiveness that is needed in these days, but the return in absolute loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ Himself of all in every place that recognise Him as Lord and King. God's centre of rallying to all his people is Christ Jesus as distinguished from their comprehension in the manifold ecclesiastical institutions which are known as "branches of the visible and professing Church." Back to Christ Jesus the Lord.

THE VINE AND THE BRANCHES.

The term "branches of the visible Church" is altogether unscriptural. When the Lord Jesus said, "I am the vine, ye are the branches," He was referring to the individual disciples, and not to divided conditions which are mistakenly spoken of as "branches of the Church." This grave misuse of our Lord's words concerning Himself as the Vine and his individual disciples as the branches, has wrought incalculable mischief. To apply these words to the different denominational institutions practically denies the truth of the unity of "the Church of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

"Back to the Christ" is the word of God at this time specially to all the living members of his "Ecclesia." The "Church of the Firstborn," maintained in invisible unity by the wisdom and power of the Holy Ghost, must not be confounded with or mistaken for the Churches of the Earthborn. It was not the reformation and enlargement of the Church which Christ so solemnly and prophetically showed to Laodicea, but that He would reject and spue out of his mouth the corrupt and lukewarm institution. This we believe He has done. That belief is based upon his own testimony, and the facts of experience as seen to-day. Observe his words: "So then, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." The context is conclusive as to the fact that He is no longer inside the professed Church, for He adds, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me" (Rev. iii. 20).

BECAUSE THOU ART LUKEWARM,

Clearly the Lord in these words shows that He has eschewed and rejected the corrupt Church, and describes Himself as standing without and knocking. Nor this only; his words have reference to individual believers, and not to the Church. "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him, and he with Me." Nothing could be more conclusive as to his rejection of the professed Church, whose false estimate of herself was that she was "rich and increased with goods, and had need of nothing," and did not even know that in the Lord's judgment she was "poor, and wretched, and naked, and blind, and miserable." Such was Christ's estimate of her condition! No more appalling contrast was ever given by the Faithful and True Witness concerning the actual condition of the professing Church.

The very thought of the Churches of Christendom becoming one at the close of the nineteenth century! Imagine her worldwide and earthborn complacency in the light of Our Lord's words: "Thou sayest, I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing." What a splendid caricature of the Church of Christ. Hear our Lord's verdict concerning her, "And knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked."

THE MADNESS OF THIS ATTEMPT

at the fusion of Christendom in the light of the testimony of "the Faithful and True Witness"!

The Papacy, it is suggested, should lead the way to this stupendous union, and even Protestants are to be forgiven, accepted as Christians, and embraced by the Pope, provided they enter the sheltering fold of Holy Mother Church.

Many of us believe, and hold fast, that loyalty to Christ demands that we maintain separation from what is commonly described as "the Christian Church." The professed Church has, to a large extent, usurped the place and functions which alone pertain to Christ. Christ is God's centre. The Church is not, and cannot be. Baptism, e.g., which in the Word of God always sets forth union with and entrance into Christ, the Church, in order to her own glory, has made merchandise of, as entrance into her membership, salvation, and honour. The Lord's Supper also, which the Word of God teaches is never more or other than a memorial feast of grateful love at the invitation of Christ to all believers, the corrupt Church has exalted into the sacrifice of the mass, and declared to be a scene of priestly function. This is a Church invention fashioned in direct opposition to the Word of Christ, who by "one offering of Himself" hath "perfected for ever them that are sanctified."

Let those believers who value the doctrine of Christ and the supreme authority of Christ Jesus as the Saviour and Lord of his "Ecclesia," give heed to the following which have been taken from "The Roman Catholic Breviary," and from "The Glories of Mary," a volume highly commended by the late Cardinal Manning (published by Burns, Oates and Co., London, and Duffy, of Dublin): "Mary the only hope of sinners. Thou [Mary] art the only hope of sinners" ("Breviary" Office for September 9). "Thou art my only hope, thou alone canst help me" ("Glories of Mary," page 20). "Oh! Lady in heaven, we have but one Advocate, and that is thyself" (page 168).

Again, observe these awful words: "If my Redeemer rejects me on account of my sins, and drives me from his sacred feet, I will cast myself at those of his beloved Mother till she has obtained my forgiveness" (90). "My Queen, be my Advocate with thy Son, whom I dare not approach" (115). "O, Immaculate Virgin, prevent thy beloved Son, who is irritated by our sins, from abandoning us to the power of the devil." "Through thee we have been reconciled to God." "Thou art the salvation of the whole world" (248, 249). "Both the Son and the Mother effected human redemption, and obtained salvation for man" (366).

What blasphemy to insert the following words as though spoken by Christ Jesus: "Jesus Himself said, Were it not for the prayers of my Mother, there would be no hope of mercy" (479). And again: "We often obtain more promptly what we ask for by calling on the name of Mary than by invoking that of Jesus" (112). "I adore thee, O great Queen" (241). "Mary commands in heaven" (569). "Thou, O Mother of God, art omnipotent to save sinners" (623). "O most pure Virgin Mary, I worship thy most holy heart" (104). Think of these awful words: "If God is angry with a sinner, and Mary takes him under her protection, she withholds the avenging arm of her Son, and saves him" (98); or the blasphemy, "Mary so loved the world as to give her only begotten Son" (478). And again: "Behold the power of the Virgin Mother; she wounded and took captive the heart of God" (98).

It would be easy to add to these terrible quotations. Let them be pondered by those who value loyalty to the Lord Jesus, and who recognise the supreme authority of the Holy Scriptures on all questions of doctrine and practice. The unwisdom and wickedness of helping forward to comprehension in, or union with, ecclesiastical systems which tolerate such unscriptural teaching must be apparent, and should be utterly repudiated by every true Christian.

In a future paper I may show something of the horrible power once possessed by the Church of Rome. Remember, millions of the members of the Church of the Firstborn were persecuted, tortured, and slain by this anti-Christian system, which is described by the Spirit of God as "Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots." Well may the Lord say of her, "She was drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

THE DEATH OF LIBERTY.

There is nothing that the Christian men and women of England and America should more resolutely set their faces against than this latter-day delusion as to the fashioning of a great Universal Church. It could only mean the death knell of personal liberty and the rights of conscience. Wherever ecclesiastical power is, it is hateful, and always ready to oppress and destroy. The persecution of the heroic Christian Stundists in Russia by the Greek Church in the year 1894 should awake all believers who are loyal to Christ, to stand fast in the liberty wherewith He has made us free, and resolutely refuse to be in any way entangled in earthborn Church bonds.

The great Head of his Church said, "One is your Master (Lord), even Christ, and all ye are brethren." Nothing could be simpler in constitution, whether for worship, service, or fellowship, than the Lord's welcome and precious words, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst." There, and wherever such conditions exist, is found the Church of Christ, whether in Galatia, on shipboard, in the city, the cathedral, chapel, mission hall, or room. Beware lest the simplicity of the Church of the Firstborn be misrepresented and supplanted by the world's splendid ecclesiastical travesty of "the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (Eph. i. 23).

PATIENCE.

O fettered soul, true love waits calmly on,
No matter that the day be sad and long;
Why dost thou pant and fret so 'gainst thy bars,
Would'st thou soar upward to yon distant stars?
Cut through the air, on gleaming wings unfurl'd,
To seek his face who made each shining world?
Nay, wait, 'tis best to wait, 'tis right, 'tis meet
Meekly to walk along with patient feet;
He did so through long trial and poverty,
Would'st thou not toil for Him who wrought for thee?
He walked from hour to hour, from day to day,
Nor ever longed for wings to "fly away."
And would'st thou find a quicker, easier way?

A LEAF FROM MY LIFE.

By Dr. G. D. DOWKONTT.*

I had read down to the words, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian," and was commenting upon them, when the master-at-arms came to the edge of the crowd, and, calling me to him, told me that the captain had sent him to stop the meeting at once.

A few minutes before this the regimental brass band had come on deck, and stationing themselves near to the group who were listening to me, they struck up some secular airs, a most unusual thing to do on a Sunday evening. As they did so the men crowded in closer, and, as the speaker stopped, they said with one voice, "Go on, sir, we can hear you; never mind the band." When the captain's message was delivered, I returned back to the centre of my astonished congregation, and said, "Men, I have received orders from the captain to desist at once; as we are in the Service, of course we must obey; I can only, therefore, wish you good night, thanking you for your kind attention."

There was a very distinct murmur of disapproval among the men, many of whom were Irishmen, the regiment (33rd) being a Catholic regiment. One said, "Well, that's a strange business; a fellow might swear and curse and tell lies all he liked, and they wouldn't stop him, and shure the steward was only giving us the Word o' God and they stop him."

I had scarcely reached the sick berth when the master-at-arms made his appearance, and stated that the captain desired to see me on the quarter-deck at once. I had not yet recovered from the shock of indignation caused by the order to desist, but was, so to speak, "boiling over," yet struggling to keep it down.

As I walked along the deck, I lifted my heart to the God I was trying to serve, and prayed, "O Lord, keep the door of my lips, that I offend not with my tongue." For fully fifteen minutes did the captain try to get me to do so, but failed. I explained that I had only sought to do good, and that I was not aware of having broken any rule of the service, and if I had done so, I was sorry for it. The captain finally concluded with the threat that he would dismiss me from the service when the ship arrived home.

It was hard to bear, but as I reached the sick berth again and sat down, taking my Bible in hand, it opened at the 51st chapter of Isaiah, and I read as follows:—"Hearken unto me, ye that follow righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law; fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revilings. For the moth shall eat them up like a garment. I, even I, am He that comforteth you. Who art thou that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die?"

It was as if the Lord stood by his poor servant on the Crocodile, even as He stood by his great servant Paul on board ship, and I was indeed comforted. During the remaining days of the voyage the soldiers often expressed their disapprobation of the captain's conduct, and after the ship arrived in Portsmouth, where the regiment was for some time stationed, the men, upon meeting me in the street, would accost me thus:—"Did the captain do anything to you, sir?" "Shure it was a shame the way he treated you, and although I'm not of your persuasion I never heard you say anything but what was good."

After the vessel had been home some days, a candidate for another position came on board, and the captain, noting that this man had held a similar office to myself, saw in it, as he thought, a good opportunity to get rid of me. I was accordingly sent for, and told that I had his permission to leave the ship for another vessel, but when asked, in accordance with the rules of the service, to state my reasons for wanting to exchange, I simply said that "I did not want to exchange, and therefore had no reason to give for desiring to do so." This settled the matter so far; for, although my friends advised my leaving, I did not do so, deciding that I would not go at man's bidding, nor for fear of man, but simply when God wanted me to do so.

God has said, "Them that honour Me I will honour," and it seemed as if He had arranged, so to speak, to honour his unworthy servant in the following manner.

On the next voyage out from England I went, as was my wont, among the troops with papers and tracts, giving several to a group of men, and bidding each in turn to read his paper for the good of all. In this way I was soon able to find out who were Christian men, as they would generally thank me, and tell of their desire to serve God. In the evenings I would gather these men together in my store-room for reading, conversation, and prayer.

When the troops were leaving the vessel at Alexandria, a young Christian soldier told me of his intention to send an account of the voyage to a lady friend in England, who had made him promise to do so.

"And," said he, "I shall tell her of the pleasant times we have had."

"Well," said I, "I am not at all jealous of the Army, but while I know of several ladies who write to and work for soldiers, I do not know of one who so works for the Navy, and I think we ought to have at least one." We parted, never since to meet; but when the ship arrived home, a letter addressed to me came on board from the lady in question,

MISS AGNES E. WESTON.

In this letter she told of her soldier friend having related the foregoing conversation, and she further expressed her willingness to become the "one lady" for the Navy if only she could be told what to do, and how to do it. After thinking and praying over the matter, I made out a list of all the Christian officers and men I knew in the Navy, giving the names of their ships, and where they were stationed. Enclosing this in a letter full of rejoicing, I advised Miss Weston to write to all of these, telling them of her offer, and bidding each to send a similar list to the one I had forwarded. I also advised her to use a book alphabetically arranged, into which she could enter the names, and avoid duplication. In less than six months Miss Weston "held the reins," which she has held ever since, of all the Christian officers and men in the Navy.

To-day there are four or five large buildings in English seaports where thousands of British and other men o' war's men are welcomed and housed. Hundreds, if not thousands, have been converted as the result of this noble woman's efforts, and those working with her, and her name and fame are world-wide. A few years since this work was extended to the United States Navy, and is becoming very successful.

I remained in the Crocodile for two years longer, until August, 1870, when I was most unexpectedly recommended for appointment to H.M. Dockyard, Portsmouth, by the chief surgeon of the ship, with whom I had served for three years. The doctor was a Roman Catholic, and yet expressed his sense of the captain's action in June, 1868, by saying to me the next day, "I consider his treatment of you a piece of gross injustice."

Meantime, the captain and two other officers who had made up their minds to "get that religious fellow out of the ship," left the vessel, while I remained on board, and had the satisfaction of seeing three other officers take their places, who all became my fast friends, and encouraged me to do all the Christian work I pleased. One of these poor fellows who opposed me killed himself with drink, and another committed suicide at sea after leaving the Crocodile. In June, 1889, just twenty-one years after the occurrence previously narrated, I stood on the deck of my old ship, looked at the old and memorable places, looked back to June, 1868, and looked up to thank God for all his goodness and care then and since.

* Extracted from Dr. Dowkontt's Autobiography; the incident first related occurred when he was holding a service on board H.M.S. Crocodile.

WOMEN WORKERS.—A conference of workers in various departments and service is called for October 23 to 26, in the Queen's-rooms, Glasgow. Amongst the readers and speakers will be Miss Chedham, Mrs. Sheldon Amos, Misses Don, and T. D. Townsend, Lady Laura Ridding, Misses Lidgett, Maitland and Richardson, Dr. Sophia Jex Blake, and others known in connection with busy and useful service. The secretary of the conference is Miss Macgregor, 26, Lyndoch-street, Glasgow.

HOP-PICKERS.—The work in the five tents erected for the hop-pickers in the Alton district is being blessed. The poor pickers much value the tea provided for them night by night. Great attention is being paid to Gospel addresses, and a spirit of inquiry is manifested. At one of the tents much deep thought seems to have been awakened, and several young men we hope have decided for Christ. One little gipsy girl, with her brown eyes sparkling with delight, said, "I would rather be a preacher than anything else." Pray for us. The work is great. S. Chinn.

GIN OR THE GOSPEL?

A very notable example of a large chapel having outlived its day has just occurred in Clerkenwell. As the place is in close proximity to the head-quarters of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission, Mr. John A. Groom, secretary and superintendent, is intensely anxious to save the premises from falling into the hands of a firm of distillers, who are after the property, and to utilise the building in extending the evangelistic operations of a comprehensive and far-reaching Christian mission. As two applicants are in the field, the matter will have to be quickly decided in favour of one or the other. The question resolves itself into "Gin or the Gospel?"

The commodious chapel referred to has been used for sixty years by a congregation of strict Calvinists, but deaths and removals have so reduced the membership that the doors have had to be closed, and the lease will have to be at once disposed of in order to pay off a debt and other liabilities. Notwithstanding that they have the application of the firm of distillers referred to, the trustees and remaining members offer the chapel to the Flower Girls' Mission on condition that what is owing is paid off. To effect this transfer, and thus to guarantee that the Lord's work shall still be carried on in the building, a sum of £500 will need to be immediately forthcoming.

As the case is not only urgent, but of exceptional interest and importance, Mr. Groom and his committee make a strong appeal to the Lord's stewards throughout the country to enable them to carry through this new enterprise. The chapel has accommodation for six hundred persons; it stands in the midst of a very poor and populous district; the securing of the chapel will afford an opportunity for extending the mission in a way that is much needed at the present time, and in the poor and densely-crowded district referred to. As there will be only a small ground-rent to be paid annually, the cost will be trifling after the preliminary payments are made. Probably in the entire history of evangelistic and rescue work in London, the question, "Gin or the Gospel?" never carried with it greater significance.

The appeal is strongly supported by such well-known friends as Messrs. W. J. Orsman, L.C.C., George Hatton, John Kirk, Wm. Wheatley, and Rev. Philip Gast.

---

On Wednesday last week, in company with Mr. Groom, I visited the chapel above referred to, and found it admirably adapted for use as a mission centre. The lecture-hall affords facilities for varied work, classes, and meetings of diverse kinds. Passing through the neighbourhood, and observing the character of the population, I was much impressed with the evident necessity for active evangelistic mission service, such as I have known carried on by Mr. Groom for over twenty years. I trust the above statement will evoke a hearty and prompt response.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

The work of the Homes and Open-all-Night Refuge has been sustained in full vigour thus far during this year. Up to the present time there has been an increased number of applications for help, and every suitable case has received prompt succour to the utmost capacity of the mission.

There have been several interesting incidents arising out of the work of former years. Very recently a piece of wedding-cake was received from a young woman who was an inmate of the Training Home, Parson's Green, Fulham, some twelve or fourteen years ago. She is now married, and she and her husband are members of a Christian Church. Another instance of good resulting "after many days" has occurred within the past week. A young woman for whom much had been done with apparently no good resulting was lost sight of for over seven years. She called on Saturday last in company with her husband and one of their four children, being in London for the day on a visit.

This work of mercy is in need of means to meet the daily expenses of the Homes. Mr. Taylor, the secretary, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W., will be happy to send to friends the various publications of the Society.

AMONGST THE POOR.

"But for you, my other little ones must have starved," was the cry of a deserted wife and mother, who had just buried her baby. The baby had been slowly done to death under the combined forces of insufficient food, clothing, and want of the nourishment its feeble life required.

"I shall never forget it, not to my dying day," the mother sobbed, as she detailed the miseries of the lonely night watch, during which the little life flickered out. But help has come to this stricken one, and though she does not "forget," she has taken heart again. The faith of early days which had been almost extinguished has revived, and the poor bruised heart has not only responded to the touch of human sympathy, but has opened to receive Divine comfort and healing. The habits of past years, learned in the godly refined home of her girlhood, have re-asserted themselves; squalor and confusion have given place to cleanliness and order, and now it is a joy we scarcely dared to anticipate, in those dark days that are past, to visit this home.

"My troubles have brought me nearer to God," says another of our poor friends, who in the darkness of widowhood, hampered with the care of many little ones, and not knowing how the next meal will be provided, finds that the barrel of meal and the cruse of oil have not yet been exhausted. Visit with us the one room where the widow lives, and be sure that you render yourself invisible, or her lips will be sealed as to her need, and the simple contrivances of honest poverty. She is weak from recent illness; one baby in her arms and another crawling round her feet. Three others stand at the table devouring parish bread with the vigorous appetite of healthy childhood. "Bless them, they do eat," says the mother. It only comes out by the way that she has little appetite for the rough food.

"I suffer so much from cold, and this lovely bodice will be such a comfort to me through the winter." Truly, the wash-leather jacket, so little worn, and so neatly repaired, is "just the thing" for the lonely seamstress, whose hacking cough and emaciated frame betray the nature of the slow disease that is preying upon her. That valuable article of clothing, one of many useful gifts from the same kind friends, was a real puzzle to us when it first arrived. There was no difficulty in disposing of it. Oh, no; but we had to decide which of the many poorly-clad, wheezy, rheumatic, bronchial, or consumptive women of our acquaintance should rejoice in the possession of so rare a gift. We hope we have decided aright, but it was a real problem, and needed very careful consideration on our part.

One meets with stories of unsurpassed heroism in the "simple annals of the poor." There is in this upper room a man paralysed past movement. Fifteen years ago he was the hard-working, industrious father of a little family. The nature of his arduous calling induced disease, and then his wife, healthy and energetic, came to the front and worked by night and day to keep her husband and children about her. But the man refused to be a helpless burden in the home, and insisted upon being removed to the workhouse infirmary. The mother worked on, never stopping for sickness and death, which visited the home again and again, until only one child remained.

Finally, through wrong surgical treatment for some supposed throat affection, she became almost stone deaf; but through all the long years of work and suffering she never missed the weekly visit to her husband. He will talk now and tell out some of the terrible experiences of workhouse life and treatment, which he endured at the time in absolute silence, bearing without a murmur his heavy cross, that he might not add one straw to that of the faithful wife. The only child grew old enough to take a situation, and then kind friends at the chapel with which the woman was connected arranged to pay the rent of two rooms in order that the man might once more know the luxury of a home of his own.

On the days when she is so fortunate as to have work, his wife rises at half-past four, goes through the slow operation of washing and dressing the invalid, and then carries him to the chair, where he remains till she returns at night. The devotion of this couple is a most pathetic sight.

Many and many a lesson of trust and patience we learn in the homes of such. "The poor ye have always with you," said the Master, and we often think that He specially blesses any ministry of help and comfort to them. May God consecrate to this ministry thousands of hearts filled with his own yearning sympathy for the souls and bodies of his poor suffering ones.

MISS MACPHERSON AT HOME.

Warm and loving greetings were extended to Miss Macpherson at the Workers' monthly meeting held last week at the Home of Industry. A large company of friends assembled, and great thankfulness was expressed for journeying mercies, safe return, reinvigorated health, and the good tidings brought from the other side. Mr. Maude opened the meeting with praise and prayer, and acted as chairman, though, as a matter of fact, the proceedings were of a very informal character, resembling a family thanksgiving rather than a public meeting.

Mr. W. F. Archibald briefly, but with much practical power, dwelt on the injunction, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee" (Psa. lv. 22), bringing out the sweet helpfulness of such a promise for God's people, and peculiarly for his workers when pressed by reason of the responsibilities of service.

Miss Macpherson followed with a bright and happy talk, recalling the goodness of the Lord since years ago she commenced emigration work. Coming to the present time, she said that two parties of destitute orphans (the sixty-seventh and sixty-eighth) have this year been rescued, trained, and placed in Canadian homes. It was her privilege for the fifty-third time to cross the Atlantic and mingle with many who are now growing into manhood and womanhood. Amongst these, blessings and answers to prayer have been numerous. Nearly six thousand of them have during the past twenty-five years started in life on the other side of the sea.

THE HAPPY SUMMER TIME IN CANADA

passed very quickly among her fellow-workers, aiding them, as they watch over the development of a great variety of character, age, and ever-shifting circumstances. She commended the workers in Canada for special prayer, that heavenly wisdom may be given them as they visit and correspond with the large growing-up family; also that the good seed, God's holy Word, sown in young hearts, both at the Hackney and Stratford Homes, may spring up and bring forth fruit to his praise and glory. The applications for well-trained boys and girls, from ten years of age, are as numerous as ever, while for the little adoptions the Lord has opened the hearts of many to receive them in his name and care for them for Him.

Little Edith, one of a recent party, aged six years, whose father died last winter, leaving a widow and five little ones, has been chosen by a farmer's wife. Two months after, a kind letter arrived for the widowed mother in England, in which the writer said:—"Edith (or Mollie, as we call her) is well and happy in her new home with us. The summer vacation is over, and to-morrow morning school begins. She writes very well on her slate now, and will, no doubt, in a short time be able to write you some nice letters. We have a little pony, and I often put Mollie on her back and let her ride. She is saving her money towards buying herself a side-saddle, so that she can ride in style. I wish you would tell us how much it cost Miss Macpherson to bring her from London; because if we adopt her, which we will if you are agreeable, we should at least repay her for the money spent in bringing her over."

During the three months' stay in Canada, scarcely a day passed without receiving a visit from one and another, finding to one's joy that the wanderer had been brought back to the fold, and that careless ones, whose only thought had been to get on in this world, were now desiring to serve the Lord and live for his glory. The two last seen had been quite unconcerned about their souls' welfare in England, but one had just offered himself to the North American China Inland Mission, and the other, a simple whole-hearted young fellow, told out his desire that he, with many others like-minded, should with their own earnings support a representative missionary. These two young men had, in former years, both been left orphans in this great city.

She found on arriving at Stratford, Canada, that two devoted young students were actively engaged in visiting the hundreds of children placed out in the various districts, and reporting on them to England. Both of them had the spiritual needs of the children much at heart as well as their temporal advantages, and they are being used to bring many of the boys and girls to decision for Christ. It was good, for instance, to hear of Annie (once a motherless little girl from the neighbourhood of Ratcliff Highway), when asked if she was a child of God, bursting into tears, saying, "I am not, but

OH! I WISH I WAS.

I pray every night and morning. I read my Bible, but I am not a Christian." And then when shown the way of life clearly and simply, she accepted it with all her heart, her tears dried, and a song of praise filled her lips.

While mentioning these, Miss Macpherson was thankful to say that not all needed to be shown the way to be saved. The visitor rejoices in finding many who are living for Christ in all godliness and humility. One day Mr. T., hearing of one of the young men, in the neighbourhood where he was seeing some of the little ones—past the visiting age, being twenty-four—walked across the fields to see him, and asked if he was on the Lord's side. The young man's face lighted up as the question was put to him, and he replied, "I am thankful to say that I am." Then the visitor learned from others that this young fellow was a leader in Christian effort, and his one aim in life seemed to be to serve God faithfully.

We thankfully notice that the recently-issued report from Ottawa shows a most friendly disposition to juvenile immigration, when individually trained and watched over.

Mr. Joseph Merry told, in concluding the meeting, how the Lord had been with them on the way, and how he had been enabled to testify on board ship in steerage and saloon. Beyond the sea he had been profoundly thankful to find evidence of a deepening spiritual work. For the home service in Bird Fair, among the widows, factory girls, and young men, as also among the children, he asked earnest and continued prayer.

These faithful workers, in setting themselves to a fresh winter's toil, earnestly trust they may be sustained by the loving prayers of the Lord's people. The need among the poor of the East End seems greater than ever. For the sake of those wishing to co-operate, it may be noted that £10 defrays the cost of rescuing one child, while £5 pays for a winter's training in the Home—a training which proves of inestimable service beyond the sea.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN E. LONDON.

A year has passed since Livingstone College was first opened for the reception of those who might wish to gain some medical experience before proceeding to lonely posts in the mission field. The number of students who entered at that time and went through the nine months' course has been to us a great encouragement. We propose to give to the friends of missions an opportunity of hearing of the scope of the College work, and the plan which has been adopted. A meeting has been arranged, with this in view, to be held in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, on Tuesday, Oct. 2, at 4.30 p.m. As the room will be limited, admission will be by invitation, but I shall be glad to send one to any who will write to me as below.

One special subject which will be spoken of will be the Home Mission work which is carried on in the East End, in connection with the College. An arrangement has been made by which the Shadwell Medical Mission, which is connected with Dr. Barnardo's work, should be managed by me. Whilst Dr. Barnardo provides a part of the money required, the responsibility lies with me to raise the rest of the money. It is my earnest desire to put this matter before those who believe in the great work of medical missions, and ask their support for this old-established work in the heart of the poorest part of East London. The development of the work depends largely upon the support which Christian friends may feel led to offer.

At present the work consists merely of an out-patient dispensary, and it is not possible to visit the patients in their homes. If sufficient means are forthcoming, it might be arranged to have a resident medical officer, who could reach the homes of many of the poor in Shadwell in a way which an ordinary evangelist could not hope to do. Friends interested in this Mission will be cordially welcomed at the meeting on October 2.

THE SALISBURY CONFERENCE.

This Conference, held last week, was characterised by all its usual energy, earnestness, and "go." With Rev. E. N. Thwaites at the head, the meetings could not be dull. The whole arrangements for the Conference introduce a happy mingling of the doctrinal and the practical.

The subject for consideration at the morning meetings was: "The Blessing of the Lord." (1) Provided for us; (2) appropriated by us; (3) communicated to others. The evening sessions were devoted to: "The Threefold Position of the Believer." (1) Turning to God from idols; (2) serving the living and true God; and (3) waiting for his Son from heaven.

These were very timely subjects, and were judiciously and ably treated. We hope to give some of the addresses, or the substance of them, in future numbers.

The after-dinner talks upon Christian work, and the brief Bible expositions after tea, are a most interesting feature.

Mr. Hermann Harris, founder of the Central Soudan Mission, in a closely-packed address of five minutes, told of one trying occasion, when the missionaries were assailed, a young Arab observed that they were kept in perfect peace, their mind stayed on God. He inquired the cause, and found the same peace in Christ, who is our Peace. Mr. Harris urged proportionate giving, the standard of measure being not our income, but the need of the Lord's work.

Mr. Harington narrated the story of his early experiences in obtaining a prayer-room for soldiers in Indian barracks, and how the Government in Sir John Lawrence's time agreed to build one in every cantonment. This excellent movement is evidently due, in large measure, to Mr. Harington's faithful and unwearied effort, both in its inception and continuance. He has also been busy in endeavouring to maintain in every barracks a branch of the Soldiers' Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Gostelow told of his work in the villages round Windsor, carried on by a band of young men with the aid of bicycles. Many souls have been won. His last word was "O, young men, get bicycles"; then his time was up.

Mr. Hutchinson, of the C.S.S.M., told of the Children's Scripture Union, with 600,000 members all over the world. The seaside and other work wonderfully acts on missionary work. Children are brought to Christ, and in many cases have become missionaries. By various agencies the whole reading of the children influenced by the C.S.S.M. is being revolutionised, and the novels are being replaced by the Bible and good books.

Mr. Leng spoke of the Scripture Readers' Society of Ireland, whose work is carried on by about forty single-eyed and simple-hearted men, the number of whom it is important to increase.

Mr. Evans advocated the Aged Pilgrims' Society, established 100 years ago, which now gives pensions to 1250 aged Christians, besides the Homes, which provide accommodation for nearly 180.

Mrs. Thwaites told how God had led her, through Lord Radstock, in "full and glad surrender," to be one of Christ's fisherfolk, and thrilled the party with her touching incidents of souls won during the past summer on the outskirt of seaside meetings.

This type of post-prandial oratory should be sedulously cultivated. These brief speeches of experts in Christian work are a specific against religious indifference and evangelical pessimism.

But all were especially delighted with the account which Mr. Thwaites gave of his recent visit to India. Among the facts crowded into a brief address the following were noteworthy: He had been away only four months, during which time he had travelled about 16,000 miles, preached 167 times, and though he had some work every night was kept in good health the whole while. He had found a great readiness to hear the Word. After preaching for an hour he would hold two after-meetings, then see people in the vestry, and find the crowd waiting outside. He had preached in the square in Calcutta to educated native gentlemen, who could understand English. They listened until his voice failed, and still cried, "Go on, sir." He led the way to a Mission Hall which was offered for his use, and as many as 130 or 140 of them followed, and crowded the room "inside and out" for another service. He attributed this success to three things:—(1) He was an Englishman, representing the ruling race; (2) the educated natives are ready to hear one who speaks English plainly; and (3) they had lost faith in their idols, and were wanting to hear the Gospel that is "worthy of all acceptation." "I will believe in bands and banners," said Mr. Thwaites, "when the Gospel is worn out." On one occasion when preaching to a crowd of idolaters, he ventured to say concerning their idol Vishnu, "How unreasonable it is to worship that! If I knock it down with my stick, it cannot help itself or get up again. How then can it defend you?" They all laughed at the folly of their own idolatry.

Mr. Thwaites is deeply impressed with the importance of such visits as he paid to India, as calculated greatly to increase the value of the missionary work. A fund for sending out men for this work was already started, and some encouraging subscriptions had been promised.

Among the speakers on Conference topics were Rev. J. G. Mantle, Rev. Graves Walker, Rev. G. Wainwright, Rev. R. Middleton, Rev. J. Wilkinson, Lord Radstock, and Mr. R. C. Morgan.

JEWISH NOTES.

THE JEWISH NEW YEAR.

The month of Tishri, which is the first month of the Jewish civil year, commences at sunset on Sunday, September 30. The synagogues will be thronged during the first two days of October by Jewish worshippers, keeping the feast of the New Year. At sunset on October 9 the Great Day of Atonement commences, and for the following twenty-four hours no devout Jew will touch a morsel of food. The Feast of Tabernacles follows five days later, i.e., at sunset on October 14, and is kept up for nine days. Many a Jew at this solemn season must feel utterly dissatisfied with the empty forms of Judaism. Let every Christian plead with God that the blind eyes may be opened to behold in Christ the Lamb of God, who beareth away the sin of the world.

PERSIA.

It is encouraging to learn that the C.M.S. missionaries in Persia have been requested by the Jews of Ispahan to open a school there. One has already been started consisting of twenty boys, and will be enlarged as soon as the needed funds for the purpose are received. During a visit to a town about five days' journey from Ispahan, one of the missionaries called on the Chief Rabbi, and asked him if the Jewish community would welcome or hinder missionaries if, in the near future, they should commence work for Christ in that city. His reply was couched in the most emphatic words of welcome. There is an evident hunger for the Word of God among the Jews all over Persia, and a fine field is open there for Christ's messengers to Israel.

ARABIA.

Rev. S. M. Zwemer, of the American Arabian Mission, who, it will be remembered, was to leave Aden about July 1 on a visit to Sanaa, the capital of Yemen, on behalf of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, duly arrived at his destination on August 1. He was much delayed on the road by the difficulty of passing the cases of Hebrew Testaments through the Turkish Customs. The Jews at Sanaa were delighted to see him, and on one of their Sabbaths he visited four of their fourteen synagogues. Mr. Zwemer writes:—"I have found much comfort in the assurance of your prayers. May God cause his own Word to triumph. So far, 122 of the books sent have reached Jewish hands safely, and even this is not a small matter if God will bless their perusal."

INDIA.

A work among Jews has just been started at Calcutta. Two rooms have been secured, and it is hoped that a sewing-class may be opened for the Jewesses, who are very poor; also a Sunday-school, day-school, and lending library. Mr. Kalberer writes: "I do hope Mr. Wilkinson will be able to send an agent to India. Oh, how grand it would be if we had some Jewish missionaries labouring in India among the natives! I do pray that God will be with us in our new work among his ancient people, and that He will direct us in every step of our way."

DO NOT KEEP YOUR BOYS in ignorance of things they should know. It is not the wholesome truth, but the unwholesome way in which it is acquired that ruins many a young man.

BETHESDA MISSION, DALSTON.

In the dense district lying on the west side of London Fields a good work has been carried on for about six years by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander, whose labours have been used of God to the conversion of souls. By persevering effort they have gathered around them in the Bethesda Mission a little company of earnest workers, but these are for the most part poor. The hall is leased from the G.P.O., and the lease expires this week.

Under these circumstances a meeting was held on Thursday evening; the crucial question being, "Shall we take another lease of the hall, and go on with the work? or shall we close up?" The difficulty is financial; but on a very modest scale, as some £25 additional help is all that is required to keep this really useful little Mission going. The hall seats 160 persons, and in it Gospel services are held, also children's service, Sunday-school, and various weekly meetings, as well as open-air and temperance effort.

Rev. W. Miall, who presided at the meeting, spoke of his own many years' experience of the district, and urged the great value of the work done by this Mission. Mr. Hawley insisted on the usefulness of the Mission.

Mr. S. J. Alexander, the hon. director, briefly outlined the story of the Mission, showing how God had blessed it, how many souls had been saved, how not a few are now serving God in other parts who were won to Him in this hall. As to the future, he and his wife were simply ready to do God's will: whether to continue the Mission, or to give themselves to evangelistic service in various parts.

Mrs. Alexander came next with a glowing and animated talk on the goodness of the Lord in this place, and her own firm faith He would lead aright. She detailed various cases in which God had saved sinners in the Mission services.

Several friends followed with ringing and persuasive pleas on behalf of the work. The testimony borne to the usefulness of the Mission was of such an explicit character that finally the decision was come to that it must go on. Small amounts were promised by the friends present (over and above what they had been giving) making in all £2 per quarter additional, so that now the leaders are looking to the Lord to incline the hearts of his people to provide, say, £12 per annum. The director is Mr. S. J. Alexander, 45, Gayhurst-road, Dalston, N.E.

A DUTCH DEPUTATION.

A very interesting meeting was held last Friday evening at the Baptist Mission House to welcome some Dutch Baptists who had come as delegates from that country. Pastor Horn spoke at some length of the work carried on there. He reminded us that 300 years ago, when the Duke of Alva was sent by Philip II. to exterminate the Protestants in Holland, many came over to England for protection, but Queen Elizabeth had not treated them as we were treating those of to-day. Pastor Horn's daughter and two other ladies were dressed in Freisland, South Holland, and Zeeland costumes.

The delegates will be pleased to visit any churches who will welcome them during the remaining days of their stay here. Their singing of sacred songs and the eloquent words of their leader are sure to give pleasure and profit. On Wednesday, September 26, they are to be at Lordship-lane Chapel (Rev. E. T. Mateer); on Thursday, the 27th, at Bloomsbury Chapel (Rev. J. Baillie); on Monday, October 1, in the Foreign Y.M.C.A., 28, Finsbury-square, and on Tuesday, October 2, at Rye-lane Chapel, Peckham (Rev. J. T. Briscoe).—Address Pastor Horn, 28, Finsbury-square.

MOTHERS, maintain your self-respect, whilst you exercise your self-devotion. Motherhood need not be martyrdom.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—The monthly prayer meetings were resumed on Thursday last, when the committee room, 20, Berners-street, was crowded by friends and supporters of the society. Rev. W. R. Mowll, M.A., vicar of Christ Church, North Brixton, presided. A large number of special requests for prayer from the various mission stations were read out, and earnest petitions were offered for these cases as well as for the Protestant Educational Classes and Bible Clases, and the general work of the society. In bringing the meeting to a conclusion, Mr. Mowll gave a helpful address on the two prayers in Psalm xxvii. 11, "Teach me—lead me."

TIDINGS FROM ABROAD.

The Central Noon Prayer Meeting at Aldersgate-street is a gathering place for Christian workers from all parts of the world. Last week this was specially the case. On Monday Major Mackinlay, who has been working for many years in Spain, gave some interesting personal testimony of his experiences. As a sample he told of a fisherman and his wife, who had heard and believed the Gospel. According to the custom of fishermen he had with his boat's crew followed the fish down the coast. His wife, wearying for his society, after an interval, followed him by rail. At the close of the fishing season they were returning in a large third-class carriage with a number of other fishermen, when a Roman Catholic priest entered and took his seat. The rough fishermen, thinking to set by the ears their godly companions and the priest, began asking the man and his wife all sorts of questions about sin and salvation. The wife, who was the better speaker, answered the inquiries by reading passages from her Bible. When the questions began to flag, thinking it a good opportunity, she preached the Gospel to the little company. Presently the priest rose to leave the train at an intermediate station. Before alighting he lifted his hat, and, turning to the astonished fishermen, said: "What the senora has said is the truth." Subsequent inquiries failed to bring the workers into touch with this priest; but He who led him to give this simple testimony is able and willing to lead him into all truth.

Rev. J. G. Morris, of Kimberley, spoke on Tuesday about the mission work in which he had been engaged in the diamond miners' compounds which abound in that vicinity. As a worker in connection with the Wesleyan Missionary Society, he had been located in many different centres, but he esteemed none more important than his present sphere. It is a little miniature world. All nationalities are represented in the streets of the town, and all the uncivilised races of mighty Africa are seen in the compounds.

Mr. Morris narrated one very interesting case amongst many. A young negro from Matabeleland —one of Lobengula's subjects — listened very attentively to the Gospel message. Presently he came to the night-school to learn English. Meanwhile he brought his weekly money to Mr. Morris to take charge of for him. This went on for many long months. At length the young scholar, now an intelligent and devoted Christian, claimed his savings, which amounted to £50, and bade his faithful teacher farewell. He was going to Cape Colony to train for Gospel work amongst his own people, at his own charges. What an object lesson for young people of our own privileged country. A savage lad, valuing the Gospel so highly as for its sake to endure this self-denial and hardness in order to become a teacher of his own people!

On the same day there were also in the meeting Mr. James, of the China Inland Mission, who has just returned on furlough, and also Mr. Gilree, of Alexandria, Egypt. This latter gentleman was seeking a brief change at Constantinople—after many years of labour amongst the Mohammedans of Egypt. He was in that city when, a few months since, it was overtaken by the terrible earthquake, which was duly reported in the English press. During the deep impression created by that terrible experience, he found ready acceptors of his Scripture portions, both amongst Jews and Mussulmans.

On Wednesday, Mr. Griffith, a retired agent of the Baptist Missionary Society, gave a thrilling account of his labours amongst the lepers in Jamaica. They are very numerous in that settlement. Many of these afflicted sufferers have not only come to know the Gospel, and to love the Saviour; they are also active disseminators of its saving knowledge. Amongst many stories of negro girls and women he narrated an instance of a young man who, with nine others, determined to enjoy a life of sin. All went well with them until this one was suddenly attacked by leprosy. Then they no longer wanted his company, and he no longer sought their society. He turned for comfort and salvation to the Saviour whom in the days of health and prosperity he despised. Blessed be his holy name! The sufferer was not cast out. He became an earnest evangelist. Disease prevented his walking from place to place, so he bought a donkey and a large-print Bible. He rode round from village to village and cottage to cottage reading aloud the Scriptures. He was often repelled, but never daunted. By-and-by the disease affected his sight, and he became blind. Happily, he had a retentive memory, so he could repeat long passages without mistake; and, although he had lost his eyes, the donkey still possessed his. So Jamie used to clamber on the donkey, who faithfully and safely carried him to the house of God and back whenever there was service. Many touching stories of these devoted, suffering Christians were rapidly told by Mr. Griffith in the course of his brief address.

On Thursday, Mr. McCarthy, a self-supporting missionary from South America, told his experiences. He went out to Buenos Ayres, and held meetings in English and Spanish, and assisted in the formation of the Y.M.C.A. in that city. A Sabbath-school was also started, and proved remarkably successful in gathering in many dear children, and leading them to a definite acceptance of the Saviour. Some time since Mr. McCarthy moved across to Monte Video, where the need is greater and the workers few. Here he was put in charge of the Sailors' Rest and Home. Whenever Her Majesty's ships put into Monte Video the seamen are allowed ashore. They gladly patronise the Rest, and the living and sleeping accommodation. The merchant seamen, on the other hand, are never allowed ashore, so Mr. McCarthy has to visit them in the vast harbour; some of the ships lie as much as four miles from shore. The harbour is much exposed to sudden squalls and gales. He greatly needs a specially constructed local boat for this service; this involves an outlay of £60. Mr. McCarthy has seen many trophies of the grace of God amongst seamen during his eight years' residence in these cities.

NOTES FROM CHINA.

Dear Sir,—A few items of news from this provincial capital, where I am temporarily, may move the hearts of your readers to intercession for China.

1. The war with Japan creates unusual interest in this great official centre. It is thought that Japan may be of service to teach China many important lessons, which should, by any and all means, be learned.

2. Interest in Christian newspapers is considerable. There is one here, one in Central China, one in Pekin, I am told. For a time the most widely-known one, usually issued from Shanghai, was suspended; it is to be recommenced. Yesterday I found a new proof of the value of such papers. A Dr. Ling was led into the love of truth by this means. He became a devoted reader, and his influence spread considerably.

3. Prayer and effort are being made concerning the preparation and publishing of "Lives of Eminent Christian Chinamen." This is a powerful means of good, proving the best form of evidence of the real power of Christ to save from the evil passions of human nature, and help men to be helpful to their fellows, whereas otherwise they would have been torpid and indifferent, if not positively injurious.

4. Ladies' work is in great force in these regions. Ladies take turn with men in conducting religious services in the "Keswick" held here.

5. An old friend of Mr. William Burns relates that Mr. Burns said his greatest spiritual successes were when he did not wear the native dress. It seems that in one place where he wore the native dress a Chinaman exclaimed, "Here's a foreigner who would make believe he's a Chinaman; he can't do it, his nose betrays him!"

6. Mr. Millard, fellow-missioner with Mr. Grubb, has been here doing good work. Mr. Grubb may come out and be met by Mr. Millard at Singapore, and visits be paid by these men of God in various places up coast.

7. I have found new proof of the desirability for watching unto prayer, concerning missionaries who are working in China while wife and family are all at home. The work needs family influence. Separation has its tests. Cares multiply through separation of forces. But God is all-sufficient.

Yours faithfully,

Foochow, Aug. 19. J. Sadler.

MR. MATTHEW BURNETT has been working at Southampton and Netley. He will be glad of prayer for the autumnal campaign on which he is now entering. His address is Wraysbury, Frances-road, Bournemouth.

MELBOURNE MEMS.

MCNEILL MISSION.

The closing week of business meetings in the Town Hall has ended. Both preacher and people seem to have enjoyed them most thoroughly, and yesterday, when a collection was made at the last of them, on behalf of the Melbourne hospitals and benevolent institutions, the offering amounted to £109 6s. In these depressed times this shows the business men's appreciation of the time specially devoted to them by the evangelists. Evening by evening meetings were held in the Geelong Exhibition building.

A thanksgiving and testimony meeting is to be held in the Melbourne Y.M.C.A. Hall on Monday evening, to which those who have received blessing during the Mission are invited, as also the members of the choir, executive committee, and workers. The meeting is to be conducted by the Rev. S. Chapman (Baptist) and Rev. H. B. Macartney (Episcopalian). Messrs. McNeill and Burke begin work in Bendigo to-morrow.

DR. TALMAGE.

On Thursday of this week, Dr. Talmage arrived in Victoria. Travelling in the adjoining compartment of the boudoir car, I was on the spot to welcome him to the colony as the train reached the Victorian side of the river Murray, but thought it more considerate to let the Doctor have a rest, as it was a cold frosty morning. He was duly met at Melbourne by the moderator and ministers of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria, who gave him a cordial reception. Great numbers have attended the lectures, and given the American preacher a grand reception. D. M. L.

IN THE NIGER COUNTRY.

Mr. Thomas Holt, of the Niger Branch of the Central Soudan Mission, left Lagos on July 20, and journeyed to Ejerin by canoe. He writes:—

"Three missionaries of the American Baptists had arranged to accompany us as far as Ogbomoso; but as they were visited by sickness and death, their arrangements were completely knocked on the head. All their carriers and ours made a total of over sixty men to deal with. I have, however, learned somewhat how to deal with them, so that they were not able to give us the trouble they do many people.

"The first three days' journey lay through a thickly-wooded country, very hilly, the path being merely a footway through the forest wide enough for only one person to pass. The remaining portion of the journey was easier. The country is often quite open, then again the land gets higher, so that there is a delightful breeze.

"My companions landed here in good health; I had dysentery, brought on through over-exertion and drinking bad water. I travelled for two days in awful agony on this account, and suffered intensely the three days after arriving at Ogbomoso. I am now, however, quite well, and shall (D.V.) be strong enough to go to Illorin in a day or two to engage fresh carriers and buy horses. We have somewhat changed the plan of our route. Rabba, through which we intended to strike, is of course, in ruins. I propose to go right on to Yakoba, twenty days further than Bida, east by north-east. It is the only place, so far as I know, in the Soudan that is yet pagan. The population runs on towards 200,000, untouched by Mohammedanism. It is the highest point in the Soudan, and on that account I should say the healthiest, and is within easy communication of the northern caravan routes.

"Any other parties being sent out viâ Lagos will not have the difficulty there that we had; the suite of rooms over the Baptist schoolroom will always be at the disposal of the Soudan missionaries. We shall enter the Soudan, of this I am confident. Let the people at home bear us up in prayer, and I fear nothing."

WHENEVER YOU SEE A DRUNKEN MAN it ought to remind you that every boy in the world is in danger.

MOTHERS have a valid ground of complaint against that philosophy of education which would sacrifice them wholly to their children. Service never ought to be one-sided. The children must learn to deny themselves for the mother's sake as well as the mother for the children's.

PASTOR YEN'S FAREWELL.

At the Mildmay Conference Hall, last week, a meeting was held to bid farewell to Rev. Yung King Yen, on the eve of his departure from our shores. For the past seven months this Chinese brother has been addressing audiences throughout the country, on the bearings of the opium question, especially as these affect the people of China. His utterances have always been marked by earnestness and intelligence, with a due appreciation of the responsibilities of Great Britain for the part it has played in past years in introducing this curse among the millions of China.

At the farewell gathering on Wednesday week, which was well attended, Mr. John Hilton presided. In a brief but weighty address he referred to some outstanding points in the past history of this agitation, and dwelt on the services which our Chinese friend has rendered to the cause during his sojourn amongst us.

In moving a resolution of thanks to the friends in China who had deputed Mr. Yen to visit England, Dr. Maxwell made some caustic comments on the medical evidence put forward in connection with the recent Royal Commission. It was a curious thing, he said, that medical men, while urging that alcohol is more hurtful than opium, take good care to prevent their own children from indulging in the latter, though they will not object to their using alcohol. The action of Dr. Ernest Hart, of The British Medical Journal, in publishing in his paper the one-sided contributions of medical men on this subject was strongly condemned by Dr. Maxwell as unscientific, and an abuse of his position as editor of such a powerful journal.

Mr. M. P. Betts having briefly spoken, the resolution of thanks was supported by Mr. Joseph G. Alexander, who rehearsed some of his already published experiences in India and China in connection with the Royal Commission. He also alluded to the protest made by Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., a member of the Commission, as to the way in which the Indian Government had presented the Indian medical evidence to the Commissioners. That protest, which appears in the latest volume of evidence published, virtually accuses the Indian authorities of selecting such evidence as was favourable to opium, and rejecting that which was unfavourable. This accusation of partiality is one which will have to be met, otherwise the report of the Commission will carry little weight with the people of this country. Mr. Langman, of the China Inland Mission, gave some of his experiences of the opium curse during a residence of eight years in China. These were entirely in support of what other Chinese missionaries have said as to the fearful nature of the scourge in Chinese social and family life.

In responding to the warm resolution of thanks, Rev. Yung King Yen gave an interesting survey of his labours and experiences while in England. He has publicly spoken on the subject over a hundred times. He thankfully acknowledged the kindness he had received during his stay, and said he left our shores with feelings of regret. He hopes, however, to continue his testimony after returning to China, and also during a visit he is making to the United States en route. He earnestly appealed to British Christians to maintain the warfare against this great evil, which is devastating his country; and said that if the curse be not stayed China is doomed.

An afternoon meeting for prayer and conference was presided over by Dr. Maxwell, secretary of the Medical Missionary Association, and hon. sec. of the Christian Union against the Opium Traffic. Dr. F. Harford Battersby, who is the representative of the Church Missionary Society on the Committee of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, discussed the medical testimony given before the Opium Commission in India. He showed that it was unscientific in character, that it betrayed manifest bias, and that much of it dealt with points not properly medical at all. Rev. A. W. Prautch and Mr. Man Sukh Lal, two of the missionaries recently imprisoned at Bombay, were introduced to the meeting by Mr. J. G. Alexander, who expressed his conviction, from personal acquaintance with these gentlemen, that the statements made by them were true, and pointed out that they had not been convicted of having made false statements, but of having made statements which they were not able to prove by positive evidence to the satisfaction of the magistrate—a very different matter. Mr. Prautch lucidly explained how he and his colleagues had proved, as the judgment delivered showed, all the substantial facts alleged by them as to the sale of opium contrary to the law, but had failed to prove that the prosecutor, Damji, had authorised his subordinates to commit these unlawful acts on his behalf, and it was on this point alone that they had been convicted. Mr. Yen spoke briefly, and several friends engaged in earnest prayer for guidance and blessing in the anti-opium crusade during the coming season.

A HINDU'S CONFESSION.

Mr. S. Ramanujam Chetty is a Master of Arts and a Bachelor of Law, of the Madras University, and a pleader of the Madras High Court. He is the honoured son of an honoured father, who has been for many years a professor in the Madras Christian College, and is also Telugu translator to the Government. He came to the Calcutta Mission not as a stranger, but bearing letters of recommendation from most respected members of the Madras Mission, and with testimonials of high value from his professors in the Madras Christian College. Mr. Chetty sought baptism here rather than in Madras, because he was most desirous to spare his most revered father and other much-loved relatives unnecessary pain and trouble; and because he was desirous that not any harm should come to his beloved alma mater, the Madras Christian College, in the eyes of the non-Christian community, by his baptism.

On being called upon to do so, Mr. Chetty read the following statement to the congregation:—

Brethren in Christ,—I come from the Komati community, which is even more orthodox than the Brahmin. My father holds a most respectable position in that community. I was born in a family of affluent circumstances, and was well cared for. I began to think of God much earlier than is common with people of that age; and even when I was young I was well versed in the stories of the Ramayana and Mahabharat. Encouraged by my grandmother, I was worshipping stones and pillars as representatives of the Supreme Being, but that was only for a very short period, and I soon gave them up. The year 1881 was an epoch in my life. In the beginning of that year I joined the Madras Christian College, and, among other things, received instruction in the Christian religion. From the very beginning I had the highest reverence for that religion and its expounders. I never was a hater of the Christian missionaries or Christian followers. It was said by one of my friends that if he was endowed with supreme power the first thing he would do would be to hang all the converts. I tried to convince him of his folly, but I failed to do so, because he would not be convinced.

While I was a student in the junior F.A. class, a number of young friends joined together to study the subject of religion, especially Hinduism, but the society soon dissolved into nothingness. In those days my mind fluttered considerably between theosophy, agnosticism, and theism. The famous exposure of the Mahatmas in the pages of The Christian College Magazine shook at once and for ever my confidence in the Theosophical Society. I then began to read largely books directed against religion in general, and Christianity in particular. For a long time my mind was in a wavering condition. When I was studying in the B.A. classes it was that my faith in Christ gradually began to be formed and strengthened. There were leetures delivered on Sunday evenings on Christian subjects, and very often the appeals would go right down into my heart. The addresses delivered by our beloved Babu Kali Cham Banerji while he was at Madras touched a sympathetic chord in my heart. It was also at this period that I had the privilege of hearing a few lectures on the subject of the Resurrection, delivered by one of our most esteemed professors, Rev. W. Skinner. I was then convinced of the truth of the Resurrection, and my faith in the occurrence of the event was firmly established. It was also at about this time that took place. My strong sympathies were on the side of the College, and I was one of the very few Hindu students who stood staunch and loyal to the College in spite of pressure brought on them from outside to join the "rebellion."

After I left the college, for some years religious considerations were laid aside. Social reform and the cause of woman occupied my mind more than the subject of religion. During my college days I used to read very largely the works of the renowned reformer Rai Bahadur K. Virasalingam Pantulu Garu—works of a highly moral nature. When I became a husband I requested my wife to read his works, which she did, and her mind was also being prepared to receive the Gospel truth. Before we proceeded far, it pleased the Almighty Father to take away that precious jewel, that noble type of a woman, from me. Till recently, although I had the highest reverence for Christ, yet I was not a believer in his Divinity. I thought of facing the question seriously when I survived my father, for I had a great desire not to cause a shock to him. My mother died at the end of the year 1880, when I was young.

The visit of Annie Besant, and the speeches of Swami Vivekananda, and the papers read at the Parliament of Religions set me again on religious inquiries, and after considerable thought I satisfied myself of the hollowness of the assertions made by Swami Vivekananda and Annie Besant. I witnessed the exemplary lives led by our principal and the other professors of the college, and my faith in the religion they taught me was gradually confirmed and my convictions strengthened. While I was travelling to this city, I was studying the "Papers on the Bible," edited by our esteemed Dr. Macdonald, and when I came nearly to the end of the book, on Tuesday, the 31st of July, all my doubts vanished, my faith in Christianity was thoroughly confirmed, and I felt a call that I must not delay in confessing Christ. In response to that call I hurried on, and I am now confessing before you my faith in Christ. Although I am certain I shall be rewarded, yet I obey the call because, and only because, I feel it to be my duty to do so. I am now happy; happier than ever before. I know I am saved, and I owe it to my Saviour, who will ever dwell in me, and in whom I trust I shall ever live and move, and have my being.

THE SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, PORTSMOUTH.

A fresh start has been made at the Institute, and a meeting was held last week in connection with the recognition of Mr. Sidney Smith, the new superintendent.

Miss Robinson, who was most heartily welcomed, reviewed the history of the work, touched on the years she had devoted to it, and the blessing God had given. Of late difficulties had arisen, and the trustees were most thankful that Mr. Smith was taking the matter in hand, and they would all see what a happy place would be made of it. Mr. and Mrs. Smith had very kindly undertaken it for love; they drew no salary and lived at their own expense. They could not find such people as these like blackberries on every bush. This was really the time of her retirement; it was time, for she was such a perfect cripple, and when people had reached the age of sixty it was time for them to have a kind of Sabbath. Some said the Institute was played out, but if it was they were perfectly free to close it when they chose, or turn it into a Sanitorium or Home for old soldiers. They were actually going to do something of this kind now, for the trustees had allowed rooms to be used for the reception of invalid soldiers or worn out commissionaires. There were two other institutes in connection with this one. That at Alexandria was out of debt, and was going on first rate under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence and two of their ladies, who had gone out from Portsmouth. The Sailors' Welcome at Portsea was going on all right, under the care of Mr. Pither, from whom she heard that 21,748 beds were let during the past year, or 2599 more than in the previous year. She was thankful they were able to report so well of the three places, for she believed the Institute was going to look up again.

Mr. Sidney Smith followed with an address, in the course of which he said his connection with soldiers dated from 1858, when he, as a midshipman, accompanied them to the Indian Mutiny, and he had since spent thirty-four years in India. He wanted the Institute to be the soldiers' home, but while making them comfortable, they also wanted to look after their spiritual welfare. Quartermaster-Sergeant Cooper, Colonel Sandwith, and other speakers gave Gospel addresses.

THE LONDON TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL will complete, on October 6, twenty-one years of consecutive and successful work. This "coming of age," the Board of Management think, should not pass without some mark of special recognition, and they have, therefore, arranged to hold a reception at the hospital on Monday, October 8, when the visitors, arriving at 2 o'clock or later, will be conducted through the hospital by members of the Board, or of the medical and nursing staffs. Friends of the Institution who, in the meantime, have not received cards of invitation, can obtain them by postal application to the secretary, Mr. E. Wilson Taylor, at the hospital, Hampstead-road, N.W.

GIFT, SERVICE, AND HEADSHIP.

Dear Sir,—Referring to the letter of "A. W." under the heading of "Gift, Service, and Headship," in your issue of September 13, permit me to make a few remarks.

In the first place I cannot allow that the words "Everyone of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue," etc. (1 Cor. xiv. 26), were spoken as a matter of praise or congratulation by the apostle; the whole paragraph tends in quite an opposite direction. It is evident from the contest that indiscriminate action of this kind had raised disorder, and was not too edifying. Else, why the words "Let all things be done unto edifying"; "Let it be by two or at the most by three, and that by course" (verse 27)" "Let the prophets speak two or three"? The words "for ye may all prophesy" clearly refer not to the whole congregation but to the prophets. The late Mr. Spurgeon well said, "The whole body is not mouth."

The principle of "open" qualified ministry is a very blessed one! Let it be as "open" as possible where the teachers are agreed as to truth, but the practice of "any man" ministry as indulged in certain Christian meetings is dishonouring to God, a cultivation of the democratic spirit in Church relations, and a denial of that word in Eph. iv ii. "He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors, and teachers." As to meetings gathered upon the principle advocated, realising "a presence and power, that overawe the workings of the flesh," I speak from many years' acquaintance with such meetings, and without hesitation declare that lamentable exhibitions of the flesh are constantly occurring. This could not be prevented at Corinth, and we are weaker ten thousand times than they.—Yours very truly,

Chas. A. Seaman.

OPEN-AIR MISSION IN IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—Recent interesting correspondence in The Christian suggests some aspects of the question which I believe have not been referred to.

All students of Scripture must occasionally feel what large portions of the Word are occupied with a state of things to which nothing in their present experience corresponds. I mean the violent hostility of "the ungodly" to the saints of God. Take the Psalms for example. A great number of these contain direct allusion to physical assaults. There is personal violence with blows, missiles, cruelty, vituperation, and slander. The hostility comes from kings and rulers, and from mobs. It is always traced to enmity against God and his Word and servants. Under it and in consequence of it, the most precious promises are given, the deepest experiences of the soul are uttered, and faith, love, hope, and praise are generated and strengthened.

We all suffer unspeakable loss by having nothing in our own lives, and nothing present to our experience in the lives of others, to which these Scriptures can be literally applied.

The Book so far becomes to us unreal. To reap its fruits in these gardens we must "spiritualise" the language, that is, strip it of its matter of fact and dress it up in some ghostly garment suitable to our own experience. The Open-air Mission in Ireland restores to the Church of God the atmosphere of reality in the reading of these Scriptures.

Turn to the New Testament and the same remarks apply. Take for examples 2 Cor. i. 3-10, iv. 6-12, vi. 4-11, x. 16, xi. 23-28, xii. 10, and v. 14. Let these passages be read over devotionally, with this inquiry present in the mind, What do I, what does the Church of the end of the nineteenth century, know of such experiences? To Christendom at large all this is but dead letter, faint echoes wafted through ages to our ears from a buried past.

Let me reverently point to Calvary. Surely had our blessed Lord retired before physical assault and violence there would be no such scene to point to. He could, nevertheless, have laid down his life as an atoning sacrifice when it pleased God. But for our instruction, as the example of his witnesses all down the ages, He suffered violence and died the death of martyrdom.

Stephen shrank not from the same; nor have thousands since.

I venture to suggest that if the Christianity of to-day leads to no such experiences, one of two things must have happened. Either the enmity of man to God and his Christ has been greatly modified, or the methods of our Gospellers must have been adapted to their "environment." To me it seems that the latter alternative must be adopted. That man, even in Christendom, loves not God more than of old, it is, I apprehend, unnecessary to contend with the readers of this journal.

It is, then, by the modern system of compromise, of retiring before opposition, that troubles, the troubles of godly souls in all the ages, have been avoided. The compromise takes the form of confining our ministry to buildings provided for the purpose, limiting our testimony to those who come to receive it.

But if some in Ireland have resolved to take up the cross, ought we not to be grateful that by their means whole strata of the Biblical mine are flashing and sparkling with golden gems, that had been in comparison dull and barren rock before?

With reference to work from house to house, I only point out that in towns like Cork, Galway, Athlone, and Dublin, such methods would certainly be considered more aggressive and intolerable than to stand and speak in the open-air to such as might desire to listen.

(2) As to the police, I hope nobody believes that the evangelists want to offer the Gospel to Ireland under the patronage and protection of the State. This would be a sure way to defeat their purpose. It was the association of Protestantism with the State that shut up the country against Christ for centuries.

But they ask that they be not assaulted by the police, "chucked," driven from pillar to post, as if they were malefactors, when only engaged in what the police circulars themselves describe as a "legal" (meaning, no doubt, lawful) act. And they ask that assaults which in any fair or market would be the occasion of arrests and prosecutions, when committed between peasants, be not overlooked and condoned in their case, when done under the eyes of the police.

The instructions from Dublin Castle, however, are to the contrary. Arrests and prosecutions are to be avoided. And, instead, the preachers are to be forced into their lodgings and kept there—imprisoned, so to speak.

Be it so. Paul was a prisoner in his own hired house, and called himself an "ambassador in bonds." The 2nd Psalm leaps to the memory, and we know that our ruler at Dublin Castle acts in this thing "against the Lord and against his Christ." In these days of carpet and arm-chair Christianity, if I may so say, is it not well that there are to be found, as of old, men willing and glad to suffer shame for their Master's name? What a rebuke to infidelity! What encouragement to feeble faith and lukewarm love!

(3) All workers among the masses in Ireland know that there are numbers who are convinced of the truth of the Gospel, and yet who have not courage to separate from the error, and come out boldly for Christ. It is reasonable to expect that the public example of men not ashamed to "endure hardness" will nerve these timorous spirits to confess before men the faith that is in them.

The most remarkable fact of the whole movement, patent to all, is this, that although for many months exposed to all manner of violence, short of the use of firearms, and owing partly to the presence of the police, not one of these dear men has suffered any permanent damage. God is their guardian. Again, He who has kept them back from anger, bitterness, and words of reproach, from retaliating blows, and legal prosecution of their enemies, will surely cause that their words, commended by such supernatural grace and patience, shall take effect, when once the people hear enough amid the tumults to know that no hard word is spoken against their prejudices, but that pardon and peace is preached, and the great love of God to all.—Yours truly,

Ardfert, co. Kerry. Geo. F. Trench.

P.S.—Since writing the above we have had proof in places where no open-air work has taken place that the movement in Cork is stirring up interest elsewhere, and attracting numbers of Roman Catholics to indoor Gospel meetings. So may it be all over the land.

"REMEMBER LIMERICK."

Dear Sir,—The hostile feeling between Roman Catholics and Protestants, on the subject of religion, is deeply to be deplored. It appears to be one result of the unkind treatment the Roman Catholics received in years gone by.

It is a question whether the writer of "The Outlook in Ireland" (Sept. 6) is historically correct in his interpretation of the cry "Remember, Limerick!"

Instead of referring to the quashing there of the Jacobite insurrection it is more likely to refer to the treaty there made between the contending forces. This treaty was broken by England, and Limerick is sometimes called "the City of the Violated Treaty." It was signed on a large stone still known there as the Treaty Stone.

According to Collier's Hist. Ireland, page 165, "It contained fifty-two articles. In these it was provided that the Roman Catholics should enjoy religious liberty as in the reign of Charles II., etc., etc. * * * These promises, however, were never ratified by the Parliament of 1697, consisting, as it did, entirely of the recent English Protestant interest. An Act, professing to confirm it was passed, from which every stipulation of importance was omitted."

The conditions of the treaty appear to have been adhered to by the Irish leader in his refusal of foreign aid; but the same treaty was broken by England in her zeal against Roman Catholicism.

About this time the penal laws were enacted, these for more than a century still further oppressed the Roman Catholic population (Coll. Hist. Ir., pp. 168, 9).

Treatment like this produced in many minds a feeling of having been cruelly wronged; a feeling so deep that it appears to have been handed down for the last 200 years through successive generations of those on whom these disabilities pressed. This glimpse into history may account for the feeling with which many Roman Catholics still regard Protestants, especially in religious matters, so that aggressive work for the Master becomes one of difficulty and delicacy, requiring much tact and heavenly wisdom.—Yours very sincerely,

E. M. W.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.

The twenty-seventh annual report of this excellent agency shows that ninety-one districts were last year worked by the colporteurs. Many copies of the Word of God were distributed, also small books and tracts.

The total value of sales was £9,581 1s. 4d., being less by £1041 17s. 2d. than the previous year, but yet showing a grand total of not less than 1,068,604 various publications. When nearly every week youths appear in our police-courts, admittedly as a consequence of reading trashy literature, this feature of the Association should commend it to the sympathy and support of all lovers of pure literature and good morals.

The report continues:—"The aim of the Society is distinctly evangelistic, and its efforts are put forth among all denominations to spread the Gospel of Jesus Christ, both by books and the living voice. 579,605 visits were made from house to house with numerous good results. The open knapsack interests the dear children, and entices many parents to spare a few coppers for a magazine or pretty text-card. The colporteur, meanwhile, seeks the opportunity to turn the attention to eternal realities, and is frequently at the bedside of the afflicted and dying. Many instances have occurred of a word spoken casually arousing attention and leading to Christ. In addition to these more personal appeals, 10,28[illegible] Gospel services have been conducted by the colporteurs. That their 'labour has not been in vain in the Lord' is evident, and numerous instances of blessing are reported."

It is to be regretted that the balance-sheet shows a serious deficit. The secretary, Rev. W. Corde[illegible] Jones, writes: "There is need for prompt help, as we depend entirely upon free-will gifts." Communications to him may be addressed, Pastors' College, Temple-street, Southwark, S.E.

GIPSY SMITH IN SYDNEY.

The Central Mission Gazette (N.S.W.) says—"The mission commenced with an address to the workers on the need of the Holy Spirit. Very forcibly and clearly was the need brought home, and not a few were convinced that greater success would attend the labours of God's servants everywhere if they had the power from on high. On Sunday evenings the hall was crowded, but when the speaker predicted that on Tuesday—the day of the general election—there would be a crowd, very many thought that he was just a little too optimistic. However, Tuesday afternoon came, and with it came the people. There could not have been less than 1000 people present at the afternoon service. The evening came, and such was the crush that the gates had to be closed to prevent overcrowding; and so it continued throughout the mission. People came at four o'clock, others at six, determined not to miss a seat. Two ladies came to the mid-day meeting, and being determined not to be outdone, they brought their tea and knitting, purposing to remain in the hall for the evening service. For the results of this brief mission we devoutly thank God. About 200 entered the inquiry-rooms. The names of these were taken, and many have since joined class. Not a few Christians have received lasting good, for which they themselves and others will be the better."

MR. GLADSTONE has consented to write a general introduction to a great work to be issued next spring by the Henry O. Shepard Company, Chicago. The book is entitled "The People's Pictorial Bible History," and among other European contributors are Archdeacon Farrar, Professor A. H. Sayce, and Professor Agar Beet. The work will embrace a new and complete treatment of Bible history in the light of recent investigations, and will be copiously illustrated from the masterpieces of the most famous artists. The general editor is the Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D.D., of Boston.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The South of Ireland District Conference will be held in Tralee on October 10 and 11.

Rev. Professor Martin, of Lincoln University, has been addressing the Association at Philadelphia.

Rev. Morgan Morgans has closed a capital mission in Marshall, Tex., in connection with the Y.M.C.A.

A site has been secured by the Butler, Pa., Association at a cost of 5200 dols., and a suitable building will be erected forthwith.

The Association at Johnstone, Pa., held its ninth annual meeting on August 14. The work is in a flourishing condition and all departments are active.

The annual meeting of the Durham Association took place on Wednesday, the president, Rev. H. E. Fox, occupying the chair. The Mayor was amongst those present, and a report of good and useful work was presented by the secretary, Mr. W. Smith.

The Cork Association has prepared a very exhaustive plan of arrangements for the winter's work, which augurs well to prove interesting and successful. The business meeting of the members and associates was held on Friday, when the officers for the ensuing year were elected.

In consequence of the necessity for reducing expenses, the committee of the Cornhill, E.C., Association has felt obliged to dispense with the services of Mr. N. R. Hughman, who has acted as secretary for the last eleven years. We trust Mr. Hughman will soon find another sphere for his earnest Christian activities.

On Friday evening, Sir George and Lady Williams entertained, at their residence in Russell-square, a number of prominent friends of the Y.M.C.A. to meet Mr. Cephas Brainerd, ex-chairman of the American Executive Committee, who, for a quarter of a century, has been at the head of the work in the United States, its remarkable progress being due to his statesmanlike administration.

A work of grace amongst young men is reported from the Belfast Association. The various meetings are crowded to the doors. Last week between twenty and thirty decisions for Jesus Christ were reported. The open-air department of the Association's operations has been meeting with remarkable success. The Association has commenced a special mission to the postal telegraph boys.

At Stratford, E., the arrangements for the winter session have now almost been completed, and have resulted in an attractive prospectus, which is now before the public. The opening reception to be given by Mr. Arthur Boake is fixed for the 4th prox., and Mr. W. R. Lane is expected to conduct a week's mission later on in the month. The committee are inviting the services of a gentleman desirous of experience, previous to entering the ministry or mission-field, as assistant secretary. Another of our members has this week entered Harley College to train for the foreign mission-field.

Mr. J. E. Budgett Meakin is about to enter upon another tour, which he expects will occupy two years. He sails for New York on October 27, and after a sojourn in the States, during which he will revisit the associations in Quebec, Montreal, and Ottawa, will push on by Christmas Day to Yokohama, Shanghai, Hong Kong, Siam, Singapore, Rangoon, and Calcutta, spending the summer in Northern India. His homeward route will be Persia or Arabia, Syria, Palestine, Egypt, Greece, Turkey, Russia, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark. He will endeavour in this long tour to further association work wherever possible.

Several special meetings, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., were held in Wolverhampton on Thursday. In the afternoon Alderman Saunders presided over a large attendance of delegates from the Midland Counties Associations, when a paper was read by Mr. Thomas Jameson, gen. sec., Liverpool. Alderman S. T. Mander presided over a later meeting, convened for the reception of Sir George Williams upon his first visit to the town. It was mentioned that the association had only been in active operation in the town for twelve months, and the number of members had already reached 250. In the evening, Dr. W. Millington presided over a public meeting, at which addresses were given by Rev. Dr. Berry and Sir Geo. Williams.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE MEMORIAL HALL.—An effort is being made to erect a National Temperance Monument in the town of Preston, which gave birth to the total abstinence movement, from which all our Christian Churches and Sunday schools, along with all philanthropic institutions, have derived much help, and many valuable workers. The appeal for funds made by the local branch of the British Women's Temperance Association, to do honour to such a noble cause, should meet with the sympathy and support of all lovers of moral progress. Contributions may be made through any branch of the B.W.T.A., or to Mrs. Bowen, Treasurer, B.W.T.A., 16, Ribblesdale-place, Preston.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Lowestoft branch are pushing on with the fund for the new building.

Kent House, 89 and 91, Great Portland-street, is being reorganised, and will be carried on chiefly as a home for students.

The Clapham Institute reports a united missionary meeting, held on the third Wednesday in each month at the hall of the Carter Home.

The work at the Norwood centre, 3, Gipsy Hill, under Miss Ellis and Miss Bamber, is reviving. There has been a large increase in the attendance at the Sunday afternoon Bible-class.

At the Cloudesley Institute, 34, Barnsbury-street, Islington, two Bible-classes held every Sunday afternoon are largely attended. Mrs. and Miss Paton are the teachers. A real spiritual work is in progress.

A cheering work is going forward at the rooms, 61, Beckenham-road, Penge. Some very poor girls of the neighbourhood are being reached in connection with the junior branch. Miss R. Moon is hon. secretary.

At the Sydenham Institute, Eastbourne House, Sydenham Hill-road, the work prospers and there is much cause for encouragement. The attendance at the Sunday afternoon Bible-class averages fifty, and two Bible-classes are held during the week. Once a month a missionary social is held. Miss Boxer is hon. secretary; Miss Choat, resident superintendent.

A strongly aggressive mission work is carried on at the Brixton Institute, 6, Tunstall-road. There is an earnest band of workers, public-houses in the neighbourhood are visited with results that fully justify the effort, and on Sunday evenings after church hours a meeting is held. Young women found taking a walk are invited in by the workers, who go out with tracts and invitations, and almost every Sunday there are evident cases of conversion. The other work of the Institute is correspondingly active. Miss Garrett is hon. secretary.

The Y.W.C.A. of Chicago has asked its friends to help it put up a new building. A seven-story building is to take the place of the present structure. It will be completely equipped with all modern conveniences, and will still preserve the characteristics of a well-ordered home. The Association now has four boarding houses in different sections of the city, and besides its "home" work it maintains an employment bureau, and performs other service in behalf of young women. "Its Travellers' Aid Department" does a very noble work by having an agent at each of the large railroad depôts to give information to women and girls who are strangers in the city, and to protect them from those who seek to ensnare them.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A branch of the Y.P.S.C.E. has been formed in connection with the church at Earl Shilton.

A formal request that the International Convention of 1898 may be held in Boston has been presented to the officers of the United Society.

The first meeting in connection with the newly-formed Y.P.S.C.E. at Belgrave-street, Brighton, was held on 4th September, when Rev. J. J. Brooker presided over an attendance of forty or fifty sympathisers with the movement.

A Philadelphia C.E. Society has bought a rolling stone chair for the use of invalids belonging to their church or living near it. The chair has been the means of giving many sick ones a pleasant visit to a park, or of enabling them to attend the church services.

The Staten Island Union of New York has been carrying on a fresh air work of its own. At one time a single society invites a number of children from New York and Brooklyn; on another occasion several societies join in hiring a steamer and taking several hundred children on an excursion.

The C.E. movement is making considerable progress in Ireland. On Tuesday week Donegall-street Church, Belfast, was filled with young Endeavourers, who met to hear an address on Christian life and work from Rev. Henry Montgomery. The chair was occupied by Rev. James Wylie. The meeting was most profitable and enthusiastic.

Leicester Endeavourers were greatly encouraged by the success of their first great rally last Thursday. The large Temperance Hall, Leicester, was filled by crowds of bright-faced Endeavourers and interested friends who met to welcome to the town the members of the National Christian Endeavour Council. The chair was filled by Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, of Melbourne Hall, who gave his reasons for supporting most earnestly the C.E. movement. Rev. H. Webb, of Bradford, Alderman Belsey, J.P., and Rev. W. Knight Chaplin spoke, while Rev. J. B. Morgan conducted a consecration meeting.

IRISH NOTES.

A series of united meetings for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in Queenstown, at which lasting impressions for good were made.

Miss Ramsey, of Cookstown, who has been labouring as a missionary in China for the last four years, is at present at home, and delivered last week an impressive address on "Mission Work in China" in the Third Presbyterian Church, Cookstown, to a large audience.

During the past three weeks, open-air evangelistic work has been sustained in Lisburn by Mr. John Anderson, of Dundee. Night after night, in different districts of the town, from 500 to 1000 persons heard the story of the Cross. Adjoining churches of various denominations were thrown open for the after-meetings, and it is believed much good has been done.

A well-attended conference of the International Bible Reading Association was held last week in Belfast, at which addresses were delivered by Mr. Charles Waters, of London, hon. sec. of the Association, and others. Several leading local ministers took part in the proceedings. There are now in the city over sixty branches, and more than 5000 members.

For ten days impressive and unique harvest festival services have been conducted at Burnside, Cogry, in a large pavilion capable of accommodating about 1200 persons. Among the preachers were Rev. James Cregan, Charles Davy, and others, and it is estimated that during the period the meetings continued at least 10,000 people heard the Word of Life.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. Dr. Williamson, of Ascog Free Church, has held his ministerial jubilee.

A unanimous call is to be addressed from the Free East Church congregation, Aberdeen, to Rev. James Davidson, North Berwick.

The Sabbath School Convention has been held at Alloa. Among the speakers were Lord Balfour of Burleigh and Alderman Belsey, of London.

Rev. James Adair, Baptist pastor, New Cumnock, Ayrshire, is seeking to relieve some of the distress in his neighbourhood, caused by the Scotch strike of coal miners. He asks for help.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, took part in the opening of the new Spurgeon Memorial Baptist Church, Leith, last week. The building will seat 500 people, and has cost about £2,500.

The Edinburgh Christian Police Association have received permission to use the City Police Court-room on the afternoon of the third Wednesday in each month, from October to June, for fellowship meetings.

The Secession congregation worshipping in the Victoria Hall, Inverness, since they left the Free Church, have arranged to purchase the hall. Rev. Allan Mackenzie, pastor, will take it over as from January 1 next.

A conference on "Consecration" was held in the Free High Mission Hall, Paisley, which was remarkably well attended; the principal speakers being Rev. Sholto Douglas (Coatbridge), Rev. M. Taylor (Methodist Church, Glasgow), and Mr. Gellatly (evangelist). Christian workers from most of the congregations in town were present, and all felt the addresses helpful at the opening of another winter's campaign.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN DUNKERQUE.

It is now six months since we began a work which had for intention to promote the cause of temperance, which is much needed in our town. For this purpose we rented the hall of the Seamen's Institute, and have reason to praise God that so far we have had a good measure of success, although not what we desired or yet hope to see. Several of the young men have become members of the Y.M.C.A. of our church. We have suffered much opposition and annoyance, and have sometimes required the aid of the police.

Now, through the removal of the Sailors' Institute to a more distant locality, and through want of funds to hire the new hall, we are unable to carry on our work there for the present. We are fitting up our own coach-house, for which we have no use, and which will hold 100 quite easily. As this will entail considerable expense, we shall be grateful to interested readers of The Christian if they will aid us to raise the necessary funds by purchasing or ordering from us articles in needlework, crewel and cross-stitch, crochet, etc., which are made at our work party. Particulars can be sent.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Chums is a wonderful collection of stories and sketches—entertaining and instructive, and fully illustrated. The hobbies, pastimes, and dreams of "our boys" are kept well to the front in this second annual volume. (8s. Cassell & Co.)

The Church Monthly. Contents wholesome and bright, and while specially attractive to members of the Church of England, not without interest for others. There is a great variety of reading matter, and the illustrations are numerous. (Office: 30 and 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.)

The Boy's Own Annual contains six serial and many short stories, as well as articles on adventure and boys' amusements and occupations. The staff of writers is large, and readers cannot but learn much from such lively and interesting pages. The Girl's Own Annual has similar characteristics—tales by good authors, and papers in great variety. As is the case with the companion "Paper," it is profusely illustrated; there are hundreds of excellent woodcuts, as well as numerous chromographs. These volumes should not be overlooked by those who are in search of presentation volumes for young people. (8s. each. Religious Tract Society.)

Evangel Tracts. Under this title a series of illustrated tracts has been commenced. The first, "Three Lost Children," by Rev. D. Smith, sets forth the Gospel clearly and faithfully. (T. F. Downie. 6d. per dozen.)

Messrs. Partridge & Co. have added to their books for the young Brightness and Beauty, by C. D. M., and Mirth and Joy, by J. D. (1s. each). The little folks will be delighted with these pages of large type and grand pictures. Only Milly, by M. E. Ropes; and Shad's Christmas Gift, by Jennie Chappell (6d.); Geddie Garland, by Jennie Chappell; Master Leonie, by E. M. Waterworth, and Foolish Chussy, by Meta (9d. each). A prettily bound series of cheap story-books for the young people, admirably adapted for gifts and Sunday-school rewards.

The Christian Pictorial. (Alexander & Shepheard. 4s. 6d.) The half-yearly volume of an illustrated weekly, which has already won many friends, and secured a footing as a bright and readable chronicle of religious movements.

Life of a Christian Soldier in a Barrack Room. By J. G. Gregson. (6d. Marshall.) Only a "private," but, from the moment God saved him, a true follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, whose fearless testimony appears to have been much used of God among his comrades.

Elijah, the Man of God. A series of sermons by Mark Guy Pearse. (1s. C. H. Kelly.) Thoughtful exposition and forceful application of one of the most striking Old Testament stories. "The God that answereth by fire" is the subject of two of the discourses, which will, we trust, have many readers.

Memoir of Robert Channon, late Scripture Reader, Tiverton, Devon. By E. Elphick. This is a readable little biography, with portraits, of a faithful Christian worker. There are also copies of letters and extracts from diaries, as well as a funeral sermon preached by Rev. Wm. Carpenter, M.A. vicar of Guyhirn with Ring's End, Cambridgeshire. (Mr. Masland, Fore-street, Tiverton.)

A Soldier's Daughter. (6d. J. Nisbet & Co.) A brief, but stirring, memorial of Miss Daniell, whose devoted and fruitful work among soldiers endeared her to thousands. The daughter of a soldier, her life was spent among and for soldiers. This simple story of her consecrated life ought to be widely circulated. It is, indeed, well fitted both to bring men to decision for Christ, and to stir young hearts to give themselves to his service.

Ponds and Rock-Pools, by Henry Scherren. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) We read these chapters with great interest as they appeared in The Leisure Hour, and now welcome them in book form. All who know anything of the delight of studying God's marvellous works in the tiny things of creation will understand the interest of such a book as this, simply and clearly written, and well calculated to inspire inquiring youths with new ideas of the wonders of God in nature.

The Pilgrim's Progress as John Bunyan wrote it. This curious little volume is a facsimile reprint of the rare first edition published in 1678. It presents the reader with the text of the allegory in the quaint language in which it was written. After its first issue Bunyan made many alterations, and since then editors and reprinters have taken further liberties with the text. Dr. John Brown, of Bedford, supplies an instructive introduction to this reproduction. (2s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

Step by Step Through the Bible. Part III. of this work, by Edith Ralph, is in reality a life of Christ for children. (2s. 6d. Nisbet.) The aim has been to give the story correctly as to details, and with adequate local colouring; and the result is a volume as good as its excellent predecessors. The author has had the assistance of Dr. Cunningham Geikie throughout. There are several engravings, and the work should prove of great service in Christian families.

Counsels of Faith and Practice, a volume of sermons preached on various occasions, by Canon Newbolt, has been issued in a new and enlarged edition. (5s. Longmans.) The discourses are thirty-one in number—three of them based on texts from the books called Apocrypha! In other ways the author's High Church proclivities show themselves; but, nevertheless, the sermons as a whole are uncommonly instructive and stimulating. The first three, dealing with the temptation of our Lord, were preached in Worcester Cathedral in 1881, the last three in St. Paul's Cathedral during recent years.

The Bible Hymnal, compiled by Rev. W. Lancelot Holland, M.A., Edinburgh, is a book of well-defined purpose and varied attractions. Care has been exercised to exclude false teaching or hurtful sentiment, and, says Mr. Holland, "I have not knowingly admitted any hymn that was composed by one who held doctrines that were repugnant to Holy Scripture and contrary to the Reformed faith founded upon Scripture." Prefixed to this out-and-out Protestant and Evangelical selection, is a very readable outline of the lives of the principal hymn-writers, with remarks on their works. Dedicated to "all that call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ in every place," this hymnal, which is published in several sizes, is likely to prove helpful to many in the worship of the home and the sanctuary. Mr. Gladstone on the Atonement is the title of a booklet, by Rev. Wm. Crosbie, M.A., giving a sermon preached in Park Hill Congregational Church, Nottingham. Based on John xvii. 19, the discourse was suggested by Mr. Gladstone's recent magazine article. (Nottingham: Derry & Sons.)

Harvest Anthems. Messrs. Patey & Willis send us a selection of various numbers of The Lute (3d.) suitable for Harvest Festivals. The music is by M. Watson, F. C. Maker, H. E. Button, Sir J. Barnby, and other well-known composers, and they are well worthy of attention. The same firm send six Benediction Hymns, by H. E. Button.

OPENINGS AROUND BOULOGNE.

Boulogne has been full of English visitors this summer, who have much enjoyed its fine air, beautiful sea, and the lovely walks in which the neighbourhood abounds. There are large villages within a few miles of Boulogne, in which there is a great opening for evangelistic work, as the people are, with few exceptions, Roman Catholics. These people, chiefly peasantry, are busy in the fields all the summer and autumn from early dawn till dark, but during the winter months there is nothing to take them out, and in the evenings several families will assemble in one room to economise firing.

These poor people would gladly attend a simple Gospel service in a comfortable room, and listen to the old story, quite new, alas! to many of them. To accomplish this, a wooden movable room is required, capable of holding about a hundred people. Such a room is easily taken down, and could be moved from village to village, remaining in each a month or two as occasion might require. The cost of such a room would be about £18. M. Mabboux, the agent of the McAll Mission at Boulogne, a very earnest worker, would gladly go twice a week to conduct such services if the room can be provided before the winter. M. Mabboux, 53, Rue Thiers, Boulogne, would be happy to give any further information if required.

EVEN A LITTLE CHILD who is wilful, capricious, and stormy in mood, can overshadow a family, and lessen the sum of the daily light of every member of it.

PRAYER is the divinely-ordered means of linking the teacher's work to God's omnipotence, and the teachers who spend a special time each day in prayer for their scholars will obtain greater blessings than those who give that time to other preparation alone.

MR. A. R. BURDETTE, of Georgia, says: "Georgia is practically a prohibition State. Outside of the large cities, the law forbids the retailing of intoxicating liquors within three miles of a church or school-house. Now there are very few communities in the State that are not within that distance of a school or place of worship, and the result is that the saloon is almost a defunct institution in Georgia. Liquor can still be had in the small towns and villages, but only by the quart, and a heavy penalty attaches to drinking it on the premises where it is purchased. Though far from being a fanatic on the subject, I am satisfied that any community is better off where the retailing of alcoholic drinks is interdicted."

OBITUARY.

REV. W. J. MAXWELL, WIMBLEDON.

Many will regret to hear that Rev. W. J. Maxwell, M.A., minister of the Wimbledon Presbyterian Church, died very suddenly on Sunday at Rothsay, N.B., where he had been spending a holiday with his wife and children. The cause of death was cerebral hæmorrhage. The deceased, who was a comparatively young man, was a distinguished classical scholar, and an earnest preacher of the Gospel, whose ministry seemed full of promise.

REV. DR. HIND, HONINGTON.

The death is announced of Rev. William Marsden Hind, LL.D., rector of Honington, near Bury St. Edmunds. While attending a meeting of the Blackbourn Clerical Society at Langham, he became unconscious and expired. The Record says of him:—"The deceased was a staunch Evangelical. Ordained in 1839, he had completed the fifty-fifth year of his ministry, nineteen years of which were spent in the parish of Honington. He was a very warm supporter of the C.M.S., C.P.A.S., London Jews Society, Irish Church Missions, and other kindred societies."

MR. JAMES ROSE, ABERDEEN.

We regret to announce the death, which occurred at his residence, Rubislaw-terrace, Aberdeen, last week, after a short illness, of Mr. James Rose, surviving partner of the long-established and well-known shipowning firm of Donaldson, Rose and Co. In private life Mr. Rose was exceedingly genial and kindly. To those who had the privilege of his personal friendship his death will excite the deepest feelings of loss, while the community in general will regret the decease of Mr. Rose, the sole survivor of a firm long honourably connected with the city, and which had done not a little for its commercial progress and prosperity. Mr. Rose, who was seventy-four years of age, is survived by a family of five. A daughter is married to Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, formerly of the Free East Church (in which the deceased was an elder), and now minister of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Notting Hill.

REV. JAMES SMITH, CRAMOND.

The death took place on Saturday of Rev. James Smith, senior minister of the Free Church at Cramond, near Edinburgh, at his residence, at 3, Carlton-terrace, Glasgow. Mr. Smith had been in failing health for about eighteen months, and died in his seventy-fourth year, leaving a widow, two sons, and two daughters. He was born in Glasgow, where he was also educated for the ministry. On finishing his divinity training he acted as assistant to Dr. Brown, of St. John's, Glasgow, and subsequently entered on the work of a full pastoral charge at the Free Church of Cramond. He remained wedded to his Cramond flock for thirty-five years, and on reaching the allotted span, a colleague was appointed, and he retired from active ministerial work. He never sought to take a prominent part in Presbyterial or other life outside his own sphere of labour. He belonged to the Evangelical school of preachers, and was a devoted and greatly respected pastor.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

This agency, otherwise called the Comité Auxiliaire d'Evangélisation de Paris, has for its object the providing of lay missionaries to aid Evangelical pastors, churches, and societies, especially by way of house-to-house visitation. The entry of earnest evangelists into their homes, "book in hand," is a new thing to the poor of Paris. As a rule these visitors are welcome, as the people like to hear readings from the real Bible.

Ten missionaries now pursue their labours, bringing many thousands of the French people under the power of the Gospel. One is entirely employed among the poor English, who are spiritually destitute in a strange city; he is under the superintendence of Rev. H. E. Noyes, D.D., English chaplain, Rue d'Agueseau; another devotes his life to the interest of the hundreds of English trainers and jockeys at Chantilly. Towards the support of their eight evangelists, the French Christians, who are few in number, contribute about half the cost.

So effective is the work that French pasteurs, whose means are very limited, are pressing for more helpers. The fourteenth annual report gives very interesting details of the work. The hon. sec., Mr. J. M. Weylland, 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W., will gladly send printed information, and acknowledge communications.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Swindon.—Gipsy C. Smith and his wife have held a ten days' mission at the Central Hall. The meetings have been full. Best of all, a number of backsliders have been restored, and others won for Christ.

Chesham, Bucks.—Sister Catherine has been visiting here for a short time, and during her stay has held meetings in various places for the deepening of spiritual life. Many of the young people have been aroused to greater earnestness, and a weekly Bible reading has been started in Higham-road.

Leicester.—Rev. R. Balgarnie's mission at Gallowtree Gate Chapel closed on September 21. On the following Sunday reference was made by the pastor of the church to the spiritual harvest of the previous week, which had cheered the hearts of many. Mr. Balgarnie proceeds to Woodbridge, Suffolk, on the 29th inst., where a mission begins.

"Welcome" Mission, Portsmouth.—During the past six weeks a tent has been pitched in the Fratton-road, where a very blessed work of grace has been carried on. Meetings have been held daily, and the saving power of Jesus Christ has been made manifest at almost every service. At the closing meeting many testified to having found the Saviour.

Ireland.—Evangelistic meetings have been held for the past three weeks in the Methodist Mission tent in Portadown by Rev. Henry Ball and Mr. Michael O'Toole, of Dublin. The tent was crowded night after night, sometimes as many as 1400 persons being present. Similar services have been held in Cloughmills by Mr. B. Jackson, one of the General Assembly's evangelists.

Ilkley.—Mr. McCracken, deputation and evangelist, of Harley House, has conducted a two weeks' mission here. The missioner was accompanied by some of the Harley House missionary students. The work was under the united auspices of the Congregational Y.P.S.C.E., and the local Y.W.C.A. Through the simple preaching of the Gospel, many, by God's grace, were led to decision for Christ.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a twenty-two days' mission at Walbottle, near Newcastle-on-Tyne, among the Northumberland miners. The interest has been fully sustained and of a widespread character, many attending from the colliery villages of Lemington, Newburn, Ryton, and Throckley. Much good has been accomplished. Mr. Bradlaugh commences a fifteen days' mission at Birmingham on Sunday.

Rev. H. Montgomery had a most hopeful start on Sunday night in a week's mission at the Dundee Y.M.C.A. There was a fine crowd of men and women, and several, it is believed, were led to decision. It is customary when sinners are brought to the Saviour in the Y.M.C.A., Dundee, for the workers to gather in a little side room of the building and sing, "Ring the bells of heaven," and with its stirring strains the evening came to a close.

Northampton.—A ten days' mission has been conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne in Mount Pleasant Church, Northampton. The meetings were well attended, and the results of the work most encouraging. Mr. Thorne's daily Bible readings were a special feature of the mission, and brought together each afternoon Christians of all denominations. Many came to the evening meetings who were not in the habit of attending any place of worship.

Cape Colony.—Mr. Alexander Welsh has been conducting evangelistic meetings at different villages around Emgwali and Döhne, Cape Colony, for the past six weeks. The attendance has been large, and the interest shown very cheering. The members of the churches have been stirred up to take a more lively interest in Divine things. Several persons have professed to give themselves to the Lord, and others who had fallen into sin have expressed a desire to be readmitted to the candidates' class.

Madagascar.—A series of revival services were held during the month of August at the Ambohibèloma Station of the London Missionary Society. Seventeen services were held, at which the missionary, Rev. E. H. Stribling, of the London Missionary Society, Messrs. H. E. Clark and J. F. Radley, of the Friends' Mission, assisted by a native pastor and three evangelists, took part. The attendances were very encouraging, and increased daily. Twenty of the Malagasy sent letters to the missionary professing their faith in Christ. Several of them are now under instruction with a view to baptism.

Mr. James McComb held, during the military training camp at Evanston, Va., U.S.A., a Gospel mission for the soldiers. A local paper says: "Not the least interesting feature of the regulars' sojourn at Evanston has been the revival conducted by James McComb, the evangelist, who held a series of meetings in Union Hall, extending an invitation to the soldiers to attend. The hall was not sufficient to accommodate the crowds, and the meetings had to be held in a large church. The soldiers were quick to respond to the invitation, and numbers of them asked for prayer at each meeting. About forty conversions resulted. Soon after the meetings began the curses and ribaldry of camp life appeared to give place to the singing of Mr. Sankey's hymns."

Mr. Henry Varley conducted last week six days' special services in Bethesda Chapel, Bristol. His addresses were listened to by large audiences, and the power of the Spirit of God was realised in the meetings, and manifested by the number who professed to receive blessing. It is believed much lasting good will result from the labours of this devoted servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. Varley also conducted three Bible readings, which were times of refreshing to many Christians. Mr. Varley left Bristol followed by earnest prayer for abundant blessing in connection with the Mission to Men he is holding this week at New Cross. On Sunday Mr. Varley hopes to begin a mission in the City Hall, Glasgow. He will be glad of prayer on his behalf.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Earnest preparation was made all last week for the mission to young men which Mr. Lane is holding this week at Aldersgate-street. Prayer-meetings were held night by night. Sir George Williams, Mr. Cephas Brainerd, of New York, Mr. John White, and other workers were present. The members and the staff at Exeter Hall and Aldersgate-street are working unitedly. The result of this hearty co-operation and prayer is already being manifested by the well-attended meetings and the deep spirit of earnestness which characterises them. Many young men on Sunday and Monday definitely resolved to serve the Lord. We trust that this mission will prove a good start to the winter's Gospel work in both centres of the now united association.

Middlesbrough Circus.—A series of meetings in connection with the Friends was held here from September 9 to 21, conducted by Theodore Nicholson, of Carlisle, Herbert Nicholson, of Sunderland, and Howard Nicholson, of London. On Saturday, September 8, a goodly company of workers met Theodore and Howard Nicholson at a prayer meeting in the Friends' meeting-house, when the needs of the district and the prospective meetings were earnestly put before the Lord. Other preliminary gatherings had been held so as to awaken interest. The attendance in the circus has been most satisfactory, the average number present being between five and seven hundred. The hearty manner in which members of other Christian bodies entered into the work, and the way in which night after night they brought with them those whom they had on their hearts, proved that the Mission had been well timed and had met a felt need. It is not possible to speak of individual or special addresses; night after night the Gospel message was forcibly and faithfully put before the assembled people. Conviction has been carried into many hearts, very many have expressed a desire "for a closer walk with God," and professed acceptance of Christ. Friends feel satisfied that not only their own schools and meetings, but the Christian life of Middlesbrough has been deeply stirred, and seed sown, the fruit whereof shall be gathered in eternity.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes desires prayer in connection with following mission engagements:—Royston, Cambs., Sept. 23—Oct. 1; Birmingham (Graham-street), Oct. 7 Bournemouth (Richmond Hill), Oct. 14; Winton (near Bournemouth), Oct. 15—24; Southampton, Oct. 25, 26; King's Heath, Birmingham, Oct. 28—31; Alton, Hants, Nov. 4—13; Cambridge (United Mission), Nov. 19—27.

Rev. J. Manton Smith's forthcoming evangelistic engagements are as follows:—Shipley, Oct. 1—3; Hendon, Oct. 6—14; Norwich, Oct. 20—28; Birmingham, Nov. 3—8; Llandudno, Nov. 10—18; Taunton, Nov. 24—Dec. 2; Isle of Wight; Dec. 8—16. 1895—Nottingham, Jan. 5—20; Leeds, Jan. 21—24; Bromley, Jan. 27; Bournemouth, Feb. 2—10; Upton Chapel, South Lambeth, Feb. 16—24; Brighton, March 2—10; Folkestone, March 16—24; Southampton, March 30—April 7; Great Grimsby, April 13—21; Southport, May 4—12; Great Malvern, May 18—26.

CAUTIONS.

MISS M. M. CRAWFORD, of Bethany, Jerusalem, asks us to state that Miss Cox (alias Carleton-Arsdale) is unauthorised to receive money for Miss Crawford's work in Bethany, and requests that donors will kindly remit through Messrs. Morgan and Scott, publishers of THE CHRISTIAN.

We are asked, from another source, to warn our readers against all strangers who go about collecting money for abroad, without having a trustworthy committee to see that it is properly used. A Polish Jew is mentioned as collecting professedly for the Stundists.

LIEUT. BLACKMORE.—A lady desires that it should be known that the work of the Friendless and Fallen Institutions grew out of "The London by Moonlight Mission," founded by Lieutenant Blackmore in 1859. A Rescue Home, also opened by him, is still carried on by Mrs. Rees Williams at 1, Maygrove-road, Broudesbury, N.W.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is reported as reaping benefit from his change to the Swiss valleys. He is not, however, expected to resume work till after Christmas.

Rev. Handley C. G. Moule (says The Record) feels himself obliged to decline all public work while staying in Northumberland. The need of complete rest he feels to be imperative.

Pastor Karl Mascher, of Dresden, whose work was described in our columns last week, is about to be married to Rachel, daughter of Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, of West Norwood.

Senor Cabrera was, on Sunday last, consecrated first Protestant Bishop of Madrid. The ceremony was performed by the Archbishop of Dublin, assisted by the Bishops of Clogher and Down.

Mr. D. E. Hoste and Miss Gertrude Broomhall, both of the China Inland Mission, were married at Tien-tsin on Sept. 6. Their numerous friends in this country will join in wishing them happy fellowship in their life work.

The announcement is made that Commissioner Lucy Booth, the youngest daughter of General Booth, and chief officer of the Salvation Army in Asia, is to be married in London early next month to Colonel Hellberg, a Swede, now assistant secretary for foreign affairs at the headquarters in London.

Mr. Hermann Harris, director of the Central Soudan Mission, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Cooksey, have been addressing meetings at the Saltley Baptist Chapel (Pastor G. H. Soper). Mr. J. Buttriss, a member of the Saltley Church, has joined the mission, and is about to leave for Tripoli.

Rev. P. T. Forsyth, M.A., formerly of Manchester, has entered on the charge of Emmanuel Church, Cambridge. The event excited considerable interest not only among the Free Churches of that town, but among all denominations. Though Term time has not begun, and therefore undergraduates were conspicuous by their absence, yet a large congregation gathered to listen to the first sermon of the new pastor, whose discourse was on the essential conditions of spiritual leadership, the sine quâ non of the true pastorate.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan.—The latest accounts of Mr. Fegan's health show that his stay in Switzerland has not so far resulted in the improvement expected. There is a recurrence at intervals of distracting head-pains, and much depression from sleeplessness. The slightest mental effort entails suffering. He writes, however, of "songs in the night," and of much comfort in hearing that the work at home is being sustained in full vigour during his long absence. Continued rest and freedom from all care seem absolutely necessary for recovery from a very serious breakdown of the nervous system after many years of arduous labour.

Miss Seton Adamson, daughter of the vicar of Old Ford, E., leaves England on October 12, for work under the C.M.S. at Shechem. At this interesting place there are schools and an hospital, the work being known as the Denis Crofton Mission. Miss Adamson has been trained for medical work at the Zenana Medical College; and has laboured diligently in her father's parish, and elsewhere in the metropolis. In a booklet entitled "Shechem or Nablûs," Mr. Adamson says that in God's providence he was forbidden to labour in distant lands, although in the days of spiritual youth he gave himself to the Lord for foreign service. The parents dedicated the daughter to the Lord, and at length He has claimed the sacrifice.

Mr. Saml. Golding, well known to a large circle as a devoted preacher of the Gospel, has left his widow and children totally unprovided for, while his widow is in very delicate health. Constant absorption in Christian work diverted his energies from the business in which he was engaged, and prevented him leaving any provision for his family. A few friends are making an effort on behalf of his helpless widow, in the hope the response will be such as to enable them to place her in a position so as to prevent the family feeling the loss of money, which the father's devotion to the Gospel compelled him to lose. It is proposed to secure an annuity for Mrs. Golding. The secretary is Mr. E. H. Kerwin, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E.

---

A VERY SUCCESSFUL GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION, arranged by Mrs. Down, of the W.T.A.U., was held at Dartmouth Park Hill, N., from September 17 to 24. The meetings were addressed by Mrs. Down, Miss Coles, and others. Pledges were taken, and many donned anew the blue ribbon. During the summer months members of the W.T.A.U. Executive Committee have taken an active part in open-air Gospel Temperance meetings, arranged by the North London Temperance Council on Parliament Hill, Hampstead Heath, etc.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Chichester, who is in his ninety-second year, is taking his annual holiday at Cadenabbia, in North Italy.

Rev. H. Russell Wakefield has taken farewell of his people at Sandgate, on his appointment as Vicar of St. Mary's, Bryanstone-square.

The Bishop of Caledonia and Rev. J. Macartney, of the West Indies, were among the speakers at the C.M.S. Anniversary at Exeter Hall last week.

Canon E. B. Trotter, late of Alnwick, now of Trinidad, is making a tour in Northumberland, seeking to arouse interest among his old friends in the work in the West Indies.

Churchmen and Nonconformists at Tunbridge Wells have decided to unite in erecting a clock tower in the centre of the town to the memory of the late vicar, Canon Hoare.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone, Dr. Ingham, preaching at Leeds on Sunday, said he believed he should have been a better bishop if he had had a manual trade in his hands.

The C.P.A.S. is arranging for a great meeting in support of the Forward Movement at Exeter Hall, Thursday evening, October 18. The annual meeting of the Ladies' Union will be held on the afternoon of the same day.

The C.M.S. will this year have two October dismissals at Exeter Hall. The parties for India, Persia, and Mauritius will be taken leave of on Tuesday, October 2; the parties for Africa, Palestine, Ceylon, China, and Japan on the following day.

Arrangements have been made for a course of special monthly Sunday evening sermons in the Albert Memorial Church, Queen's-road, Manchester, in defence of Protestant truth, by Revs. F. J. Horsefield, C. H. Wainwright, C. H. Waller, Archdeacon Sinclair, the Bishop of Sodor and Man, Handley C. G. Moule, and T. J. Madden.

The South-Eastern College met on Thursday. The friends of the School have reason to be satisfied with its growth, and the proposed testimonial to Canon Hoare in a new wing will serve the twofold purpose of commemorating a good man and advancing a good work. Last term a flourishing Missionary Association sprang up among the boys themselves, and a very successful bazaar was held by them in the school-room.

The first monthly prayer-meeting of the Church Association will be held on Monday afternoon next at the offices, 14, Buckingham-street, at 3 p.m., when it is hoped that the friends will assemble to ask God's blessing upon the work during the coming winter. The address will be given by Mr. F. W. Maynard, and for the succeeding months Rev. Dr. Hamilton, of Ram's Chapel, has consented to give a series of addresses.

The addresses delivered by Rev. J. Stephen Barrass at the open-air services in St. Botolph Churchyard, Aldersgate, have drawn large crowds of people daily to the pretty garden of Aldersgate. Mr. Barrass, who will continue daily during this week, has taken as his topic for the week the words of Peter, "To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life"; and great interest is being shown in the course.

Rev. J. W. Willink, Vicar of St. Helen's, Lancashire, seems to have the power of getting the "pennies" out of the working men of his parish, The parish church has been reopened after being closed for eight weeks for cleaning, painting, and repairs. The working-men have largely contributed to the expense incurred, and especially the 600 to 700 men connected with the Bible-class, which itself is the outcome of a mission held some years ago by Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new church is being built at Grange-over-Sands.

Foundation-stones of new Sunday-school buildings have been laid at Halstead.

The autumnal assembly of the Congregational Union commences at Liverpool on Monday, October 8.

The Macfadyen Memorial Church, Chorlton-cum-Hardy, will be opened on Oct. 25 by Rev. Alfred Rowland.

The fifth anniversary of Rev. H. Elwyn Thomas's pastorate has been celebrated at Tolmers-square Church.

Rev. G. J. Adeney, father of Professor Adeney, has commenced the fortieth year of his pastorate at Reigate.

Rev. Robert Mackay has been appointed secretary of the Christian Instruction Society, and will begin his duties on October 11.

Mr. T. W. Bach has been ordained at Worcester for missionary work in Travancore, South India, in connection with the London Missionary Society.

Several Brighton congregations united last week in a meeting bidding farewell to Rev. J. Stonehouse on the eve of his departure for mission service in China.

Mr. A. Willifer Young, son of the pastor, has been ordained at Soham Chapel for missionary work in Calcutta, under the London Missionary Society. He sails for Calcutta on October 17 by the City of Venice from Liverpool.

The October number of the Evangelical Magazine contains a facsimile of the report of the formation, a century ago, of the London Missionary Society, and gives most interesting glimpses of Evangelical Church life at that period.

At a meeting of Zion Chapel, Sheffield, to commemorate the 37th anniversary of the settlement of the senior pastor, Rev. John Calvert, a letter was read from him stating that he had improved and was improving in health, but that he was not yet able to resume preaching.

Rev. T. Bryson, at the annual meeting of the Birmingham auxiliary of the L.M.S., stated that the whole of the boys' schools in the villages of his district in North China would have to be closed, as the directors in London were unable to help them in response to the appeal for help. The medical mission staff was altogether undermanned. Dr. Smith was now doing the work single-handed in the same station where Dr. Kenneth Mackenzie and Dr. Roberts had succumbed.

Dr. J. Monro Gibson inaugurated the winter session of Hackney Congregational College, South Hampstead, last week. Thirty-seven students will be in residence, including twelve who have entered this term. Dr. Cave, the principal, presided at the inaugural meeting held in the library, there being a very good attendance. He stated that the number of students has never been larger, and the number of applications has never been so large. The session they were entering on was the 92nd in the history of the college, the eighth in their present building, and the fifteenth since his conection with the college.

Calls.—Rev. W. I. Thomas to Quaker's-yard, Glam.; Rev. A. T. Jenkins, to Pen Clawdd, Swansea; Rev. John Miller, late of Melbourne, to Arbroath; Rev. W. Russell, to Hawick; Rev. Wm. McIntosh, of Yarmouth, N.S., to Ottawa.

Resignations.—Rev. F. A. Warmington, of Lyme Regis; Rev. R. Jackson, of Petworth, Sussex; Rev. A. Turner, of Ashford, Kent (after a pastorate of forty years).

BAPTIST.

New Sunday-schools are being erected for the South London Tabernacle.

Rev. J. Manton Smith has conducted an evangelistic mission at St. Albans Tabernacle.

Rev. Hugh Singleton has been recognised as pastor of Regent-street Church, Smethwick.

Rev. Walter Hackney, of Graham-street, Birmingham, is confined to his bed by serious illness.

Rev. J. E. Archer, late of Marylebone, has entered upon the pastorate at Shore, near Todmorden.

Rev. W. H. Doggett, late of Bloemfontein, South Africa, has been recognised as pastor at Abingdon.

Rev. C. D. Gooding, of Burnham, has recovered from the effects of a brake accident, by which his foot was severely injured.

It has been decided to erect a new church at Kendal, in commemoration of the jubilee at Zion Church, and to use the present building for a Sunday-school.

The late Mr. Spurgeon's publishers state that, so far from a falling off, there is an actual increase in the demand for his sermons. This is the fortieth year of publication.

Rev. Evan Morgan has left for China, joining at Naples the ss. Bayern, North German Lloyd line. He formerly laboured in the province of Shansi, but is now proceeding to Shensi to join Messrs. Shorrock and Moir Duncan in the pioneer work they began nearly three years ago, and which has proved so prosperous.

Rev. John Spence, of Chelsea Chapel, S.W., recently baptized four adults, among them being a man seventy-six years of age, who, before going into the water, gave an earnest address to the congregation. During the past six months fifty-two persons have been added to the church, of whom thirty-three were baptized.

The tidings from the Cameroon churches, formerly connected with the Baptist Missionary Society, continue to be very favourable. A communication just received tells of forty-five further baptisms. The membership now approaches 1200. The native Christians are manifesting a spirit of aggressive evangelisation.

At the Woolwich and Plumstead Tabernacle special meetings have been held to inaugurate the collecting scheme. In the afternoon Rev. F. B. Meyer preached at Parson's Hill Chapel to a good congregation, and in the evening a tea and public meeting was held in the Drill Hall. Mr. S. Barrow presided. Over £800 was given or promised during the meetings. The new building, when erected, will seat 2000, with schools to accommodate 1200, and will cost £11,000. The membership of the church is now 1200.

Calls.—Rev. J. W. Varley, of Latchford, to St. Anne's-on-the-Sea; Rev. J. S. Poulton, of Coate, to Child's Hill.

METHODIST.

A new chapel has been opened in Victoria-street, Desborough; also in the Roundhay-road, Leeds.

New chapels are being built at Cheetham Hill (Manchester), Wolstanton, Widnes, Rawcliffe Bridge, Bossington.

The Wilts Village Mission has been inaugurated by a meeting in Calne Chapel, at which the surrounding district was described as very dark indeed.

The Ohio Wesleyan University has received a donation of £10,000 from Dr. C. E. Slocum, a physician. It is expected that steps will be taken forthwith for the erection of the library.

At last week's meeting of the first London District Synod, Rev. Dr. Jenkins, whilst deploring the war between China and Japan, felt sure that it would lead to a great opening for the preaching of the Gospel and the extension of the kingdom of Christ.

Rev. W. G. Taylor, who has come over here from Australia to raise funds for a Methodist Mission in Sydney, has been in England or more than a year. He has held 500 services, but, instead of obtaining the £10,000 he sought, he carries back only £2000. He intends, however, to take America on his way, and may be more successful there.

The Evangelistic Union associated with the New Connexion have held their annual meetings at Burslem. Reports were rendered of good work, and the desirability was discussed of organising a united Methodist Convention on evangelistic lines, to include all the Methodist churches, it being urged that reunion would come quicker along this route than by way of Grindelwald.

The Wesleyan missionary secretaries call attention to the conference appointment of a day of intercession on behalf of foreign missions, to be observed throughout all the churches at home and abroad on the first Friday in October. They refer to the prospect of spiritual blessing afforded by such a union of prayer, and express the hope that ministers will do all in their power to make it general.

A Deaconess Home has been opened in connection with the Gravel-lane Wesleyan Church, Manchester. The house, which adjoins the chapel, has eight bedrooms and two sitting-rooms, and it is immediately to be occupied by three "Wesley deaconesses." These deaconesses have done splendid work in different parts of England, and in a district like that surrounding Gravel-lane they will certainly have a great sphere for their efforts. The Home will not only accommodate the three sisters, but also, it is hoped, Christian women of leisure and refinement from the suburbs who may be induced to give a portion of their time to work in the slums, and to occupy rooms in the house for a few days each week whilst so engaged. In this way it is desired to link the suburbs and the slums.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The foundation-stone of the proposed Finchley Church will be laid on Saturday afternoon.

At the next meeting of the London Presbytery, North, a conference will be held on evangelisation. Rev. W. Ross, of Glasgow, is expected to speak.

Principal Dykes will preach in Regent-square Church on the afternoon of Thursday, Nov. 22, on the occasion of the celebration of the College Jubilee.

After a discussion on the work of the Instruction of Youth Committee, the London Presbytery, North, agreed to enjoin its ministers to direct the special attention of office-bearers and people to the subject, with a view to securing increased sympathy and help.

The repairs, decorations, and refurnishing of the Marylebone Church having been completed, it will be re-opened for public worship on Sept. 30. Dr. Pentecost, who has been supplying the pulpit of Dr. John Hall, in New York, during the last four weeks, sailed on the Havel on Sept. 18, and is expected to be in his own pulpit for the re-opening services.

At the recent Conference of the Calvinistic Churches of Wales, held in Chester, Rev. D. C. Edwards read a paper on "Conversion as One of the Aims of Preaching." He said they were invited by certain superficial critics to discard the old-fashioned idea of converting men, and to discuss social questions. If they converted men's souls they would soon convert their circumstances for themselves. Give a man a new heart, and he would speedily get a new coat. In the discussion which followed, Professor Adam Smith said he had seen a great number of revival movements in Scotland, and was struck with the fact that the classes from whom these revivalists drew most were the families of the ordinary churchgoers, rather than the outcast classes.

Calls.—Rev. D. Munro, to Ferintosh; Rev. J. McK. Campbell, to Lochgoilhead; Rev. J. H. Dicker to Ceres; Rev. W. Caldwell, of Hollymount, to Corbay; Rev. W. T. Jones, to Whitchurch, near Cardiff.

Resignations.—Rev. P. Wilson, of Greenlaw; Rev. A. Stuart, of Wallington; Rev. W. J. Rae, of Kirkbean, Dumfries.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The American Friend maintains its interest, and is at once Evangelical and Liberal. Its issue of the 13th inst. gives a good account of Iowa yearly meeting, urges the need of a History of Friends, and is strong on peace and international arbitration.

Leonard Wigham and wife, of Chung-King, are just now paying a visit to the Friends' Mission, at Tokio, Japan. Thus China and Japan, England and America are uniting in the one Saviour of all. Such an interchange of missionary visiting must do good all round.

The great anti-slavery question is forcing itself again to the front. At the Essex and Suffolk quarterly meeting, on the 13th inst., Alderman White, J.P., gave an earnest address thereon. The moral force of England is needed to stay the plague of African slavery.

A Christian Convention has just been held in the meeting-house, Brumana, Syria. Great success attended, and love prevailed. "It was beautiful that throughout the week not a single discordant word was spoken," though Episcopal and non-Episcopal were in closest fellowship and service.

Joseph Storrs Fry (of Bristol) and George Grubb (of Cork) have both been attending Ulster quarterly meeting, held at Lurgan, the town where the first Friends' meeting in Ireland was established. The former intends to visit the families of Friends in Belfast. Such "family visits" have done much good in the past, and their revival would be welcome.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Salvation Army has now property in South Africa to the value of £25,000.

Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth have been holding great meetings in Philadelphia.

Last year 240 men are reported to have passed through the Salvation Army Prison Gate Home at Ludwyche, Brisbane, of whom 185 were admitted direct from gaol.

Special services were held all day in the City Hall, Glasgow, on the 17th inst., in connection with the introduction of new leaders for the Salvation Army in Scotland.

There are now 195 officers in the South African division (130 of whom are colonial raised), fifty-eight independent stations, five mission stations, and four social institutions.

General Booth arrived in Halifax, Nova Scotia, on Saturday. At an immense open-air meeting organised in honour of his visit, the Hon. W. S. Fielding, the Premier, formally welcomed the General on behalf of the province, describing him as one of the master-minds of the world, and entitled to the highest esteem of mankind.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth, on the occasion of the Rescue Harvest Festival, signified her intention of doing something for the girls brought up in police-courts, and suggests that, if instead of being sent to gaol they were handed over into safe Christian keeping, the disheartening effects of prison life—ending in many cases with the streets—would be avoided, and the girl, instead of becoming hardened, would, under good influence and supervision, be willing to earn an honest livelihood.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Stonehaven, on 17th inst., Rev. Thomas Scott, who has been a minister since 1857.—At Stanrose House, Egerton, on Sept. 17, Mrs. Morgan Jones, wife of the Congregational minister of the town.—At Birkenhead, Mr. James Taylor, aged seventy-seven, a well-known engineer, and for sixty years a Sunday-school worker.—At Balsall Heath, Birmingham, Mrs. Aikenhead, wife of the Baptist pastor.—At Brighton, Mr. J. E. F. Clapp, who for fifty years had been associated with the work at Abney Park (Congregational) Church.—At Brentwood, Mr. S. J. Nash, aged eighty-five, a preacher of the Gospel for many years.—At Moyness, Rev. John Whyte, aged seventy-one, for forty years minister in the town.—At Hammersmith, Rev. E. Rawling, aged seventy-six, for many years a faithful Primitive Methodist minister.—At Carlton Mansion, Clapham-rise, on 15th inst., Mr. W. H. Hale, aged sixty-one, well known as an elder and worker at the Metropolitan Tabernacle.—At Chailey, Rev. F. R. Hepburn, aged sixty-nine, rector of the parish.——At Auckland, New Zealand, Rev. Dr. Kidd, Registrar of the Auckland University College, and son of the late Rev. Wm. Kidd, Irish Methodist minister.—At Melody Road, Wandsworth, on 20th inst., Mr. Thomas Boorman, aged 84, for many years a devoted and successful labourer in Wandsworth.

THE STRANGERS' REST.—The workers here feel much the need for increased help. The work is full of opportunity, and is being greatly blessed of God among sailors of various nationalities. The financial year closes on Saturday, and at present the books show an adverse balance of £80. A strong effort is being made to clear this off. We trust many will lend effectual aid. The Secretary is Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, 163, St. George's-street, E.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For the work of the Gordon Memorial Mission at Plumstead.—For a sorely afflicted little one, that she may be restored (if it be his will), and that her parents may realise the goodness of God.—For a week's special services from October 8 at the Soldiers' Homes, Spital Tongues, Newcastle-on-Tyne.—For the work of the South Africa General Mission, that the spiritual tone may be deepened and many souls won.—For a tent mission at Steyning, Sussex, continued till September 30, by Mr. Hart.—For a Gospel temperance mission, September 24 to October 3, at Hurstpierpoint, that Christians of all denominations may become more united and work together.—For Mr. George King, who has had a second attack of paralysis, and is lying ill at Bethany House, Dorking.—For a beloved and only daughter, that a threatened fatal illness may be averted and that the loving Saviour may be revealed to this sick one.

Notes and Comments.

With much satisfaction we have received the letter entitled, "Churches to the Front." We believe that only thus can the missionary enterprise be carried out to its highest possibilities, or the churches themselves maintain their spiritual health. The present needs of missionary societies prove the insufficiency of the method of paying money into a fund to be officially distributed. When a church is quickened into spiritual life it becomes livingly and personally interested in missions, and as this interest deepens and extends it is quickened into a more abundant life. We think there are indications of a coming revolution in missionary methods on the lines indicated by "Churches to the Front," and that as missionaries are recognised as "messengers of the churches" a prospect of exceedingly increased usefulness and influence will be opened to our missionary societies.

In the course of a recently published interview, the Dean of Ely, quoted with much satisfaction some words of his friend, Sir Harry Verney, then an old man of ninety, words which, although containing nothing new, contain something which is always worth remembering and repeating:—

> Far, far more important is it than all these good schemes for technical training and material comfort, that our farmers and labourers should be taught to be pious, God-fearing men. Piety! piety! that is the secret of national happiness.

The words are all the more weighty when it is remembered that they were spoken by one who believed in technical training and in every other good thing that could be given to the working classes, and that they were quoted by a clergyman who is a zealous social reformer.

Dr. Parkhurst, of New York, continues to gain important victories against the corrupt police of that city. He has always held that it was useless to prosecute the keepers of disorderly houses while the police favoured corruption and law-breaking. He has therefore persistently and boldly attacked the worst offenders, and his policy is being justified by results. Public opinion is veering round to his side. Now that a Committee has admitted the justice of his charges, he will feel strengthened in his work, and not rest until the police is made an instrument of righteousness.

Dr. Dale has some weighty and searching words in a monthly magazine on the parable of the sower. He very powerfully sets forth the reason why some Christians are unwilling to endure hardness in the Christian life. Not having seen how appalling a thing sin is, they have received the gospel of forgiveness easily, but not deeply, not so thoroughly as to influence the strongest feelings of their nature; hence their comfortable and easy views of life.

If they find a house with pleasant gardens about it, and in a pleasant country, they take it without hesitation, though it is too far from church to allow them to attend worship with any regularity. They have never been filled with awe and dread by the possibility of missing eternal glory, and therefore they take no trouble to make their "calling and election sure."

It is surely most timely to hear in these days of easy-going religion among so many professors that "apart from fear the Christian life is likely to be wanting in depth and strength."

If anyone suggests that perfect love casts out fear, I venture to ask him whether he is sure that in his own case fear has vanished under the power of perfect love. Has it vanished through religious indifference? Was there ever any fear for the love to cast out? The austere elements of the Christian revelation are necessary if its more gracious elements are to take deep root in life.

To wipe out from the Gospel its solemn and terrible aspects is, indeed, to make it untrue to life, untrue to the experiences of the Man of sorrows, and unfit to guide and strengthen us in a death struggle with sin and the devil.

The Guardian seems to us to have fallen into a common fallacy in supposing that the number of convictions for a given offence is a safe index to the number of the actual commissions of the offence. In contending that there is no connection between the number of public-houses and the amount of drunkenness, it asks:—

> Why, for example, should Newcastle-on-Tyne which has only three public-houses per 1000 of population, show twenty-five per 1000 convictions for drunkenness, while Manchester, which has nearly six public-houses per 1000, shows only ten per 1000 convictions? Or why should Tiverton, which has three public-houses per 1000, have about the same number of convictions as Winchester, which has eight public-houses per 1000?

We reply, perhaps because the police of Newcastle and Tiverton are more alert in doing their work than the police of Manchester or Winchester; other circumstances may also affect the result. Anyhow, The Guardian is not justified in concluding from these figures that if the number of public-houses were diminished we should not have a diminution of drunkenness. And further, we ought to diminish the temptations to evil, even should men still continue to work as much evil as if the temptations remained.

Mr. J. Martin Skinner gives an account, in a letter to The Westminster Gazette, of the demoralising effects of keeping a public-house, even on the principle of selling as little intoxicating drink as possible, and of pushing the sale of other things. The public-house in question is owned by a clergyman, who has always sought men of good character as managers. One after another they have fallen victims to the thing they had to regulate:—

> About a year ago a Good Templar was appointed manager, but was obliged, in taking the post, to sever his connection with an order where he had taken an obligation "not to make, buy, sell, use, furnish, or cause to be furnished to others, as a beverage, any intoxicating liquors." But the man, who was the president of his lodge, was unable to stand the seductions of the "devilish and destructive traffic," and has been discharged recently for drunkenness. Strange to say, the minister blames the Good Templar Order and the United Kingdom Alliance for the man's fall, instead of attributing it to the dangerous character of the business which he is endeavouring to conduct without harm to anybody. It seems to take some men, even in very high positions in clerical and political circles, a long time to learn that given causes produce like effects, and if we wish to get rid of the effects the causes must be removed.

One case is not, of course, ground enough for a large generalisation, but then we also remember how great the temptation is for publicans, barmen, and brewers, to drink too much.

Mr. Gladstone cannot be said to be very happy in his influence on the Temperance question. It was a disastrous day when he gave liquor licences to grocers. He turned an honourable into a doubtful trade, and the evil he introduced has come to abide for many a day. Now he has thrown the weight of his great name on to the side of the municipalisation of the liquor traffic. The evil will never be destroyed by such means, but citizenship will be odious to England's most devoted sons and daughters if they are to be made partners publicly in a trade which they would never touch privately or individually.

"Sunday Observance as Affected by the Conditions of Modern Life" is a subject of vital importance, and was well handled by Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies in a paper which he read before the Carlisle Diocesan Conference. He pointed out that one principal cause affecting the observance of the Sabbath amongst us seems to him to be the partial displacement of Puritan opinion by High Church opinion. The relaxation of religious strictness of Sunday observance in favour of pleasure and secular occupations he traces in great part to the High Church movement. He remembers a High Churchman at the first Diocesan Conference in London declaring, almost jauntily, that it was right and good for London young men after an "early celebration," to devote Sunday to physical exercise and pleasure on the river or elsewhere.

Mr. Davies has no desire to wipe out our English Sunday, while, on the other hand, he rightly insists upon Christian liberty in the use of the day:—

> We are told that both in London and the country some of those who have already more pleasure than is good for them in the week are rebelling against the dulness of a religious Sunday, and insisting that they must amuse themselves on Sunday also. We can have no satisfaction in giving way to these idle persons; though perhaps we should do them more good, and fulfil the Commandment better, if we could make them work on the six days, than by hindering them from amusing themselves on the seventh. There are also the many on whom the Christian faith has no hold, and to whom our Sunday has no sacredness. We might be ready for a fight against these and the pleasure-lovers; but we must remember what dishonour and injury we do to our religion if we present it as a system of restraint. The Christian warfare is for justice against oppression, for humanity against inhumanity, for purity against licence, for the worship of the God of righteousness and love against the worship of self and of the world; not for forms, against disregard of forms.

The Bishop of Carlisle, who presided, concluded the discussion by saying that he thought the remembrance of the rigid observance of forty or fifty years ago still did mischief. He pleaded for the Lord's day to be a blessing to be enjoyed. That position reached, there would be things which they would permit themselves to do, if they could do them without offending a weak brother, or increasing the amount of Sunday labo . Quite so; be free, but use freedom as a responsibility, not for doing our own will.

Little do the passengers in the racing steamships which have gained the name of "ocean greyhounds" know of the risks they run. The captains and officers know, but the increasing competition drives them to it, and the public require it. A captain of one of these record-breaking vessels said the other day, "I know the danger, but I must keep up speed; and to relieve the pressure on brain and nerve I go down and take a hand at whist, or do something else, trusting to Providence or accident to bring us safely into port."

A nautical friend, of long and varied experience as a commander, assures us that though Paul was a tentmaker and Luke a physician, and neither of them a sailor, the account of the voyage given in Acts xxvii. is in accordance with the most accurate science of seamanship, and many of the hairbreadth escapes and of the hideous catastrophes at sea would never occur if our skippers were as careful as those Alexandrian sailors, who sounded and sounded again, and cast anchor in time to prevent a wreck.

THE BAPTIST UNION.

The annual assembly at Newcastle was inaugurated on Monday evening by a Home Missionary meeting in Rye-hill Chapel, the spacious building being quite filled. Mr. William Angus presided.

In his opening address, the Chairman said he had an oft-told tale to repeat—that to carry on their work among their mission churches they must have money; they had also to tell of such success as justified their appeal to their friends for ways and means. He welcomed the delegates to Newcastle, and said it was especially fitting that the first meeting of the Baptist Union should be a missionary meeting. The state of their churches at home, and of the world outside their churches, was such as to require the most earnest counsel of their wisest men. Agricultural districts were being denuded of their populations, leaving stranded little village churches which for generations had held forth the light in their district; and, on the other hand, their big towns were growing rapidly in population, and they were moving with scarcely accelerated pace. Thus the question became an exceedingly serious one—How were they to hold their own, much less how they were to advance with the increasing population of the country.

Rev. A. W. H. Streuli (Manchester) addressed the meeting on "Heroism in Home Mission Work." He said that while the work was going on in the villages, they had not far to look in their great cities to find that the Gospel was by no means making the headway it should in the great centres of population. He took it that the work of the Baptist Home Mission was not confined simply to the villages or the smaller towns, but that, at all events, it was in the thought of their leaders to extend their good work to the greater centres of population, and amongst the "submerged tenth," as they were called—great crowds of men seething in drunkenness, and men, women, and children living in the midst of degradation and sin. What they wanted was more heroism in the Church members and congregations generally. He suggested that ministers should preach only once on Sunday, and that the members should go and see the people in their homes and in the streets. Rev. W. Townsend (Canterbury) delivered an address, in which he advocated increased evangelistic energy. Rev. A. Connell (Regent-square Presbyterian Church, London) dealt with "The Influences which cause Young People to Drift to Indifference," and said the Nonconformist conscience would rise and sweep these evil influences away.

CANADIAN HIGH SOCIAL LIFE.—A NEW ERA.—From a Canadian contemporary we are glad to learn that, "The Countess of Aberdeen, during her recent visit to Halifax, endeared herself to the White Ribbon women and all friends of Prohibition. She gave an 'At Home' and garden party on the magnificent grounds of the official residence of the admiral commanding the British squadron in North American waters. The feature of the function was the entire absence of wines and liquors. This is the first time in Canadian history that the wife of the Govenor-General has held a reception without dispensing liquors, and marks a new era in Canadian high social life."

Communion.

By Dr. J. R. MACDUFF.*

The two disciples on the way to Emmaus treated lightly at first their intercourse with the Divine Stranger at eventide. But as they proceeded along the way, how "their hearts burned within them." They could not suffer Him to depart. "Abide with us," said they; "and they constrained Him."

It does not require the Saviour's personal visible presence in order that we may enjoy the same exalted communion. We are apt at some times and in some moods to think that it does. We are inclined to look with envy on those who were privileged to be by his side on the slopes of Olivet or among the mountain glens of Galilee, or seated with Him in the vessel on Lake Tiberias, or at the hallowed supper table on Mount Zion. But faith in a very real sense can keep company with the invisible Christ.

St. John tells us so. None more honoured than he in holding nearest, closest, most confidential intercourse with his Lord. He had sat with Him at the feast of Communion. He had leaned on his bosom. He had gazed on his agony. He had received his last look of suffering love on the Cross, and there and then had entrusted to him the most sacred of bequests. Jesus had now left the earth. The loving eye and loving voice are seen and heard no more. But has John forfeited former exalted fellowship? Does he sigh in vain for hours of bliss irrevocably gone, and which have left no substitute or equivalent behind them? Listen to the lonely Apostle as he afterwards pens his habitual experience: "Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." As he dwelt an exile in Patmos, or trod the streets of heathen Ephesus, he felt that though the roads of Judea, the pathways round Jerusalem, were far away, the Divine being who gave them all their brightness and blessedness was not. As the shadows of life's evening were gathering round him, he could take up in another sense the old request of the Eastern wayfarers, and feel the certainty of a gracious answer.

How it would, with us, hallow every season of prosperity; how it would take the sting from every season of sorrow, and the bitterness from every trial, to have at all times the sublime consciousness that an Infinite Friend is with us, who joys in all our joys, and metes out for us all our woes! Life may be an Emmaus journey, consecrated and transfigured by the presence and loving converse of the Risen Redeemer.

CHESHUNT COLLEGE.—At the opening of the new session on Thursday last an interesting address was delivered by Rev. E. P. Price, of Chikka, Ballapura, an old Cheshunt student, on Missionary work in India. The needs and claim of the land upon the Christian were well put before the audience. Prayer was offered by Rev. R. C. Sandison, of West Dulwich, after which the communion service was conducted by Rev. Professor Whitehouse, who delivered an impressive address on consecration.

"GIN OR THE GOSPEL?"—With reference to the notice published last week with this heading, we are glad to learn that one friend has given £100 and another £50 for the purchase of a chapel in Clerkenwell for use in connection with the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission. As the transaction must be concluded at an early date, it is greatly to be hoped that the entire sum needed will speedily be forthcoming. The address of Mr. J. A. Groom, superintendent of the Mission, is 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

* From Thoughts for the Quiet Hour (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), a collection of stray meditations on a great variety of high and sacred themes; all breathing a devout spirit: marked by rich spiritual insight and beauty of expression; a delightful companion in the resting intervals of a busy life.

WESLEYAN MISSIONS.

The third annual meeting of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society was held on Monday night at the Mission House, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C. Rev. Walford Green, president of the Conference, occupied the chair.

Mr. John J. Seager read the report, which stated that great advance had been made, and the society had extended its operations. They had sixty-nine agents in the missionary field, and 549 members.

Rev. H. J. Piggot (Rome) gave an account of the condition of Italy and the work of the mission in that country. Formerly, he said, there was a filtration of infidelity running through the whole fabric of society, but the propagation of it was not possible from the restraint in which society was held. Now these restraints had been removed, and the youth were growing up in scepticism, lawlessness, and immorality of the worst description. He described the people as being merged in unbelief, and the moral fibre as being deteriorated to a very great degree. The youth were growing up worse than their forefathers, the deep cause of which was want of faith. The priests were making capital out of it, and saying the remedy was to come back to the Pope. The answer to this was, that they had had the monopoly of Italy for centuries, and the present state of things was the result. Italy, however, would never retrace its steps back to the Pope. The only remedy for Italy was the pure Gospel, an open Bible, Christianity as wrought out by the Redeemer and taught by the great Apostle.

Rev. J. A. Vanes (Southern India) and Rev. H. Ellis (West Africa) also addressed the meeting.

NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

Meetings were held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday for the purpose of saying farewell to twenty-two missionaries, four of whom are going out for the first time, while eighteen are returning to work in Morocca, Algeria, Tunis, Tripoli, and the Delta of Egypt. General Haig, who presided in the afternoon, gave an outline of the history and character of the Mission, and a description of the fields occupied along the North African coast line.

Mr. N. H. Patrick, who has been labouring among Spanish colonists in Tangier, opened his brief address by telling how God had provided a suitable missionary for the Jews of Tangier. His own work, however, lies among the colonists. At first there was much persecution, but God has wonderfully opened the way. Many have been won to the simplicity of the Gospel, and have proved themselves ready to endure the loss of all things for the sake of Christ.

Miss Jay spoke earnestly and vividly of her experiences among the women of Morocco—a land so near and yet so far in respect to liberty and privilege. The life of the women is peculiarly hard and dreary; hence they often welcome the messengers of the Gospel even while they refuse the message itself. A hearing has now been gained, and Miss Jay believed that the most potent agency in winning an entrance has been medical missions, without which it would scarce have been possible to reach the Moors. She wished it to be understood also that only women can reach the women of Morocco; hence the need for more lady helpers. Moreover, a school has been started for girls, who are not taught at all in Mohammedan lands. It is true, as some urge, that progress is slow, but there is progress, and souls have been saved among the Moors. There are rays of light, but the country is terribly dark. Will not many pray for that land of slavery and fanaticism?

Mr. G. B. Michell, who has been labouring in Tunis, maintained that work among Mohammedans calls peculiarly for the power of the Holy Ghost. In support of this statement he enlarged on the intense hatred of Mohammedans to the Gospel of the Son of God; showing that there is no saving health in Mohammedanism, and describing their miserable social and family life. On these facts the speaker based a strong plea for sending the Gospel to these people. More workers are needed. Who will go? In particular one is very urgently wanted at the present moment in Tunis.

Pastor James Stephens spoke impressively on the words, "Them also must I bring," as setting forth the yearning of the Lord Jesus over peoples who sit in darkness, such as Arabs, Moors, Berbers, and other followers of the false prophet.

The Lord's Supper.

By a PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER.

Let us consider the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ. There is none like Him. There are myriads in angel nature, millions in human nature, Three Persons in Divine nature, but there is only One God-Man. He alone has "two distinct natures in One Person for ever." No distinction can be drawn between the Body of Christ and the Person of Christ. It is the work of the Spirit in the believer's heart to make him realise this Personality of Christ by elevating his affections and understanding. This Person of the God-Man in his atoning sacrifice is the highest exhibition of Divine wisdom and power. It is that secret of the Lord which was hidden from angels, and principalities, and powers, during the countless ages of the past until the day of revelation at Calvary. It is the very glory of the Godhead concerning which Jesus spoke when He lifted up his eyes to heaven and said, "Father, the hour has come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify Thee." The assumption of sinful men to repeat at their will this transcendent work of Godhead is an appalling exhibition of human error.

It is asserted that the power to perform this stupendous miracle of changing the bread and wine of the Lord's Supper into the Divine Person of the Lord Jesus Christ is given unto priests in virtue of their ordination. But this ordination of Rome is a mere figment. It does not exist. There is not a priest of Rome, from the Pope down to the last in office, who knows certainly himself, or can prove to others, that he is ordained at all. For the Council of Trent decrees, "If anyone shall say that in ministers, while they form and give the sacraments, intention is not required, at least of doing what the Church does, let him be anathema." Now, no man knows the intention of another, hence no priest can know that he is ordained. This result was clearly seen by Cardinal Bellarmine, perhaps the greatest of Romish controversialists, who thus expresses the difficulty: "No one can be certain with the certainty of faith that he has a true sacrament, since the sacrament is not formed without the intention of the minister, and no one can see the intention of another." Can the force of impudent fraud go farther than this—that men should pretend to perform a sham miracle by means of a sham ordination!

The celebrated preacher, Canon Liddon, in his Bampton lecture, as mentioned in my last article, states that "the Divinity of Christ warrants the cleansing virtue of his blood." Now, this is not the fact. It is the blood of Jesus Christ that cleanseth from all sin. It is the God-Man who is the Redeemer. The blood shed on the cross was the blood of God, but it was also that of a Man. By his mysterious union with the manhood, the mystery of Godliness is God manifest in the flesh, "being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross" (Phil. ii. 8). The two natures of Christ are distinct, but they are in one Person, and it is the blood of that one Person which alone cleanseth from sin. This is the specially designed and appointed way. No creature's intelligence could devise or imagine this "plan of salvation." The highest angel had no more insight into it before revelation than the weakest man. It is only from the Scriptures that men can know this, the greatest fact in the universe, or its value to them. The Apostle John (1 John v.) distinguishes between the fact and the record, which is the witness of the Father unto Christ. Not to believe this witness is to insult God, to call Him a liar, because it is not to believe the witness God gave of his Son. Believers are heirs of the promise, and rest on God's promises, regarding Christ as alone their hope of salvation (Heb. vi. 17-19). After they have been enlightened by the Holy Spirit, believers have also a witness of Christ in their inmost consciousness, so that they can say, "Rabbi, Thou are the Son of God, Thou art the King of Israel." But this consciousness is not the ground of salvation; that rests solely on those promises of God revealed in the Word, which are Yea and Amen in Christ Jesus. It is the witness of the Father to Jesus Christ that warrants our belief in the cleansing virtue of his blood.

In my last article it was shown that our Saviour has Himself placed the barrier of a twofold impossibility on his Personal Presence as God-man in the bread and wine of the Lord's Supper. These impossibilities are great realities, and not mere verbal difficulties. At first sight it may appear to many devout minds that our Lord being Head over all things to the Church, and having promised to be with his people alway, there cannot be any obstacle to his Personal Presence. Let it, however, be remembered what other Scriptures tell of the position occupied by our risen and exalted Lord. The heavens must receive Him until the restitution of all things. He is to sit on the right hand of God, until his enemies are made his footstool. The whole book of Revelation is a wonderful picture of the way in which the Lord Christ reigns in glory, directing all the affairs of his Church on earth.

The explanation of these seeming contradictions is found in the mystery of the existence of the Godhead as three Divine Persons distinguished from each other by their Personal properties, but one in their essential perfections. Without a knowledge of this revealed doctrine it is impossible to have a clear apprehension of the work of redemption. In it we learn the love of the Father, the grace of the Son, the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. The redemption of man is not accomplished by One Person, but so great is it that all the adorable Three unite in the wondrous work. While there is distinction of Persons, so marvellous is the unity that the same operations are ascribed to different Persons. Creation is ascribed to the Spirit and also to the Son. The resurrection of Christ is ascribed to the power of the Father and also to the power of Christ himself. In virtue of this unity the Person of the Redeemer dwells in heaven, yet He is present by the Spirit with his people on earth. Believers are too much in the habit of speaking of the Spirit as an influence, so that the great fact of his Personality has often been obscured. If it were remembered that the Holy Spirit is a Person as much as the Father and the Son are Persons, and that He, the Divine Personal Spirit, has come to reign in the Church, to dwell in the hearts of believers, to take of the things of Christ and show them unto us, there would be no difficulty in understanding that thus the Lord Christ is with his people here, and yet his Person—the Lamb as it had been slain—is on the right hand of the Majesty in heaven.

The Spiritual Presence of Christ apart from his Person, as Hooker teaches, is in the heart of the believer, not in the sacramental elements. The work of the Holy Spirit is to produce this Presence in the soul (John xvi. 13, 14). "He shall not speak of Himself, He shall glorify Me." In this manner believers, beholding the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image (2 Cor. iii. 18). A wonderful transformation takes place, not by degrading the Person of Christ, but by elevating the nature of believers. They are called unto the adoption of sons. As the Lord took our nature into union with his own, so also are his brethren to be made like Him, "that they all may be one, as Thou Father art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us" (John xvii. 21). This is indeed a glory far transcending the heretical dream of eating the body of the Son of God, and truly does our Lord in this process of manifesting Himself, keep his promise, "Lo, I am with you alway," in a far higher sense than if in bodily form He stood in our midst and permitted us to handle his glorified Person. Yet more by means of this marvellous honour bestowed on the redeemed from among men, Jesus will remove the loneliness of his twofold nature. He will surround Himself with a multitude that no man can number, who are made like unto Himself; "when He shall appear, we shall be like Him." The redeemed will be one with Him in a sanctified humanity, and, in a finite degree, one with Him in a participation of the divine nature. For this cause He, the Great King, will not be ashamed to call them brethren.

N. INDIA SCHOOL OF MEDICINE.

In October next, at Ludhiana, the North India School of Medicine for Christian Women will be opened. Its object is to provide a thorough training for women and girls desirous of preparing for medical mission work. The course for midwives and nurses will be two years; that for medical assistance four years; the assistant surgeon's degree, or L.M.S., will entail a five years' curriculum.

Dr. Edith Brown, the principal of the school, has issued an appeal in which, after showing the importance of reaching the women of India, and the many and superior facilities afforded by medical work, she sketches her scheme. She says: "Many workers are needed, and many of us feel that we are not making the most of our women and girls belonging to the Native Christian Church in India. A very great deal of care, time, and money is spent in educating the girls in our native Christian schools, but it is a sad fact that very many of those who are the brightest and cleverest and most fitted to become doctors, dispensers, etc., pass over to the Government Medical Schools, accept Dufferin scholarships, and enter upon Government medical work, in which they are not allowed to speak of Christ.

"The absence of all Christian teaching and influence, the impossibility of proper and constant protection and supervision while among the men students, and the low moral tone which many of these girls inherit, and which exists in many of their homes, all join to make the schools places to which most missionaries now refuse to send their Christian girls; and those who have sent them, have done so with fear, and have often had sadly disappointing results.

"I do not see how we can expect these young girls, at the age of seventeen, to stand the test of living and working entirely among those who, though nominally neutral, are often practically non-Christian, for four or five years without any Christian teaching and help. We do so long that these bright Christian girls may become true, earnest workers for Christ, and care as much for the souls as for the bodies of those they are able to help; otherwise they will be no real help to us in our medical missionary work. And many of us feel convinced, that in order to obtain this, we must not only keep our Christian girls under proper protection, but we must give them regular Christian teaching, and do all we can to influence and help them in their spiritual lives during their years of study, so that they may become spiritually strong and ready to work for Christ."

THE FALL OF JERUSALEM.

(Jer. xxxviii. xxxix.)

Among the faithless faithful only he;
Among innumerable false, unmoved,
Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal;
Nor number, nor example with him wrought
To swerve from truth, or change his constant mind
Though single. From amidst them forth he pass'd,
Long way through hostile scorn, which he sustain'd
Superior, nor of violence fear'd aught;
And with retorted scorn his back he turn'd
On those proud tow'rs to swift destruction doom'd.
—Milton.

During those long dark months of siege, probably the only soul in all that crowded city which was in perfect peace, and free in its unrestrained liberty, was Jeremiah's. Tethered as he was by an iron chain to the wall of the court of the guard, he passed beyond the narrow confines of the enclosure to the great ago that was to be, when Judah should be saved and Jerusalem should dwell safely, known by the name The Lord our Righteousness. And amid the cries of assailants and defenders, unbroken by the thud of the battering rams, deep as the blue Syrian sky that looked down upon him was the peace of God that passed the understanding of those that thronged in and out, to and fro, between the city and the royal palace.

I.—THE HORRORS OF THE SIEGE.

It lasted in all for about eighteen months, with the one brief respite caused by the approach of Pharaoh's army; and it is impossible for us to estimate the amount of human anguish which was crowded into that fateful space. Some conception of it may be gathered from the words with which Ezekiel anticipated it. As in a mirror coming events were forecast. The caldron, full of the choicest flesh, hanging over the swift fire until it was consumed; the vision of the iron pan encircling the sun-burnt brick, as the iron legions of Chaldea would engirdle the beleaguered city; the meagre measure of wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentils, and millet, and spelt, dealt out by measure day by day, but barely sufficient for the prophet's sustenance; the barley cakes mingled with cow's dung, abhorrent to the taste, yet greedily devoured; the stealthy preparation of his household stuff for removal; and the stealing out at night from his house by a hole in the wall, with covered face and laden shoulder—all these spoke with a vividness which no words could equal of the horrors of that siege (Ezekiel iv.).

Think for a moment of the overcrowded city, into which had gathered from all the country round the peasantry and villagers, who, with such of their valuables as they had been able hastily to collect and transport, had sought refuge within the grey old walls of Zion from the violence and outrage of the merciless troops. If wandering tribes, like the sons of Rechab, were induced for once to break the tradition of their nomad life, to shelter themselves within the city enclosure, how much more would the terrified populations, scattered in slight habitations over the hill country, count it politic to do the same? This mass of fugitives would greatly add to the difficulties of the defence by the demands upon the provisions which were laid up in anticipation of the siege, by overcrowding the thoroughfares, and impeding the movements of the soldiery.

The incident referred to in our last chapter, of the demolition of a portion of the royal palace to provide materials for an inner line of defence, is a specimen of many another episode in that intense effort of Zedekiah and his people to hurl back the tide of merciless hate and thirst for blood that broke day after day around the battlements; much as the long ocean wave sends its surges up against a reef of rock, and flings its splintered forces high in air. Here there was a scaling party which must be flung back on their ladders; there, an attempt to run a mine which must be intercepted; and now tidings come that a portion of the wall, which had been long exposed to the battering rams, showed signs of weakness, and must be built up from within; and yet again precautions must be taken against fire flung in missiles, or flights of arrows, or stones cast by catapults. For no single hour could the defenders relax their vigilance. A council of princes must have been in perpetual session, fertile in resource, swift to meet the craft or the courage of the foe. And all the time the stock of provisions becoming less, the store of water drying, as in the case of Malchiah's dungeon, into wet mud.

So much for the earlier months of the siege; but, as the days passed on darker shadows gathered, as if the very pit of hell added in human passion the last dread horrors of the scene. The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, lay by scores in the recesses of the houses, broken like earthen pitchers, the work of the hand of the potter! The women became cruel, and refused to spare from their breast, for their young the nutriment, they needed for themselves. The tongues of sucking children became dry and parched, that they could no longer cry. Young children, whose weakness constituted a first claim, asked for bread, and asked in vain. Highly nurtured maidens searched over the dung-heaps, in hope of finding something to stay the craving of hunger. The nobles lost their portly mien, and walked the streets like animated mummies. The sword of the invader without had fewer victims than that which hunger wielded within; and, as the climax of all, pitiful women murdered their own little babes, and soddened them to make a meal. Now pestilence began its ravages; and the foul stench of bodies that men had no time to bury, and that fell thick and fast each day in the streets of the city, like autumn leaves, caused death, before which those that had escaped the foe and privation fell. Ah, Jerusalem! who stonedst the prophets, and sheddest the blood of the just, this was the day of the overflowing wrath and fury of Jehovah! No human hand lit this fire; no mere human hate was accountable for sufferings so complex and so terrible. "Thou, O God, hast slain priest and prophet in thy sanctuary; youth and age in the streets. Thou hast slain them in the day of thine anger; Thou hast slaughtered and not pitied."

And as Jeremiah waited day after day, unable to do other than listen to tidings of woe that converged to him from every side, he resembled the physician, who, unable to stay the slow progress of some terrible form of paralysis in one he loves better than life, is compelled to listen to the tidings of its conquests; and knows surely that these are only stages in an assault which ultimately must capture the citadel of life—an assault which he can do nothing to stay.

II.—THE PROPHET'S ADDED SORROWS.

In addition to the discomfort which he shared in common with the rest of the crowded populace, Jeremiah was exposed to aggravated sorrows. It would appear that he was constantly reiterating in the ears of all who passed through the court-house the message which he had previously delivered to the king, that to stay in the city was to incur death by sword, famine, or pestilence; whilst to go forth to the lines of the Chaldeans was the one condition of life. He lost no opportunity of asserting that Jerusalem should surely be given into the hands of the king of Babylon, and that he would take it. As these words passed from lip to lip, they carried dismay throughout the city. Men repeated them as they did duty on the walls, or met around the bivouac fires, or discussed the probable issues of the siege; and the fact that Jeremiah had so often spoken as the mouthpiece of Jehovah gave an added weight to his words.

It was quite natural, therefore, that the princes, who knew well enough the importance of keeping up the courage of the people, should demand the death of one who was not only weakening the hands of the people generally, but especially of the men of war. In some such way the drowsy sleeper, unwilling to be aroused by the barking of the watch dog, catches up his revolver to shoot him; or the crew, eager for carouse, murders the watchman, who warns them of the white surf breaking along a ragged rock-bound shore. The young king was weak rather than wicked, a puppet and toy in the hands of his princes and Court. He therefore yielded to their demand, saying, "Behold, he is in your hand; for the king is not he that can do anything against you."

Without delay Jeremiah was flung into one of those rock-hewn cisterns that abound in Jerusalem, and the bottom of which, the water having been exhausted during the extremities of the siege, consisted of a deep sediment of mud, into which he sank. There was not a moment to be lost. The life of the faithful servant of God was not to end amid the damp darkness of that hideous sepulchre, from which no cry could reach the upper air; and help was sent through a very unexpected channel. An Ethiopian eunuch—who is probably anonymous, since the name Ebed-melech simply means "the king's servant"—with a love to God's cause which was sweetly prophetic of the way in which Gentile hearts would be opened to welcome and forward it throughout the world, hastened to the king, then sitting to administer justice at one of the gates of the city, remonstrated with him, and urged him to take immediate steps to save the prophet from imminent death.

Always swayed by the last strong influence brought to bear on him, the king yielded as easily to his faithful servant, who was probably the custodian of his harem, as he had done to his lords; and bade him take a sufficient number of men to secure him from interference, and at once extricate the prophet. There was great gentleness in the way this noble Ethiopian executed his purpose. He was not content with merely dragging him from the pit's bottom, but lined the ropes with old cast clouts and rotten rags, fetched hurriedly from the house of the king; so the tender flesh of the prophet was not cut or chafed. It was an act of womanly tenderness, which makes it as fragrant as the breaking of the box over the person of the Lord. It is not enough to serve and help those who need assistance; we should do it with the sweetness and gentleness of Christ. It is not only what we do, but the way in which we do it, which most quickly indicates our real selves. Many a man might have hurried to the pit's mouth with ropes; only one of God's own gentlemen would have thought of the rags and clouts. It is very quaint and beautiful, when so much is left untold, that a dozen lines in the Word of God should be given to this simple incident, and the hurried advice thrown into the darkness of the lonely prophet by his kind-hearted deliverer. "Then they drew up Jeremiah with the cords, and took him up out of the dungeon; and Jeremiah remained in the court of the guard."

From that moment till the city fell, the prophet remained in safe custody; and on one memorable occasion the king sought his counsel, though in strict secrecy. Once more and for the last time those two men stood face to face—king and prophet—weakness and strength—representatives, the one of the fading glories of David's race, and the other of the imperishable splendour of truth and righteousness. Once more Zedekiah asked what the issue would be: and once more received the alternatives that appeared so foolish to the eye of sense—Defeat and Death by remaining in the city; Liberty and Life by going forth.

"Go forth?" said Zedekiah, in effect, "never! It would be unworthy of one in whose veins flows the blood of kings. I shall expose myself to the ridicule of all that have fled across the Chaldean lines; and the Chaldeans themselves would deliver me into their hands."

"They shall not deliver thee," said Jeremiah; and then began to plead with him, as a man might plead for himself. "Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, in that which I speak unto thee; so it shall be well with thee, and thy soul shall live." Then in graphic words he painted the picture of the certain doom the king would incur if he tarried until the city fell into the captor's hands. For the derision of the few Jews that had fallen away, he would then be exposed to the taunts of his wives and children, who would by that time have become allotted to their captors, and would seek to win the smiles of their new lords by taunting the fallen monarch in whose smiles they had been wont to bask.

In this advice of Jeremiah we are reminded of words repeated by our Lord on five different occasions, in which He tells us that those who keep their lives lose them, and that those who lose their lives find and keep them. Not in husbanding our strength, but in yielding it in service; not burying our talents, but in administering them; not in hoarding our seed in the barn, but in scattering it; not in following an earthly human policy but in surrendering ourselves to the will of God—do we find the safe and blessed path. The man of faith judges not after the sight of his eyes, or the judgment of sense; he strikes currents flowing unseen by the world, and acts on suggestions received by direct communication from the Spirit of God, though always through the Word of God, and consistent with the loftiest dictates of sanctified common-sense.

The weakness which was the ruin of Zedekiah came out in his request that Jeremiah would not inform the princes of the nature of their communications, and would hide the truth beneath the semblance of truth. It is difficult to pronounce a judgment on the way in which the prophet veiled the purport of his conversation with Zedekiah from the inquisitive questions of the princes. There is an appearance of evasion in his reply, which seems a little inconsistent with the character of the prophet of Jehovah. At the same time, the princes had no right to catechise him; and he was not obliged by his duty to them to tell the entire truth. We are under no obligation to gratify an impertinent curiosity; but we must be very careful to be transparent in speech and in act, and to be utterly true when we profess to be telling the whole truth to those that have a right to know. In the present case, the prophet shielded the king with a touch of chivalrous devotion and loyalty which was probably the last act of devotion to the royal house, to save which he had poured out his heart's blood in tears and entreaties and sacrifices for nearly forty years.

III.—THE FATE OF THE CITY.

At last a breach was made in the old fortifications, and the troops began to pour in, like an angry sea which, after long chafing, has made for itself an entrance in the sea wall, and pours in turbulent fury to carry desolation in its course. The kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, could never have believed that the adversary and the enemy should enter into the gates of Jerusalem; yet so it befel. Then the terrified people fled from the lower into the upper city; and as they did so, their homes were filled with the desolating terror of the merciless soldiery.

A hundred different forms of anguish gathered in that devoted city, like vultures to the dead camel of the desert. Woe then to the men who had fought for their very life! but woe more utter and agonising to the women and maidens, to the children and little babes! War is always terrible; but no hand of historian dare lift the veil, and tell in unvarnished words all the horror of the sack of a city by such soldiery as Nebuchadnezzar and his generals led to war. The wolves of the Siberian forest are more merciful than they. "All the princes of the King of Babylon came in, and sat in the middle gate," from which they gave directions for the immediate prosecution of their success upon the terrified people, who now crowded the upper city, prepared to make the last desperate stand.

Late that afternoon the old palace of David was filled with eager consultation. Everything must be done to preserve the royal house, "the breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord." It was, therefore, arranged that as soon as night fell, Zedekiah and his harem should go forth under the protection of all the men of war, through a breach to be made in the walls of the city to the south; and exactly as Ezekiel had foretold, so it came to pass. "The prince that is among them shall bear upon his shoulder in the dark, and shall go forth: they shall dig through the wall to carry out thereby, he shall cover his face" (Ezek. xii. 12).

A long line of fugitives, each carrying property or necessaries, stole silently through the king's private garden, and so towards the breach; and like shadows of the night, passed forth into the darkness between long lines of armed men, who held their breath. If only by the dawn they could gain the plains of Jericho, they might hope to elude the fury of their pursuers. But all night Zedekiah must have remembered those last words of Jeremiah, "Thou shalt not escape; but shalt be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon."

Somehow the tidings of the flight reached the Chaldeans. The whole army arose to pursue. "Our pursuers were swifter than the eagles of the heaven: they chased us upon the mountains, they laid wait for us in the wilderness, the anointed of the Lord was taken in their pits." That is the lament of Jeremiah; but Ezekiel gives an even deeper insight into the events of that memorable and terrible night. "My net also will I spread upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare; and I will scatter toward every wind all that are round about him to help him, and all his bands" (Lam. iv. 19, 20; Ezekiel xii. 13, 14).

What happened the next morning in Jerusalem, and what befel her in after months, is told in the book of Lamentations. Her streets and houses were filled with the bodies of the slain, after having been outraged with nameless atrocities; but happier these perchance than the thousands who were led off into exile, or sold into slavery, to suffer the horrors of death in life. Then the wild fury of fire engulfed temple and palace, public building and dwelling-house, and blackened ruins covered the site of the holy and beautiful city which had been the joy of the whole earth; and the ear of the prophet heard the spirit of the fallen city crying,

Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?
Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow which is done unto me,
Wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger!

"All that passed by clapped their hands at her; they hissed and wagged their heads at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men called the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth? All her enemies opened their mouths wide against her; they hissed and gnashed their teeth; they said, We have swallowed her up. Certainly, this is the day that we looked for, we have found it, we have seen it. The Lord did that which He devised, He fulfilled his word, He threw down and did not pity, He caused the enemy to rejoice. Foxes walked upon the desolate mountain of Zion" (Lam. ii. v.).

As for Zedekiah, he was taken to Riblah, where Nebuchadnezzar was at this time, perhaps not expecting so speedy a downfall of the city. With barbarous cruelty he slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, that the last sight he beheld might be of their dying agony. He was also compelled to witness the slaughter of all his nobles. Then as a coup de grâce, with his own hand probably, Nebuchadnezzar struck out Zedekiah's two eyes with his spear.

Thus God brought upon his people the king of the Chaldeans, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man or ancient, but gave them all into his hand. And all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king and his princes, all these he brought to Babylon. And they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof. And them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon, and they were servants to him and his sons.

THE LATE COL. M. J. ROWLANDSON.

At Bournemouth there lately passed away a venerable and beloved servant of the Lord, and many lament his death as deeply as the writer of these few lines.

Lieut.-Colonel M. J. Rowlandson, Madras Army (retired), was born in 1804, and spent no less than thirty-one years in India. For seventeen years he acted as Persian Interpreter to the Commander-in-Chief; five years he was Government Agent at the Court of the Nawâb of the Carnatic; and many years secretary to the Board of the College at Fort St. George. On returning to England he was appointed Professor of Hindustani at the Military College, Addiscombe.

These various appointments indicate linguistic and educational capacities of no mean order. But while devoted to his official duties, and loving the young cadets he instructed, his chief delight was to use every talent and opportunity in extending his Master's kingdom. While a close friend of such eminent Christians as Canon Carus, Dr. Marsh, and others, he had a charm peculiar to himself, and the affectionate simplicity of his appeals won many a soul that would have resisted eloquence and forcible logic. Needless to say he was a warm supporter of the C.M.S., the Bible Society, and the Evangelical Alliance. His little book, "What if it be True?" has, I believe, been blessed to many who were tempted to doubt the inspiration of Holy Scripture.

All who knew him could not fail to be impressed by his close and real fellowship with God. When any difficulty or trouble was named to him, his frequent response, "Well, dear brother, let us tell the Master," half dispelled the cloud even before prayer was offered. The evening of his life was spent at Bournemouth, where his visits to invalids and others were much valued. Next to the dying love of Jesus, his favourite theme was "the glorious appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." For the last year of his long and eventful life he was completely laid aside, and on June 1, having "finished his course, kept the faith, and fought the good fight," he "fell asleep." To the words suggested by a very near relation, describing his as

An honoured life
A peaceful end,
And heaven to crown it all.

I will only add,

Soldier of Christ, well done
Cease from thy loved employ;
The battle o'er, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

JEWISH NOTES.

SOUTH AMERICA:

Dr. and Mrs. Rocha, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, send home interesting tidings of their work among Jews at Buenos Ayres. In some respects they find the soil almost as hard as at Rio, owing to the religious indifference of the majority of Jews and their utter disregard even of their own Sabbaths. Nevertheless, the Lord has greatly encouraged them by bringing them into contact with individual Jews, or families who have been willing to hear the truth, and have accepted Bibles, Testaments, or tracts in their own language. Most of the Jewish shops have been visited, and in some of them lively conversations have ensued, while in others they have met with incivility or disdain.

On one occasion, when Mrs. Rocha was speaking of Christ to some poor Russian emigrants on their way to the Jewish colonies, the women of the party were visibly impressed, and, with tears in their eyes, kissed her hands, saying, "God bless you for the words spoken to us." Before leaving they accepted some Testaments and tracts. On another occasion Dr. and Mrs. Rocha had a long and interesting conversation with a Jewish family of the better class. The wife asked how the missionaries could expect them to believe in a piece of wood or a picture such as she had seen the Christians worship and adorn with jewels and trinkets in Russian churches. When it was explained that this was a false form of Christianity, she seemed astonished.

RUSSIA.

The venerable Dr. Althausen, of Wilna, reports the dawning of the light over our Jewish brethren in Russia, and that the knowledge of Christ is finding its way to the Jewish houses, even through the columns of the Russian official papers.

Meetings have recently been held by a converted Jew, named Joseph Levin, who is now a monk of the Greek Church, but whose heart longs for the salvation of his brethren. The bills to announce these meetings created a great stir among the Jews, who arrived at the meeting in such large numbers, that it had to be adjourned to the garden, and was held in the open-air. The Archimandrite and several other clergy of high position in the Greek Church were present. At the close of Mr. Levin's earnest address, the Jews were allowed to ask questions, and these were answered by Dr. Althausen and his fellow-worker, Mr. Friedmann.

One significant feature of this meeting was a friendly reference to Christianity by an eminent Jewish lawyer of Wilna, who, instead of being denounced by his co-religionists, was loudly applauded. Dr. Althausen concludes his account "O friends of Israel in England and elsewhere, be glad that the Lord is granting you the joy of seeing the walls of Zion being raised again, and that He is answering your prayers and ours." Mr. Nelam, the agent of the Mildmay mission to the Jews at Berditschew, has obtained a concession from the police to distribute New Testaments at the railway station of that town.

The intended visit of Rev. John Wilkinson and Mr. Samuel Wilkinson to Russia has been postponed till next year.

ALL DAY OF PRAYER FOR ISRAEL.

The annual day of prayer for Israel at Mildmay was held on Friday last. Colonel Morton presided at the first meeting, at 9 a.m., and spoke profitably from the parable of the wicked husbandmen. The burden of the prayers was confession of shortcomings. At the second meeting, at 11 a.m., Pastor Fuller Gooch led, and the atmosphere throughout was one of praise. The subject was "Praise for increased interest in Israel among Christians, and for movements Christwards among the Jews." Rev. John Wilkinson led the third meeting, in the afternoon, when there was earnest prayer for all missionary work amongst Israel, of all societies and in all lands. Ten minutes of this meeting were devoted to the quotation of promises of blessing to Israel by friends all over the room. The final meeting in the evening was conducted by Mr. Walter Campbell, who dwelt on the necessity of the Baptism of the Holy Ghost, not only on the Jewish Mission field in general, but on those present at that meeting in particular. The Lord's presence was realised at all the meetings, and blessing must follow.

"TO GOD FROM IDOLS."

AT SALISBURY CONFERENCE. BY R. C. MORGAN.

This letter to the Thessalonians was the first epistle written by the Apostle Paul—written when he was still at liberty, and when his evangelistic work was at its zenith. It might, therefore, be expected, and it certainly is significant, that this epistle describes at its commencement the preacher, the converts, and the Gospel by which they were converted; or, to state it alliteratively, the evangel, the evangelist, and the evangelised. The Gospel is three times in chapter ii. termed "the Gospel of God." The preacher could appeal to them: "Ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake." The converts were "followers of us and of the Lord," and the word of the Lord sounded out from them through the whole of Greece.

The Thessalonians' "work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of our God and Father," which the Apostle remembered without ceasing in his prayers, was the natural outcome of their having "turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom He raised from the dead, even Jesus, who delivereth us from the coming wrath" (1 Thess. i. 2, 3, 9, 10).

This view of the new life, which is the only true and Scriptural one, it is most needful to emphasise and enforce.

It makes a great difference by whose instrumentality we are converted. In spiritual, as in natural life, we can only beget in our own likeness, "like father, like son." These Thessalonians became followers of the Apostle and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction with joy of the Holy Ghost. They were well born, well nursed, well fed, well trained. The Apostle's description of himself as an evangelist demands the study of every servant of the Lord Jesus. With such preachers and teachers we should expect such results.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

It is characteristic of all Apostolic teaching to take a comprehensive view of the whole situation. Every address in the Acts looked back upon the history of Israel or of mankind, and connected the present with the past as its outcome and consequence. When we read the Lord's commission to Paul "to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God," we are naturally led to think of the Fall, when man was turned from light to darkness, and, turning from God, was enslaved under the power of Satan. The Lord's Supper, in the Apostle's view, looks back to Calvary and on to Olivet.

Therefore the Apostle preached "the Gospel of God." He does not say, they came to Jesus, but they "turned to God." And this, his first epistle, regards the Church as in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. For faith in God who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead is the faith which justifies, and by which we have peace with God, and are reconciled to God, from whom we revolted in Adam, and with whom by nature we are at enmity.

Peter describes some teachings of his beloved brother Paul as hard to be understood, but repeats the exact idea, if not the precise words, of Paul, when he says of the redeemed, "Who by Him do believe in God, who raised Him up from the dead and gave Him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God.....For Christ once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God" (1 Peter i. 18-21; iii. 18).

Man's ruin was caused by turning away from God; our salvation is the result of our turning to God. When the angel said, "He shall be called Jesus, for He shall save his people from their sins," the primary subject is not our salvation but sin against God; and the first consequence of the death and resurrection of Jesus was from the slander of the Old Serpent, the Devil, and Satan, who persuaded our first parents that He was unkind, untrue, unjust.

When Jesus, Son of Man and Son of God, in the likeness of the flesh of sin, endured the damnatory sentence against sin in the flesh, and cried, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" and when He rolled Himself upon Jehovah, and when He cried, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," He rolled away the reproach from God. Man in Adam, in Paradise, had rejected God; man in Christ, upon the cross, in the dust of death, rolled Himself upon the covenant-keeping God, and breathed his departing spirit into his Father's care. He had glorified God upon the earth, where God had been dishonoured; He had finished the work the Father had given Him to do.

THE ORIGIN OF EVIL.

In that they turned to God they took their stand with God, who is, and was, and is to come, the Maker of heaven and earth, against the strong delusion and the primeval lie, that the creature can rival and out-rival God. This, so far as it is revealed, is the origin of evil, this is the essence of sin. Lucifer, the Star of the Morning, perhaps the chief of the morning stars who sang together, the firstborn of the sons of God who shouted aloud for joy, when God laid the foundations of the earth, said in his heart, "I will exalt my throne above the stars of God....I will be like the Most High" (Isa. xiv. 12); therefore, God cast him as profane out of the mountain of God (Ezek. xxviii. 1-19).

Sinners tempt others to their own special form of sin; therefore, when man was created and the star who had fallen from his first estate tempted him to sin, it was to the same sin by which he himself had fallen: "Ye shall be as God." And when man's iniquity has come to the full, the Man of Sin will show himself that he is God; the Lawless One, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, will come with all deceit of unrighteousness, and cause that as many as will not worship the image of the Beast should be killed. And God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe THE LIE—the essence of revolt, rebellion, and disobedience—the lie that the creature, whether angelic or human, has successfully usurped the Creator's throne.

THE PRIMEVAL AND ALL-PERVADING LIE,

To turn to God from idols, to turn from Satan to God, is to enter protest against THE LIE; to take our place as his redeemed and willing people, to present our body a living sacrifice, to be transfigured by the renewing of our mind, and to prove what that holy, acceptable, and perfect will of the Lord is. It is, like Enoch, to walk with God, and to have this testimony that we please God. Like Abraham, to walk before Him and be perfect—entirely yielded to God, calculating that God is able to raise up even from the dead, looking for the city which hath the foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God. Like Sarah, to judge Him faithful who hath promised. Like Moses, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Looking away unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of faith; who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. Walking in the light as He is in the light, and having fellowship with God, and consequently with his saints, the blood of Jesus his Son continuously cleansing us from all sin.

THE GOSPEL OF THE GRACE OF GOD.

This is the Gospel of God, the Kingdom of God which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. All the possibilities of saintly life on earth are contained in turning to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from Heaven, whom He raised from the dead, even Jesus, who delivers us from the coming wrath.

Paul and his fellows preached the Gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, spoke as men approved of God to be put in trust with the Gospel, not as pleasing men, but God, who trieth the hearts. Like a nurse, he delighted to impart to them not the Gospel of God only, but his own soul also, because they were dear unto him. And as a father his children, he exhorted, and comforted, and conjured every one of them, that they should walk worthy of God, who called them unto his Kingdom and glory.

He does not say that they turned from idols to God, but that they turned unto God from idols. When we turn to God to serve the living and true God, we necessarily turn from idols, attracted to Him who was lifted up (John xii. 32).

It is not only the dark-skinned races who worship four-footed beasts and creeping things. We are all idolaters and all pantheists except so far as we are worshippers of God. For idolatry does not consist in the idol, but in ourselves. Self is the great all-inclusive idol. When Eve saw that the tree was good for her food, and pleasant to her eyes, and a tree to be desired to make her wise, she was making her own self her god, and then everything in heaven or earth became to her and her seed an idol to be worshipped and served so far as it ministers to

OUR OWN GREAT IDOL, SELF.

Satan is the primeval self-worshipper: he wanted himself to be like the Most High.

There is nothing which cannot become an idol. Our food, our home, our business, our recreation, is all worshipped idolatrously, if not used in the name of the Lord Jesus. Our views, opinions, doctrines, experiences, are all idols so far as they are not held or uttered for God's glory. We may be zealous Protestants, and yet be offering incense to our own drag. Justification by Faith, the test of a standing or a falling Church, may nevertheless be advocated in a spirit of self-idolatry. Holiness, the Deepening of the Spiritual Life, Dispensational Truth, and every other creed or truth, may each be taught and urged, this by one, that by another, because they are our own opinions or the doctrines of our sect or set. And there is no more subtle or influential idol than our own opinion, none more tyrannous or exacting than that of party or denomination. The word loyalty is idolatrously prostituted when in its name we are required in the interest of our country, our denomination, our mission, or our church, to say ditto to anything which we do not believe to be said or done in the name and for the glory of the living and true God.

We may even make God Himself an idol. Idol gods are only men's conceptions deified. The invisible God has been made manifest in Jesus of Nazareth, in whom the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. Whatever in the invisible God is communicable to the creature has been revealed in and by his only-begotten Son. In so far, therefore, as we add to or take from the Divinely-inspired Scripture record of the Christ of God, we modify or pervert its revelation, and to that extent we substitute for the living and true God a deity of our own imagination or conception.

"Little children (for of such is the Kingdom of the Heavens), keep yourselves from idols."

A REMINISCENCE OF WHITEFIELD.

On Sunday, September 30, 1770, at six o'clock in the morning, George Whitefield entered into his heavenly rest. September 30 fell on a Sunday this year. We may profitably recall the circumstances of this devoted servant's end. On Saturday, after having ridden fifteen miles in the morning, he yielded to the entreaties of the people of Exeter, and preached in the fields to a large congregation for nearly two hours. Before going out to do this, one of his friends had said, "Sir, you are more fit to go to bed than to preach." Whitefield answered, "True, sir." Then, turning aside, he clasped his hands together, and, looking up, said, "Lord Jesus, I am weary in thy work, but not of thy work. If I have not yet finished my course, let me go and speak for Thee once more in the fields, seal thy truth, and come home and die."

He rode forward to Newbury Port, the little town in which Lloyd Garrison was born and near which Whittier spent most of his life. In the house of the Presbyterian minister he preached his last sermon, from the staircase, as he was going up to bed. The candle which he held in his hand burnt away, and went out in its socket; the people who filled the pavement in front of the house and crowded the hall, then dispersed. It had long been his habit to rise in the night and pray, and this night, weary and panting, he sat up in bed, and prayed God to bless his preaching on the past day, and his forthcoming services on the Sunday; to bring more souls to Christ; to guide his way; to remember his orphan home; to smile on his congregations and friends in England. Two hours later the end had come. He was only fifty-six years old, but he had been a preacher thirty-four years of that time.

DERBY.—Mr. W. T. Lee, of Plymouth, has concluded a course of lectures on Christian Evidences, in the Temperance Hall, Derby. Night after night large crowds of people—the majority men—have listened with intense interest to the lecturer. A deep spiritual power has pervaded all the meetings. A local branch of the Christian Evidence Society has been formed, and upwards of seventy persons have already joined. A. K. Y.

DUBLIN CONVENTION.

The twenty-first annual Convention was held during the past week in the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street. Chief amongst the speakers were Revs. E. W. Moore, Professor Laidlaw, F. A. C. Lillingston, W. J. Dawson, Pastor Sawday, Richard Hobson, H. Grattan Guinness, D.D., J. A. Brown, Rajputana, and W. F. A. Barber, Central China.

Two addresses were given by Mr. Moore on "The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit," and "The Blessings of Jubilee." In the former his remarks centred round the text, "Know ye not that your bodies are the temple of God and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" In his address on "The Blessings of Jubilee," Mr. Moore enumerated these under five heads, "Redemption, Release, Reunion, Restoration, and Rest."

Rev. Professor Laidlaw prefixed his address on the "Measure of Christian Holiness" by conveying a message from the Perth Convention, which had been held in the second week of September. At the Thursday morning meeting Professor Laidlaw again spoke, this time on the text, "Ye are not your own." He impressed it strongly that believers were purchased and possessed ones—purchased by Christ, and possessed by the Holy Ghost.

Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston addressed the meeting on Tuesday morning on "Growing in love to Christ." He said that this was not a love for any abstract principles. It was a personal love for the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. The great want of to-day is for more secret intercourse with Christ in personal prayer. Suffering, too, is a school in which we would grow in love to Christ. What would cause the believer to grow in love to Christ was close intercourse in prayer, in the study of the Word, in solemn thought, in greater approximation to his character, in greater co-operation with Him in the work which He has given us to perform.

On two occasions during the Convention addresses were delivered by Dr. Guinness. The first was at the Wednesday night meeting, which was exclusively given to Foreign Missions. The claims of the heathen upon the Church at home were forcibly impressed upon all present. The work of the North Africa Mission and of the China Inland Mission was especially dwelt upon, and Dr. Guinness enjoined all to help these missions, which depended for their income upon the voluntary gifts of the Lord's people. On the last day of the meetings Dr. Guinness delivered a stirring address on aggressive Christianity.

Special interest attached to the account which Rev. W. F. A. Barber gave of the work in which he is engaged in China, owing to the fierce war at present absorbing the attention of the Chinese people. He gave realistic sketches of the people in the province where he laboured, and of the encouraging advance of the Gospel amongst them.

Rev. Richard Hobson spoke on the subject of "The Royal Priesthood." Taking as his text 1 Peter ii. 9, he referred to the important question as to whether the ministry was sacerdotal or not. The royal priesthood was, he believed, the priesthood of believers, and included as much the laity as the clergy, and referred to women as well as men. The principal intention of the priesthood was to do the service of God. It was never intended that the clergy should have the sole part in the ministration of the service of God. That belonged to the royal priesthood, and here there was opportunity enough for work, for love, and for consecration. What God wanted was not more books, more sermons, more conventions, but the lives of men and women, that they might be such as to bring glory to Him. What was wanted was the exhibition amongst the people of such a priesthood as was described in the text. If they succeeded in convincing the people that they were the Lord's it was half the battle. "Study to show thyself approved," and then God is praised.

Rev. W. J. Dawson had a special word for young men. He hoped that the young men of the present day would recognise the Divineness of the Divinest Young Man that ever lived. They should have (1) right thinking, (2) right emotion, and (3) right conduct. Their life would never be right unless their thoughts were right.

The afternoon meeting upon Wednesday was devoted to a Conference on Christian Reunion in Ireland, and papers dealing with the question were read by Rev. R. D. Bluett (Episcopalian), Rev. S. Prenter (Presbyterian), Rev. Wallace McMullan (Methodist). A discussion followed in which Dr. Fletcher, Rev. D. Osborne, Rev. J. Crookshank, and Mr. J. R. Fowler took part.

Pastor Sawday, of Leeds, delivered an able address upon "The Breadth and Depth of our Faith." There was no subject more worthy of their consideration than that of their trust in God. Christ manifested a great interest in the faith of man. He looked for it, and searched for it, and was delighted when He found it, and praised it, as He did in the case of the centurion, when He said, "I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel." Christ often blamed the Apostles because they had so little faith. In these days doubt is at a premium, and faith is not esteemed so highly as it ought to be. They had all heard a great deal about "honest doubt," but it was by faith that they were really able to understand the things that pertain unto God. By faith they received without hesitation the teaching of the Holy Scriptures, as regards the creation and the fall, the redemption and the restoration of man. There was great power in prayer and all should be able to say, "Lord, I believe; help Thou my unbelief."

THE MISSIONARY CRISIS.

The present crisis of the Baptist Missionary Society formed the subject of an interesting discussion at Milford-on-Sea on Tuesday, Sept. 25, where the Lymington District of the Southern Baptist Association held its meetings. The subject was introduced by Rev. John Collins, of Lymington, who spoke of the need of larger contributions from the churches if the society is to maintain the work at its present strength. He made reference to the Prayer Union Scheme for daily praying and daily giving, which Mr. Wainwright (of Bournemouth) had instituted with such success, and recommended the adoption of some similar scheme by all the churches. A resolution to this effect was passed.

The same subject in connection with the London Missionary Society came before the Dorset Union of Congregational churches, which met at Poole on Tuesday and Wednesday, September 25 and 26. In connection with the centenary celebration, it is hoped that £100,000 will be raised. "The Forward Movement" of the Society has led into financial difficulties, which can only be met by much larger funds being contributed by the churches.

Other societies are feeling the same strain. Surely the time has come for considering whether the best methods of interesting the churches [in missionary work have been adopted. Our contention has long been that the churches and the missionaries need to be brought more closely together. There are very many churches that could easily support one or more missionaries of their own, and by continual communication with, and prayer for, these missionaries the interest of the churches would be deepened and their gifts greatly increased. The adoption of this scheme in the church at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, has enabled the church, even though burdened with a heavy debt, to send over £200 to the Missionary Society for the financial year which closed last March. The quarterly meetings, at which there is always a letter read from the missionary whom the Prayer Union supports, are most interesting and helpful. We earnestly commend the adoption of such a scheme to the churches throughout the country.

We hear with pleasure that something of this kind is being established at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, where Mr. Wainwright expounded his scheme about a month ago. And a small church in Stockton, which is struggling with difficulty of its own, has formed a Prayer Union.

The interest and practical help of the ministers would result in an entire removal of the burden of difficulty of which our societies complain. The work of evangelising the whole world does not belong to missionary committees, but to the churches of Jesus Christ everywhere. The missionaries are not the messengers and servants of the committees, but "the messengers of the Churches, and the glory of Christ." To leave everything in the hands of our committees is a mistake. They ought not to be burdened with the task of creating interest in the churches, and securing funds for the work. This the churches should do alone. And they are not unwilling to do it if some practicable scheme is presented to them. Churches that pay their ministers £500 a year, and do not give more than £50 to the work of foreign missions, have never been brought face to face with their own privilege and responsibility.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

In its issue of August 24, The Southern Cross, of Melbourne, has the following editorial notes on the recent mission by these brethren in Melbourne:—

"There is no doubt Mr. M'Neill's ministry has profoundly affected multitudes. Melbourne just now has in it hosts of men whose fortunes are temporarily wrecked, who have been smitten and scourged by 'unmerciful disaster,' who have half lost their faith both in God and man, and who feel very much as the survivors from some great shipwreck, who have just crept ashore through the breakers and lie battered and broken on the sands, might feel. To such as these Mr. M'Neill has a special message. He stands before them overrunning with vitality, the very figure of exultant strength; and the secret of his own strength he is able to teach to others. His courage flows from a Divine spring. His strength has its root in God. Multitudes, we are sure, have found in Mr. M'Neill's teaching and influence a new inspiration for life. The 'testimony' meeting held on Monday evening was very striking. For more than an hour men and women, singly or in groups, rose without an instant's interval to bear eager testimony to the benefit which they had received from Mr. M'Neill's mission, But there are thousands who could not attend that meeting who yet in their hearts bless God every day for the message which has reached them through his servant's lips.

"A noteworthy feature of the services in the Town Hall was the manner in which they served as a meeting point for men of all creeds and churches. Churchmen, Calvinists and Arminians, Jews and Catholics, Salvation Army recruits and curates from fashionable suburbs, all crowded to them, and were melted by their fire, or swept away in the torrent of feeling they generated. When the great common truths of Christianity are declared with spiritual power and directness, and the conscience is stirred, and the affections which yearn after God, and the hopes and fears which look towards eternity, awaken, all outside distinctions melt and vanish."

BENDIGO.

"The arrival of the evangelists here was not marked by any demonstration, as they had intimated their desire that no public reception should take place. The members of the committee and a number of ministers, however, assembled on the railway platform, and Rev. C. Tregear, president of the Christian Endeavour Union, extended a welcome to Bendigo on behalf of the various congregations. The party adjourned to the Coffee Palace, where a conference was held as to the working of the mission. The first meeting was held at the Royal Princess Theatre on Sunday afternoon, and long before the time announced for commencing the building was crowded in all parts, and numbers had to be turned away."

IS IT DEATH TO DIE?

THE CHRISTIAN'S ANSWER.

'Tis not death, 'tis softly sleeping,
Sorrowing never more, nor weeping,
Safe beneath the Saviour's keeping.

'Tis not death; 'tis only waiting,
Soul and body's reinstating—
Thence joy's fullest portion dating.

'Tis not death, 'tis spirit-soaring,
Loosed from earth's uncertain mooring.
Love—immortal love—adoring.

'Tis not death; 'tis peaceful slumbering,
Care no more the soul encumbering,
Heaven another ransom'd numbering.

'Tis not death; 'tis but dividing
Tenants 'neath one roof residing,
All the precious still abiding.

Death? One enters life in dying,
Nobler life the change supplying,
Death, decay, and want defying!

Shout for Christ, o'er death victorious,
Waves the victor's banner o'er us!
Life is won! eternal, glorious!

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—In connection with this Society thirteen missionaries (twelve ladies and one gentleman) sailed last week per Peninsula and Oriental steamship Oceana for China. Nine of the missionaries are going out for the first time.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 7.—NAHUM I.

The Character of God (1-8).—The word burden indicates that the message of the book weighed down the soul of the speaker, and was full of sorrow. After repenting beneath the preaching of Jonah, Nineveh relapsed into her former sins, and under Sennacherib set herself to uproot the chosen people. (2) The love of God makes Him quick to avenge the wrongs of his own. (3) In these sublime words we have his attitude to his foes. He waits until their sin is full. (4-6) If the oaks of Bashan, and the strength of Carmel, and the beauty of Lebanon languish beneath his breath; if the mountains quake, and the earth is upheaved; who can stand before his indignation? All nature witnesses to the greatness of God. How impossible it is for the soul of man to resist Him and prosper! Pharaoh, Herod, Pilate, and many others attest the impossibility of persisting in sin, and prospering. (7) But how tender is God to those who make Him their stronghold, and shelter in Him. He recognises them as his own, and sets a mark on them. Amid the crash of nature, and the wreck of empires, He brings his Lots out of Sodom, and shelters the Hebrew children in the furnace. He forgets sins, but never his children.

An Address to the Assyrians (9-11).—The prophet suggests how mad the Assyrians were to enter into conflict with such a God! This "full end" was exactly realised in the overthrow of Sennacherib's host. There was no need for Jehovah to inflict a second blow. (10) Matted thorns are flung promiscuously into the fire, so complete would be the destruction of Assyria. (11) This probably refers to Sennacherib himself plotting against Jewish liberty.

Jehovah's Address to Judah (12-15).—God repeats with his own words the assurances of the prophets. (12, 13) What a contrast between the thee and they of these verses! For his people no more affliction, and liberty from the oppressor's yoke; but for the oppressor, cutting down and passing away. (14) The dynasty of the kings of Nineveh would become extinct, and their idols cut to pieces. We are reminded that Sennacherib's idol temple became literally his grave, for he was slain there (Isa. xxxvii. 38). (15) When the anguish has passed let us not forget to perform the vows we made. God grant that the dominion of sin and Satan may be broken in our experience!

MONDAY, OCTOBER 8.—NAHUM II.

The Attack of Nineveh (1—6).—The people of Nineveh are bidden to prepare themselves against the Medo-Babylonian army, which is on its march for its destruction. The advice is ironical—as much as to say, "Watch as you will, fortify as you may, it will be in vain." (2) God had used Nineveh for the chastisement of the ten tribes; now, in turn, she must be cast aside for her sins. (3) This refers to the army attacking Nineveh; the soldiers wore crimson tunics, and the chariot wheels were furnished with scythes, that flashed as they revolved. The fir-tree lances or spears were brandished to strike terror. (4) The chariots filled the streets of Nineveh, as the king mustered them for defence. He reviewed his nobles, selecting the bravest to repel the attack; but in vain; the machines used for the siege are already against the wall, and the invaders are already entering by the river gates, and passing along the dried-up bed of the stream.

The Captivity of Nineveh (7-13).—Huzzab was the name of Nineveh's queen, and stands for the whole city, which is compared to a female slave with bare face and legs, going into captivity. The women beat on their breasts as on a tambourine. (8) Though Nineveh was defended by her river, her citizens would flee. No remonstrances would stay their flight. (9) The conquerors are bidden to sack the city. (11) She is compared to a den of lions filled with bones, which was to be demolished. Fire and sword completed the ruin of Nineveh.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 9.—NAHUM III.

The Crimes of Nineveh (1-7).—The cities of the world are all founded in blood. The oppressed, the weak, women, children, in their agony, have been trodden down into the very foundations on which they stand. What a contrast to the New Jerusalem, which is based on the blood of the Son of God, freely shed. (2) We are plunged into the midst of the fight—the horsemen mounting, the wheels of the chariots flashing, sword and spear glittering, corpses of men littering the ground so that the soldiers stumble over them. As Nineveh had given herself to blood, her sun sets in blood. (4) And as she had wallowed in impurity, so would she be exposed to the public disgrace and shame with which infamous women were treated.

The Certainty of Her Fall (8-13).—It seemed incredible that so great a city should become desolate, but she is reminded of the populous Thebes, specially devoted to Ammon, the Egyptian Jupiter. As this great city had been overwhelmed by Assyria, so Nineveh should be by the Chaldeans. The Nile, like a small sea, defended Thebes. She numbered amongst her auxiliaries Ethiopia and other nations (Put, i.e., Lower Egypt; Lubim, i.e., the Libyans), but in spite of all she fell, and her people went into captivity. (11) Similarly Nineveh would drink of the same cup, would be covered with the same sands of oblivion, and would be compelled to seek for defence and assistance from the foe. (12) Her fall would be as easy as an over-ripe fig. (13) The guarded passes of the hills and the gates of the cities would be roadways for the advance of the destroyer.

An Ironical Exhortation (14-19).—She might provision herself, and repair the breaches in her walls with new bricks, but in vain. (15) The traces of fire are still remaining on the walls of her excavated palaces. (16) Recent excavations have remarkably verified these references to the immense trade of Nineveh. (17) The locust has a kind of crown on its head, and the military leaders had been numerous as locusts, but they would flee away, as utterly as a swarm of locusts rising from a field at sunrise, and of which no trace is left. (18) The silence of death settles upon nobles and princes, the people are scattered, and the world is glad because the tyrant city has passed, never to return. So the saints and martyrs rejoice at the fall of Babylon the great.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10.—HABAKKUK I.

The Sins of Judah (1-4).—Habakkuk means "strong embrace," as though the prophet clung close to God amid the perplexities of his time. Like all the prophets, he is burdened with the sins of the people. He pleads that the rampant evils may be stayed, but it seems as though his prayers were unheard.

Jehovah's Answer (5-11).—The first verse of this paragraph is quoted by the Apostle (Acts xiii. 41). God answers the cry of his servant by telling him that He is about to punish the sins of his people, in bringing upon them the Chaldeans, who shall invade the country. (7) Terrible in their appearance, dreadful in the treatment of the people, self-reliant and tyrannical. (8) The swiftness of the leopard, the fierceness of the wolf, the rapacity of the eagle, would be combined in the horsemen, spreading themselves, like the Uhlans of modern warfare, over the country for plunder. (9) They would parch and destroy everything, like the east wind. (10) The heaping up of the mound foreshadows the approaching siege of Jerusalem. (11) After unbroken successes, the Chaldeans would become elated and self-confident, and their pride would become their ruin. The ascription of success to their idols which was really due to God, would seal their doom.

The Prophet's Intercession (12-17).—After witnessing the devastation of the Chaldeans, Habakkuk turns to Jehovah, whom he addresses by many devout appellations, and asks Him, for the sake of his unchangeable justice, to punish the rapacious foes of his people. Surely God could not allow oppressors to go unpunished, who dealt treacherously, and devoured the righteous, and caught men, as fishers the fish which have no ruler, i.e., none to defend or care for them. (16) In proud self-sufficiency the Chaldeans described their victory to their own prowess. They emptied their nets as fishermen do before they seek a fresh draught, and the prophet argued that God could not stand by without avenging his people's wrong. Always remember that you are but an instrument in God's hand, and never boast in your strength or success; never sacrifice to your own net.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11.—HABAKKUK II.

Waiting for the Answer (1-4).—Having uttered his prayer, the prophet looks for an answer as the watchman who scans the horizon. Note R.V., "What He will speak with me, and what I shall answer concerning my complaint." Having prayed, expect an answer, and wait for it. The answer was to be written legibly, so that the hasty passer-by might read it, and on enduring materials, because some time must elapse before it could be fulfilled. (3) But it was sure to be realised. And then occurs that wonderful sentence so often referred to in the Word of God (Rom. i. 17; Gal. ii. 16, iii. 11), which tells how life may be obtained and maintained by faith in the ever-living God. Through the long waiting times, the only source of continued life is the faith which draws it from God.

The Sins of Babylon (5-20).—Mark the successive woes before her sins. (5, 6) Proud, treacherous, drink-loving, insatiable of conquest, and laden with the spoils of the nations. (7, 8) But those who had been trodden down should presently arise. As Babylon had treated the world, so would the nations treat her, and the violence, cruelty, rapine with which she had devastated the lands would be her lot. (9-11) Evil covetousness was one of Babylon's sins. She built high towers with the thought of becoming impregnable to all calamity, but the very materials of her palaces would cry for vengeance against her kings. (12-14) The violence of Babylon. It could not be God's will that the mighty city should flourish on the anguish of the world, and therefore all for which the captive nations had been compelled to contribute would be consumed by the fire, and yielded to vanity, that there might be no barrier to the full manifestation of God's glory throughout the world. (15-17) An insatiable thirst for blood and violence would be recompensed by violence and blood. (18-20) The idolatry of Babylon was in frightful contrast to the holiness and glory of Jehovah whose temple was in Jerusalem, but the dumb gods that had no breath could not avail their votaries, whilst Jehovah demanded, and must receive, the reverent submission and subjection of all mankind. When God is in the temple of the heart, it is still.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 12.—HABAKKUK III.

God's Interposition for his People (1-15).—Habakkuk prepared this prayer for his people to use in their exile, and in the fabric of the prayer are mingled expressions of trust and praise. It was set to Shigioneth, a musical phrase indicative of plaintive melodies. (2) Having heard God's revelation of his judgments on his people, and the ultimate destruction of their foes, the prophet was smitten with godly fear; and prays that withal God would revive his work in the midst of the years of captivity, and make his gracious power known. (3) In the following verses, the deliverances and interpositions of the past are used as symbols of the future. Teman and Paran lay to the south of Judah, and lead our thoughts to Sinai, and the giving of the Law. Selah, a musical phrase for a pause, for reflection or to change the modulation. (4) The horns were rays of light, see R.V.; but though there were manifestations of the Divine power, the power itself was hidden. (5) As against the enemies of Israel (1 Sam. v. 9-11; Psa. xci. 6). (6) The glance of God measuring or surveying the earth conveys terror to his foes everywhere: so it was at Sinai, and as it was then, it must ever be. (7) The dwellers around the Arabian Gulf and the Red Sea are described as having been panic-stricken at the tidings of God's interposition for his people. (8) No, it was not in wrath, but to make way for the Divine chariots of salvation. (9) As He had promised, so He performed, drawing his bow completely out of its cover. And if He did that in old time because of the oath He made to Abraham, surely He would be equally true to all that He had promised through the lips of the prophets. (11) To the imagery borrowed from the Exodus, the prophet here adds that of the wonderful interposition at Gibeon, when Joshua called to sun and moon to stand still (Josh. x. 12, 13). (13) The princes of the confederate nations suffered in the day of Gibeon, and they would again. Heads though they might be, they would not escape. Like an inundation the Divine wrath would submerge the land even to the neck. (14, 15) Neither winds nor storms avail to stay the Divine march for the salvation of the children of Israel.

The Emotions of the Prophet (16-19).—We may tremble, and get rest. In the day of trouble we may ever hide in God. The troops of the foe may gather for the attack, but they cannot penetrate to the secret place of the Most High. (17) When the outward world is smitten with famine or drought, the worldling loses heart, but the believer, amid it all, stedfastly and lovingly waits on God. We can always rejoice in the Lord, though our circumstances may be adverse. (19) Ps. xviii. 33, 34. Oh for grace to walk and sit in the heavenlies, and to keep our footing amid the temptations to slide and fall.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13.—ZEPHANIAH I.

The Destruction of the Idolatrous Jews (1-6).—The prophet plunges into awful threatenings of the universal destruction which was to fall on Judah. The fowls and fish are mentioned to show how searching and far-spread it would be. The Chemarims were the black-robed priests of Baal, and Melcham is the same as Moloch and Milcom.

The Successive Objects of Destruction (7-13).—Punishment was near. God had consecrated his guests, that is, the Chaldean invaders, who, so to speak, were to banquet in the doomed land. (8-9) The princes, who ought to have given better examples, the royal family, the courtiers attired in imported garments, the votaries of idol gods that leapt across the threshold of their temples (1 Sam. v. 5), and the menials who filled their masters' houses with violence and fraud would be the first to suffer. (10-13) In these words the prophets describe the sack of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, who entered by the Fish Gate. Maktesh was probably the Valley of Siloam, where the merchant people of Jerusalem greedily pursued their gains, of which the invader would despoil them. As God searched Jerusalem with candles, so He searches hearts. When men are most secure, they are nearest destruction.

Fearful and Inevitable Punishment (14-18).—There is a great similarity in the Hebrew of these words, expressing the monotony of desolation which was to overtake the Jews. Words terribly fulfilled in the successive invasion of Judah, in the fall of Jerusalem under Nebuchadnezzar and Titus, and emblematic of the destruction of sinful men in the second death.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 14.

The Draught of Fishes.—Luke v. 1-11.

Golden Text.—Mark i. 17.

The scene of this incident is the Sea of Galilee, sometimes called Tiberias, from the city of that name on its western shore; and here called Gennesaret, a name suggested by a plain between the cities of Capernaum and Magdala. It is about fourteen miles long and nine wide, and is over 600ft. below the level of the Mediterranean Sea. It is fed by the river Jordan. "Seen from the surrounding heights, it is a fine sheet of water, a burnished mirror set in a framework of hills and rugged mountains, which rise and roll backward and upward to where Hermon hangs the picture against the blue vault of heaven." The neighbourhood of this lake was the most thickly populated part of Palestine. As the centre of much of our Lord's ministry it is a place of special interest to us.

The occasion was the calling into closer fellowship with Himself of four of his disciples. Hitherto they had been with Him as disciples and followers, but from this time they were to be entirely given up to his service (11). Godet calls it the founding of the Christian ministry. (See also Matt. iv. 18-22; Mark i. 16-20.)

Jesus Preaching to the Multitude (1-3). — He had no difficulty in drawing a congregation. The eagerness of the large crowd caused them to "press upon Him" (1). Simon's fishing boat becomes his pulpit (3), in which, at some little distance from the shore, He teaches the people. "At the north end of the Lake there are small creeks, or inlets, where the ship could ride in safety only a few feet from the shore, and where the multitudes, seated on both sides and before the boat, could listen without distraction or fatigue. As if on purpose to furnish seats, the shores on both sides of these narrow inlets are piled up with smooth bundles of basalt."—Thomson.

Lessons:—(1) Our Lord speaks to men in their ordinary occupation—to the shepherds at Bethlehem while they tended their flocks; to the Magi while they watched the stars; to Matthew at the receipt of custom; and to these men at their fishing. (2) The commonest things may be sanctified to his use. What could be more ordinary than a fishing boat? yet how it is immediately transfigured when Jesus enters it! Keep back nothing from Him. (3) Any place can be a pulpit for Jesus. He is willing to use every man's business or home for this highest of purposes. Be imitators of Him in using every means for spreading the Gospel. A heap of stones by the wayside makes a good pulpit for a preacher.

The Miraculous Draught of Fishes (4-9).—Note (1) Peter's obedience to a strange command. (4) After a fruitless night of toil what use was it to cast the net in the daytime? Peter may have thought the command a strange one; but he knew enough of Jesus already not to question his wisdom. He obeyed in faith. It is always wise to obey our Lord, however strange his commands may be. (2) How great the miracle was. Whether our Lord brought the fish to the boat by his power, or saw them gathering, is immaterial. In either case the miracle is just as great (Psa. viii. 8). And such a multitude! Tristram says: "The thickness of the shoals of fish in the Lake of Gennesaret is almost incredible. . . . They often cover an area of more than an acre." (3) The effect upon Peter (8). What caused it? If he had been like the Gadarenes (viii. 37), we might have concluded that it was the rending of his net and the danger to his boat that prompted his strange exclamation. But it was prompted rather by a sense of his own sinfulness, deepened by means of the display of Divine power he had just witnessed. It corresponds to the cry of Isaiah when he beheld the glory of the Lord (vi. 1-7). A deep sense of unworthiness and unfitness is the first qualification for being used of God. (4) It was a significant miracle. Did not Peter recall the emblem here given when he saw the three thousand gathered on the Day of Pentecost? (5) It was also our Lord's return to Peter for the use of his boat. No man loses by giving to Jesus.

The Call (10, 11).—The sons of Zebedee are mentioned as partners with Peter. They were probably in the other ship, and had come when the great draught had been taken (7). The call, though addressed to Peter, is intended for all, and is obeyed by all (11). His earthly calling furnishes a picture of what his future work was to be. The sea is the world; the net is the Gospel; the servants of God are the fishers, without whom the net would catch none; and this incident teaches that truest success is found in the path of obedience to the word of Christ.

FLOWERS AMONG JEWISH CHILDREN.

One sultry morning in the month of August last, I alighted at the grimy Bishopsgate station, on the Great Eastern Railway. Outside the gate I turned sharply to the left, past those tall and ancient houses with long rows of windows, once occupied by the old Spitalfields weavers, descendants of the French refugee Huguenots. Further on I came to a still taller block of buildings, known as "models," and mostly occupied by another class of refugees, Jews fleeing from persecution in Russia and Poland. There, to my great joy, I saw a real little "sister of mercy" carrying a rustic basket which had been full, but was now emptied, of flowers.

"What brings you here?" I asked. But ere the question was answered we were joined by another lady.

"What are you two up to in this sunless and murky spot?" I asked again.

The secret was soon disclosed, for by this time we were surrounded by a motley group of swarthy and olive-complexioned girls and boys, who were evidently of the Hebrew race. They were clamouring, not for backsheesh, but for flowers—crying, "Do, please, give us some." But all were gone, save that at the bottom of the basket the visitors found a few scattered grasses and hedgerow weeds. These they gathered, and shared them round to the eager children, who hailed them as something that told of the country which God made, and of which they seemed to know very little.

"What is the secret of all this?" I asked.

"Oh," said the young Flower Mission worker, "this is how my sister, who is in the 'Joyful News' Mission, but is at present home for a rest, spends part of her holiday with me, helping to distribute flowers to these dear little Jewish girls and boys."

I do not think my young readers know how acceptable even the simplest flowers and ferns are to such as live in these closely-packed neighbourhoods, where the prevailing smell seems to be the odour arising from the steam of the neighbouring brewery. Why have I told you this little street scene? What is the outcome of it to be? Why, what can it be, but to ask, what are you doing for God, who has done so much for you? You may have a mind to help, and may not know how. Then ask that you may be guided as to what Jesus wants you to do. If you really wish to do something, He may honour you to help these dear little ones, of whom our Saviour said, "Let the little ones come unto Me." Some day you may know more of the good work done by means of sweet flowers among those young descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, whom many of us are desirous to bring to the feet of Jesus. Remember that there are already many who are fully trusting in Jesus as their own Messiah, reading the New Testament as well as the Old, praying to Him, and singing those precious hymns about Him just as you do. Perhaps—I do not know, but perhaps—I may tell you more about these. For the present, adieu! Uncle Felix.

C.S.S.M. EXMOUTH.

The sands this summer were again used for the preaching of the Gospel to the young folks, and we rejoice to offer up our thanksgiving to God for his blessing on our labours. We would draw attention to how one afternoon was most pleasantly, and we believe profitably, spent. At 2.30 our young friends gathered at the usual place, and nineteen entered for the following competition. Each received a paper with a text on it, and a plot of sand, and with the seaweed and shells already gathered, they were then set to work to form the words on the sand. After toiling for nearly two hours labour ceased, and the work was judged, prizes being awarded for the best workmanship. Great was the interest shown, many visitors gathering round to view and pass remarks on the works of arts. Our hearts were lifted up in prayer that God's Word might be indelibly written on hearts and memories. The following were amongst the texts chosen:—"All have sinned," "Justified by faith," "Thou art the Christ," "Follow thou Me," "One thing I know," "Watch and pray," etc., etc.

LETTER FROM A LEPER.

Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, of the Mission to Lepers in India, sends us the following translation of a letter, just received from Dayamony (A Pearl of Grace) by the lady friend in England who is responsible for her support. Mr. Bailey's address is: 17, Greenhill-place, Edinburgh:—

Purulia, August 21, 1894.

My Dear Mother,—I have not written to you for a long time. I am a sick and helpless woman and full of pains in my body. This makes me unfit to do any work, but you must not be sorry about that. So far as can be expected of such sick people, I am doing well. The house in which I live is full of sufferers, but we are happy in one way, and that is that we have come to know this suffering is not for ever, but for a short time only in comparison with the long eternity.

I am happy to inform you that we are kept well here, and Mr. Uffman cares for us. He sent me recently four pairs of old shoes, which are so useful for my wounded feet. I cannot see my mother in this world; in the world to come I do not know whether I shall see her, or in what condition I may see her. Instead of her I look at your photo, and that makes me happy. I rejoice that I have got another mother here in this world, and I am sure to see you in the glory of heaven. Now I have one desire, and that is to ask you to be kind enough to let me have one warm cloth for the cold season. It is not necessary that it should be new, but warm, and I hope to get it in October next, together with a letter from you.

From my childhood I have had to fight with much distress. When I came of age, according to the Hindu laws, I was married. Soon after my marriage I was overtaken with this disease, and what an acquaintance! I tried some medicine to cure it, but in vain; and the result was that my husband turned me out of home. I went to the house of my father, and after some time someone advised me to go to the Sivdwala (house of the god Siva) and worship there. I went, and was lying on the ground for twenty-six days, spending day and night in fasting and prayers, crying, so far as I understood, to the gods for mercy. Every twenty-four hours (at sunset) I took a mouthful of dry corn; that was all I had during these twenty-six days, but I got no answer, nor did the god Siva appear before me to console me. I left that place much disappointed, and went home; but when my family found that my pilgrimage had been useless, I was told that for such people as I was Homes had been built at Purulia, and that I had better go there.

With great sorrow I received this news, but took my only child in my lap, and sheltered for four days under a tree; then, with a broken heart and sorrowful face, I started alone for Purulia, to see what people would do for me there. When I arrived at Purulia, I was very kindly received, like others here are. Here it was that I first heard the name of Jesus our Saviour, and where I learned the great difference between heathenism and Christianity. And then I began to thank God for all the loving kindness He had shown me, and to realise that the disease was but a token of love towards me. I know I cannot thank the great God in this world as I should do, but I hope to do so with my whole heart when I arrive in heaven, where also I shall see you just as you are. Please pray for me, as I do for you, that I may be able to bear my pains with patience.—Your daughter in Christ, (Signed) Dayamony.

Who Are Israel?

MR. H. D. BROWN'S REPLY TO MR. BARON.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to say a few words with reference to my friend Mr. Baron's reply to my articles on the above subject, which appeared in your issues of August 16 and 23? With very much of his reply I am in the fullest accordance, but evidently he has in some measure misunderstood the purport of what I wrote, and it may be helpful if I briefly refer, first, to the chief points of agreement, and then to those of divergence. But first let me explain—for some have mistaken the question—that the view I put forth has not the remotest connection with what is known as "Anglo-Israelism," or any attempt to discover the whereabouts of the lost ten tribes. All that I say about Israel refers only to true believers in Christ.

First.—With regard to the literal interpretation of prophecy. This I fully accept. I believe that all Scripture which is not obviously symbolic or figurative is to be understood literally. But I think I go even further than Mr. Baron in this, for I believe that the same rule holds good for the New Testament as for the Old. For instance, with respect to a passage in Isaiah, to which Mr. Baron evidently refers, I believe that "a wolf" means a wolf, and not "a bad man," but at the same time when I read in Ephesians that we who "were in time past Gentiles in the flesh," are no longer such, but belong now to "the commonwealth of Israel," I understand this to be literal also.

Second.—We are evidently in the fullest agreement concerning the high and central position which God has given to the nation of Israel among the nations of the earth, the place they still occupy in the purposes of God, and the prophecies relating to their future return to the land, their conversion and their millennial glory. That God in his "unsearchable wisdom and knowledge" chose out a people—"the fewest of all peoples"—to whom He revealed Himself as to no other people on the earth, whom He guarded, governed, and taught, to whom "were committed the oracles of God," and of whom, above all things, "as concerning the flesh, Christ came," is the most patent fact in the history of the world. That that people still exists, scattered throughout the world, yet kept separate from the other nations, is a standing witness to the truth of God; and that the time is drawing near for their return to their own land, preparatory to their being restored again to their place of honour among the nations, when "they shall no more again stay upon him that smote them, but shall stay upon the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, in truth," there are abundant signs in the present day.

In all this we are perfectly agreed; but my contention is that while they remain in unbelief they are in the same position spiritually as unbelieving Gentiles, and have no claim to the promises, which they never can inherit except upon the same ground as we now do, namely, a living union with the Lord Jesus Christ through faith in His name.

Third.—Mr. Baron substantially repeats what I myself said concerning "the holy seed," when he says, "The line of faith in Israel was never broken. . . . . At times out of the whole nation there may only be found, as in Elijah's time, 7000 men 'reserved' by God for Himself, and kept by His grace from bowing their knees to Baal; but still that little handful were 'the Israel of God,' handers-on of the promises to those that should follow them." And again: "This truth is proclaimed with equal force by all the Old Testament prophets, who no more confound the Israel of God with 'the apostate Jewish race' than the Apostles confound the Church of God with the apostate Gentile nations to which her members may happen variously to belong."

This is exactly in the line of my argument; but where we differ is in this—that Mr. Baron believes that in the present dispensation the Israel of God consists solely of converted Jews, and that they are in this sense a separate body from converted Gentiles. But where is this taught in the New Testament? or how does it coincide with our Lord's statement regarding "the sheep" He led out of the Jewish fold and the "other sheep" which He must bring, that they should be ONE FLOCK? or with the words of the Holy Ghost by the apostle Paul to the Ephesians, that believing Jews and Gentiles should not only be "fellow-citizens" and "fellow-heirs," but ONE TEMPLE, and "OF THE SAME BODY"? Again, in Rom. xi., Paul, addressing Gentile converts, said, "If some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert graffed in among [marg. for] them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree"; not that we became a new plant, but were graffed into, and so became part of, the old stock, into which "they also, if they abide not in unbelief, shall be graffed in, for God is able to graff them in again." Could anything set forth more plainly our ONENESS, not only with our Jewish brethren in the present dispensation, but also with all the true Israel, both of the past and the future? Peter also said (Acts xv. 9), "God put no difference between us and them," and, if so, why should we put a difference?

The importance of the subject is, I think, well illustrated by Mr. Baron's statement that Gentile believers as "the seed of Abraham" are only heirs of the promises made to Abraham before he was circumcised. This seems to me a very strange interpretation of Rom. iv., and if it were true, from how large a portion of the "exceeding great and precious promises" would we be cut off! for nearly the whole of these were given to Israel, and if we belong not to Israel what inheritance have we in them? True, he allows that the promises given to Abraham in uncircumcision "include all that is in the Gospel," but does not the Gospel begin in Genesis and end in Revelation?

Mr. Baron says:—

> We may even apply to ourselves or the Church as a whole promises which primarily concern Israel as a nation, if only we do not give people the mistaken idea that the application is the interpretation. We may point out the fact that in the infinite grace of God, we are now in the enjoyment of those spiritual blessings and privileges from which Israel, as a nation, has for a time been excluded owing to his unbelief.

But it is one thing to be a guest—even a welcome and honoured guest—in a rich man's house, partaking of all his dainties and enjoying the best that his estate affords, and quite another to know that you are yourself the rightful inheritor of the whole estate; so it is one thing to be permitted to feed in the rich pastures of the Old Testament Scriptures, and another to be able to claim them as all our own; to know when we read of God, the God of Israel, that He is our God, Jehovah the Shepherd of Israel, that He is our Shepherd, and when He speaks in tones of tender love and blessing to "His people Israel," to know that it is the people to whom we belong. I am aware that the promises concerning the land and the millennial glory cannot be fulfilled until the nation of Israel is restored, but even these are closely interjoined with the spiritual blessings; and believers in every age are "the handers-on of the promises to them which follow."

Mr. Baron says, "To say that the specific promises to Israel have been transferred to the Church, is to assert that God is mutable"; but this is the very conclusion which Paul disclaims when he says, "Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect, for they are not all Israel which are of Israel. . . . but in Isaac shall thy seed be called." And to the Galatians he writes, "Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise."

Mr. Baron makes a distinction between the Church of God and the Israel of God, but the New Testament throughout declares their identity. I have already referred to several passages showing this, and will now mention only two others. In Numb. vi. 27 we read, "They shall put MY NAME upon the children of Israel." Compare Amos ix. 12, quoted in Acts xv. 17, "That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom MY NAME is called." As different names are given to Christ to signify his different relationships to His people, so different names are given to His people to signify their different relationships to Him; but much mystification arises from the attempt in modern times to apply the different names to different peoples. In Rev. xxi. we read that "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife," is called "the holy Jerusalem," which "had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel." True, this is symbol, but is not the meaning of the symbol that none but they who bear the name of Israel have a right to enter the holy city, and that Israel and the Bride are one?

Mr. Baron's strongest point, and one on which he lays much stress, is his reference to Gal. vi. 16, "And upon the Israel of God." But here, as in many other cases, the conjunction is by some rendered "even," and this passage thus shown to be in line with the emphatic teaching of the New Testament to which I have referred, that the people of God are one people from beginning to end, but with different environments in different dispensations.

[Mr. Baron has read this paper, and makes the following remark:—"I by no means conveyed the idea that within the Church there is a difference between believing Jews and believing Gentiles. What I stated was that the believing section of the Jewish people now constitutes "the Israel of God" in relation to the nation; that in it is kept up the line of faith, and that it supplies the link between the past and future of the nation in relation to the purpose of God."—ED.]

WHY ARE YOU DEAF?

Some years ago a dark speck gleamed over my horizon,
The land of silence, cold and new,
Yawned open! and my soul foreknew
Her desolation there.

IT was very hard to say "Yes" to God.

Why does my Heavenly Father withdraw from me that very precious gift his own hand has given?

A dear little child, barely three years old, with wondering eyes peering up into my face, and lifting her rosy lips up to my trumpet, said repeatedly:

"Why are 'ou deaf?"

"My darling, God knows, and that is quite enough for you and for me."

Again the sweet child drew near, and said quaintly, "Are 'ou going to heaven?" Little did she know she had touched a rainbow to light up the cloud with the bright hope beyond.

Then another little ministering child brought me comfort. He was the son of a policeman in my district; he worked a marker for my Bible, and sent it me. The words were, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

"What strange words to choose for one who is deaf," I exclaimed.

The heaven-taught child sweetly said to his mother, "She can hear God's voice when all other voices are silent." A bright Sabbath day, God showed me that his fulness can abundantly fill earth's emptiness.

I was in church; an oppressive silence reigned around. Rev. W. Carlile, of the Church Army, entered the pulpit, and as he knelt in prayer, I prayed, "My Heavenly Father, whilst others are being fed, I beseech thee, do Thou feed me, even me."

Then I looked into God's Word for comfort, and to my unspeakable delight and amazement, it opened just on the text, "Verily thou shalt be fed."

God gave me a grand feast that morning. "Who teacheth like Him?"

The Lord shall satisfy thy soul in drought.
Thou shalt drink of the river of my pleasures.
Yes! I have proved thy faithful word is true,
Just as a mother will I comfort you.
O bruisèd Saviour! Thou wilt never break
The bruisèd reed, and never wilt thou take
Thine arm from underneath thy leaning child,
Who trusts and clings throughout the desert wild.

A deaf person asked a friend, "Can I expect, at a forthcoming convention for deepening spiritual life, to get a blessing, without perhaps hearing one word?"

Her friend gently placed in her hand a lovely card, on it a female figure depicted, bending over an open Bible, and on the open page, Deut. xxx. 11-15. What precious words of comfort are therein contained for those shut out from outward means of grace, but not from Him whose voice does penetrate into the heart and says, "Draw nigh to Me, and I will draw nigh to you?"

A lady said to me, "Why don't you go to Bethshan and get healed?"

"You need not be deaf," said another.

Whilst a third suggested, "Perhaps you have not sufficient faith to be healed."

Kind, well-meaning people, but alas! unintentionally, "they talk to the grief of those whom Thou hast wounded." They forget that present healing might entail heavenly loss.

We need to pass through the refining furnace of affliction that we may be made like unto gold purified in the fire. One whose faith was sorely tried in vain struggles to solve the mysteries of sufferings that time conceals had a precious revelation, accompanied by joy unspeakable to his soul, that God's perfect love and perfect justice will in the end be fully vindicated before the whole universe in all his dealings with every creature by Him created, and we shall then be satisfied, and acknowledge, "Just and true are thy ways, Thou King of Saints."

A DEAF LADY

BROUGHTON-PLACE U.P. CHURCH, EDINBURGH.

In the Aberdeenshire fishing town of Fraserburgh, some amusement was created one day four-and-twenty years ago by the report that "a new Smith" had come to "the auld smiddy." The "auld smiddy" was a little red-tiled erection in a back street. It was originally a blacksmith's shop, but by simple changes it had been transformed into a humble place of worship, the nursery of an infant congregation of United Presbyterians.

As the worshippers were too few to support a pastor, they had to be content with the ministrations of senior students; and it was the arrival of one of these—the subject of this sketch—that gave occasion for the humorous remark. Possibly the rather unpromising appearance of the preacher encouraged the liberty taken with his name, for he was short of stature, and had a very quiet manner. But many weeks had not passed before it became apparent that "the new Smith" was a man of might; and soon the low-roofed meeting-place was crowded to the door on Sabbath evenings by the best people in the town. The attraction was the rich spiritual fare provided for attendants at "the auld smiddy."

The student-preacher was then somewhere about his twenty-fifth year, and his life up to that point had been passed in studious retirement. He was a native of Forres, a little Morayshire town, where his father was a merchant, and an elder in the Secession Church. A strong religious life had been built up in that congregation by a man whose ministry was then approaching its close—the Rev. Thomas Stark. In such a home and congregation John Smith had a training after the best Scottish pattern. He was an only son; giving evidence of a love of books as he grew up, and a strong bent towards the ministry, when school days in Forres were completed he was sent to Aberdeen University. For several winters following he wore the student's red gown, and diligently applied himself to the literary curriculum, which he honourably concluded by taking the degree of M.A.

For his theological course he had to repair to Edinburgh, where the Divinity Hall of the United Presbyterian Church was conducted in short summer sessions. It is noteworthy that he was a member of the first class of students taught by the distinguished man whom he was afterwards to succeed at Berwick, the late Principal Cairns. The long recesses between the Hall sessions were spent by Mr. Smith partly in teaching, but principally in study; it was during the last of them that he undertook the charge of the mission station at Fraserburgh. This was the beginning of his public life. As a student he had been somewhat retiring in his ways; but that winter in the Aberdeenshire town revealed his powers to himself, and gave him confidence to take the place to which they entitled him.

He remained in Fraserburgh till his student course was completed, and then set out on his travels as a probationer. These were not of long duration. He accepted the first call addressed to him, though it was to a humble enough sphere. Burghead is another fishing town, near his native Forres. There he was ordained on March 5, 1873, and contentedly settled down to work among Morayshire fishers and quarrymen, with his widowed mother as housekeeper in the little manse. But his light was too bright to be hid in that corner. The second year of his ministry brought him a call to a church in the neighbourhood of Glasgow, where, amid congenial surroundings, his income would be doubled. To the general surprise, it was refused, and the wonder grew when shortly afterwards he left Burghead for a position less rather than more favourable, where the only attraction was a larger field of labour.

That move was back to Fraserburgh. Thanks to his early work, the little congregation there was now in a position to have a minister of its own, and had flitted from the "auld smiddy" to a handsome church. So in September, 1875, his old friends had the joy of welcoming back their student-preacher as their first minister. They were well aware that they could not hope to keep him long, for already he began to be talked of as a great preacher. But his three years' ministry with them sufficed to tide the congregation over early difficulties, and to launch it on a career of usefulness and prosperity which still continues.

For Mr. Smith himself these were years of growing power and activity. Through them all he was diligently mastering the great books in theology, and absorbing the spirit of the best literature. He had an intense love for poetry, and drank deep of Wordsworth and Browning. His services as a lecturer on literary and religious subjects came into great demand. All the while he was diligently doing the work of an evangelist in Fraserburgh and the villages around. In the summer months, especially when the herring fishing brought thousands of strangers to the little town, he did his utmost to improve the opportunity for the highest ends; and he could often be found, after conducting three crowded services in his church, on the Sabbath evening addressing a large open-air gathering of fishermen.

From this busy and happy if somewhat obscure field of toil he was called in 1878 to succeed Principal Cairns in the pastorate of Wallace Green Church, Berwick. It required courage to follow so great a man; and it was only in the assurance of that Divine guidance which he has all along made the chief consideration, that Mr. Smith accepted the call. God honoured his faith; his ministry in Berwick was conspicuously successful. The congregation grew in numbers and in life. Its new minister led it into new activities. The border situation of Berwick opened up a wide sphere of influence. Being now a minister of the Presbyterian Church of England, he threw himself with great energy into the enterprises of that denomination. He became a welcome occupant of its pulpits, took a prominent place in its Synod, and lent effective help in its public and evangelistic gatherings. Strong efforts were made to move him to a London charge; from Canada, too, overtures were made to him; but he held to Berwick for seven years, and then the guiding hand seemed to point him northward again.

In response to a second call from Broughton-place Church, Edinburgh, he was settled there in March, 1885, as colleague to the venerable Dr. Andrew Thomson. His ministry in Edinburgh has been one of great power and fruitfulness. Broughton-place congregation is now the largest in the United Presbyterian Church, numbering over 1400 members; and its contributions last year exceeded £4000. The following programme of a recent winter's work will illustrate the methods and vigour of Dr. Smith's ministry. For Sabbath forenoons he announces lectures on the life of Abraham; for the afternoons, sermons on general subjects, with a monthly lecture to young men; for the week-night service, addresses on Scripture emblems of the work of the Holy Spirit; for the young men's Bible class on Sabbath evenings, "The Doctrine of Christ, with its Message to the Modern World"; for the Young Women's Bible class on Wednesday evenings, "Studies in the Gospel of Matthew."

Dr. Smith's ministry has been remarkably helpful to young men, who have been attracted in large numbers by its blended intellectual strength and spiritual enthusiasm. Three years ago the Synod appointed him to deliver a short course of lectures to its Divinity students; and in 1891, at Mr. Moody's invitation, he crossed the Atlantic to lecture to the students at Northfield.

In Presbytery and Synod, Dr. Smith takes his place as a leader, loved and trusted by the whole church. He shows there, however, not so much the managing man of business as the eloquent exponent of principles and the zealous advocate of every movement of advance. In the city where his ministry is exercised he has heartily identified himself with evangelistic effort, represented by such institutions as the Railway Mission and Carrubber's Close Mission. The Temperance cause has also found in him a steady and thoroughgoing advocate. With movements for the deepening of spiritual life Dr. Smith is in warm sympathy, and he often appears on their platform. One of the few things he has found time to publish is a little work on practical holiness, entitled "Fellowship: the Fulness of Life in Christ." He has been an active promoter of a ministerial gathering for fellowship and prayer which has had happy influence on the ministry of the United Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Smith has a charm of manner which makes him welcome in all circles; while his brotherliness, humility, and readiness to serve have specially endeared him to his ministerial brethren. It is from his own University of Aberdeen that he holds the degree of Doctor of Divinity, conferred two years ago in recognition of his eminent abilities and services. His successes are matter of unmingled satisfaction to his fellow-workers in the United Presbyterian Church, who, while admiring his gifts, rejoice in the knowledge that they are the gifts of a consecrated man, who loyally directs them all to the honour of the Redeemer.

VAN WORK.

THE beautiful new van presented to the British and Foreign Bible Society by Rev. J. A. Howarth, of Manchester, has been located at Morecambe this season. Mr. C. Clements has been in charge. He has been a colporteur for eleven years. During this season of sixteen weeks by the sea shore at Morecambe he has sold over 12,000 Bibles and Testaments. The custom of the colporteur has been to hold a short service before selling. Not only has the Bible been dispersed and carried away by the visitors, but the Word spoken has been good seed sown which will bear fruit.

Of the crowds who had gathered around, some have been sceptical, and have raised objections. Particularly was this the case one day when a sceptic objected. He was "cornered," but a young intelligent lady stood forth to champion the cause of infidelity. She was publicly answered from the van, and afterwards privately conversed with. As a result she was convinced of the verity of Christianity, and embraced Christ as her Saviour. She cried out, "Oh! what can I do? I have drawn twelve ladies into unbelief and scepticism during the last twelve months."

The Evangelical Alliance.

CONFERENCE AT TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

The customary autumn conference of the Alliance came off last week at this favourite Kentish watering place. For a long time past Tunbridge Wells, ecclesiastically considered, has been in itself an excellent example of the leading principles of the Alliance. Its pulpits are said to be almost universally of the Evangelical type, and fraternal co-operation is of course the natural outcome of community of belief. The local committee entered very warmly into the arrangements for the conference, and the earnest Christians of the town gave the Alliance platform a very cordial hearing. The deeply-lamented death of Canon Hoare deprived the gathering of a presence that would have added weight and lustre to its proceedings; while the still more recent decease of Hon. P. Carteret Hill has been very keenly felt as depriving the local branch of its chairman, and the town of a most active and catholic-minded citizen. The loss sustained by this double bereavement gave a tinge of sadness to the opening proceedings on Tuesday evening, but regrets were mingled with thankfulness for the devoted example and the happy memories left by these brethren, who, as one remarked, have been summoned to join the greater alliance of the spirits of just men made perfect.

The meeting in the Great Hall for social converse and public welcome on Tuesday evening was well attended. Local friends were fully represented, and a number of visitors from a distance swelled the company. The venerable Dean of Canterbury, one of the vice-presidents of the parent society, presided over the public meeting. He struck a firm keynote, in his brief presidential address, on one of the foundation principles of the Alliance: that which declares the sufficiency of Holy Scripture, and the right of private judgment in its interpretation. The chairman's references to the critical excursions of the time were by no means couched in a pessimistic vein. With the recollection in his mind of the way in which former criticisms of the New Testament have really contributed to the stability of the record, he felt sure that the same result would accrue in the case of the current critical examinations of the Old Testament. Whatever is weak and trivial, he said, will certainly be cast aside, and the substratum of solid well-settled truth that will remain must root more firmly than ever the ancient oracles of God. Let us not forget that the spiritual meaning of the Scriptures is the most important and essential one for us Christians, and this can only be understood and received by spiritual minds, under the guiding influence of the good Spirit. We must search the Scripture for ourselves, proving all things, and holding fast that which is good.

The function of formally expressing a welcome to the Alliance by the local branch had been entrusted to Mr. Carteret Hill, but his voice being now stilled in death, this office fell to Mr. Walter Langton, a member of the committee. That gentleman, while paying a pathetic tribute to the character and memory of those who had been taken away, was most warm and hearty in welcoming the Conference, and in wishing all success to its deliberations.

The responsive utterances of Lord Kinnaird and Mr. John Paton, on behalf of the visitors and the parent organisation, were equally cordial. The latter gentleman, as specially representing the American portion of the Alliance, gave an interesting review of its work across the Atlantic, dwelling pointedly on the large and peculiar problems that have to be dealt with in that great land, with a population of sixty-five millions made up of such heterogeneous elements. Mr. Paton is very fluent in graceful speech, and his cosmopolitan experiences have enlarged his heart as well as his knowledge. He found a striking illustration of fraternal good will and mutual helpfulness in seasons of common stress, in the well-known story of the Calliope's escape from the cyclone at Samoa. The lesson of the tale, dramatically told, was that America and England must ever stand shoulder to shoulder in advancing the cause of Christ throughout the world.

The welcome fact was made known by Mr. Brackett, one of the local secretaries, that the new vicar of Tunbridge Wells, Rev. C. G. Baskerville, is in the most hearty sympathy with the Alliance, and was only prevented from attending the Conference by pressing official duties. Admiral Grant and Rev. H. E. Brooke, both of whom were expected to take part, were unhappily detained by illness. Mr. Brackett said that the local membership of the Alliance was now about 150; they hoped that the interest generated by the Conference would result in large accessions to their fraternal ranks.

THE WORK OF THE ALLIANCE,

broadly considered, was then sketched by the general secretary, Mr. A. J. Arnold. That work is tolerably well known to our readers; at any rate, it ought to be. The fact that many of its most important and far-reaching operations have to be carried on by private and delicate negotiation, tends perhaps to obscure the magnitude of its services as bearing on the furtherance of religious liberty. Hastily sketching the different aspects of Alliance work, Mr. Arnold alluded in turn to the conservation of orthodox doctrine, the encouragement of united prayer, and the defence and relief of persecuted Christians in many lands, as among the chief aims of the organisation. On the last-mentioned point he recited briefly the most recent facts as to measures taken for the oppressed Christians in Turkey and Russia. It was specially gratifying to hear that in the efforts of the Alliance to secure full religious freedom for small and struggling communities, the Council have the hearty and active sympathy of our own Foreign Office. The most disheartening fact of all those mentioned by Mr. Arnold was that three thousand Russian Stundists are at present in prison or in exile, because the Greek Church refuses to accord freedom of religious conviction to those outside its pale. In the course of his interesting statement the Secretary referred to the approaching jubilee of the Alliance two years hence, when a great international conference is proposed to be convened in London. Next year the Alliance will probably accept the invitation of the Belfast branch to hold its British autumnal conference in that city.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26.

The first public engagement of to-day was a devotional meeting at 10.15, with Dr. J. H. Townsend, vicar of St. Mark's, Tunbridge Wells, presiding. The attendance was comparatively large, the main attraction doubtless being an address by Rev. F. B. Meyer. The Chairman gave, by way of preliminary, an excellent outline Bible-reading based on 1 Chron. xii., where we have the muster-roll of those who were of one mind, though acting in various ways, to make David king. Verses 8-15, said the speaker, tell us of one class who are specially pictured as daring ones; in verse 31 we have the decided men, who enrolled themselves by name; verse 32 reveals another type, the discerning ones; verse 33, the disciplined men; verse 38, the devoted men; the secret of all is to be found in verse 18, which tells us they were dedicated: "Thine are we, David, and on thy side; for thy God helpeth thee." The application to modern times of the Old Testament narrative is, of course, obvious. Whatever our place or our characteristic, we ought all to be allies in the great Christian host, determined to make Jesus Christ King.

THE FUNCTIONS OF THE SPIRIT

was the subject taken up by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and more succinctly describes his highly stimulating and suggestive address than that given in the printed programme, which was: "The Meaning of Pentecost, or the Indwelling of the Holy Ghost." After some prefatory words, in the course of which he said the Holy Spirit was as truly incarnated in the believer as Jesus Christ was incarnated in the body born of the Virgin Mary, Mr. Meyer proceeded to note and comment on the five-fold function of the Spirit, as recorded in the Acts, which ought really to be called the book of "the Acts of the Living Christ, by the Holy Ghost."

The first function is denoted by the word Filled (Acts ii. 4). At his ascension Jesus Christ, so to speak, became the reservoir out of which all believers were to be filled with the Spirit that had possessed Him from all eternity. This "filling" may be repeated again and again in the experience of the believer; we read that Peter was among those filled, as recorded in chap. ii., and again in chap. iv. It is the Divine purpose that those who are in living union with the risen and exalted Christ should be filled with the Spirit again and again—that there may be that perpetual inflowing which is required by reason of the leakage to which we are all subject in this time of our earthly life and warfare. We need to be continually filled with the Spirit for character and for ministry.

The second function is what may be called the Co-operating work of the Holy Ghost. "We are witnesses of these things, and so is also the Holy Ghost" (Acts v. 32). As the servant of God is elaborating to others the truth which God has disclosed to him in the Bible, all through the audience at the moment he is speaking the Holy Spirit is co-operating by flashing the truth with demonstration into the heart. Our part is not to argue about or to defend the truth, but to bear witness to it, while the Spirit bears witness to Him of whom it tells. This is our only hope. In mere argument, eloquence, and ratiocination, the world may outstrip the Gospel preacher; but when he is content to testify to the truth of God, he may rely upon the perpetual co-operation and demonstration of the Holy Ghost. We do not lay sufficient stress on this. How calm and restful and peaceful the assurance ought to make us in our proclamation of God's salvation. We feel we have not to carry our point by the force of eloquence or oratory. We have but to let down the net in our class, our pulpit, or wherever it is, and all the time the attitude of our soul must be towards the effective co-operation of the Divine Spirit.

Another function of the blessed Spirit is in Building up the Body of Christ. We read in Acts v. 14, of believers being "added to the Lord." They were added to the Church, of course, but primarily they were added to the Lord, and, therefore, to one another. All through the present age the Holy Ghost is at work. The medium through whom Jesus Christ works is the Spirit; the medium through which the Spirit works is the Church; the medium through which the Church works is the Truth. The Spirit is busy attracting souls to the Head, and thus the Body of Jesus Christ is being formed. Each one of us may be the means in God's hand by which some other soul is attracted to the Head. Oh, men and women here to-day who are as yet outside of Christ, you are missing the greatest honour that could be conferred on a human soul—that of being added to the Second Adam and being associated with Him in redemption of mankind. This truth is the basis of our unity. We have made the mistake in our time of endeavouring to make a unity in the Church; what we have to do is to keep the unity which God has made. The hand may refuse to acknowledge the foot, but it cannot help being one with the foot. Our part is to manifest this God-made unity to the world.

A fourth function of the Spirit is the Administration of his Church. This is a profound subject, and can only be touched upon here. What is true of the Church as a whole is true of each separate and individual church. We do well to let the Holy Ghost be the executor and administrator in his Church. The book of Acts gives us many hints about it. There is the Spirit's administration for purgation (v. 9); his work on individual men (viii. 29, and other passages). When studying this subject I found in nearly every chapter of the Acts some reference to the distinct administration of the Holy Ghost in his Church.

The fifth function of the Spirit is the Revelation of Christ. We must never think of the Holy Ghost apart from the Lord Jesus Christ. The more a man lives in the power of the Holy Ghost, like the water-wheel in the stream, the more he is absorbed with Jesus Christ, and the clearer his apprehension becomes of the death, the resurrection, and the glory of Christ. A man's appreciation of Christ is the gauge of his filling with the Holy Ghost.

The key to this whole subject, so far as individual enjoyment of these five functions of the Spirit goes, is to be found in Gal. iii. 14, "That we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith." Just as we receive eternal life from the hands of the crucified and risen Christ, without emotion, calmly and quietly, and by faith, so we reckon in the same way that we have got the Holy Ghost, not because we feel Him, but because we open our heart to God, and we reckon that according to his promise he fills the man who trusts Him.

After Mr. Meyer's address, the customary "annual address" was given by Archdeacon Richardson. The bond of this basis, he said, is threefold, the bond of faith, which is God's Word, the bond of peace, which is Christ's death, and the bond of love, which is the power of the Holy Ghost. On the first point the speaker said:—

"The plan of salvation—the Gospel of God's grace—is a Divine provision and not a human discovery. The great purpose and plan of redemption comes out of divine sovereignty, and not out of man's purchase or procurement. 'What saith the Scripture?' is the real inquiry as before the one great court of last appeal; and so long as that is disowned, the rough hand of might or the cunning hand of craft will make quarrels, and not content, not harmony and peace. The title deeds of the inheritance are not antiquated, because they are old; and they are not to be hidden in any such way as shall not allow them to be produced, when questions arise about the tenure under which we hold the spiritual privileges which are precious to our souls and so essential to our peace. Learning may be encouraged to decipher. Light must be thrown upon the sacred record, that the truth may be made clear as the Holy Ghost interprets and the human mind applies itself to understand; but the documents must be left untouched, and no word of man must be permitted to contradict the Word of God. And alliance comes out of this reverential acknowledgment of the Father's wisdom. And the evangelical character of this most necessary combination will be very effectually guaranteed by this plain, positive, and prominent declaration, that the Bible holds its own fundamental position as a divine authority on all matters affecting things that are to be believed, accepted, obeyed, and proclaimed by God's believing people."

In closing a thoughtful address, the Archdeacon said: "Sitting alone, in the atmosphere of self, and in the study of personal preferences, good men may become heated, and perhaps somnolent, in their own ideals. But let honest men congregate, breathe the purer atmosphere of wider wisdom, hear each other's explanations, grow under the warmth of a common rectitude of purpose and convictions that have the rosy colour of the truth as it in Jesus, and the world will no longer stand apart to criticise our differences, but will draw nearer to hear, and learn soon enough to understand that at bottom we are brethren, in purpose we are ready to give the right hand of fellowship to all who love the Lord in sincerity and truth. What is required is confederation, discipline, concentration, continuity in the labours of love. The times demand these things; the Church of God must find these things; and so the truth will hold the field, the armies of heaven will surround the camp, and the faithful, whether there may be many or few, will be more than conquerors 'through Him that loved them.'"

The "Practical Resolutions," framed by the Alliance in 1846 are invariably read and enforced on these occasions. The resolutions, seven in number, embody a great deal of admirable counsel as to the Christian behaviour that ought to prevail among believers of every name, especially in dealing with matters of controversy. In the regretted absence of Rev. H. E. Brooke, the resolutions were read and enforced by Mr. M. H. Hodder in an earnest and sympathetic spirit. He dwelt particularly on the benefits arising from united prayer, and a quickened zeal on behalf of foreign missions.

CHRISTIANITY AND EDUCATION

was the important subject confided to Professor Radford Thomson, whose solid and conservative treatment of it met with much approval. The first indispensable thing, he observed, with respect to education, is to have a true conception of the being to be educated. Man being a spiritual being, redeemed by Christ and an heir of immortality, ought to have an education co-ordinate with his nature. The mere cultivation of his physical and intellectual powers therefore is altogether inadequate. Religious education must not be subordinated to the other; it must be made to inspire and colour the whole range of life. This holds good for all sections of the community, the wealthy as well as the poor. Dr. Thomson was very severe on the shallow and purely worldly character of much of the education given in the higher circles of society, and laid great stress on the necessity of teachers being filled with a due sense of the high vocation entrusted to them. The influence of the teacher, he contended, was stronger than any regulations or text-books, however excellent. Christian men and women in search of a life work would do well to think of the claims of an educational career, in view of the opportunities it affords for bringing to bear on the youth of their time the sanctions and truths of the Christian faith.

CONTINENTAL EVANGELISATION.

The afternoon session was devoted to this important subject. Sir Wm. Willis presided, and briefly introduced the topic of the hour. He spoke of the endeavours of the Alliance to strengthen weak churches and bind together the different sections of the Church holding Evangelical doctrines. A number of cognate efforts are at work in different parts of the Continent, on behalf both of young and old.

The first address was by Rev. Horace Noel. Europe, he said, is a needy field; it is an open field, and British Christians might do much more than they do. The need is too often underrated. A civilised atheist is as far from God as a savage heathen. As showing the state of things in Continental Roman Catholicism, Mr. Noel read extracts from the preface of M. Lasserre's translation of the Gospels, setting forth the deplorable ignorance of the Scriptures on the part of the French people generally. We cannot surely be content to leave our Romish fellow-men to such superstitions as are taught in the books of devotion that take the place of the Bible. The wonderful opportunities and openings in most parts of Europe for Gospel effort were referred to as encouragements to greater devotion. Mr. Noel said that he would rather give away tracts in the streets of Paris than in London; he would meet with fewer refusals. There are many evangelical missions at work, but the supply is very far short of the need. A number of indigenous missions are doing good and active service in France, Italy, Germany, Spain, and elsewhere. But there is special scope in many places for helpers from this land. The earnest labours of Robert Haldane in the days of the Bourbons, notwithstanding the difficulties he had to encounter, were mentioned as a stimulating example of what can be done. Among the students in Geneva who came under Mr. Haldane's blessed influence were Frederick Monod, father of Pastor Theodore Monod, Gaussen, the author of the book on inspiration, and Merle-d'Aubigné. Pastor Malan was also greatly indebted to Haldane. If the indefatigable spirit of Haldane were to animate British Christians in these days of fuller opportunity, what great things might be done for Europe.

The work of the McAll Mission was represented by Mr. J. F. W. Deacon, who sketched the rise and progress of that wonderful organisation. From the smallest beginnings it has spread, so that now there are 119 mission-halls connected with it throughout France, twenty-two of these being in Paris. Last year 21,659 meetings were held among adults in France. This work was a true Evangelical Alliance, as all sections of Christians are among its agents. The past year has been a critical time in the history of the Mission, and it claims the deepest sympathy of Christians in this land. Mrs. McAll, the widow of the late Dr. McAll, has taken a deep interest in the service of praise, and has issued a new hymn-book, containing over 400 hymns. Mr. Deacon referred to some of the more striking examples of conversion as the fruit of the work. One of the best workers to-day in Paris, he said, was a Freethinking journalist who strolled into one of the salles out of curiosity, and was led to an acceptance of salvation. The latest development is the Mission boat, which floats on the Seine, the Ouse, and other rivers. Through it many remote country villages are reached. It is in such places that one sees how largely the peasantry of France have renounced Romanism—la comédie they call it, so great is their contempt of the system. Many branches of the Mission were mentioned, all of them doing splendid work, and very fruitful in leading men and women to a saving knowledge of the Gospel. Both workers and means are greatly needed.

Mrs. Arbuthnot, as representing the Women's Protestant Union, desired to bear testimony against the fashionable sacerdotalism of to-day. She deplored the apathy that abounds as to the advances of Romanism in our own land, and which she felt sure was the outcome of ignorance as to the real nature of the Romish system.

Mr. E. C. Newbery spoke of Scripture distribution in Italy, more recently in the Riviera. Four mission halls have been opened, the latest at Monte Carlo, and many are learning the way of life. The villages are opening up, and there are many calls for testimony.

Work among the Corsicans, by Miss Grant Brown and her helpers, was briefly described by Mr. Donald Matheson. Cortes, a chief town in the centre of the island, has become a sort of headquarters, and some young converts have been actively at work there. The work shows great possibilities of advance, and needs support; Miss Grant Brown has expended much on it out of her private resources.

THE EVENING MEETING

was a very full one, with Sir Robert Phayre as chairman. A hearty cheer of greeting met Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, as he rose to expound "Faith's Achievements; or, Old Weapons for New Warriors." He said that the carpet knight was no use in the army of the Lord. The way to heaven now is no easier than it was in bygone days. We must be well armed. Sin is sin to-day, and the world is as much an enemy to God and to the Christian as ever. There are some who would go outside of God's armoury for their weapons; but they are useless for real fighting. There is nothing like the Bible of our fathers. Our Master, foot to foot and face to face with the devil, used and triumphed with the blessed Scripture; Moses and the Israelites were victorious with the rod of the covenant—a good old-fashioned thing. We long nowadays to hear men preaching about the eternal decrees of an immutable God, as well as about the sure mercies of David. Another mighty weapon is the ark of God's presence. Most powerful of all is the cross of Christ. There we find omnipotence, for God has chosen it.

The simple, clear, pungent preaching of the redeeming blood is as potent as ever. Some say it is old fashioned and worn out, it was good enough for the dark ages. If so it is better for the darker ages. Let us return to Pentecostal times; that will be the true progress. Another ancient weapon is all-prayer—a trusty shield. An instruction to volunteers is to "fire from a rest" if they can. As volunteer workers for Christ let us get to our knees before we fight. These were weapons used in the days of the Reformation with such mighty effect. A closing appeal to those who were fighting on the wrong side, to surrender and to take up arms for Christ, concluded a very effective address.

THE WORLD'S EVANGELISATION

was the far-reaching theme entrusted to Mr. Eugene Stock. What do we mean by it? Not the mere planting of a visible Church. Not the advancement of civilisation or the promulgation of a moral code. The non-Christian systems may have that, but they have neither the power to enable men to keep it nor the remedy if they fail. Christianity has both. Neither do we mean the "conversion" of the world; in the sense that every soul should be personally united by faith to Christ; because He returns to a still unconverted world. This evangelisation is a two-fold thing: First, a world-wide testimony, and next, the calling out of an elect church. This is a most encouraging view of the subject; if we take the other view we must postpone the coming of our Lord perhaps for centuries. Our work, says Dr. Gordon, of Boston, is not to bring all the world to Christ, but to bring Christ to all the world.

We enter on this work because the Master commanded it; that is reason and sanction enough. We have the command in a fourfold form through the lips of the four Evangelists. We are not really saved unless we are sent with this salvation to others. An additional record of the command is found in the early part of the Acts. Do we need further inducement? Surely not. Let us go and do it.

Who are to do it? Not angels, but human witnesses who have themselves been saved from the guilt of sin, who are being saved from the power of sin, and who are by and by to be saved from the presence of sin. Have we ever thought of this solemn fact that by our lack of consecration we are postponing the return of our Lord? We cannot fulfil our responsibility by giving a guinea subscription. Will not parents give their sons and daughters to this grand work?

As to the "how," Mr. Stock rapidly ran over the various methods with which we are being made familiar in these days. All missionary work is evangelistic and pastoral. There are diversities of gifts and methods, but the same Spirit. Let not one worker condemn another who works by a different method. Remember, the field is the world—the whole world; its unhealthy as well as its healthy parts. Last of all, the time is now. Let the motto of every heart be, "At thy command we will let down the net into the deep."

An evangelistic address from Rev. James Constердine, the deputation secretary of the Alliance, was followed by some remarks from the Chairman, descriptive of personal experiences in India.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27.

This morning dawned bright and beautiful, making a very welcome change to the dull and depressing weather of the preceding days. A good company gathered in the hall at 10.15, when Rev. G. W. Cowper Smith presided over the devotional meeting, and an address was given by Rev. J. G. Gregory on union with Christ as the power for service. Close on the devotional meeting there came the forenoon session of the Alliance. The Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh, who presided, referred to the growth of sacerdotalism, which was one of the topics set down for consideration. This sacerdotalism, confined mostly to one section of the Church, he said, has been largely the result of irregularities and deviations from the strict letter of its rubrics, which, however, had been condoned by the supreme ecclesiastical courts. Perhaps one good way to meet this state of things would be for those of us who deplore sacerdotalism to practise corresponding irregularities in another and better direction. As an example of this Mr. Bligh gave an interesting experience of his own. Some years ago he preached in the church belonging to the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion in Tunbridge Wells. The then Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Tait, wrote to him asking why he had preached in another man's pulpit. He replied to his Grace that he understood there were flagrant irregularities taking place in another part of his diocese which demanded serious attention. If the Archbishop in view of this insisted on his ceasing to preach the Gospel in a neighbour's church, he would obey, but the responsibility must lie with the Archbishop. He heard no more of the matter.

Dr. Jenkins's paper on "Present Day Unbelief and How to Meet It," was so excellent and timely that we propose giving it in extenso in a succeeding issue. As a mature and well-considered study of a pressing problem of the day, this paper was perhaps the weightiest utterance of the Conference.

SACERDOTALISM V. ATONEMENT.

In considering this burning question, Rev. Talbot Greaves said that a personal acceptance of Jesus Christ as the Saviour solves many theological difficulties. He proceeded to expound the orthodox aspects of the atonement as set forth in Paul's epistles; viewing Christ as the representative Man expiating man's offences by his one offering, as the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. It would seem as if the mere proclamation of this truth should annihilate sacerdotalism. Its essential characteristic is the intervention of a human priest between the soul and God. The strongly expressed declaration of Bishop Lightfoot as to the utterly unscriptural nature of this claim was quoted. There is no priest between the sinner and the Saviour—such is the fundamental doctrine of Protestantism; and we must strenuously maintain it. Coming to the teaching of transubstantiation now openly avowed in the Church of England, Mr. Greaves indignantly condemned it, and deplored its acceptance in the Established Church. Quotations were read from Ritualistic writers, showing their belief in the "Real Presence" in the communion elements, and in the necessary repetition of Christ's atoning sacrifice. The totally false and unbiblical character of such teaching was shown. Mr. Greaves also combatted the view entertained by some men who are called Evangelical that Christ is now repeating in heaven, as an oblation to God the Father, the sacrifice offered on the cross. His sacrificial priesthood ceased when He passed into the heavens; but even if we were otherwise convinced that Christ does as it is asserted, that would be no ground for an earthly priest arrogating the same function. For any Roman or Anglican "official" to pretend to perform any priestly function whatever to-day is as daring a departure from the truth as it would have been for any of the sons of Aaron to usurp the office of their father. Mr. Greaves maintained that the Prayer Book of the Church of England is soundly Protestant on this point, and quoted one of the Articles to show this.

A second address on the same subject was given by Rev. Dr. Clemance. Time would not permit his full reading of the paper he had prepared, and he contented himself with an outline of his argument. Sacerdotalism he declared to be based on a false theory of the Church. It creates an office for which the atonement affords no place whatever. It sets up a mediation for which, by reason of Christ's perfect atonement, there is no need. It claims to continue the one and once-offered sacrifice of the cross. It attributes saving virtue to the sacraments. It is the greatest schism-maker in the world. It throws down a wall which Christ has set up; it substitutes a priestly absolution for personal repentance and faith. It lays stress on the historic continuity of the "apostolic succession," which is of no account in view of the spiritual character of the Christian dispensation. Instead of "Continuity or Collapse" we put the "Collapse of Continuity." From all complicity in these pretences good Lord deliver us.

VISIT TO MABLEDON.

This afternoon, as a very pleasant relief to the successive meetings in the Great Hall, some 500 friends accepted the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Deacon to visit their beautiful residence, Mabledon, near Tunbridge. The day was beautiful, and the drive of four miles through picturesque scenery was much enjoyed. A hospitable reception awaited the guests, who, after partaking of refreshments, spent some time in viewing the extensive and lovely grounds attached to the mansion. The company was successfully photographed on the lawn by Mr. Percy Lankester, of Tunbridge Wells, and a meeting was thereafter held in the library, where a very impressive address was given by Dr. Wardlaw Thompson on the needs of the great mission fields. Brief words were also spoken by Mr. Deacon, the host, General Hatt Noble, and others.

THE CLOSING MEETING

was held on Thursday evening, with General Hatt Noble in the chair. Before the address he tendered some warm acknowledgments of thanks to the hospitable friends in the town and to the local committee for making such excellent arrangements in connection with the Conference. The one set address of the evening was by Rev. J. G. Train, of Upper Norwood, on "The Word of the Truth of the Gospel." It was a simple restatement of the Gospel message as we are familiar with it in the Pauline epistles. The Apostle had to define and defend that Gospel against the false teachings of some in his day. We have to do the same still, and probably will have to do so till our Lord returns. The Gospel may be proclaimed in name so that the essence and the truth of it is left out. That essence is contained in the great doctrine of justification by the faith of Christ and not by the works of the law. We have to contend for this in the face both of the rationalism and the ritualism of to-day, as Paul did in his time at Colosse and Galatia.

Last of all came a characteristically direct and vigorous Gospel appeal from Rev. W. R. Mowll. Incidentally he urged all his hearers on every such occasion to bring with them their Bibles, so as to refer to them, and verify any statements made from pulpit and platform. The single word that Mr. Mowll chose for a text was "Remember" (Eph. ii. 11). The forgetting of God is so subtle a sin that we are apt to regard it as no sin at all. The Israelites were exhorted by Moses to remember the day of the Passover in Egypt; how can we forget the blood of the cross where the judgment of sin was seen in the passion and death of Him who is "our Passover slain for us"? The writer of Ecclesiastes counselled those of his day to remember their Creator in the days of their youth. How deeply is this advice needed by the young men and young women of our own day, when there is so much that tends to make them forget and set aside the claims of God. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" was quoted by Mr. Mowll, in order to press home an earnest protest against the prevalent looseness in Sabbath observance of modern social life. His remarks on this point were cordially endorsed by the cheers of the audience. Several recurring uses of the word "remember" in the Gospel of Luke were most practically applied to such questions as unequal marriages, worldliness, and the peril of postponing an acceptance of Christ. Finally, Mr. Mowll formulated an acrostic on the word "Remember," each word representing a thought found, with one exception, in Ephesians ii. These were the *R*uin caused by sin (v. 1); the *E*ternity of God's love (v. 4); the *M*anifestation of his power (vv. 5, 6); the *E*xceeding riches of his grace (v. 7); the being *M*ade nigh by the blood of Christ (v. 13); the *B*lessing of peace (vv. 14-17); the *E*xcellence of the building (vv. 20, 21); the *R*eturn Jesus has promised. On this last point was hung a fervid and moving appeal to decide for Christ, and thus be ready for the Master's return, whenever it may be.

Prayer by Mr. Mowll, and a few fitting exhortations from the Chairman as to a fruitful application of the Conference teaching in daily life, brought to a close a happy and profitable time.

"THE NEGLECTED RICH."

The short article on this subject in a recent number of The Christian suggests to me that a few more words on the subject may not be unwelcome. It was strikingly illustrated lately by a worldly but discontented lady who met an earnest worker on her round of parochial visiting by the fretful appeal from a hungry soul, "You are always going about among the poor people, why don't you ever visit me?" Needless to say the invitation was gladly accepted.

"I never pay calls; indeed, my neighbours of the higher classes rarely see me," was the avowal of one who laboured indefatigably for the peasantry; yet the social life around her was barren enough of spiritual life, and sorely needed some witness for Christ, some awakened soul to prove that Christianity was not a mere name, only "it is so hard to speak of heavenly things in society, one cannot meet the well-bred scorn, or simple cold surprise of the hearers, who politely change the subject, or make an excuse to walk away." Yet I know more than one occasion on which a few hints thrown out in trembling were the means of drawing two Christians together, who would have remained strangers if the usual trifling conversation had gone on unchecked.

If we turn to another point, we must deeply regret the idea of hospitality which causes so many ladies and gentlemen to offer alcoholic drinks to their visitors, even though they are themselves advocates of total abstinence. The custom of providing spirits at afternoon parties is terribly common, and in many places the hosts at "At Homes" where tennis and other games go on, are not content with claret cup, tea, coffee, and mineral waters, but place materials for "brandy and sodas," wine, etc., before their guests. Even clergymen lead away the gentlemen of the party, hot and tired with violent exercise, to partake of whiskey and strong spirits in their dining-room. A young lady recently, when preparing for a few friends coming to play tennis, placed a bottle of brandy and various liqueurs and wines ready for their delectation. "We must give them what they like best," she said carelessly, and one could but answer, "Would you then provide ether, chlorodyne, or other poisons, if dram drinkers were to be of your party?"

A lady who never touches spirits herself, noticing that an afternoon caller did not care for tea, ordered various alcoholic drinks to be brought in, and pressed them on him, though knowing he was already far too fond of such beverages. Yet she would exclaim with horror at the idea of giving a poor labourer a drink of porter, while providing some three bottles daily of the same drink for a relation who happened to be staying with her! Surely this is "having respect to persons," and thus committing grievous sin. We should not have one law for the rich and another for the poor in these matters.
